I might adde to theſe affaires of Chili, the great Earth-quakes, A. 1600. in Peru, at Arequepa, the rayning of ſand, as alſo of aſhes about twenty dayes from a Vulcan breaking forth; the aſhes falling in places aboue a yard thicke, in ſome places more then two, and where leſt aboue a quarter of a yard, which buried the Corne-grounds of Maiz and Wheat, and the boughes of Trees were broken and fruitleſſe, and the Cattle great and ſmall dyed for want of paſture. For the ſand which rained couered the fields thirty leagues one way, and aboue forty another way round about Arequepa. They found their Kine dead by fiue hundred together in ſeuerall Heards, and whole Flockes of Sheepe and Heards of Goates and Swine buried. Houſes fell with the weight of the ſand, others coſt much induſtry to ſaue them. Mighty Thunders and Lightnings were heard and ſeene thirty leagues about Arequepa. It was ſo darke whiles thoſe ſhowres laſted that at mid day they burned Candles to ſee to doe their buſineſſe. This from Peru: from Chili they write that the Rebellion of Arauco groweth euery day ſtronger. On Wedneſday the foure and twentieth of Nouember 1599. there came in the morning vpon the citie of Valdiuia, about fiue thouſand Indians of the bordering places, and of the places adioyning to Imperiall, Pica, and Putem, *three thouſand horſmen and the reſt foot; ſeuenty of them Harcabuſe men, and two hundred in coates * of Maile* (Cotas.) They came vnperceiued, hauing ſet double Eſpials on the citie. They came in Squadrons ranked in order; for they knew that the Spaniards were aſleepe, and had but foure men in their Corps de gard, and to walke the round. They were blinded with their fortune ſome twentie dayes before hauing beaten the Indians from their Fort in Vega, and the Mariſhes of Paparlen, ſlaying many that for eight leagues about no Indian durſt be ſeene. Thus entred they the ſtreets of that vnhappy citie, and fired the houſes; then tooke the gates, and in two houres ſpace with fire and Sword deſtroyed the Towne, and wanne the Fort and Artillery, killing foure hundred Spaniards of both Sexes; ſacked three hundred thouſand Pezos of ſpoile, conſuming all the reſt. The ſhippes of Vallano, Villaroell, and another of Diego de Roias, were at anchor in the Riuer, and if ſome had not eſcaped in Canoas to carry them newes, they had runne the like fortune. The Spaniards ſeuerity a little before made them thus cruell, hauing ſold ſo many of their wiues and children for ſlaues to Merchants, which carried them out of their Countries, being baptized, and hauing kept Prieſts fiftie yeeres. Now firſt, they deſtroyed the Churches, and brake the Images in pieces. Ten dayes after Coronel Franciſco del Campo, came with three hundred men ſent from

Later accidents in Peru and Chili.

Prodigious ſhowres of ſand & aſhes 1600.

They tell alſo of fearefull Earthquakes at Arequepa 1582. See ſup. p. 940. 941.

A Letter written by a Citizen of Iago in Chili.

* Note the Araucans armes gotten from the Spaniards.

Valdiuia deſtroyed.

Digitized by Google

from his Excellency from Peru, to succour those Cities. Hauing seene this lamentable destruction, he went to succour Osorno, and Villarrica, and sad Ymperiall, of which hee knew nothing but that it had beene besieged a yeere by the enemies, hauing nothing to eat but dead Horses, Cats, Dogges, and Hides. But first he succoured Osorno, to which the victorious enemies had gone from Valdiuia. Newes came at the same time, whiles I was writing, that those of Ymperiall were dead with famine, all saue twentie whom hunger forced to a worse destinie, to goe to the Indians. Lord haue mercy on vs. Amen. March 1600. from Saint Iago. Ymperiall famished.

Father Diego de Alcobaza (whom I haue before mentioned) writ to me, Anno 1601. that the Indians were growne of such dexteritie in warres, that euery Indian on horsebacke with his Lance, durst sally out on any Spanish Souldier, were he neuer so valiant: and euery yeere many goe from Peru thither but none returne. They haue sacked two Townes, and killed all they found in them, carrying away the women and daughters and seruants: and lastly, they killed in an Enboscada the Gouernour Loyola, which was married to a daughter of Don Diego Sayritupac the Inca, which went from Villacapampa, before your Worship went to those parts. God haue mercy on the dead, and giue remedie to the liuing. Other things he writ so irkesome, that I forbeare to recite, as of the plagues of Arequepa, one of which was that Wheate was worth that yeere ten or eleuen Ducats, and Maiz thirteene. Anno 1602. the disasters of Arequepa, continued as the Iesuites haue written. Anno 1604. Padre Maestro Francisco de Castro gaue mee this further Relation of Chili. Of thirteene Cities which are in this Realme of Chili, the Indians haue destroyed sixe, viz. Valdiuia, Imperiall, Angol, Sancta Cruz, Chillan and Conception. They wasted and consumed therein, the Houses, Churches, Deuotion, Feautie of the fields; and yet the greatest misery is, that the Indians haue gathered heart and courage for greater spoyles and destructions of Cities and Monasteries. They haue bent their minds to mischiefe and cunning stratagems. They besieged the Citie Osorno, and consuming the Spanish forces, they retired to a Fort in which they haue held them as it were in a continuall siege, the besieged sustayning themselues with seeds and herbes. In one of the sieges which that Citie sustained, they broke the Images: in the last they killed the Centinels, and safely entred and seised the Fort, the Spaniards not perceiuing, and whiles they were busie in spoyle, the Spaniards came on them, and got from them the women and Nuns. The last Victory of the Indians, was the taking of Villarrica, with great slaughter of Spaniards, firing it in foure parts. They killed all the Friers of Saint Domingo, Saint Francis, and our Lady of Pitie, and the Clergie men: they captiued all the women which were many, and of a good account.

Another letter 1601. Indians valour. Gouernour Loyola slaine. Dearth. 1604. Sixe Townes destroyed. Osorno Fort taken. Villarrica taken.

Now let vs returne to the Inca Yupanqui, who how determined to ceasse further inuading and conquest, His Realme now extending a thousand leagues. He made many Fortresses and Temples to the Sunne, and Nunneries, and Royall Palaces, and Conueyances of water. Especially hee bestowed paines on the Fortresse of Cozco, for which his Father had brought great store of stones. He visited his Kingdome to see with his eyes the necessities thereof that he might remedie them, which he did with such care, that he merited the surname of Pious. After which hee dyed full of Trophees, hauing enlarged his Empire so farre to the South, and a hundred and forty leagues Northwards.

Tupac Inqua Yupanqui his eldest Sonne succeeded. The Fortresse of Cozco which hee built may seeme a worke of Deuils rather then men, the stones (or Rockes rather) in three circuits about being so many and great, the Indians hauing neither Iron nor Steele to cut or worke them, nor Oxen, nor Carts to draw them, but all done with force of men with great Cables, and that thorow vneuen wayes in rough Mountains. Many of them they brought ten, twelue, fifteene leagues, particularly that stone which the Indians call Saycusch, that is, wearied, which was brought fifteene leagues, and passed the Riuer Yucay little lesse then Guadalquiuir at Cordoba. The most came from Muyna, fiue leagues off. Many of them are so close, that scarsly the place where they are ioyned can be discerned, which required the lifting vp and often setling one stone vpon another, hauing neyther Square, nor Rule. Nor could they make Cranes or any sort of Engine to helpe them. It seemes that the Incas thought hereby to expresse their magnificence and power, and the skill of their workmen. This Fortresse was built on a Hill on the Northside of the Citie, so steepe that way that it could not bee assaulted, and therefore one wall serued on that side two hundred fathomes long. They had no morter but vsed a kind of coloured clay faster then it. On the other parts they made three wals one before another, each aboue two hundred fathomes, in forme of a halfe Moone, there were stones in them, but such as were admirably great. A Priest of Manilla hauing beene in Peru and seene them, told me that hee could not imagine how they could be laid but by the blacke Art. And indeed this in respect of the want of Art may bee said to exceed the seuen Wonders of the World: for it is easie to conceiue how the Pyramides of Egypt and wals of Babylon might be made, which here is not. Euery wall in the midst had one gate which had one stone equated the breadth and height thereof. Betwixt one wall and another was about thirty foot: the battlements were about a yard high. The height I cannot exactly tell. Within the wals were three strong Forts, the middlemost called Moyoc Marca, or the round Fort, in which was a Conduit of good water brought farre off vnder ground, the Indians knew not whence: it was known only to the Inca and some chiefe Councellors. In this the Kings remained when they went to visit the Fortresse, and the wals were all adorned with gold Yupanqui Inca his acts and death. Fortresse of Cozco a rare worke. See sup. 1056. Acostas Relation. The wonders of the world not so wonderfull as Cozco Fortresse. One round Fort and two square, gold and ſiluer and counterfeits of beaſts, and birds, and plants, enchaſed therein, which ſerued for Tapeſtry. The ſecond Fort was called Paucar Marca, the third, Sacſac Marca, both ſquare, with Roomes for Souldiers which muſt be Incas of priuiledge, for no other Nation might enter, it being the houſe of the Sunne for warre, as Temples were for Prayer. The Captaine was of the bloud Royall legitimate. They had vnder earth paſſages from one Fort to another very artificiall with Labyrintian windings and turnings inextricable but by a Thread. When I was a Boy I often ſaw the ruines thereof, but none of vs durſt enter the Vaults further then wee had Sun-light.

Digitized by Google

House of the Sun for warre.

Labyrinth.

The whole worke was of ſtone, ſome poliſhed, ſome rude. They had to draw the great Stone Saycuſca twenty thouſand Indians with Cables, one halfe before, the other behind; in one vneuen paſſage it killed three or foure thouſand Indians. They call it wearied, becauſe they were wearie and neuer layd it in the building. The Architect was Calla cuncay. The Spaniards not only doe not repaire the Fortreſſe, but pull it downe to build their priuate houſes, euery of their houſes in the Citie beeing therewith adorned. In ſuch manner haue they caſt ſo great Maieſty to the ground. The three wals ſtand becauſe they cannot ruine them for their greatneſſe, yet ſome part they demoliſhed to ſeeke the Chaine of gold which Huayna Capac made. This Inca beganne this Fortreſſe which continued fiftie yeeres before it was finiſhed.

Spaniſh acts.

The eighth Booke.

THe Great Tupac Inca Yupanqui (his name Tupac ſignifieth Reſplendent or Illuſtrious, for ſuch were his Acts) after the accompliſhment of ſolemnities concerning his Fathers Funerals, and his owne Coronation, which conſumed one yeere; viſited his Kingdome, the better to know and to be knowne of his Subiects, and for better execution of Iuſtice by his Officers and Iudges, in which he ſpent foure yeeres. This done, he leuied forty thouſand Souldiers to proceed in the courſe of his Fathers, which palliated their ambition of Souereigntie and Dominion, with reducing men from Barbariſme and beaſtiality to Ciuility and Religion. He marched to Caſſamarca, and entred the Prouince of Chachapuya. Eaſtwards from Caſſamarca, a Countrey of valiant men and very faire women. They worſhipped Snakes, and the bird Cuntur was their principall God. It then contayned aboue fortie thouſand Families. Their chiefe Armes were ſlings, and they wore a kinde of ſling-net for their head tyre (hee cals both by the name honda.) Beyond them are the Huacrachucu a fierce and warly Nation, which weare on their head a blacke leaſh of Wooll with white flyes here and there, and for a feather a piece of a Deeres horne: theſe worſhipped in thoſe times Snakes, and kept them pictured in their Temples and houſes. Theſe lay in the way to the former, and much bloud was loſt in fight on both ſides; whereupon the Inca, after their ancient cuſtome, ſought to reduce them by faire meanes, intimating that hee came more to doe them good as they had done to other Nations, ſuffering the Curacas to rule ſtill; then to rule ouer them, ſeeking no more but that they ſhould worſhip the Sunne, and leaue their barbarouſneſſe. He diuided his Armie, and ſent ſome to take the moſt commodious places, ſo that they were forced to ſeeke peace. He ſtayed there, the Countrey being rainy, till the next Summer, and ſent for twenty thouſand men more, inſtructing the Huacrachucus meane while in his deuotions and Lawes, and to conuay away the waters, and make the grounds fit for ſeed to their great benefit.

Tupac Inca Yupanqui the 11. King of Peru.

Caſſamarca.

Huacrachucus ſubdued.

The next Summer hee entred the Prouince Chachapuya, where notwithſtanding the wonted gentle meſſage he was incountred with a cruell warre. This Prouince was fiftie leagues long, and twenty broad, reaching to Muyupampa, which is thirtie leagues long. The Hils were craggie, and in places very ſteepe and ſnowie; three hundred which he ſent to ſpie, were drowned in the ſnow, not one eſcaping. The proweſſe and numbers of the Inca brought all by degrees to ſubiection, Pias, Charmac caſſa (an open paſſage of the ſnowie Hill, very dangerous where the three hundred were loſt) Cuntur Marca, Caſſa Marquilla, all Mountaynous and craggie places, till hee came to Raymipampa, ſo called of a Feaſt which he ſolemnized there to the Sunne in his Campe, being a faire Valley; and thence to Muyupampa, where Ancohualla entred as is before ſaid in Viracochas time, rather then he would bee a ſubiect to the Inca; theſe and Caſcuyuuca now yeelded. The next Summer hee marched on to Huancapampa, a great Nation, but diuided amongſt themſelues, naked and warring not for wealth but women, worſhipping Birds, Beaſts, Plants, euery one as himſelfe pleaſed. Theſe he tamed by hunger (ſtaruing ſuch as came not in) and gaue them Maſters to inſtruct them in husbandry, and how to clothe themſelues, to water their fields, and to plant Townes, ſo that it became one of the beſt Prouinces in Peru. More to ennoble it, hee after built there a Temple and houſe of Virgins, prohibiting the eating of mans fleſh, and gaue them Prieſts and men learned in the Lawes to inſtruct them. Afterwards he added three great Prouinces, Caſſa Ayahuaca and Callus to his Signory, which liued ciuilly, hauing Townes and Fortreſſes, and a kind of Republike or free State, hauing their meetings and choice of Gouernours. Theſe Conqueſts ended, he ſpent long time in viſiting his Kingdom, and building Temples, Nunneries, Store-houſes, Aquæducts, eſpecially taking care of the Fortreſſe at Cuzco.

Chachapuya.

Muyupampa.

Raymipampa.

Huancapampa.

Three ciuill Prouinces ſubdued.

Huanuco or Cuenaco.

Some yeeres this way ſpent, hee marched Northward to Huanuco, which containeth many diſunited Nations, whom he eaſily conquered, and planted Townes there, being a fertile Countrie, trie, and temperate, making it the chiefe Prouince of many others in those Confines. He built there a Temple for the Sunne, and a house of chosen Virgins, twenty thousand Indians performing seruices in course to those two houses. He went next to the Prouince Cannari, which ware their haire long, tied on a knot in the Crowne. By these head-tires in the time of the Incas, each Indian was knowne of what Nation he was; which in my time they continued, but now they say all is confounded. These Cannaris before this worshipped the Moone as chiefe Deity, and great Trees and Stones in the second place; but now were brought to the Incas Sunne-religion, and their Countrie ennobled with a Temple, Nunnerie, Palaces, Water-passages, &c. The Nation Quillacu is belowe the Cannari, the most miserable of Nations, neither hauing good land, nor aire, nor water, whence grew a Prouerbe applied to couetous misers, bee is a very Quillacu: on these the Inca imposed a tribute of Lice, that so they might learne to be cleanly. Tupac Inca Yupanqui and his sonne Huayna Capac much ennobled those Prouinces of the Cannaris, and of Tumipampa, with building Royall houses, adorning the Lodgings in stead of Tapestry with counterfeits of Herbs, Plants and Creatures of gold and siluer, the Porches chased with Gold and inlayed with Emeralds and Turquesses: a Temple also of the Sunne enchased with Gold and Siluer, the Indians custome being to make ostentation of seruice to their Kings, and to flatter them filling their Temples and Palaces with all the treasures they were able (in Pots, Pannes, and other vessels of gold and siluer and much costly raiment.) Hauing returned to Cozco, his ambition not long after brought him backe to Tumipampa, where he gained many Prouinces vnto the confines of the Kingdome of Quitu, viz. Chanchan Moca, Quesna, Pumallacta, (that is, the Land of Lions, by reason of the store there, being also worshipped for Gods) Ticzampi, Tiu cassa, Capampi, Vrcollasu and Tincuracu, barren and barbarous Regions, which he sent Masters to teach Ciuilitie and Religion. After that, he made another expedition with fortie thousand men to Quitu, the name of the Kingdome and King. It is seuenty leagues long and thirtie broad, fertile and rich. They worshipped Deere, and great Trees.

Digitized by Google

Pedro de Cieça saith 30000. c.80. he calls it Guanuco, and saith, there was a Royall house very admirable of great stones cunningly placed; neere to which was the Temple, &c.

Cannari.

Quillacu. Louse-tribute.

Cieça cap.44 p.1 calls it Thomebamba, and is large in this point.

See Cieça c.46.

Quitu.

The warre continuing long, he sent for his sonne Huayna Capac to come with twelue thousand men more to exercise him in warre. Huayna Capac signifieth from a childe rich in magnanimous exploits. Capac was a title giuen to things of greatest eminence. And this seemed præeminent in him that he neuer denied any woman any sute, vsing to them gentle compellations of Mother, Sister, Daughter, according to their age, &c. Tupac Inca returned to Cozco, and left his sonne to dispatch the warre, which was three yeeres before Quitu was reduced, beside two yeeres which his father spent: the reason whereof was the Incas custome to gaine not by fire and sword, but as they could make the Natiues forsake it; which had this effect, that their conquest was more durable, and their vassals bare them better affection. At the end of those fiue yeeres the King of Quitu died, and the people subiected them to Huayna Capac, which vsed them gently. He passed on to Quillacenca, that is, Iron-nose Prouince (so called for their boring the nostrils, and wearing Iewels thereat) a vile, brutish, lousy People, without Religion, eating any carion. They were easily subiected, as likewise the next Prouince of like condition Pastu, and Otauallu a People more ciuill and warlike, and Caranque a barbarous Nation which worshipped Tigres, and Lions, and great Snakes, in their Sacrifices offering the hearts and bloud of men which they ouercame in warre: these he ciuillized also.

Huayna Capacs bounty to women.

Quitu subdued

Quillacena.

Tupac Inca was busie in his Fortresse at Cozco, keeping twenty thousand men at worke therein with great order and emulation of each Nation to exceed other. Huayna Capac returning, was receiued with great triumph,: and because he had no children by his eldest Sister Pillcu Huaco, he was secondly married to his second Sister Rana Ocllo, the Incas still vsing that marriage in imitation of Manco Capac, and for certainty of the bloud on both sides. King Tupac, and his Councell ordained that both should be lawfull Wiues, and holden for Queenes, and not for Concubins. Hee married also Mama Rucu, his Vncle Amaru Tupacs eldest daughter the next in bloud to the former, hauing no third Sister of whole bloud. By Rana Ocllo he had Huascar Inca; and by his Cousin-german, Manco Inca. Tupac Inca drawing neere to death called together his children (which were aboue two hundred) and made the wonted discourse or Testament, commending peace and iustice and care of their vassals to them, and to shew themselues indeed the children of the Sunne: recommending to the Prince, the reducing and conquest of the Sauages to the seruice of the Sunne, and a politike life, and to follow the example of his Fore-fathers, and to chastise the Huallcanilcas which had slaine his Captaines in rebellion. Hee said he was now going to another life, his father the Sunne calling him to rest with him. Thus died Tupac Inca, famous for the benefits done to his Countrie, therefore called Tupac Yaya, Illustrious Father. By Mama Ocllo he had sixe sonnes; the eldest, Huayna Capac: the second, Auqui Amaru Tupac Inca; the third, Quehuar Tupac; the fourth, Huallpa Tupac Inca Tupanqui (my mothers grandfather;) the fifth, Titu Inca Rimachi; the sixth, Auqui Mayta. They embalmed his body which I saw Anno 1559. as if it had beene aliue. The rest of this eighth Booke the Authour hath spent in description of the creatures of principall note of those parts, in which out of Acosta, and others hauing beene tedious already, we will not here trouble the Reader.

Huayna Capacs marriages.

Tupa Incas death and progenie.

Digitized by Google

The ninth Booke.

Huayna Capac the twelfth.

THe mighty Huayna Capac, after other things ſet in order, hauing a ſonne (Huaſcar) borne, for whom he made twenty dayes feaſt; began to propound great and rare deuiſes to himſelfe. One was a Chaine of gold, much ſought but neuer ſeene by the Spaniards. The Indians vſe much dancing, and are as eatily diſtinguiſhed one Nation from another by their dances, as by their head-tires. The Incas had a graue kinde of dancing in meaſures, men alone without women, hand in hand, ſinging in their ſoft paces, three hundred or more in a ſolemne feaſt, the Inca himſelfe ſometimes dancing with them: at other times they danced about, ſtill comming neerer to that Royall centre. This holding of hands in a ring gaue occaſion to make the golden Chaine, that they might dance by it without touching hands, as I haue heard the fore-mentioned old Inca, (my mothers Vncle) diſcourſe. Hee told mee that it contained the length and bredth of the great ſtreet of Cozco, which is ſeuen hundred foot, and the bigneſſe of euery linke thereof was (he ſaid) as bigge as his wreſt. Auguſtin de Zarate calls it Maroma, a Cable, from the report of Indians then liuing, and ſayth, it was as much as two hundred Indians could lift) Much haue the Spaniards ſought for this and other treaſures, whereof they could neuer finde any foot-print. Prince Yats Cuſi Huallpa (that was his name before, and ſignifieth Huallpa the Sunne of reioycing) was in memorie of that which was made to honour his birth called Huaſcar, an r added to Huaſca (which ſignifieth a Rope, their Language not differencing a Chaine from a Rope) by which addition Huaſcar might be without ſignification, and auoyde the ill ſound of a Rope, which was added to his former name at his waining and pelling Feaſt, when hee was two yeeres old. After that hee leuied fortie thouſand Souldiers, and went to Quitu, in which Voyage hee tooke for his Concubine the eldeſt daughter of King Quitu aforeſaid, which was there kept in the Houſe of the choſen, or Nunnerie; and by her had Atahuallpa, and other children.

A gold chaine of incredible length and greatneſſe.

Huaſcar as Roper.

Atahuallpas mother.

Further conqueſts.

Thence he went to the Plaines, and made conqueſt of the Valley of Chimu (now Trugillo) and Chacma, Pacaſmayn, Canna, Collque, Cintu, Tucmi, Sayanca, Mutupi, Puchin Sallana, beſtowing much coſt to conuey water, and benefit his new conqueſts. After ſome time ſpent at Quitu, hee leuied another Armie of fifty thouſand, and conquered Tumpiz (a vicious, luxurious People, and Sodomiticall, which adored Tigres and Lions, and ſacrificed the hearts and bloud of Men) and Chunana Chintuy, Collonche, and other confining places. Hee made a faire Fortreſſe in Tumpiz, and ſet there a Garriſon: he built a Houſe of the Sunne, and another of Virgins: and after that entred into the Prouince Huancauillca, which had killed thoſe Maſters which his Father Tupac Inca Yupanqui had ſent to inſtruct them. Hee commanded all the Curacas to come before him, which durſt doe no other, with all the chiefe men, to whom one of the Maſters of the Campe made a Speech of their treaſon and bad demerits: Notwithſtanding the Inca vſing his naturall clemency, and making account of his title Huacchacuyac (The benefactor or louer of the poore) both pardoned all the common people, and would ſo farre remit the better ſort which had beene doers in that buſineſſe, that though all had deſerued death, yet one onely of tenne whom the lot ſhould deſigne to execution, ſhould die: and of the Curacas, and Captaines, each ſhould loſe two teeth in the vpper iaw, and as many in the lower, both they and their deſcendants, in memorie of falſifying their promiſe to his father. They which feared that all ſhould paſſe the ſword were content, and the whole Nation would needs both men and women participate in that tooth-loſſe, and did likewiſe to their ſonnes and daughters, as if it had beene a fauour. One of that Nation I knew in my fathers houſe at Cozco, which largely recounted the premiſſes.

Vallies in the Plaines ſubdued.

Tumpiz or Tumbez ſubdued.

Huancauillca puniſhed.

Huacchacuyac a title of the Incas.

Tooth-rite.

The Inca ſpent much time in viſiting his Kingdome from Quitu to Charcas, aboue ſeuen hundred leagues, and ſent Viſitors to Chili, whence his father had drawne much Gold. This done, he raiſed an Armie of fifty thouſand men of the Northerne Prouinces, and hauing viſited the Temple of Pachacamac, and cauſed the Prieſts to conſult with the Oracle, which promiſed proſperitie to his deſignes, and the like at Rimac; hee paſſed thorow thoſe Vallies to Tumpiz, and ſent to the Iland Puna, twelue leagues in compaſſe, the Lord whereof was called Tumpalla, a man which kept many women and boyes for his luſt; beſides the Sea, their common Deitie, they worſhip Tigres and Lions, and ſacrificed the heart and bloud of Men. Theſe receiued the Incas commands, but after killed and threw ouerboord his men as they were conueying them to the Continent, and ſacrificing ſome of them, which the Inca ſeuerely reuenged, both on them, and on their confederates in the Continent, and commanded them to keepe the memorie of that diſmall execution in mournfull ſongs; enioyning them to obey his Gouernour which kept the Fortreſſe of Tumpiz. From Tumpiz he proceeded in viſitation of his Kingdome to the Chichas, with intent to doe the like in the Southerne part, and ſent Preſents fine garments to the Gouernours, Curacas, Captaines and Royall Officers, according to the cuſtome of the Incas. But hearing that the Chachapuyas were in rebellion (to whom hee ſent Meſſengers, which receiued ill vſage and anſwers) he made a Bridge, and marched ouer the Riuer, and came to Caſſa marquilla, with purpoſe to deſtroy them.

I. Puna ſubiected.

Their treaſon.

Dreary ſongs.

Chachapuyas rebellion and pardon.

The people not being able to hold out, fled into the Mountaines, and others more wiſely knowing his gentle diſpoſition, procured a Matron of their Countrie, which had beene Concubine to Tupac Inca Yupanqui to meet him with a multitude of feminine ſupplicants, which ſo well played her pitifull part in a perſwaſiue ſpeech ſeconded with cries and lamentations of that

that chorus of women, that the Inca relented, taking her vp from the ground, called her Mamanchic (our mother) granted her request, and gaue her commission to make an end of the businesse, sending some vnarmed Incas with her to that purpose. The Chachapuyas in remembrance of this fact encompassed the place where shee had met the Inca, with three walls, not permitting the foot of man or beast to touch so holy ground: the vttermost wall of clay, the second of stone vnpolished, the inmost of polished stone, which the couetousnesse of the Spaniards ouerthrew, as they did other the best buildings, to search for treasure. Thankfulnesse.

Huayna Capac went to Manta (in which Countrie stands the Port which the Spaniards call Puerto Viejo) which worshipped the Sea and Fishes, Tigres, Lions, and great Snakes, and amongst other things a great Emerald, which they say, was little lesse then an Estriches egge. In their greater Feasts they shewed it publikely; the Indians came from farre to adore it, and sacrifice to it, and to present it with small Emeralds, as daughters to the mother; the Priests and Cacike, telling them that this was the most agreeable offering. Thus were many Emeralds gathered here together, where Don Pedro de Alnarado and his companions (one of which was my father Garcilasso de la Vega) found them in the conquest of Peru, and brake most of them on an Anuill, saying (like bad Lapidaries) that if they were precious stones they would not breake with the greatest blowes, and if they brake they were but Glasse. But their goddesse-Emerald the Indians had conueyed away before, neither could it since be found by any industrie. The people of Manta were open and shameless Sodomites, and in their marriages the Bridegrooms kinsmen and friends had first handsell of the Spouse. They flayed the Captiues which they tooke in Warre, and filled the skinnes with ashes, and hanged them vp at the doores of their Temples, and in their feasting and dancing places. These with the Apichiqui, Pichunsti, Sana, and other Nations confining on the Coast, he subiected. These were more brutish then the Mantans, and not onely raced their faces with stones, but deformed their children with laying one boord on the fore-head, and another in the necke, so keeping them in presse from day to day, till they were foure or fiue yeeres old, to make them broad-faced, shauing away the haire of the crowne and necke, and letting it growe on the sides, making it curle and bush out to more monstrositie. Manta. Puerto Viejo. Their foolish deuotions. Emerald-goddesse a huge gemme. Platter-faced.

From these he went to Saramisse and Passau, vnder the Equinoctiall Line, where they worshipped nothing at all, and had neither Towne nor House, but liued in hollow Trees, went naked, vsed women in common, neither did their lusts stay there; had their faces quartered into foure coloures, yellow, azure, particoloured and blacke, their haire, long, curled and full of filth, (I saw them with mine eyes when I came for Spaine) and are the sauagest people that can bee imagined. Huayna Capac would none of them, but said, let vs returne, for those are not worthie to haue vs to be their Lord. The Indians haue a tradition that at the Point of Saint Elena there came in Boats of Rushes, huge Giants higher then common men from the knees vpwards, their eyes as bigge as Saucers, and other members proportionable; they had no women with them, and were clothed in beasts skinnes, or naked. They setled themselues there, and digged Wells admirably deepe in the Rocke, yeelding very coole water. One of them did eate more then fiftie men; and were forced to get fish for their diet. They killed the women of the Countrie in vsing them; were great Sodomites, and were therefore at last by fire from Heauen consumed, leauing onely some bones of them as memorials, which haue beene, and still are there found. Anno 1550. there were as great bones found at Mexico. In this Point of Saint Elena, neere to Puerto Viejo, are certaine Fountaines of pitchie substance fit to calke ships, boiling out very hot. Barbarous people. Giants. See sup in Acosta. pag. 1002. &c. Bituminous Springs.

Huayna Capac one Raymi or Feast day of the Sunne, looked vp to the Sunne, which the high Priest, one of his Vncles, told him was vnlawfull. But soone after hee looked vp againe, and againe was reproued by the Priest: but he answered, Answere mee to these questions; I am your Lord, and which of you dares bid mee rise and goe a long Iourney? None, said he, would bee so mad. And if any the greatest Curaca be commanded by me to goe from hence to Chili, will he not doe it? The Priest answered, that none would disobey him in any thing. Why then I say (said the Inca) that our Father the Sunne must needs haue a greater and mightier Lord then himselfe, which commands him euery day to take such a Iourney: for if he were a superiour Lord, he would some time or other rest himselfe. The Caranques rebelled and were seuerely chastised, and 2000.* of them beheaded in a Lake, and therefore called Tahuarcocha, or Sea of blood. After this, with much griefe that he was forced to such sharpe medicines, he went to Quitu, and finding his Sonne Atahuallpa, wittie, wise, warlike, and comely of personage (as vsually were the Incas and Pallas) hee much affected him, and still would haue him about him, and so handled the matter, that with consent of his Brother Huascar, he set him in possession of the Kingdome of Quitu, and other Prouinces, giuing him experimented Captaines, and part of his Armie, the better to secure himselfe, and to pacifie the vnsettled new-gained Prouinces in his Fathers life time, to that end transplanting Nations from one Region to another. Reuerence to the Sunne. Wise apophthegme. See sup. 1028. Caranques rebell. Cieça saith 20000. perhaps including all which were slaine in the warre. Atahuallpa put in possession of Quitu, and other Prouinces subdued by his father.

Huayna Capac made two famous Royall wayes, the one alongst the Hills within Land, the other by the Sea-side. From Cozco to Quitu are fiue hundred leagues by the Sierras, rockie and craggie way, which hee made plaine, breaking downe the high, and exalting the lowe places someſometimes fifteene or twenty ſtades or mans heights, that a Cart might haue gone on them till the wars of the Indians and Chriſtians much endammaged them. By the Plaines he made another of leſſe difficultie, making mud-wals to hold in the way, forty foote broade with a high cauſie both in the Vallies, and in the ſands, driuing ſtakes therein to know the way which is there ſo moueable and changeable, the like ſpace of 500. leagues.

High-way workes greater thē the worlds ſeuen wonders or Annibals Alpe-way.

Spaniſh Ship.

Buſied in theſe affaires and great workes he had newes of the Spaniards (thoſe which Baſco Nunez de Balboa firſt diſcouerer of the South Sea, had ſent vpon diſcouery 1515. who, as before is ſaid, impoſed the name Peru) which filled him with wonder and care. Hee liued after this in peace eight yeares, and dyed Anno 1523. hauing raigned two and fortie yeares, not minding the Propheſies and proſecuting of further conqueſts after he had heard of the Spaniſh Ship, by reaſon of a Propheſie or ancient Oracle which the Incas had, that after ſo many Kings a ſtrange Nation ſhould come and deſtroy their Kingdome and Idolatry. Three yeares before that Ship was ſeene, as they were Prodigies foreſignifying the loſſe of the Incas Empire.

celebrating the Sunnes feſtuall ſolemnity, an Eagle Royall, which they call Anca, purſued fiue or ſixe kiſtrels and as many ſmall haukes, which ſet vpon the Eagle and beate her, ſo that hauing no way to eſcape, ſhe fell in the market place amongſt the Incas, as ſeeking helpe at their hands. They tooke her and did what they could to relieue her; but within few dayes ſhe died; an augurie ſeeming to preſage ſome diſaſter to that ſtate. There were alſo greater earthquakes then the ordinary (to which Peru is vſually ſubiect) and the Sea often ſwelled ouer the ſhores; the aire no leſſe terrified them with comets. The Moone in a cleere night had three circles round about her very great, one of bloud, the middlemoſt blacke, the vtmoſt of ſmoake. Llayca a diuiner told the Inca; Onely Lord, know that thy mother the Moone aduiſeth thee that Pachacamac threatneth the royall bloud, and to ſend great plagues on thine Empire; the firſt circle ſignifying the bloudy warre which ſhall follow when thou art gone to reſt with thy Father the Sunne, betwixt thy poſteritie, that in few yeares it ſhall altogether faile: the ſecond ſhewes the deſtruction of our Religion and republique and alienation of thy Empire, which ſhall turne all into ſmoake as is ſignified by the third circle. Inca was troubled, but put it off ſaying, thou haſt dreamed theſe fooleries laſt night, and ſaiſt my Mother hath ſent me ſuch intelligence. But the Soothſayer anſwered, he might ſee it with his owne eyes, and conſult with other diuiners, which he did, and found the ſame ſight and anſwere; hee yet made ſeemings not to beleeue, ſaying hee did not beleeue the Sunne would permit that to happen to his progenie. He offered notwithſtanding many Sacrifices to him, and appointed the Soothſayers in all parts to conſult with their ſeuerall Oracles, eſpecially with Pachacamac and Rimac, whoſe anſwers were obſcure and doubtfull. Theſe things I heard of two Captaines of Huayna Capacs guard, then eightie yeares old, and baptiſed, ſpeaking hereof with teares, Don Iuan Peshuta, and Chanca Rimachi, as alſo of Cuſihuallpa that old Inca, and of my Mother and her Brother Don Fernando Huallpa Tupac Inca.

Llayca a diuiner.

Huayna Capacs ſickneſſe and laſt will, or ſpeech before his death.

Huayna Capac one day bathing himſelfe came forth cold, and found himſelfe deadly ſicke, made a teſtamentall diſcourſe, ſaying, that he was now going to heauen to reſt with his Father the Sunne, which called him out of the bath, euer ſince which time he was ſo indiſpoſed of body: when I am dead you ſhall burie my body as is vſed to be done with Royall bodies, my heart and entrals in Quitu, in token of the loue which I beare it; my body you ſhall carrie to Cozco to lay it with my anceſtors. I commend you to my Son Atahuallpa whom I ſo much loue, who remaineth for Inca in my place in this Kingdome of Quitu, and in all the reſt which he ſhall conquer by armes to augment his Empire. And for you the Captaines of my armie, I charge you in particular to ſerue him with that fealty & loue which you owe to your King, in all and euery thing doing what he ſhall command you, which ſhall be the ſame that I ſhall reueale to him by order of our Father the Sunne. I likewiſe commend vnto you iuſtice and clemencie towards the Vaſſals, that the Title of Louer of the poore giuen vnto vs, be not loſt; and that in euery thing you doe like the Incas, Sonnes of the Sunne. Hauing made this ſpeech to his children and kinſmen, he called the reſt of the Captains and Curacas which were not of the bloud royall and gaue them in charge fealty and ſeruice due to their King, and at laſt concluded: It is many yeares ſince that by reuelation of our father the Sunne, we hold that when twelue Kings are paſſed of his Sonnes, there ſhall come a new and vnknowne people into thoſe parts, and ſhall gaine and ſubiect to their Empire all our Kingdomes and many others. I ſuſpect that they ſhall be of thoſe whom we know to haue gone along ſt the coaſt of our Sea: they ſhall be a valiant Nation which euery way ſhall exceede you. We well know that in mee is compleat the number of twelue Incas. I certifie you that a few yeares after my departure from you, that new Nation ſhall come and fulfill that which our Father the Sunne hath ſpoken, and ſhall gaine our Empire and rule ouer it. I command you that yee obey and ſerue them as men which euery way ſhall haue aduantage of you: whoſe Law ſhall be better then ours, and their armes more mightie and inuincible then yours. I leaue you in peace, for I goe to reſt with my Father the Sunne which cals mee.

The Propheſie of the Incas Empire.

Cuſihuallpa his comment on that ſpeech.

All this the Indians held in great veneration, and fulfilled euery iot thereof. I remember that one day that old Inca ſpeaking in preſence of my Mother, and rehearſing theſe things, and the Spaniards entrance, and their conqueſt: I asked him how, their Countrey being ſo rough, their people ſo warlike, and their number ſo many, they loſt their Empire to ſo few Spaniards. He anſwering me, repeated the foretelling or propheſie of the Spaniards aforeſaid, and ſaid that the

Inca

Digitized by Google

Inca had commanded them to obey and serue them, for euery way they should haue the aduantage of them. And for that obiection of cowardise, he answered me. These words which our Inca said vnto vs, being the last that euer he spake to vs, were more powerfull to subiect vs and quite our Empire, then the armes which thy Father and his companions brought into this Land. Thus died Huayna Capac; his body was embalmed, and carried to Cozco; his heart interred in Quito. His funerall solemnities and mourning continued a yeare, according to the custome of the Inca Kings. Hee left aboue two hundred sonnes and daughters; some Incas affirme aboue three hundred to exaggerate the crueltie of Atahuallpa, which slew them almost all: who therefore was so odious, that the Spaniards hauing put him to death, were thought men sent from their God the Sun to take vengeance on the destroyer of his seede. And when they brought Cockes and Hens with them into Peru, they hearing the Cockes crowing said, that in perpetuall infamie of that tyrant and abhominable memory of his name, they pronounced it in their crowing, saying Atahuallpa, and would answer the Cockes crowing with reckoning the name Atahuallpa: wherein the children imitated them in those times, so that if they had heard a Cocke crowe, they would recrow in like tune the name of Atahallpa: a thing which I my selfe and other boyes my Schoolefellowes, children of Spaniards by Indian women haue often done, together with the Indian children. They named likewise on such occasion his principall Captains, whose names were of so many syllables, Challcuchima, Quilliscacha and Ruminnani. The Spaniards thought they did this for his honour, saying the Cockes made this honorable mention of him: so Blas Valera writeth, which receiued it of the Indians of Quito his naturall subiects, which applied to a good mention that which those of Cozco deuised in euill, for his cruelties there done.

Huayna Capac death.

Indians hate to Atahuallpa for causes following.

Cock-conceit, whereby it appeareth that they had no Cocks before in Peru.

Huayna Capac being dead, his two Sonnes Huascar and Atahuallpa raigned quietly for the space of foure or fiue yeares, one in Cozco, the other in Quito. After which Huascar began to thinke with himselfe that he had done ill in consenting to his father in the matter of Quito, which now was his brothers; whereby he was barred vp also from further conquests; the other three waies being locked vp by the Antis, the Sea and Chili; so that his brother might by new conquests make himselfe greater then he: and whereas now his stile was Capa Inca (onely Lord) in time, the other might both equall and exceede him. These things more and more troubling him, hee sent a Messenger to his brother, saying; that by the ancient constitution of the first Inca Manco Capac, the Kingdome of Quito, and all the Prouinces which he possessed, belonged to the crowne and Empire of Cozco, which howsoeuer he had quitted to him vpon his Fathers command, yet was it more by force then iustice, being to the losse of the crowne and preiudice of the successors; and therefore neither ought his Father to command it, nor was he obliged to fulfill it. Yet seeing he had giuen consent, he was content vpon these two conditions; first that he should adde nothing to his Empire; secondly, that hee should doe him homage and fealtie, as his vassall and feudatarie. Atahuallpa receiued this message with great humilitie and seeming submission, and three dayes after returned answere, that in his heart he had alwayes reknowledged vassallage; being returned to the Inca by Post, he was much content, sending reply, that he againe confirmed that estate to his Brother conditionally, that by such a time he should make his personall homage at Cozco. Atahuallpa answered hee was a happy man to vnderstand such the Incas pleasure, that he would doe it by the time set him; but for greater solemnitie, he did beseech his Maiestie to giue him leaue that all the Prouinces of his estate should come with him to celebrate in Cozco the obsequies of Huayna Capac his Father, with rites agreeable to those of Quito and the other Prouinces, which ended, hee and his would doe their due homage.

Huascar the thirteenth, and last Inca Emperour.

Huascars message to Atahuallpa.

His answer and pretended humilitie.

All this did Huascar grant, and Atahuallpa made vse of to his proiect of soueraignetie. He sent proclamation to all his Prouinces, that all men seruiceable should in such a space make ready to goe to Cozco to celebrate his Fathers obsequies, and to performe the homage to the Monarch Huascar Inca, and that therefore they should set forth in their best ornaments and bravery for greater solemnitie. But priuily he sent to his Captaines to leuie the best Souldiers which should carry their armes closely; for he more minded executions then exequies. He commanded them to march in bands, fiue or sixe hundred together, one band two or three leagues after the other: and when they came within ten or twelues dayes iourney of Cozco, that they should ioyne together, the last doubling their iournies to ouertake the former. In this manner Atahuallpa sent aboue 30000. men, most of them old Soldiers of his Fathers, with choise Captaines, and appointed two Camp-masters or Generals, Challcuchima and Quizquiz. Huascar relying on the loyaltie of his Subiects, and his Brothers faire promises, not onely suspected no treason, but prouided them necessaries. Atahuallpa vsed this dissimulation, knowing himselfe of vnsufficient power to warre openly on his brother. But some of the experimented Gouernors and Captaines, as they passed, could not but resent and disgust this course; and signified so much to the Inca; who thus awakened out of his dreame, sent to gather forces in the South parts and East and West: to Chinchasuyu he sent not, which were the best Soldiers, because of these forces marching thorow their Countrie. The other through long peace were vnaccustomed to armes, of which were leuied aboue 30000. the rest being too remote for a sudden businesse.

Atahuallpa leueth forces to assault Huascar vnder pretence of obsequies to Huayna Capac.

Huascars securitie.

Atahuallpas men passed the Riuer Apurimac without contradiction, and embattelled themselues

Sero medicina paratur.

Digitized by Google

selues in three squadrons, so marching to Villacunca within six leagues of Cozco. He himselfe abode still in the confines of his Kingdome, there to obserue the successe of this battel, wherein he placed his chiefe trust, by reason of the negligence of the other side, & the courage of his old souldiers. These thought the shortest way the surest, before more forces might be assembled by Huascar, and within two or three leagues Westwards from the Citie was the battell fought, in which one side fought to get, the other to keepe the Inca, whose vnhappy fate made him prisoner to Atahuallpas men as he was fleeing thence with 5000. which were all in manner slaine in presence, some by the enemies, some by themselues seeing their Lord prisoner. Many also not willing to enioy liberty after he was taken, offered themselues prisoners. They set a sure guard about the Emperours person, and sent to proclaime his taking thorow all the Empire, lest other forces should come to his succour; sending word also to their Master Atahuallpa. Hee vsed his victory most cruelly; for dissembling that he would restore Huascar to the Kingdom, he summoned all the Incas in the Empire, and all the Rulers and Officers to appeare at Cusco by such a day, to capitulate on certaine Articles to be obserued betwixt the two Kings, that they might liue together in loue like brethren. Thus all the Incas, except those whom sicknesse, age, or remotenesse hindred, came thither, whom Atahuallpa caused to be put to diuers and cruell deaths.

The battell betwixt Atahuallpas men and Huascar. Huascar taken.

Atahualpas cruelty and dissimulation.

For he knowing that he was not of the Incas bloud legitimate, that is, by the Coya or sister of the King, nor yet of the whole bloud, so to challenge the inheritance by Father and Mother, remoued these rubs out of the way of his ambition; yea all those who were of the halfe bloud, though further from claime, yet lest they might imitate his example, he caused also to be slaine. Not contenting himselfe with the death of his two hundred brethren and sisters, the children of Huayna Capac, he proceeded to the Vncles, Cousens, and all, whether legitimate or bastards: some he caused to be beheaded, some hanged, some were cast into Riuers with weights at their neckes, some cast from high precipices. All which were done before he had passed Sausa, nintie leagues off the Citie. Yea they brought forth Huascar to see these dismall executions, that he might dye in the death of euery of his kinsmen. The Curacas Captaines and Nobility they brought forth being the rest of the prisoners bound, to the Valley of Sacsahuana, and made a long lane of them, thorow which they made poore Huascar to passe couered with mourning weedes, and hauing a roape about his necke: they seeing their Inca in this case, fell downe with cries to doe him reuerence; and were therefore slaine with Hatchets and Clubs before his face. After this the cruelty passed to the women and children of the bloud royall, Atahuallpa commanding to take them all (but those in the house of Virgins) which were brought to the field Yahuarpampa, or bloudie field, a name confirmed by the cruell executions, by staruing, hanging, and diuersified tortures on that tender sexe, and innocent age. Euery quarter of the Moone they renewed these cruelties, from which some were yet suffered to escape, of which number were my Mother and her Brother then eleuen yeares of age or vnder, which they sent away in disguised habits of the common people; for all degrees might they be knowne by their habit.

Ill conscience fearefull, and therefore tyrannically cruell.

See of it in Viracocha.

Of the Auquis or Infants Royall which escaped, were Paullu and Titu the Sonnes of Huayna Capac. Don Carlos the sonne of Paullu, married with a Spanish woman, by whom hee had Don Melchior Inca, which in the yeare 1602. came into Spaine to receiue rewards promised for the seruices of his Father and Grandfather in the pacification of Peru, Anno 1604. I receiued a letter of Valladolid that he was allowed 7500. Duckets of reuenue in the Citie of Kings, and that he must bring his wife to Spaine, that the Indians which are his inheritance shall be set ouer to the Crowne, and that he shall no more passe to the Indies. This is the chiefe of the bloud of the Incas, by the male line descended of Huayna Capac. Of Atauallpa I knew one Sonne and two Daughters, one of which Donna Angelina by Marquesse Picarro had a Sonne called Don Francisco, he died a little before I came to Spaine: the next day, before his buriall many Incas came to my Mothers, and amongst others her old Vncle, who said that Pachacamac had preserued him many yeares to see an end of all his enemies; and instead of mourning much, reioyced; whereof I demanded the reason why we should be glad for the death of our Kinsman? he biting his mantle (which with them is a token of great anger) said, What, wouldst thou be the kinsman of an Auca, sonne of an Auca (that is, a tyrant traitor) which destroyed our Empire, killed our Inca, consumed our bloud and lineage, which did so many cruelties so differing from the nature of the Incas? I could eate him raw without sauce now he is dead: for his Father the traitor Atahuallpa was not the son of Huayna Çapac our Inca, but sonne of Quitu Indian, which with his mother wrought treason to our King; otherwise he would neuer haue done, no not imagined such things to his enemies, much lesse to his kindred; say not therefore, he is our kinsman, thou wrongst thy kindred to reckon to it so cruell a tyrant, &c. This Francisco whiles he liued, seeing the hatred which the Incas, and all othee Indians bare him, had little to doe with them, and came little abroad, they still calling him Auca. His Father destroyed the Officers and Seruants of the Kings house, and the Townes whereof they were, being by Manco Inca priuiledged Incas, of some a third, of others a fifth or a tenth part. Hee named also and committed great mischiefes on the Canaries, & slew 70000. of them, because they would not subiect themselues to him at the beginning of his rising, whereby there were said to remaine fifteene times as many women as men.

A Catalogue of the posterity of the Incas.

Don Melchior next in bloud kept in Spaine.

Atahuallpas son and second daughters.

His whole posterity wasted.

Hatred of the Incas and Indians to Atahuallpas Sonne.

In

Digitized by Google

In the end of the yeare 1603. the Incas of Peru writ to Don Melchior Carlos Inca, and to me, all their names desiring vs to make supplication to his Maiestie, to command that they should be exempted from tributes which they paid, and other vexations which they suffer no lesse then other common Indians. They sent painted in white Chis taffata the Tree royall from Manco Capac to Huaina Capacs sonne Paullu, in their ancient habit, with the coloured ribbon of their heads, and eare-rings in their eares, with Partisans instead of Scepters in their hands. Their phrase was much mixt with Spanish, for now they are all Spaniolized. They rehearse much miseries of their life, for which cause I doe not here record it. They write with much confidence that the King would not onely relieue them, if he were made acquainted, but reward them, as the posterity of Kings. At the side of euery Kings picture they set those of his posteritie, with the title Capac Aylla, or the Royall stocke, distinguishing each Kings descendents. Of Manco Capacs posterity there remaine 40. Incas: of Sinchi Roca 64. of Lloque Yupanqui 63. of Capac Yupanqui 56. of Mayta Capac 35. of Inca Roca 50. of Yahuar Huacac 51. of Viracocha Inca 69. of Pachacutec and his Sonne Yupanqui put together 99. of Tupac Inca Yupanqui 18. of Huayna Capac 22. These two last generations (as neerer the Crowne) Atahuallpa with great diligence destroyed. The whole summe is 567. persons, all descended by the male line; for of the female they made no such account, except they were Sonnes of the Spaniards which conquered the Land; for those they call Ingas also, beleeuing that they descended of their god the Sunne. This writing was signed by eleuen Incas, agreeing to the eleuen descents, each for all of his race.

Miserable state of the Incas in Peru.

Tree Royall of Incas and their posteritie liuing in April 1603.

CHAP. XIIII.

The suppliment of the History of the Incas, briefely collected out of the Authors second part, or Generall History of Peru.

THus haue we run thorow the Authors first part, or Commentaries Roiall, of the originall and liues of the Incas. In his second part, entituled the Generall History of Peru, he relates the Spanish Acts, Discoueries, and conquests there; part of which in Benzo, Vaz, and others ye haue seene already, and the Spanish Authors haue related the same at large. I will briefely touch a few things to perfect this our story of the Incas. In the taking of Atahuallpa he relateth at large the Oration of Frier Vincent de valle vridi. First, touching God, his creation of the world, and of man. Secondly, Touching Adams sinne and Christs redemption on the Crosse. Thirdly, his power giuen to the Apostles, and ouer them and all Christians to Peter and his successor the Pope. Fourthly, the Popes gift of all those Countries to the Emperour, Lord of the world, to the end to bring them to the Christian faith. Fifthly, the Emperours authorising Francis Pizarro as his Embasador and Lieutenant, that those Realmes might receiue that benefit, and that he might begin alliance and confederacie betwixt the Emperours Maiestie and the Inca, in such sort that his whole Kingdome should become tributarie, and the Inca become his subiect and wholly deliuer vp his Kingdome and renounce the administration thereof, as other Kings and Lords haue done. Secondly, after such peace and friendship, and subiection voluntary or by force, hee was to giue obedience to the Pope, and receiue the faith of Christ, quite abandoning his superstition of Idols, inuented by the Diuell. All which, O King, thou art to take well in worth as being very profitable to thee and thine: and if thou denyest, know that thou shalt be compelled by warre, fire and bloudshed, and all thine Idols shall bee throwne downe to the ground. And we will constraine thee with the Sword, that leauing thy false Religion whether thou wilt or no, thou shalt receiue our Catholike Faith and pay Tribute to the Emperour giuing vp thy Kingdome to him. But if thou shalt obstinately resist, know for most certaine, God will suffer, as of old Pharao and all his Army perished in the Red Sea, that thou likewise and thine Indians shall bee destroyed by our Armes.

Frier Vincents speech to Atahuallpa.

Note the latter part of this Friers Oration: for which cause I haue inserted it at large.

Strange Preaching of Christianitie.

This Oration was kept by the tradition of Quipus (or Quippos) which are the knot-records of Cassamarca where the deede was done: the words of trinity and other Christian Mysteries were not well vnderstood, and therefore ill deliuered by the Interpreter: that language still wanting proper tearmes for them, and being forced to Indianize Spanish words for that purpose. Atahuallpas answere was, with great griefe for those last words, of Pharao and destruction, saying, Atac (an interiection of sorrow) and first complained of his Interpreter, and that this minacing message was contrary to the former which they had sent him; that their Prince and they might seeme tyrants so to goe about destroying the world, killing and robbing those which had done them no wrong: or else that they might seeme the seruants of Pachacamac which had sent them to their destruction; which if it be so, he and his were ready to offer themselues to whatsoeuer pleased them, not for feare of their minaces or armes, but to fulfill his father Huayna Capacs command at the houre of his death, that they should serue a bearded Nation more valiant Atabuallpas answer.

then

Digitized by Google

then they, which was to come and bring them a better Law and Customes. But if this bee so, Pachacamac is pitifull and mercifull, whom they ought to imitate, and not to beginne with robberies and cruelties as they had done in Tumpiz, and the confines. It seemed strange, he said, to him, that the Emperour should bee Lord of the World, and yet the Pope should make him a new grant; and then also is the Pope greater then he, and Lord of the world. Againe hee had shewed no reason why hee should pay tribute onely to Charles; which rather hee thought was due to God, as Creator, or to Adam the first man, or to Christ the best man, or to the Pope which hath power to giue his Kingdome and person to another, of all which he in his speech had discoursed. And if he had any right ouer him, it had beene meet, first to haue signified it to him, before menacing of warre, fire, and slaughter, &c. The Spaniards impatient of this long discourse fell to rifling the Indians, others to robbing an Idoll Temple of the Siluer plates; and comming forth to fight, the Indians raised a great shout. But the Inca with a great voice commanded that they should not smite nor hurt the Spaniards, though they tooke or killed the King. Frier Vincent made a plausible Speech to the Spaniards, in fauour of the Indians; but they could not heare him for the crie: neither did the King cast the Booke on the ground, or the Frier crie vengeance *; as some haue written, with other things against the Pope, and the death of Christ. Fiue thousand Indians were slaine, and no Spaniards hurt, but the Generall by one of his owne, slightly, in the taking of Atahuallpa. When he had agreed on his ransome, which was neuer wholly paid, for want of time to accomplish it *: (460570. Duckers of it came in) Soto and Barco were sent to Cozco, which at Sausa in the way had sight of Huascar, there kept prisoner; who by signes desired aide of the Spaniards to restore him to his Empire, promising three times as much as Atahuallpa had done, better able to performe it, as hauing and knowing where to fetch the treasures of his progenitors: whereas Atahuallpa had little treasure but what he tooke from Churches. They answered, that they must first goe to Cozco whither they were sent: and in the meane time Atahuallpa had intelligence of these passages. Hee subtilly to sound the Spaniards, how they would take the death of his brother, fained himselfe very sorrowfull for that hee had heard one of his Captaines had killed him, and refused to eate, making shew of much griefe. Pizarro comforted him, and promised to right and reuenge the euill on him which had done it. He seeing that Pizarro tooke it in no worse part, sent a speedy Post to dispatch him so suddenly, that the Spaniards could not tell but that it had beene done before. His owne death followed after (as before is recited, and Huascar at his death foretold) by the vniust iustice of the Spaniards, many of which protested by word and writing against that cruelty, in vaine. His corps were carried to Quito to be interred, where vnder pretence of more honourable Obsequies, Ruminnaui one of his Captaines (following his examples) wrought a great treason; made a feast to Quilliscacha brother of Atahuallpa, and other great men, whom hauing made drunke vnawares with the drinke Sora, a heady liquour forbidden by Law, hee slue, with Chalcuchima the Generall, and the Sonnes and Daughters of Atahuallpa, and all that might stand in the way of his ambition. Hee buried aliue the Chosen Virgins, which smiled at his reports of the Spaniards (interpreting it to lust, being done rather to please him) causing to vndermine and cut the Hills to execute that dismall fate more terribly. After some bickerings with the Spaniards, hee fled to the Antis, and there perished miserably.

Easie victorie and cruell Spaniards which kill so many not resisting.

* So they which were there, and Gomara, Benzo, Herera, &c. but the later Inquisitors seem ashamed of Vincents furie.

* See contra. cap. vlt.

Huascars promises to the Spaniards.

Huascar slaine.

Atahuallpa slaine.

Ruminnauis cruelties.

Manco Inca. The Incas began and ended with Manco; as the Empire of Rome with Augustus and Augustulus, and of Constantinople with two Constantines.

Manco Inca Brother of Huascar, came to the Spaniards at Cozco, to demand the repossession of the Empire, by inheritance due to him. They made him faire semblance: and he offered to promote the Gospell (according to his Fathers testament, as a better Law) and the Spanish affaires. Articles were agreed on, and they granted him a Diadem with great solemnitie, but so farre short of the wonted, that the old men cried as fast for the want of that, as the yong boyes shouted for ioy of this. When afterwards he propounded the accomplishment of those Articles which had beene made betwixt the Spaniards and the Indians, that the Naturals might liue in quiet, and knowe what seruice to performe to the Spaniards, with the reall restitution of his Empire: the Gouernour Pizarro, and his brethren excused themselues by the broyles and stirres which had growne amongst themselues, which hitherto permitted not the accomplishment. They further expected answer from the Emperor their Lord, of whom he might hope for al good, (the Articles being good for both parts) to whom they had giuen account of the capitulations, his brother Hernando being shortly to returne with answere. But when he was arriued at Tumpiz, the Marquesse tooke occasion to rid himselfe of the Incas importunitie, and with many faire words intreated him to returne to his Forresse till things might be perfected: which he doing, they held him there Prisoner, fearing his haughty courage. The Indians seeing their Inca Prisoner, were much grieued, but he comforted them, saying, that he and they ought to obey the Spaniards, for so Huayna Capac had commanded in his Testament, and that they should not be weary till they had seene the last issue of these things. Hee hoped that this his imprisonment would turne into greater liberalitie with him, these Viracochas being a Nation come from Heauen.

Manco imprisoned.

The Marquesse dismissed himselfe of the Inca, whose person and guard hee commended to his brethren Iuan and Gonzalo, and went to the Citie of Kings, to people and enlarge it. The Inca Manco with much obsequiousnesse to all the Spaniards, and many presents of Gold, Siluer, Gemmes,

Digitized by Google

Gemmes, Fruits, &c. making no shew of griefe for his imprisonment, obtayned his libertie; which he had laboured the rather, hearing that Hernando Pizarro was comming to gouerne in Cozco. Hee gate leaue to goe to Yucay, which was the Garden of the Kings, to which place he summoned his Captaines, and complained of the Spaniards breach of promise, in not performing the Capitulations which they had made with Titu Atauchi, his brother, and that they had laid him in prison with Iron fetters: that he had perceiued their ill mindes from the beginning, but suffered it to iustifie his cause with God and with the world, that none might obiect to him the disturbing of the peace. But now he could no further relie on their vaine promises, well knowing that the Spaniards shared the Land amongst themselues in Cuseo, Rimac, and Tumpez, whereby it well appeared that they intended not the restitution of the Empire to him: and that he was loth to make further triall of their fetters, and therefore required their best aduice, intending with Armes to recouer his right, trusting in Pachacamac, and his father the Sun, that they would not herein forsake him. They told him, that he might looke for like reward at the hands of those strangers as Atabuallpa had found, notwithstanding the payment of his ransome: and it was Pachacamacs great grace, they had not dealt with his Royall Person likewise, &c. Manco enlargement and taking Armes.

Thus Manco raised forces, so that 200000. Indians came to Cozco, and shot Arrowes with fire on them on all the houses of the Citie generally, without respect of the Royall houses, only they reserued the Temple of the Sunne, with the Chappels within it, and the house of the Virgins: which two they spared (though their wealth was gone) not to commit any sacrilegious act against their Religion. Three Hals also they reserued wherein to make their feasts in time of raine, one of which was in the house that had belonged to the first Inca, Manco Capac. (The author proceedes in the particular fights and seege of the Spaniards, too long here to rehearse.) In diuers places they killed seuen hundred Spaniards. But at last Manco was driuen to forsake the Countrey [b] by the inequality of the Spaniards horses, Guns and other offensiue and defensiue armes, against which they had no experiments to make resistance. In the quill-vnquill broiles and warres of the Spaniards in Peru, some of them fled to Manco Inca to auoide the Vice-roies seuerity, one of which was Gomez Perez a cholericke man, which playing at Bowles with the Inca, would stand so stiffely on measuring of his cast, and the earnest folly of play, that forgetting all good manners, he one day vsed the Inca as if he had beene an Indian slaue; wherewith the Inca prouoked giue him a blow with his fist on the breast, whereupon Gomez with his Bowle strooke the Inca on the head so great a blowe, that hee fell downe dead. Whereupon the Indians set on the Spaniards, which first fled into the house to defend themselues there, but were fired out; and the Indians hauing killed them with enraged furie, had purposed to eate vp their flesh raw: but after left them to the birds and wilde beasts, for foode. Thus died Manco by the hands of those whom hee had preserued from death, and had kindly vsed in those wilde Mountaines of Villa ca campa, which hee had chosen for his securitie. I was present, when some Incas present at the act, with teares recounted this to my Mother, which came afterwards from these Mountaines with the Inca Sayri Tupac, the sonne of that vnfortunate Prince, by order of the Vice-roy Mendoza, Marquesse of Canete. This Vice-roy vsed (to perswade that comming in of the Inca) the Ladie Beatriz his Fathers Sister, which so wrought with his Guard, hee being then too young to take the Diademe, that vpon promise of certaine conditions hee came and rendred himselfe to the Vice-roy, and after went to Cusco, and was baptised by the name of Don Diego, together with his wife Cusci Huarcay, grandchilde to Huascar Inca, Anno 1558. Shee was a faire woman, but somewhat pale, as are all the women of that Countrie, about sixteene yeeres olde. I went in my mothers name to visite the Inca, and to kisse his hand, which vsed mee courteously, and two small vessels of gilt Plate were brought forth, of which he dranke one, I the other. He spent his time, one day visiting one part, and another, another part of the Citie. Hee adored the Sacrament, calling it Pachacamac, Pachacamac. He went thence to the Valley of Yucay, and there remayned till his death, which was about three yeeres after, leauing no issue but a daughter, which was married to Martin Garcia de Loyola. His brother Tupac Amaru tooke the Mountaines.

An Armie of 200000. Indians Cozco burnt.

[b] When Almagro returned out of Chili and Aluarado with other Spaniards came in.

Gomez an vngratefull proud Spaniard.

Manco slaine.

Sayri Tupac his sonne.

Francisco de Toledo second sonne to the Earle of Oropesa, being Vice-roy, determined to bring from the Mountaines of Villca campa the Prince Tupac Amaru, the lawfull Heire of that Empire, after his said brothers death without issue male. Hee sought to doe it by faire and gentle perswasions sending Messengers to that purpose, promising him maintenance from his Maiestie for his person and familie. His kindred and friends told him that his brother had receiued small recompense from them, or society with them, and therefore counselled him not to goe, it being better for him to liue there, then to die with his enemies. The Spaniards counselled the Vice-roy to force him, alledging that his Indians robbed the Merchants, hoping also by his imprisonment to recouer the treasures * which his progenitours had hidden. Such robberies were indeed committed in his father Mancos time, but seldome, they being forced thereto of necessitie for want of victuals, which the Mountaines yeeld not. But after his death there was no such matter. The Vice-roy sent Martin Garcia Loyola, with two hundred and fiftie Souldiers well prouided against the Inca. The strength of those passages was abated, and the wayes Tupac Amaru his tragedie.

* Hinc ille lachrymæ.

Digitized by Google

plained after the issue of Sayri Tupac, so that the Prince Tupac Amaro fled, and the Spaniards pursued, and hee being guilty to himselfe of no crime, yeelded himselfe with his wife, two sonnes and a daughter, and all his Indians, looking for no ill measure, but maintenance at their hands.

Bloudy Vice-roy.

The Vice-roy framed a processe against the Prince, and against all the Incas of his kindred, and against the Mestizos begotten of that stocke by the Spaniards, some of which were condemned to be tortured, that so they might finde some cleater matter against them. One of their mothers came to the prison, and cried out that they had got that reward, for that their Fathers had conquered the Countrey, for which their Children should be all hanged. Why did they not as well kill their Mothers, for whose sinne Pachacamac had suffered this, which had beene traytors to the Inca for loue of the Spaniards; with other outcries of vengeance in this world, and the next from Gods hand. Thus went shee crying in the street, which made the Vice-roy surcease his purpose, & he proceeded not to put any to death: but banished them to liue a lingring death in diuers parts of the world, out of that, which their Fathers had conquered. Some he sent to Chili (one of which was the sonne of Barco aforesaid, which had beene with Huascar) others to the new Kingdome of Granada, to the Iles of Barlouent, to Panama, to Nicaragua, and some hee sent to Spaine, one of which was Iuan Arias Maldonado, who liued there an exile ten yeeres, and recounted these things to mee; hee after got leaue of the supreme Councell of the Indies to returne to Peru, for three yeeres to recouer his goods, and then to returne to Spaine, there to end his dayes. All the rest perished in banishment. The Indians of the bloud Royall, which were sixe and thirtie of the principall of the bloud Royall, he exiled and confined to the Citie of Kings, and with them the two sonnes and daughter of the poore Prince, the eldest not ten yeeres old; the Archbishop of Rimac or The Kings, pitied the young girle, and brought her vp: the two sonnes with three and thirtie more died in little aboue two yeeres, comming out of a cold hilly Countrie to the hot Plaines by the Sea. The three remayning were Don Carlos my School-fellow, sonne of Don Christouall Paullu, and two others, which were sent home to their houses, but died all in a yeere and halfe after. Of Don Carlos sonne we haue said before, that hee came into Spaine in hope of great rewards which in Peru were promised him. He died Anno 1610. at Alcala de Henares of griefe to see himselfe shut vp in a Monastery, and left one sonne with three daughters. The sonne died being a childe of little more then a yeere old, and so the Rent granted by the Contractation house at Siuill to his father ceassed.

What became of the Incas race.

Don Melchiors the last Incas death.

Now for the Prince Tupac aforesaid (to returne to him) they sentenced him to lose his head, which was executed, the Crier proclayming his treason and tyrannies against the Catholike Maiestie of King Philip the second, King of Spaine and Emperour of the New Word. They told the Inca that he was sentenced to lose his head, without any particular cause mentioned: hee answered, hee had done nothing worthie of death, that the Vice-roy might send him prisoner to Spaine, to kisse the hands of his Soueraigne King Philip, which would be securitie enough. And if his father were not able with 200000. Indians, to subiect 200. Spaniards in Cozco, what needed the Vice-roy now feare any new commotion? The religious hastened to instruct him for baptisme, to which he was willing, he said, his Grandfather Huayna Capac hauing commended the Christian Law, as better then theirs: He was Christened by the name of Don Philip, with as much griefe of those which were present, as was ioy made at the baptising of Sairi Tupac. The Spaniards did not imagine that the sentence should be executed, being so contrarie to humanitie, and disagreeable to the Maiestie of King Philip. It was performed on a Scaffold in the chiefe Street of Cozco. Many sought to petition the Vice-roy, which knowing their errand, would admit none to audience. They set the Prince on a Mule, with a rope about his necke, his hands tied, one going before, to proclaime his treason. He not vnderstanding Spanish, asked the Friers, and hearing that he proclaimed him Auca, called him to him, and said to him, Say not so, for thou knowest it is a lye, and I neuer did or thought treason, as all the world knoweth; but say, that I must die for the Vice-roys pleasure, and not for my faults against him or the King; I appeale to Pachacamac, that this is true. The multitude crying and lamenting, they feared some stirre, there being 300000. soules assembled in the streets, they hasted to set him on the Scaffold. The Priests prayed him to still the clamours and out-cries of the people. Hee stretched out his arme with his hand open, which hee layd on his eare, thence letting it fall by degrees to his thigh; whereupon followed a sudden silence, as if there had not beene a man left in the Citie. Which made the Spaniards to wonder, and the Vice-roy amongst others which stood at a window to see the execution. Thus died the Inca with great magnanimitie, as the Incas haue beene in such cases accustomed, he worshipping the Images of our Sauiour, and of the Virgin, as the Priests taught him.

Tupac Amaro executed.

He is baptised Philip.

The Vice-roy returned with great wealth, and with 500000. Pezos in gold and siluer, and going to kisse the Kings hand, he bad him get him to his house; he had not sent him to Peru, to kill Kings, but to serue Kings. The Councell of Indies receiuing information against him arrested all his treasure aforesaid, which filled him with such griefe that hee died within few dayes after.

Vice-roys iust reward.

Loyolas death.

Loyola, which had taken him, and was husband to his brothers daughter, was sent generall to Chili, where the Araucans hauing spies on him, when hee had sent most of his Souldiers to garrisons,

Digitized by Google

risons, with voices of birds and beasts gaue signes to their fellowes, which came in with a great power of Indians, and killed him and all his Spaniards. Anno 1603. Araucans policy

Thus haue wee fleeted the creame of the Incas Historie of the Incas; the Spaniards (whose acts hee principally handleth in his second part) haue enough of their owne to relate their acts, some of which also follow, and others haue gone before, to shew how they conquered and vsed their conquests of and in the New World. The greatnesse of that State, and strangenesse of the rising, proceeding, and ruine of the Incas, made mee the larger, though all this be not so much in words, as one of the seuenteene Bookes, out of which it is gathered. It may bee of good vse, both to vnderstand the Spanish Indian Historians, as Acosta, &c. and in many things in which for want of Language, and acquaintance with the Incas, they haue receiued and deliuered errours, to amend them: and in this kinde, for antiquities, is a iewell, such as no other Peru Merchant hath set to sale. If I haue seemed confused, and without exact method, I haue followed my Author, who setting forth the former part, Anno 1608. published the other, 1617. hauing receiued of some later occurrents better intelligence. Wee will now leaue this Inca-Spaniard, and briefly recount from the Spanish Actors and Authors, what passed in these first and great mutations. Ramusio published these three following Discourses at large, which wee haue thus contracted.

CHAP. XV.

Briefe Notes of FRANCIS PIZARRO his conquest of Peru, written by a Spanish Captaine therein employed.

A Certaine Spanish Captaine, whose name is not added to his Tractate writeth, that in Februarie 1531. he went with Pizarro from Panama, who arriued, and slayed three monechs at Tumbez, and thence went to Tangarara, and founded Saint Michaels, where he heard of Atabalipa or Atahualpa, and his warres with his brother Cusco: who sent a Spie thither, and as hee marched, presents, to Pizarro. Hee with tortures learned of two Indians what and where Atabalipa was. They marched on (he sayth) to Caxamalca, a Citie foure miles in circuit, entred with two Gates. On one side of the Citie is a great Palace walled about, with a great Court planted with trees. This they call the House of the Sunne, whom they worship, putting off their Shoes when they enter. And such there are in euery great Towne. There were two thousand Houses, in streets straight as a Line, the walls of strong stone, three paces (or fathoms) high; within are faire Fountaines of water, and in the midst a greater street then any in Spaine, walled about; before which is a Fortresse of stone, with staires from the Street to the Port. On one side of this Street is the Palace of Atabalipa with Gardens and Lodgings, the houses all painted with diuers colours: in one roome were two great Fountaines adorned with plates of Gold, in one of which runnes water so hote that a man cannot indure his hand therein, the other being very cold. The people are neate, the women are honest, weare a wroughe Girdle on their long garments, aboue that a Mantle which coureth them from the head to the midst of the thigh. The men weare white Frockes without sleeues. The women in a Palace made Chicha for the Armie. After the Armies approached, a Frier of the Order of Saint Dominike, went and told him that the Christians were his friends. The Cacique (Atabalipa or Atahualpa) answered, that first hee would haue them restore all that they had taken in his Land, and after hee would doe as hee should see cause. The Frier with a Booke in his hand, beganne to speake to him the things of God; hee demanded the booke, and the Father gaue it him, and he threw it downe about his people. The Indian Interpreter ranne and tooke it vp and gaue it the Father, who suddenly returned, crying, Come forth Christians, come forth, and set on these Enemies, Dogs, which will not accept the things of God, whose Prince hath throwne on the ground the Booke of our holy Law. Thereupon the Gouernour sounded the Trumpets, and gaue a token to the Gunner to discharge the Ordnance, and the Spaniards on foot and horsebacke rushed on with such furie, that the Indians hearing the dreadfull thunders of the Artilerie, and seeing the force of the Horses, fled: the Gouernour went directly to the Litter in which Atabalipa was whom hee tooke, many Indians whose hands were cut off bearing the same Litter on their shoulders. Sixe or seuen thousand were slaine besides many which had their Armes cut off, and other wounded.

Caxamalca or Cassamarca described.

Chicha is a kind of Drinke made of Maiz. Frier Vincent. This is denied by Inca Vega, because (it seemes) the thing seemes odious, rather then false: and he might not tell tales offensiue to Spanish eares: especially to the Friers which authorized his Bookes to the presse.

Atabalipa, by an Indian, sent to the other Indians, that they should not fire, for hee was still aliue in the Christians hands, whom hee commended for a good Nation, and commanded his to serue them. Hee was about thirtie yeeres old, a personable man, somewhat grosse, with thicke lips, and eyes incarnate with bloud; his speech graue. The next day the Spaniards got fiftie thousand Pezos of Gold (each worth one Ducket and two Carolines) and seuen thousand Markes of Siluer, and many Emeralds, wherewith the Cacique seemed content: and said, that he would giue him as much Gold as would fill a roome to such a marke, higher then a tall man could reach by a spanne, the roome being twenty fiue foot long, and fifteene broad. The Gouernour asked how much Siluer hee would giue? he said, that hee would giue eight thousand Indians, which should Atabalipa taken; description of his person.

A Marke is in these discourses 8. ounces.

Digitized by Google

should make a partition in the midst of the Palace, and fill it with vessels of Siluer of diuers sorts, all which he would giue for his ransome. The Gouernour promised him his libertie on this condition, and to worke no treason against the Christians. Fortie dayes were set, and twentie passed in which came no Gold. Then we learned that he had taken his brother Cusco * his brother by the father, a greater man then himselfe. He had told some, that Atabalipa promised the Gold which he had, and hee would giue the Christians foure times as much as the other had promised: which being told to Atabalipa, he caused him suddenly to bee dispatched. Hee killed another of his brothers, which had said he would drinke in Atabalipas skull, but contrariwise he drunke in his; which I my selfe saw, and all that were with Hernando Pizarro. I saw the head with the skinne, the flesh drie, and the haires on, and his teeth closed, and betwixt them a Pipe of Siluer, and on the top a Cup of Gold fastned to the head, with a hole going into it. His Slaues put Chicha into the Cup, which ranne by the mouth into that pipe, whence Atabalipa drunke.

* These first entrers of Peru call both Huayna Capac and Huascar by the name of their chiefe Citie Cusco.

Anno 1533. the Gouernour gaue his brother Hernando leaue to goe with a Companie of Spaniards to Guamachuco, and there he found an hundred thousand Castellians of Gold, which they brought for Atabalipas ransome. Diego Almagro came with an hundred and fiftie men to our succour. Because the Gold came so slowly, Atabalipa willed the Gouernour to send three men to Cusco, laying the blame on his imprisonment, which made the Indians not to obey him. These Christians were carried by Indians in Hamacas, a kinde of Litters, and were serued. They arriued at Xauxa, where was Chilicuchima, a great Captaine of Atabalipa, the same which had taken Cusco, which had all the Gold at his command. He gaue the Christians thirty burthens of Gold, of which each weighed an hundred pounds. They said it was little, and he gaue them fiue burthens more, which they sent to the Gouernour by a Negro, whom they had brought with them.

Iourney to Cusco, and gold there.

They went on to Cusco, where they found Quizquiz, a Captaine of Atabalipas, which made little account of the Christians. He said that if they would not restore his Master for that Gold he would giue, he would take him out of their hands: and sent them presently to a Temple of the Sunne, couered with plates of Gold. The Christians without the helpe of any Indian (for they refused, saying they should die, it being the Temple of the Sunne) with Pickaxes of Brasse disfurnished the same, as they told vs afterwards, and spoyled the Temple. Many Pots and vessels of Gold were also brought (which there they vsed for their cookery) for ransome of their Lord Atabalipa. In all the house, there was such store of Gold, that it amased them. They were amazed to see one seat in their house of Sacrifices which weighed nineteene thousand Pezos of Gold: in another where old Cusco lay buried, the pauement and the walls were couered with plates of Gold and Siluer, which they did not breake, for feare of the Indians displeasure, nor many great earthen Pots there, couered with Gold likewise. In that House were two dead and embalmed, neere to whom stood a woman with a Maske of Gold on her face, which fanned away the winde and Flies. She would not let them enter with their shooes on: they went in and tooke much Gold, but not all, for Atabalipa had interested them, because there lay his Father. They found there a great house full of Pots and Tubs, and vessels of Siluer. They would haue brought much more then they did, but that they were alone, and aboue two hundred and fiftie leagues from other Christians: but they shut it vp, and sealed it for his Maiestie, and the Gouernour Francis Pizarro, and set a guard on it.

* In the inside, &c. See sup. in the Inca Vegas relation.

Huayna Capacs Sepulchre.

Peers shiftes for horse shooes.

Ouer the Riuers as they passed, they found two Bridges together, one open for the vulgar, the other shut for the passage of great men. Hernando Pizarro trauelling ouer the Mountaines with his Horse, where the way was made with hands in many places as a Scale or Staires, which wore off his Horse shooes, commanded the Indians to shooe his Horses with Gold and Siluer, and so came to the Citie, bigger then Rome, called Pachalchama *, where in one faire chamber was an Idoll of wood, which they said, was their God which giues life to all things, at whose feete were many Emeralds fastned in Gold. They haue him in such veneration, that none may serue nor touch him, nor the walls of the house, but such, as they say, are called by him. It is certaine, that the Deuill there speakes to them, and tells them what they should doe. They come 500. leagues off to him, and offer him gold, siluer, and iewels, giuing it to the Porter which goeth in and returnes them an answer. They which serue him must be pure and chaste, abstaining from eating, and women. All the Countrie of Catamez payeth him tribute. The Indians feared that the Idoll would haue destroyed the Spaniards: which neuertheless entred without feare, and brought very little Gold thence, for the Indians had hidden it all; they found the places whence they had carried great store, so that they goe not aboue 30000. Pezos, & of a Cuzco 10000. more. Chilicuchima sent them word, that he had store of Gold for them at Xauxa, but deceiued them.

* This was the Temple of Pachacamac, in the former relation. This Idoll perhaps was that which the Natiues had kept from before the Incas conquest, for then they worshipped none. Estetes treatise of this Voyage is in Ramusio.

They brought him and other great men to Atabalipa, which put coarse Cloth on them before their entrance, and did him great reuerence, lifting vp their hands to the Sunne, with thanks that they had seene their Lord, and came by little and little neerer him, and kissed his hands and feet, who shewed great signes of Maiestie, and would not looke any of them in the face. They tied Chilicuchima to a stake, and set fire to him, to extort a confession of old Cuscos Gold from him, which (much burned first) said that Quizquiz had it in keeping: and that old Cusco, though dead, was still obserued, and had victuals set before him; and told of another Pauilion, uilion, where were great vessels, from whence the Gouernour sent and fetched much Gold. The Christians came from Cusco with aboue an hundred and ninety Indians laden with Gold. Some vessels were so great, that twelue Indians had much adoe to bring them. The Gouernour melted all the small pieces, which I can well tell, for I was keeper of the house of Gold, and saw it melted, and there were aboue nintie Plates of Gold: there were in that roome two hundred great tankards * of Siluer and many small, with pots and other peeces very faire. I thinke I saw weighed of the Siluer 50000. Markes. There were also in the same roome eighty tankards of Gold, and other great peeces: there was also a heape higher then a man of those plates of very fine Gold; and to say truth, in all the roomes of the house were great hils or heapes of Gold and Siluer. The Gouernour put them together and weighed them before the Officers, and then chose some to make the shares for the company. The Gouernour sent the Emperour a present of 100000. pesoes in fifteene tankards, and foure pots, and other rich peeces. Euery footman had 4800. pesoes of gold, which made 7208. Duckets, and the Horsemen twice as much, besides other aduantages. Before the sharing he gaue Almagro company 25000. * pesoes, and 2000. pesoes of Gold to those which had staid at Saint Michaels: and much gold to all that came with the Captaine, two or three great Cups of gold a peece to the Merchants, and to many which had gotten it, lesse then they deserued. I say it, for so it fared with me. Many presently, amongst which I was, demanded leaue to returne to Spaine, and fiue and twenty obtained it. When Atabalipa heard they would carry the gold out of the Countrey, he sent for men to come and assaule the Gouernour. A few dayes before two Sonnes of old Cusco came thither and lodged with the Gouernour, one * of them was naturall Lord of the Countrey. Vpon newes of forces comming, they brought Atabalipa by night to a stake to burne him aliue, by the command of the Gouernour; but he said he would be a Christian; whereupon after Baptisme they strangled him that night, and the Countrey was quiet. The Gouernour made the eldest Sonne of old Cusco Lord of the Countrey, which caused great ioy to the Natiues. Wee arriued in Siuil, Ianuary the fifteenth 1534.

* Cantari.

* Others say 100000.

Atabalipa pretended treason.

* Manco.

CHAP. XVI.

The Conquest of Peru and Cusco, called New Castile, and directed to the Emperour by FRANCISCO de XEREZ, Secretary to Captaine FRANCIS PIZARRO which conquered them.

FRancis Pizarro liued in Panama which the Gouernor Pedrarias de Auila had peopled. He was Sonne of Captaine Gonzalo Pizarro of Trugillo: hee obtained licence of Pedrarias to goe vpon new discoueries; and hauing bestowed a good part of his estate in a Ship and necessaries, he departed from Panama Nouember the foureteenth 1524. with one hundred and twelue Spaniards, and some Indians: seuentie daies after they went on land, which after they named Of Hunger, with eightie men, the rest being dead, and sent the Ship to the Iland of Pearles neere Panama for victuals, hoping of their returne in twelue dayes, which continued forty seuen, they liuing on the Seas wilde prouisions meane whiles, whereby twenty dyed, and the rest were very weake. A Cow hide which they had for seruice of the Ship, they had shared amongst them and eaten before the Ship returned. Then did they proceede on the Voyage, and came to a Towne which the inhabitants had forsaken, where they found store of prouisions: and the next day the Countrie people set on them, easily ouerthrew ours being weake, gaue the Captaine seuen wounds very dangerous, and left him for dead; slew fiue, and wounded seuenteene of the rest: whereupon they returned for Panama, and he staied at Chuchama to refresh and cure himselfe. A little before Diego de Almagro his companion was gone for his succour with a Ship and seuenty men; and landing at the place where Pizarro was beaten, was there assaulted and lost one of his eyes; many Christians were wounded, but for all that they fired the towne, and put the enemy to flight: sailing thence, they came to a great Riuer which they called Saint Iohns, and found there some shew of Gold, and returned, and found Pizarro in Chuchama.

Pizarros beginning.

Land of Hunger.

Pizarro wounded.

Almagro wounded.

Almagro was sent to Panama, where Pedrarias misliked and crossed this designe which had proued hitherto so vaine; but he with much adoe returned with one hundred and ten men to Pizarro, with whom fiftie of the former remained of both companies, one hundred & thirty being dead. In two Ships they set forth and spent three yeares in great trauell; hunger killed the most of them, that fiftie onely remained: not finding neuertheless any good Countrie. Then it was their hap to finde great hopes of Gold and riches, comming to Cancebi, and tooke six men to learne their language. Almagro was sent for more men to Panama, whiles Pizarro staied at Cock-Iland. But some had written to the Gouernour to be freed from thence. The Gouernour sent sent licence to those which would; onely sixteene staied there with Pizarro fiue moneths till the Ship returned, and then on the last day of the time granted them, hauing made better discouery ariued at Panama.

Three yeares troubles.

Cock Iland.

Pizarro was sent into Spaine to get graunt of the Countrey, which in large Commission hee obtained, and after his returne departed from Panama with three Ships, and 180. men, and 37. Horse. In thirteene dayes he arriued at the Port of Saint Matthew, which was as much as before he could doe in two yeares, and landing there, found all the Country in armes. They marched till they came to a great towne called Coache, which they suddenly assaulted, and there got in Gold, to the value of 15000. Castellines, and 750. pounds * of Siluer, and many Emeralds, which they then knew not, and therefore for small trifles exchanged them with the Indians. Thence the Gouernour sent backe for men and horse to Panama and Nicaragua. He went with his Spaniards to the Isle Puna, rich and populous, which subiected themselues, and because it was winter, staid there. Those Indians rebelled and raised forces. Hee tooke the Cacique (hauing vnderstanding hereof) and made great slaughter of the Ilanders, and hauing beheaded ten principall men, he set free the Cacique to call together the Ilanders, which had fled to Tumbez. Pizarro went thence to Tumbez, where he found the Indians in armes. Three which had gone in the Boates were robbed and slaine, but Tumbez and many other places rued it.

Vnderstand of pounds by weight, as by markes eight ounces, by Castellines Pezos. Puna.

May 16. 1532. he departed from Tumbez and was well receiued in many places, to which he gaue notice that he came to bring them in subiection to the Emperor, and to the knowledge of the holy Catholik faith; to which many of the Caciques yeelded. Comming to a good Riuer, which he found to haue a good Port, he planted a Colonie sixe leagues from the Sea, and called it Saint Michaels. At Chira he found that the Cacique of that Towne, and another of Almotaxe had conspired to kill certaine Christians; hee tooke them both with their chiefe men and burned them aliue, sparing the Cacique himselfe of Chira, whose fault was lest, and giuing him Almotaxe also. This execution was dreadfull to the whole Country. There he shared the Gold which the Caciques, and the men of Tumbez had giuen them, and paid the Marriners their fraight. He departed thence the foure and twentieth of September 1532. hauing newes of Atabalipa at Caxamalca: 55. abode at Saint Michaels, and with the Gouernor remained 62. horsemen and 102. footmen.

Saint Michaels founded. Cacike and others burned.

Pizarres army.

As he marched he receiued better intelligence of Atabalipa, and of Cusco, in which old Cusco lay interred in a place which had the roofe and wals couered with Gold and Siluer. Hee sent a Captaine to Caxas and Guacamba, with certaine horse and foote. He learned of the way (which he passed betwixt these two townes, the latter of which had a faire stone Castle) that it reacheth from Cusco to Quito aboue 300 leagues, so broad that six horsemen may ride abreast, with water passages all alongst for trauellers to drinke, and houses for their lodging euery dayes iournie; with this Captaine returned an Indian with a present from Atabalipa, of two Fountaines of stone and two burthens of dried Ducks (which is the fashion of that Country) signifying his great desire to see the Gouernour at Caxamalca. All the way from the Riuer of Saint Michaels to Chimcha is a Vallie well peopled, hath the way made by hands, walled on both sides with trees in many places set for shadow, made by old Cusco. The people liue much after one manner. They * sacrifice their children, and sprinkle the bloud on their Sepulchers, and daube their Idols faces therewith. Their sacrifices goe dancing and singing to their death. The Temples are compassed with stone wals and seated in the highest part of the Citie. He sent an Indian messenger to Atabalipa with words of greatest kindenesse. Leauing the Chincha way, he tooke that which goeth to Cassamalca, and ascended a great Mountaine, the horsemen leading vp their horses, sometimes mounting as it were by staires, there being no other way; till they came to a fortresse of Stone, walled with and founded on the rocks. As they proceeded in this Mountaine, they found it very cold. The waters on the top were very cold that without heating they could not drinke them, and they set vp their tents and made fires when they staid, because of the cold.

Long highway. Atabalipas presents.

* Perhaps they had done this before the Incas conquest. But our Inca author denieth this and Casas tels that the Spaniards deuised such imputations of sodomy and humane sacrifices &c. to couer and colour their cruelties in all places.

Here came messengers with ten Sheep for a present from Atabalipa, which told Pizarro of the great victories which he had had against his brother. But hee answered that his Emperour was King of Spaine, and of the Indies, and Lord of the whole world, & had many seruants which were greater Lords then Atabalipa; and he had sent him into these Countries to draw the people to the knowledge of God & to his subiection: and with these few Christians, said he, I haue ouercome greater Lords then is Atabalipa. If he will haue friendship I will helpe him in his wars, & leaue him in his estate, but if he choose warre, I will doe to him as to the Cacikes of Puna and Tumbez. The Indian which Pizarro had sent returned from Caxamalca and related that Atabalipa there abode with an armie, and would haue slaine him, had hee not said that the like should be done to his Messengers, then being with the Spaniards: that he could not speake with him, but an Vncle of his, which had enquired of the Christians and their armes, all which he extolled to the vtmost.

Caxamalca. Ferdinand Pizarro and Soto sent to Atabalipa.

The Gouernor came to Caxamalca the fifteenth of Nouember 1532. Atabalipa sent other messengers with presents. Fernando Pizarro was sent to his campe with another Captain, which did his message to him, but he did not once looke on him, but was answered by a principall man; till the other Captain signified that he was brother to the Gouernor; & then the tyrant lifted vp his eyes and obiected the reports of their ill vsage of his Caciques, but for his part he would be friend to the Christians, taking them to be good men. They promised helpe against his enemies: He said, he would employ them against a Cacique which had rebelled, together with his Soldiers. Pizarro answered, ten of their horsemen would be enough to destroy him without helpe of your Indians. Atabalipa laughed and bad they should drinke, saying he would the next day see his Brother. They to excuse drinking, said they fasted, but he importuned them, and women came forth with vessels of gold full of drinke of Mayz. Hee looked on them without speaking a word, and they went againe and brought greater vessels of gold, whereof they dranke, and were licenced to depart. There seemed to be 30000. men in the Campe; they stood without their tents with lances in their hands, like to Pikes. The next morning, being Saturday, came a Messenger from Atabalipa, saying that he would come to see him with his people armed. He answered, that he should vse his pleasure. The Gouernour had placed his horse and foote covertly in great houses that they should not stirre forth till opportunity serued (the signe being giuen, and the Ordnance thereupon discharged) then to rush out suddenly from diuers parts & assault the Indians. And seeing Atabalipa staid so long, till neere night, he sent a Messenger to him, signifying his desire to see him. Hereupon he moued to the town with his armie in squadrons, singing & dancing, richly adorned with gold and siluer. The Gouernors purpose was to take him aliue, & therefore expected his entrance into that walled or closed street of Caxamalca, which the Indians had forsaken with the fortresse, & left to him. It was late before he came into the town, and being come into the streete he made a stand.

to

The Gouernor sent Frier Vincent to him with a Crosse in one hand, and a Bible in the other, being entred where Atabalipa was, he said by an Interpreter, I am a Priest of God, and teach the Christians things diuine, and come likewise to instruct you that which the great God hath taught vs, and is written in this Booke. And therefore on Gods behalfe, and of the Christians, I pray you to become their friend; for God commands it, and it shall be well for you; and come to speake with the Gouernor which expects you. Atabalipa asked for his Booke, which he gaue him shut. He not knowing which way to open it, the Frier stretched forth his hand to doe it, and he with great disdaine hut him on the arme, and at last opened it himselfe. And without wondring at the letters or paper, as other Indians vse, cast it away fiue or six paces from him: and to the words which the Frier had said to him, he answered with great pride: I well wot what thou hast done in this voiage, and how thou hast handled my Caciques, and taken away their goods. The Frier answered, the Christians haue not done this, but some Indians without the Gouernours knowledge, who knowing it caused them to make restitution. Atabalipa replied, I will not depart hence till they bring it all to me. The Frier carried this answer to the Gouernor, and that he had throwne the holy Scripture on the ground; who presently set on the Indians, and came to the litter where Atabalipa was, and tooke him by the left arme, crying Saint Iames, S. Iames. The Ordnance plaied the trumpets sounded; the horse and foot set forth; the Indians fled, the horsemen pursuing & slaying, the footmen killing all in the streete, the Gouernour got a wound on the hand in sauing his prisoner. In all this hurliburly there was not an Indian which lifted vp his armes against the Christians. Pizarro bid his prisoner not be amased at his captiuity, for with these Christians, though few, I haue subiected greater Lords then thou art to the Emperor, whose vassall I am, who is Lord of Spaine, and of all the world; and by his order I am come to conquer these lands that you may come to the knowledge of God, &c. adding many words of their pitie to the conquered and his good parts and acts. The Spaniards had no harme, onely one horse had a small wound: whereupon the Gouernor thanked God for the [b]miracle. The Sun was down before they began, and the battell lasted halfe an houre. 2000. Indians were killed, besides those which were wounded, and 3000. taken. In the stree of Caxamalca, Pizarro caused to build a Church for the Masse, and fortified the place against all occurrents.

Atabalipa promised for his ransome to fill a roome 22. foot long, and 17. wide, with gold vp as high as the middle of the roome, higher by one halfe then a mans height, in pots and other vessels, plates & peeces: and the same roome twice filled with siluer, in two moneths space. But so much not comming in so soone, the Gouernor sent three men to Cusco, February 15. 1533. commanding one of them in the name of his Maiesty, & presence of a Notary, to take possession thereof. A Negro which went with them returned, Aprill 28. with 107. burthens of gold, and seuen of siluer, May 25. Fernand Pizarro came to [c] Caxamalca with Chilicuchima, May the thirteenth, the Notary returned from Cusco with relation that they had taken possession, & had found 30. great Cities in the way besides small. He said that there was a Pallace with plates of gold, foure square, each square containing 350. paces from corner to corner, 700. of which they had taken away, each of which waighed 500. Castilians: from another house the Indians had taken as much as 200000. Castilians, which they reiected [d] because the gold was base. He said that Chiscbis was there with 30000. men for guard of the Citie. They brought 178. burthens of gold, each as much as foure Indians bare on their necks, so that it could not come thither in a moneth by reason of requiring so many Indians to carry it. It was the thirteenth of Iune before the gold came from Cusco, which was two hundred burthens & twenty fiue of Siluer. After this came sixtie burthens of base gold, taken from wals of houses. It was shared on S. Iames his day. The fifth being taken out for his Maiesty, euery horseman had 8880. Castilians in gold, and 362. markes in siluer, each marke being eight ounces. The footemen had halfe so much, some more and some lesse, as the Gouernour valued Atabalipa taken without fight of the Indians. Braue bragge. [b] Spanish miracle; none would'd where non striketh, as he saith before. Atabalipas ransom, which was paid and he acquitted, as Pizarro himselfe writes in the next chap. yet was he murthered, & that after they had made him a Christian Cieza c. 119. saith, that God punished the Spaniards for their cruelties to the Indians, and few died naturall deaths; all that had hand in Atabalipas death died miserably. For this God suffered the wars, &c. he nameth also Carnaian, Robledo, Belalcazer, Tovar, Martin, &c. whom God plaged for tyrannies to the Indians.

[c] He had been at Pachacamac, Estetes discourse of that Voiage is at large in Ramusio, here omitted.

Herera saith, that in their sharings, the Spaniards valued gold of 14. carats at 7. and by the abundance thereof grew to great excesses in gaming, pride & other vices: he saith that the three sent to Cusco were fooles & their behauior caused the Indians to vnderualue the Spaniards.

Digitized by Google

valued their merits. The Emperours fifth was 262259. Caſtilians * of Gold and 51610. Markes of Siluer.

He ſet apart a quantity for thoſe of Saint Michaels, and for thoſe which came with Almagro, and the Merchants, and all the Marriners, Prices of things were according: a Horſe was commonly ſold for 1500. Caſtilians of Gold; a veſſell of ſix quarts (Becali) of wine for ſixtie Caſtilians, I paid fortie for foure quarts: a paire of ſhooes for forty; as much, or fiftie for a ſword. I paid twelue for halfe an ounce of bad Saffron: ten for a ſheet of Paper to write; nothing ſeemed cheape but Gold and Siluer, inſomuch that they would not ſtand to weigh their Gold, but gaue it in maſſe; and if hee gaue not twice the quantitie, hee cared not. Debtors * went from houſe to houſe with Indians laden with Gold to pay their debts. Atabalipa being accuſed of Treaſon by another Cacique, that he ſought to rayſe forces in Quito, was therefore ſentenced to be burned, and brought forth to execution, where he ſaid he would be a Chriſtian, and Frier Vincent baptized him and comforted him at his death; the Gouernour commanded he ſhould not be burnt but ſtrangled, which was executed on a Saturday, about the ſame houre that he was taken. One of his Brothers was made Lord by the Gouernour in preſence of the Caciques, with great ſolemnitie, they lifting vp their eyes to the Sunne with thankes for giuing them a naturall Lord. Fernando Pizarro was ſent to Spaine, and ſome others had licenſe, many flocking thither, hearing of the Riches there gotten.

* A Marke is 8. ounces and a Caſtilian is a Pezo which containeth in this Peru account after Inca Vega 450. Maraueadiz; enery 5. Pezos or Caſtellanos being ſix Duckets: about ſeuen ſhillings Engliſh.

Golden Age. Miſerable comforters.

Herera Dec. 5. l. 3. ſaith that Atahuallpa had deſired his libertie becauſe his ranſome was paid, and his promiſe fulfilled (as Pizarro himſelfe by ſound of Trumpet acknowledged) which being deferred, his Captaines offered him to free him by force. Atahualpa refuſed and commanded them to ſerue the Chriſtians. The Yanaconas a ſlauiſh kind of people, deſiring to free themſelues from the Orejones and Incas in theſe broyles rayſed falſe newes that Armies were rayſed to aſſault the Spaniards. Pizarro ſeeing that Atahualpa ſtood in his way, and hindered his foundation of a Spaniſh Empire in theſe parts, which could not be without the diſſipation of that of the Incas, nor that without Atahualpas death, Y eſto tenia por iuſto, pues era prouechioſo, He held it iuſt becauſe it was profitable: Hee ſpake to the Inca complaining of inſurrection which he anſwered was but the rumour of his enemies, that he had paid his ranſome, &c. Pizarro made ſhew (diſſembling his purpoſe) of great feare of the enemies (which cauſed the Spaniards to vrge and importune Atabalipas death (and to ſpeake as you haue read in them) whereupon Pizarro had ſufficient colour for his Deſigne, making ſhew that the Treaſure paid in name of a ranſome was not for the Incas libertie, but leſt the Indians ſhould hide it. Frier Vincent conſented alſo, and ſo he was ſentenced to be burned, &c. Hee addeth out of Seneca, Proſperum ac fœlix ſcelus virtus vocatur. Thus the Kings Chronicler, ſaying alſo that Fernand Pizarro was Atahualpas friend, and his brother did it after his departure. He died in Priſon, and all the reſt (of whoſe names Herera giueth a Catalogue) were ſlaine and murthered in ciuill warres, or came to ill ends. Yea, ſtill the warres continue in Arauco, to the death of many Spaniards, beſides the ciuill warres of Giron, &c. in Peru after that of the Pizarriſts. God is iuſt, and therefore Pizarro the Murtherer of Atahualpa (a cruell Murtherer alſo) was murthered, and ſo hee that murthered Pizarro, and ſo forwards; the Serpents Iſſue and Generation of Hell proceeds from murther to murther, the Deuill himſelfe being a Murtherer from the beginning. Once; Peru alone with Chili (both ſubiects to the Incas Empire) hath more aduanced the Spaniſh Treaſures then all the New World beſides: neither is there any ſo likely way to ſupplant that Caſtilian-American greatneſſe, as by the Araucos.

CHAP. XVII.

Relations of Occurrents in the Conqueſt of Peru after FERNAND PIZARROS departure written at XAVXA, July 15. 1534. by PEDRO SANCHO, Notary Generall in the Kingdomes of New Caſtile, and Secretary to the Gouernour FR. PIZARRO, ſubſcribed by the ſaid Gouernour himſelfe and others, and ſent to his Maieſtie.

THen or twelue dayes after Fernand Pizarros departure, two Spaniards came from Cuzco with Gold, part whereof was melted being ſmall and fine pieces, taken out of the wals of a certaine houſe in Cuſco, being aboue fiue hundred wedges or plates of Gold, the ſmall weighing foure or fiue pounds a piece, the greater ten or twelue. All the wals of that Temple had beene couered with them. They brought a chaire or throne of moſt fine Gold, weighing eighteene thouſand Pezos, and a Fountayne of Gold of excellent workmanſhip, and the mould in which it was caſt; and many other pieces, pots and veſſels: which all mounted to two Millions and a halfe, and beeing melted into moſt fine Gold came to be one Million 320000. Pezos and vpwards: out of which his Maieſties fifth was taken, aboue 260000. Pezos, they made it vp 270000. Of Siluer there was 50000. Markes, his Maieſties ieſties part 500 e. the reſt was ſhared amongſt the company according to their qualities and merits. After this, the Gouernour made an act before a Notary, in which he acquitted Atabalipa of his promiſe to the Spaniards, for ſo much as the houſe would hold, and cauſed it to bee publiſhed in Caxamalca by the ſound of a Trumpet, acquainting Atapalipa himſelfe therewith by an Interpreter, declaring withall that for his Maieſties ſeruice and ſecurity of the Countrey, he would ſtill detayne him with a guard, till more Spaniards came for his ſecurity: ſpecially conſidering that hee had taken order for leuying of men of warre to aſſault the Spaniards, which hee had no meanes to auoid but by keeping him faſt, and his Captayne Generall Chilichuchima. A few dayes after the Indians reuealed the Treaſons of that Tyrant, notwithſtanding all his good vſage by the Gouernour and Spaniards, which was preuented by his death: his ſentence of burning by reaſon of his Baptiſme being executed with ſtrangling, and after his death ſome part of his clothes and fleſh were burned. It was late in the Euening, and the next morning he was ſolemnely buried in the Church, as if he had beene the chiefe Spaniard in the Campe: which gaue much ſatisfaction to his principall Caciques and Captaines.

Digitized by Google

This done, in preſence of many Commanders and Curikes he gaue them a Lord in the name of the Empetour, a Sonne of Guaynacaba (Huayna Capac, or as the Spaniards vſe to call him Guainacapac) called Atabalipa, [b] to whom the Empire was due, and placed him in his Seat, they all offering the Rites of vaſſallage to him, to wit, a white feather, according to their cuſtome. The new Inca faſted three dayes for the deceaſſed, ſhut vp from all ſocietie but his Pages, and after came forth honourably attired and attended with about fifty Curikes and Captaines there preſent, and did eat together on the ground (for they vſe no Tables) after which, he offered a white Feather in token of his vaſſallage to the Emperour. The Gouernour receiued it and embraced him with much loue, and concluded a peace, taking the names of the Curikes, and the Countries vnder their command, and intimated that he was ſent by his Emperour to giue them knowledge of the true God, Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, and what they ſhould obſerue for their ſaluation; and that that God and his Vicars left on earth (for he aſcended to Heauen there to remayne in glorie) had giuen thoſe Prouinces to the Emperour to take charge thereof, who had ſent him to inſtruct them in the Chriſtian Faith, and to bring them vnder his obedience: and cauſed his Commiſſion to bee read and interpreted to them. They all acknowledged the Emperour for their ſupreme Lord, and next vnder him their Lord Atabalipa, and in ſigne thereof liſted vp (each of them twice) the Royall Banner. All this act was entred into writing with teſtimonies, and great Feaſts were made by them.

At this time the Gouernour ceaſed the partition of the Gold and Siluer amongſt the Spaniards, and Atabalipa gaue the Gold of the Fifths Royal to the Treaſurer of his Maieſty, which was carried to Xauxa where the Gouernour intended to plant a Colonie of Spaniards, hauing intelligence of the good Countrey thereabouts. He prouided him of Indians for carriages, and ſent a Captaine with ten Horſemen to inhabit Saint Michaels till ſhips came, and after that to returne to Xauxa. He heard that ſome of Atabalipas Captaines had ſlaine Garitiens his Brother, which grieued much both the Gouernour and the preſent Atabalipa. Hence he marched heard of diuers which were vp in Armes againſt him, fiue leagues from Xauxa, whereupon he put Chilichuchima in chaines, by whoſe meanes the report was that they had done it. They went and adioyned themſelues to Quizquiz. When he came to Xauxa, none of his Spaniards were willing to abide there becauſe the Countrey was in Armes, yet he left a Colony of eighty men with Officers. About this time died Atabalipa of ſickneſſe, of poyſon giuen by Chilichuchima, as was reported, who ſought to haue the rule remain in Quito, and not in Cuſco. The Gouernour bad them prouide a Succeſſor. Calichuchima would haue Atiros Sonne of Atabilipa, but others and the Gouernour liked better of a Brother of Atabalipa (Sonne of Guanacapa.) He came to a Towne where he found much Siluer in great ſheets of twentie foot long and one broad, a finger thicke. They receiued intelligence of a skirmiſh with the enemy by another band of Spaniards, in which eighteene horſes were hurt and one ſlaine; in another the Spaniards had the victory. The Gouernour cauſed Chilichuchima to be burned, who refuſed to become a Chriſtian, and called vpon Pachacamac. After this he marched to Cuſco, which hee entred on Friday the fifteenth of November 1533. And the next day made that Sonne of Guaynacapas their Lord, being the right heire, and commanded the Curikes to obey him.

Incontinently the New Curike (or Inca) gaue order to aſſemble forces againſt Quizquiz; in foure dayes fiue thouſand were come together well armed, With whom the Gouernour ſent a Captaine with fiftie Horſe, remayning himſelfe for the guard of the Citie. Theſe hauing done ſomewhat againſt the enemy, were forced to returne by the ill mountanous paſſages. The Cacique hauing faſted three dayes, and performed and receiued the Rites of vaſſallage (before mentioned in his Predeceſſor) at the Gouernours requeſt leuied greater forces, ſo that about fiue and twentie thouſand went with the Spaniards, which made a Bridge of three hundred and ſixtie foote long, broad enough for two Horſemen to paſſe abreaſt, and paſſed to Bilcas. Some of them went to the ſuccour of Xauxa which had obtayned good ſucceſſe againſt their enemies.

The Gouernour after this cauſed all the Gold to bee melted by experienced Indians, which amounb Other Incas made; one called Atabalipa, to ſerue the Spaniards turn. Without them (as in the concluſion they confeſſe) they could, being ſo few, neuer haue perfected their conqueſt. But firſt they vſed the Cuſcoans againſt thoſe of Quito, and laſtly to pacifie all to the Spaniſh ſubiection. After which they performe nothing but faithood and cruelty, Pizarros purpoſe being alway by any way to erect the Spaniſh Empire. Second ſhiring. Garitis ſlaine: for as the war had bin begun by Atabalipa the firſt, againſt Cuſco: ſo after his death, it was by his Captaines continued againſt the Incas theirs ſeeking to aduance Quito aboue Cuſco, & the ſeed of Atabalipa to the Soueraignetie. Chilichuchima burned. Manco Inca made Lord. Third ſharing of gold and ſiluer at Cuſco: Images of beaſts & men in gold.

Digitized by Google

mounted to 580200. Pezos and vpwards of good Gold. The Emperours fifth was 116460. Pezos and vpwards. The Siluer was melted, and weighed 215000. Markes, of which 170000. and vpwards was good, in Vessels and Barres, the rest alayed with other Metals. The fifth was deducted thence for his Maiestie. Amongst other things there were sheepe of fine Gold very great, and ten or twelue Statues of women in their iust bigneſſe and proportion, artificially composed of fine Gold. They performed like veneration to them as if they had beene aliue, clothing, adoring, giuing them to eate and talking with them. There were others of Siluer in the same stature. All this Treasure was shared betwixt those of Cuſco and the Spaniards of Xauxa.

Cuſco a Spaniſh Colonie.

In March 1534. the Gouernor assembled all the Spaniards, and made a solemne act of the foundation of a Towne and possession taken in the midst of the chiefe street, by the name of the noble and great Citie of Cuſco: bounds were set out for a Church, and priuiledges allotted to such as within three yeeres should come thither to dwell. Aboue twelue thousand married Indians were designed to the Prouince of Collao, to his Maiesties Mynes of Gold in those parts.

Other Spaniards enter Peru.

After this he departed with the Cacique towards Xauxa. There he had newes of two hundred and fiftie comne from Panama to Saint Michaels, seuenty of them horsemen, and of Almarados landing with foure hundred men, and one hundred and fiftie horsemen. Hauing ouerthrowne his enemies, he tooke order for founding a Church in Xauxa, and sent some Spaniards with an Army of Indians to pursue the enemies. There is a Mountayne of Snow which continueth from Caxamalca to Xauxa, where Snow lyeth all the yeere. The people are more ciuill and better Souldiers. On the other side the Mountayne (Eastward) they are Sauage people feeding on fruites, hauing small store of Maiz. All their Tribute was Feathers. From Xauxa to Cuſco the Countrey enlargeth it selfe from the Sea. Collao is a plaine Countrey and cold, and hath many Riuers where gold is taken. The Mountaynes continue from Tumbez to Xauxa, and thence to Cuſco, if the way bee not made by hands, footmen could not passe, much lesse horsemen: and they haue many houses full of Brasse to worke [c] vp the same. All the rough Mountaynes are wrought like staires [d] of stone. There are some places where foure or fiue mens heights, the way is wrought and made vp with stone worke; in others it is cut out of the stone. There are plates of entertainment in euery Countrey, and by the way one within two or three leagues of another, made for the Lords which visit the Countrey: and euery twenty leagues principall Prouinciall Cities where the tributes of smaller places are kept. All those great Townes haue store-houses full of the Countrey Commodities. There are store of cattle and pastures with their Pastors.

Countrey described.

c Immatonare.

d Scalini.

Description of Cuſco, as it was when the Spaniards first came thither. For after the Indians burnt the most part of it in Manco's wars with Pizarro.

The Citie of Cuſco might be worthy the sight if it were in Spaine, full of great mens houses, all Lords and Caciques, hauing houses there. The most of those houses are of stone, and some are halfe of stone: the streets are straight in right crosses, and narrow; in the midst runneth a Conduit of water inclosed with stone on each side of which a horseman may passe and no more. The Citie is situate on the top of a Hill, and many houses are built on the side of it, and others below on the Plaine. The Market place is square, paued with small stones. About it are foure houses of Lords of stone painted and wrought; the best of which was Guainacabas: the gate is of white and red Marble, and of other colours, and hath faire Terrasses. On the sides of the City ranne two Riuers, which rise a league higher, ouer which are Bridges. Vpon a Hill hard and rough is a very faire Fortresse of earth and stone, with great windowes towards the City. Within it are many Roomes, and one principall Towre in the midst of foure or fiue circuits [e] one higher then another; the Lodgings within are small, the stone very fairely wrought and so close ioyned that there is no shew of morter, and as smooth as planed boords. It hath so many Roomes and Towres that a man is not able to view them all in a day. Many Spaniards which haue beene in Lumbardie and other strange Kingdomes, say that they haue neuer seene such a building as this Fortresse, nor Castle more strong. There may abide within fiue thousand Spaniards. It cannot be vndermined being seated on a Rocke. On the City side which is a ragged Hill, is but one wall, on the other side three, one higher then another, the inmost being highest. The goodliest spectacle are these encompassing circuits, being of stones so great, that no man would imagine them layd there by the hands of men, as great as pieces of stonie Mountaynes and Rockes; some being of the height of thirty [f] spannes, and and as much in length, and none is so little but it is more then three Cart-lodes. The Spaniards preferre them before the buildings of Hercules or of the Romanes. They are reuersed [g] that they cannot be battered in plano, but in the slipping [h] turnagaines which goe outwards, made of the selfe-same stone. Betwixt wall and wall is earth laid so broad that three Carts may goe abreast. They are made like three steps, the second beginning on the height of the first, and the third on that of the second. All this Fortresse was a Store-house of Armes, Clubs, Launces, Bowes, Arrowes, Axes, Shields, Cotton Mandilions quilted, and other armes and garments for Souldiers, gathered from all parts of the Empire, colours of diuers sorts and Metals. From this Fortresse may bee seene many houses. In the Val- which is compassed about with Hils are aboue 100000. houses; many of them houses of pleasure of the Soueraignes Lords and Caciques, others are Store-houses full of Wooll, Armes, Metrals, Clothes and such things as the Countrey yeeldeth; there are Horses where the Tributes are kept, and there is one, where are aboue 100000. dried Birds, of whose Feathers they make gar-f See sup. pag. 1056. Acosta saith he measured some aboue 38. foot long, &c.

The Fortresse e Giroui.

g Voltati.

h Sguincio de i giroui.

Digitized by Google

garments. And there are many houſes for that purpoſe. There are Shields, Targets, Plates of Braſſe to couer houſes, and incredible ſtore of prouiſions for Warre. Euery Souereigne Lord deceaſſed hath his owne houſe of theſe goods and Tributes which they had in their life (for by their Law the Succeſſor may not inherit it) their Gold, Siluer, and Clothes apart. They worſhip the Sunne and haue made him many Temples, and of all things they offer ſomewhat to the Sunne.

Two Spaniards were ſent to Colao, and were forty dayes in the iourney. They ſay it is well peopled, mountaynous, and out of meaſure cold: ſo ſubiect, that hauing many cattle, no man dares kill any without licenſe, though neuer ſo great. There is a great Lake (Titicaca) in the midſt of the Prouince, in which are two Ilands, in one of which is a Temple of the Sun in great veneration, where they offer Gold and Siluer and other things. There are aboue ſixe hundred Indians which ſerue there, and a thouſand women. The Mynes of Gold are beyond this place, ſome of ten, ſome twenty, and that of Guarnacabo is forty fathome deepe, darke and narrow, in which one alone at once, entreth, none following till he be comne forth. Other Mynes they purſue no further then a mans height, that he may reach the earth to another: which made ſome ſay that all the fields were Gold Mynes. Guainacapa is honoured as if hee were aliue, and his bodie is brought forth into the ſtreet with Muſicke and Dances, and there are ſome day and night attending him to chaſe away the flyes. The Lords that come to the Citie, goe firſt and ſalute him, and then the King. To theſe Feaſts 100000. ſoules aſſembled. Had it not beene for the quarrels betwixt thoſe of Quito and thoſe of Cuſco, the Spaniards could not haue entred into Cuſco, nor haue it. And the Mountaynes are ſuch that ten men may defend ten thouſand: Many Horſes fell downe and brake their neckes. The Spaniards themſelues maruell at what they haue done, and how they are ſtill aliue. It hath falne out well that this Sonne of Guainacaba was made their Lord, for whoſe loue other Lords haue giuen their obedience to the Emperour. He is very friendly to the Chriſtians. Iuly 15. 1534. in Xauxa

Subſcribed Franciſco Piçarro, &c.

Note this!

The end of the ſeuenth Booke.

VOY-

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

VOYAGES TO AND LAND-TRAVELS IN FLORIDA, VIRGINIA, AND OTHER PARTS OF THE NORTHERNE AMERICA. FRENCH Plantings, Spaniſh Supplantings; Engliſh VIRGINIAN Colonies, and to the Ilands Azores.

THE EIGHTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

A Relation of ALVARO NVNEZ called Capo di Vaua, concerning that which happened to the Fleet in India, whereof PAMPHILO NARVAEZ was Gouernour, from the yeere 1527. vntill the yeere 1536. who returned vnto Siuill with three of his companions only: tranſlated out of RAMVSIO, and abbreuiated.

*See ſup. l. 7. c. 4.

Ramuſ. vol. 3.

§. I.

Their Fleet; and admirable and vnheard of tempeſt: their entrance into Florida: the Lakes, troubleſome paſſages, incounters, diſaſtrous ſucceſſe, building Boats for returne.

THE ſixteenth day of June, in the yeare 1527. the Gouernour Pamphilo di Narnaez departed from the hauen of Saint Lucar of Barrameda, with power and commandement from your Maieſtie to conquer and gouerne the Prouinces, which lye from the Riuer of Palmes vnto the Cape of Florida, all in the firme land. And the Fleete which the Gouernour brought with him were fiue Ships, wherein ſix hundred men went. The Officers, becauſe I am to make particular mention of them in this Booke, were theſe: Capo di Vaua Treaſurer, Agozino Prouoſt Martiall, Alonſo Enrriquez Auditor, and Alonſo de Solis Factor, and ouerſeer for his Maieſtie. And beſides, there was for Commiſſary, a Frier of the order of Saint Francis, called Frier Gionanni, Iohn Gottierrez, and with him foure other Friers of the ſame Order.

The Gouernor of the Fleete.

The officers ouer the Fleete.

We arriued firſt at the Iland of San Dominica, where we ſtayed but fortie fiue dayes, to prouide our ſelues of certaine neceſſary things, and principally of Horſes. There we left more then an hundred and forty of our men, which would ſtay by promiſe and agreement which they of the Village made with them. Departing thence, we arriued at Saint Iage or Giacome, which is an hauen in the Iland of Cuba, and repoſing our ſelues there certaine dayes, the Captaine furniſhed himſelfe with men, munition, and horſes. It hapned in that place, that a Gentleman, called

The Iland of S. Dominick.

The hauen of S. Iames.

Digitized by Google

The Trinitie.

Vaſques Parcalle, neere vnto the towne of the Trinitie, which is in the ſame Iland, offered the Gouernour to giue him certaine victuall, which he had in the ſaid towne of the Trinitie, which is an hundred leagues off from the ſaid port of Saint Iago. Whereupon the Gouernour departed with all the Fleete, towards that towne. But arriuing halfe the way at an hauen which they call the Cape of Santa Cruz, it ſeemed good vnto the Gouernor to abide there, and ſend one Ship onely to receiue thoſe victuals, and ſo he appointed one Captaine Pantoxa to goe thither with his Ship, and that for the greater ſecurity, I alſo ſhould goe with him, and he remained ſtill there with the foure Ships: we hauing now gotten another in the Iland of Saint Domenica. Being arriued with our fiue Ships at the hauen of the Trinitie, the Captaine Pantoxa went with Vaſquez Porcalle to receiue the victuals at the towne, which was one league diſtant from the hauen. One houre after I was landed, the Sea began to be outragious, and the Northwinde was ſo ſtrong, that the Boates durſt not goe aland, nor could they with the Shippes in any ſort put to the contrary ſide; the winde being in the prowe, whereupon with very great trauaile, with two contrary ſeaſons, and with much raine they continued all that day, and the Sunday. The night approaching, the Sea and tempeſt began ſo much to increaſe, that it no leſſe tormented thoſe on the land then them at Sea; for all the houſes fell downe, and all the Churches, and wee were enforced to goe ſeuen or eight men embracing one another arme in arme together, to be able to reſiſt the winde, that it might not carry vs away, and to auoide the ruine of the houſes, flying vnto the Forreſt, the trees gaue vs no leſſe cauſe of feare, then the houſes had giuen vs: becauſe they falling held vs in continuall feare, that they would kill vs. In this tempeſt and danger wee paſſed all the night, without finding any part or place, where for one halfe houre onely wee might ſtand ſecure: but principally, the midnight before wee heard noyſes and great crying, and the ſound of Belles, Flutes, and Drummes, and other inſtruments, which continued vntill the morning, that the tempeſt ceaſed. In thoſe Countries ſo fearefull a thing had neuer beene ſeene, whereof I cauſed a teſtimoniall and true certificate to be made, which I haue ſent vnto your Maieſtie.

An hauen called the Cape of Saint Cruz.

An Huracano or tempeſt, notable both at Sea and Land.

Preſages.

On Munday morning we went downe to the hauen, and found not the Ships there, but ſaw ſome of their furniture in the water; whereby we knew that they were caſt away. And ſo we purpoſed to goe along the coaſt, ſearching if we might finde any thing, but finding nothing, we determined to ſearch by the Mountaines, and hauing gone about a quarter of a league of from the water ſide, wee found the Boate of a Ship ſet vpon certaine trees: and further beyond, ten leagues along the coaſt they found two perſons of my Ship, and certaine couerings and rooſes of houſes. And thoſe two men were ſo actually transfigured and changed with weatherbeating, both of the ſhore, and of the Sea, that they could not know who they were. we found alſo a Friers habit, and a Couerlet torne in peeces, and found no other perſon or thing any more. Threeſcore men were left in thoſe two Ships, and twenty horſes, and thoſe that remained aliue were thirty perſons onely, who the ſame day we arriued in that hauen, went aland together with the Captaine Pantoxa. Wee remained in ſuch manner for certaine dayes, with much trouble and great neceſſitie, becauſe the ſuſtenance and prouiſion of that people, was all loſt, and deſtroyed, with certaine wilde Beaſts, and the Countrey remained in ſuch ſort that it moued great compaſſion in the beholders, the trees being ſalne, the mountaines burned, and remaining without leaues, or graſſe, and ſo we paſſed vntill the fift day of Nouember, that the Gouernour of our Fleete came thither to vs, with his other foure Ships, who alſo themſelues had paſſed great dangers and torments, and were eſcaped, becauſe in good time they had retired themſelues vnto ſome place of ſafety.

Boate placed vpon trees by the tempeſt.

Fifth of Nouember.

The men which he had brought with him, and thoſe that he found there, were ſo much affrighted, and terrified with the loſſes and dangers paſt, that they reſolued to imbarke themſelues no more in the winter, and beſought the Gouernour that he would ſuffer them to repoſe and reſt themſelues in thoſe places; he perceiuing their mindes, and the deſire of the inhabitants, did ſo, and gaue me the charge of the Ships, and the men, which ſhould goe with me to winter at the hauen of Xagua, which is twelue leagues diſtant from that place, and ſo going thither, we ſtaied vntill the twentieth of February following. At this time the Gouernour came thither vnto vs, with a Brigantine which he had gotten at the Txinitie, and brought with him a Pilot, called Miruelo, who (as they ſaid) was a man very well practiſed, and an excellent Pilot for all the coaſt of the North. Beſides that, the Gouernour left on the coaſt of the Liſſart Captaine Aluaro della Querda, with a Ship which the Gouernour had procured there, and lett forty men with him, and twelue other with the horſe.

The hauen of Sagua, or Xagua.

Two dayes after the Gouernour came vnto vs, wee imbarked our ſelues, and were (in the whole) foure hundred men, and foureſcore horſes in foure Ships, and one Brigantine. The Pilot which we had newly taken, brought the Ships through the quicke ſands, which they call Canerreo, ſo that the day following we found our ſelues on dry land, and ſo remained fiue dayes, the keele of the Ships oftentimes ſtriking vpon the ground. At the end of thoſe fiue dayes, a ſtorme from the South brought ſo much water vpon the ſands, that wee might come out, although though not without much danger. Departing thence, we arriued at Guanignanico, where another tempeſt aſſailed vs ſo fiercely, that we ſtood in great danger to be loſt: at the head of the currents we had another, where we ſtaid three dayes. And theſe being ouerpaſſed, we went about the Cape of Saint Anthony, and with a contrary winde, we went till wee came within twelue leagues of the Hauana, and ſtanding the day following to put in there, a Southerne gale of winde tooke vs, which droue vs farre from the land, ſo that wee croſſed ouer by the coaſt of Florida, and arriued the twelfth of Aprill, at the land of Martes; ſo coaſting the way of Florida, vpon holy Thurſday in the ſame coaſt, we ancored in the mouth of an open roade, at the head whereof we ſaw certaine houſes, and habitations of the Indians.

Sands of Canarreo.

Digitized by Google

Guaniguanico.

The Cape of S. Anthony.
The Hauana.
Martes.

The ſame day Alonſo Enriquez the Auditor went out of the Ship, and landed vpon an Iland which is in the ſame open roade, and called to thoſe Indians, who came and abode with vs a good ſpace, and by way of ranſome gaue him fiſh, and certaine peeces of Deeres fleſh. The day following, which was good Friday, the Gouernour imbarked himſelfe with as many men as the Boates could carry, and we went to the Villages or houſes of the Indians, which wee had ſeene, which we found all emptie and deſolate, becauſe that night the people were gone in their Canoes. One of thoſe houſes was very great, and able to containe more then three hundred perſons, the other were much leſſer, and there we found a little Bell of Gold within the Nets. The next day, the Gouernour aduanced the Enſigne for your Maieſty, and tooke poſſeſſion of the Village in your royall name, and preſented the Commiſſions and was receiued, and obayed as Gouernour, according to your Maieſties appointment. And ſo in like manner, we preſented our other prouiſoes vnto him, which he accepted, and obeyed according to the contents thereof, and preſently cauſed the reſt of the men to be ſhipped, and the horſes, which were not aboue two and fortie, becauſe the other, through the many tempeſts, and beating of the Sea, and length of time, were dead. And theſe few that remained, were ſo weake and wearied, as at that time we could doe little ſeruice. The day following, the Indians of thoſe places came vnto vs, and although they ſpoke vnto vs, yet notwithſtanding we vnderſtood them not.

Great houſes without houſe keepers.
Golden Bell.
The firſt towne taken in Florida, in the Emperors name.

The Gouernour commanded that the Brigantine ſhould goe coaſting the way of Florida, and ſearch for the hauen, which the Pilot Miruelo ſaid he knew, but was now aſtoniſhed, and knew not in what part we were, nor where the hauen was; and the Brigantine was appointed, that if they found not the hauen, to croſſe ouer to the Hauana, and finde the Ship wherein Aluaro della Querda was, and hauing taken in ſome victuall, to returne to finde it. The Brigantine being deing departed, we returned to enter into the Village of the ſame people where we had bin before, with ſome other more, and we coaſted the gulfe which wee had found, and hauing gone about foure leagues, we tooke foure Indians, and ſhewed them Maiz, becauſe vntill that day wee had not yet ſeene any token thereof: they ſaid, they would bring vs where it grew, and ſo they brought vs to their Village, which was not farre from thence, at the head of the gulfe, and there they ſhewed vs a little Maiz, which was not yet ripe to be gathered. There wee found many cheſts of the Merchants of Caſtile, and in euery one of them was the body of a dead man, all which were couered with Deeres skins painted. The Commiſſary thought, that it was a kinde of Idolatry, ſo he burned the cheſts with all the bodies. We alſo found peeces of webs of cloath, and Pennacchi, which they had gotten out of Noua Hiſpaniola, and certaine * moſters of Gold. Whereupon we demanded of thoſe Indians by ſignes, from whence they had ſuch things. They by ſignes, ſhewed vs: that very farre from thence there was a Prouince, called Apalachen, wherein there was great quantity of Gold. Departing from thence, wee went further, carrying for guides thoſe foure Indians which we had firſt taken, and ſo ten or twelue leagues off from that place, wee found another people of fifteene houſes, where was a goodly Plaine ſowed with Maiz, which now was ready to be gathered, and we found ſome alſo dry. There we abode two dayes, and after returned.

Samples.
The Prouince Apalachen.

May the firſt, the Gouernour cauſed two pound of Biſcuit, and halfe a pound of Porke to be giuen to euery one of them who were to goe with vs, and ſo we departed, to enter within the land. The ſumme of all them who went, was three hundred men in all, among whom was the Commiſſary Frier Iohn Sciuarez, and another Frier, called Frier Iohn de Palis, and three Clarkes, and the Officers. Forty of vs were on horſebacke, and ſo with that prouiſion which wee had brought, wee went fifteene dayes without finding any other things to eate, except Dates, like thoſe of Andaluzia. In all this time we found not any Indian, nor ſaw any houſe, nor place inhabited: and in the end we found a Riuer, which wee paſſed with much danger and trouble, by ſwimming, and vpon rafts, and ſtaied a day to paſſe ouer it, becauſe it ranne with much fury. Hauing paſſed to the other ſide of the Riuer, two hundred Indians came againſt vs, and the Gouernour went before, and after he had ſpoken to them by ſignes, they made much ſignes againe vnto vs, that we ſhould ioyne our ſelues with them, taking fiue or ſixe, who brought vs vnto their houſes which were about halfe a league off, and there wee found great quantity of Maiz, which ſtood now ready to be gathered. After ſome ſearch of the Countrey to the Sea, wee departed from that place, alwayes (as we went) inquiring for that Prouince, which (the Indians ſaid) was called Apalachen, and brought for guides, them that we had taken, and ſo went forward y Caziqueſignifieth a Lord among the Indians.

vntill the ſeuenteenth of Iune, and found no Indians that durſt abide our comming. There, a y Caeique came vnto vs, whom an Indian carried vpon his necke, and hee was couered with a Deeres skinne painted, and brought with him many people, who went before him playing vpon certaine Flutes made of canes, and ſo came vnto the Gouernour, and abode with him an houre, and we gaue him to vnderſtand (by ſignes) how that we went to Apalachen, and by thoſe ſignes which he made vs, it ſeemed he ment to ſignifie that hee was an enemy to them of Apalachen, and would aide vs againſt them. We gaue him Crownes, Bels, and ſuch other things, and he gaue the Gouernour the skin which he wore vpon him, and ſo turned backe againe, and we followed preſently after him. That euening we came vnto a Riuer, which was very deepe and very broad, and ran very furiouſly, and not preſuming to paſſe ouer it vpon rafts, we made a Canoa, and ſtaied one whole day to paſſe ouer it: ſo that if the Indians would haue iniured vs, they might eaſily haue diſturbed our paſſage, and yet although they holped vs the beſt they could, wee had much trouble. One of our Horſemen, called Iohn Velaſquez, a natiue of Cuellar, becauſe he would not ſtay, tooke the Riuer with his Horſe, and the current of the Riuer being very ſtrong, caſt him from his Horſe, who catching hold on the raines of the bridle, drowned himſelfe, together with the Horſe. And thoſe Indians of that Lord, called Dulcancellin, found the Horſe, and told vs where we ſhould finde him in the Riuer below: and ſo they went to ſearch for him, whoſe death much diſcontented vs, becauſe vntill that time there was not one man of our company wanting. The Horſe gaue many their ſuppers that night. And ſo hauing paſſed that Riuer, the day following we came vnto the people of that Lord, who ſent vs ſome of their Maiz. The next day we departed, the Indians being fled. The Gouernour left by the way an ambuſcado of certaine Horſemen, which as thoſe Indians paſſed by, iſſued out vpon them, and tooke three or foure, who before ſerued vs for guides, and they brought vs through a very troubleſome Countrey to trauaile, and maruelous to behold, where were huge Mountaines, and very high Trees, whereof ſo many were fallen to the ground, that they intangled and ſtopped the way, in ſuch ſort that we could not paſſe without going farre about, to our great trouble; and of thoſe trees that were fallen, the greater part were cleft from one end to the other, through the thunderbolts that fall there, great tempeſts being alwayes in that place: with this trouble wee marched vntill the ſix and twentieth day of Iune, at which day we came within the ſight of Apalachen before they of the Towne perceiued vs. We rendered great thankes vnto God, ſeeing our ſelues ſo neere vnto that place, and ſuppoſing that to be true which had been ſpoken, and hoping we ſhould there end our great trauailes which wee had paſſed, as well for the long and euill iourney, as for the great famine which we had ſuſtained. Becauſe, although we ſometimes found Maiz, yet for the moſt part we went ſix or eight leagues without finding any. And there were many amongſt vs, that through hunger and wearineſſe had wounded their ſhoulders with continuall wearing of their armes, beſides the other calamities they daily incountered.

Dulcancellin a King or Cazique among them.

Troubleſome Countrey.

Trees cleft with thunderbolts.

Apalachen.

Cacciagioni.

The Gouernour commanded me to take with me nine horſe, and fiftie foote, and enter the towne, which the Controler and I did, and found none but little children, and women, becauſe at that time the men were not there, but going a little way from thoſe places, the Indians came, and began to fight, and ſhoot at vs, and ſlew the Controulers horſe; but in the end they fled, and left vs. There we found great quantity of Maiz which ſtood ready to be gathered, and had ſufficient, of which was dry, remaining. We found there many skinnes of wilde beaſts taken by hunting, and ſome garments of thred, little and nought worth, wherewith the women couer ſome parts of their perſon.

They had many Mils to grinde Maiz. Among theſe people there were forty little houſes, low built, and in cloſe places, for feare of the great tempeſts to which that Countrey continually is accuſtomed. The houſes are made of ſtraw of ſtubble, and compaſſed about with Mountaynes ſtanding thicke together, and great Trees, and many Seas of water, where ſo many and ſo great Trees are ſalne, that they trouble euery thing, and cauſe that no man is able to trauell there without great incumberance.

Great tempeſts in thoſe parts.

The land from the place where we diſbarked vnto this people of Apalachen, for the moſt part is plaine, and the ſoyle conſiſteth of hard and ſolid ſand, and throughout all the ſame many great Trees, and famous Mountaines are found, where Nut trees are, and Labrani, and other, which they call Laquidambares: there are alſo Cedars, Sauine-trees, Holme-trees, Pines, Okes, and low Palme-trees like thoſe of Caſtile. Throughout all that Countrey there are many great and little Lakes, and ſome are very troubleſome to paſſe, aſwell for the great depth thereof, as alſo by reaſon of the many trees, which are fallen there. The ground or bottome of them is ſand: and thoſe Lakes which we found in the Prouince of Apalachen, are much greater then all the other which we had found vntill then. There are many fields of their Maiz in this Prouince: and the houſes are ſcattered through the Plaine, like thoſe of Gerbe. The beaſts which we ſaw there are Deere of three ſorts, Conies, Hares, Beares, and Lions, and other, among which we ſaw one, that carrieth her young in a bagge, which ſhee hath in her belly, where ſhee carrieth them all the time that they are little, vntill they be able to goe, and ſeeke their meate themſelues. And if by chance the young ſtand ſeeking food without the damme, and people come vpon them, ſhee flyeth not before Lakes.

Beaſts.

Beaſt which carrieth her young in a bagge.

before ſhe haue gathered them into her bagge. The Countrey is very cold there, and there are many good paſtures for flockes.

There are alſo many ſorts of Fowle, Goſlings in great abundance, Geeſe, Duckes, Herons, Black-birds, and others of diuers ſorts, and there we ſaw many Falcons, Ger-falcons, Sparrow-hawkes, and many other ſorts of Birds. Fowles.

Two dayes after we came to Apalachen, the Indians that were fled returned vnto vs in peace, demanding their children, and we gaue them all, except one Cazique of theirs, whom the Gouernour retayned, which was the occaſion to cauſe them to depart offended, who the day following returned as enemies, and aſſailed vs with ſuch fury and ſuddenneſſe, that they came to ſet fire to the houſe where we were: but ſo ſoone as wee came forth, they fled and retired themſelues vnto the Lakes, which were very neere thereunto. Whereupon by reaſon of them, and the Corne which was very thicke there, we could not doe them any hurt, ſaue that we killed one man only. The day following, other Indians of another people, which was on the other ſide, came to vs and aſſailed vs after the ſame manner, that the other had done before, and fled likewiſe: and one of them alſo was ſlaine. We abode there fiue and twentie dayes, in the which we cauſed three to enter within the Land, and found it very poorely peopled, and hard trauelling, in reſpect of the troubleſome paſſages, Mountaynes and Lakes which are there. Wee demanded of the Cazique whom wee had retayned, and of the other Indians whom wee had brought with vs, who were borderers and enemies to them of Apalachen, the qualitie and condition of that Countrey, of the people, the victuall, and other things about it, who all plainly anſwered vs, that the greateſt people of all that Countrey, were they of Apalachen, and that further beyond it was without people, and very poore, that all that Countrey, and theirs were ill peopled, and that the Inhabitants were much diſperſed, and that going further forth, exceeding great Lakes are found, Mountaynes ſtanding thicke together, and mighty Deſarts, and without Inhabitants. Wee asked them of the Countrey which lay toward the South, what people and ſuſtenance it had, who anſwered vs, that going from thence towards the Sea nine dayes iourney, were a people called Aute, and that the Indians of that place had much Maiz, and that there were ſmall Pulſe, which are like to our Ciches and Gourds, and that being ſo neere to the Sea, fiſh was there to be found: and that they were their friends.

Seeing the pouerty of the Countrey, we agreed to depart from them, and goe to ſeeke out the Sea, and that people of Aute, whereof they told vs. And ſo at the end of fiue and twenty dayes after we came thither, we departed. The firſt day we paſſed thoſe Lakes and troubleſome paſſages, without ſeeing any Indian. But the ſecond day they came vpon vs, at a Lake which was very ill to paſſe: ſo that the water tooke vs vp to the breaſt, and many Trees were falne there, ſo that we being in the middeſt thereof, the Indians aſſayled vs, they being hid behind the trees that we might not ſee them: and others were vpon the trees that were falne, and beganne to ſhoote at vs in ſuch ſort, that they wounded many men and horſes, and tooke the guide from vs which we had brought, they ſuddenly caſt themſelues into the Lakes and wounded fifteene men and horſes. The Gouernour ſeeing this, commanded them on horſebacke to diſmount, and aſſaile them on foot, and ſo they did, and the Auditor diſmounted with them, and aſſayling them put them all to flight, ſo that they entred into a Lake, and thus wee gained the paſſage of them. In that skirmiſh ſome of our men (whoſe good armes they carried preuayled not) remayned wounded: and ſome of them ſwore, that they ſaw two Okes, each of them as great as a mans legge, ſhot through from ſide to ſide with the Arrowes of the Indians. Which therefore is not a thing that wee ſhould wonder at, ſeeing the force wherewith they deliuer them, and I my ſelfe haue ſeene an Arrow at the foot of an Elme, which entred an handfull in. Indian fight. Strong archers.

As many Indians as we ſaw in Florida, vntill wee came to that place, are all Archers, tall of ſtature, and goe naked, and ſeeme to them that ſee them afarre off mighty Giants. They are maruellouſly well ſet, pleaſant, and of much ſtrength and agilitie. The Bowes they vſe are as thicke as a mans arme, of eleuen or twelue ſpannes long, and they ſhoot two hundred paces off, and ſo ſtraight and leuell, that they neuer ſhoote and miſſe. Hauing got ouer that paſſage, about one league from thence, we came to another Lake of the ſame ſort, ſaue that it was halfe a league long, which was much worſer then the former. This we quietly paſſed, and without diſturbance of the Indians: becauſe they hauing ſpent all the munition of their Arrowes, in that firſt aſſault, it remayned not in their power to be able to aſſault vs afreſh. The next day following going ouer another ſuch paſſage, I who went in the Vantgard deſcryed the Sauage people, and gaue intelligence to the Gouernour who came in the Rereward, and ſo going well ordered and prouided, they could not offend vs, and as ſoone as we were come forth into the Plaine, they came alwayes following vs. Whereupon turning about and diuiding our ſelues into two parts, we ſlue two of them. Anellaneda turning about ranne to helpe his boy, the Indians ſmote him with an Arrow on the ſide of the Cuiras, and the ſtroke was ſuch, that the whole Arrow almoſt went through behind the head, ſo that he ſuddenly dyed, and we carried him dead vnto Aute. We came to Aute, the ninth day after our departure from Apalachen: and found all the people of that place fled, hauing burned their houſes. There we found much Maiz and Gourdes, and certaine Pulſe which Men of tall ſtature, good archers.

Digitized by Google

were then readie to be gathered. So we repoſed our ſelues two dayes there, and after the Gouernour prayed me, that I would goe to diſcouer the Sea, ſeeing the Indians ſaid, it was ſo neere, and we alſo had diſcouered it as we went, by a very great Riuer, which wee found by the way: and
The Riuer Madalena. called it the Riuer of Madalena. I was ſent to diſcouer the Sea. The day following we departed from Aute, and marched all that day vntill wee came where I had beene before: the way was very troubleſome, becauſe the Horſes were neither able to carrie them that were feeble, nor knew we what remedy to take, becauſe they were euery day worſe then other. Hauing prooued many remedies, we all agreed in one iudgement, to put a very hard thing in execution, and that was to make Boats for vs to goe from thence. It ſeemed a thing impoſſible to all, becauſe ſome of vs knew not how to make them, and wee had neither Iron Tooles, nor Forge, nor Ockam, Pitch, nor Ropes, nor finally, any thing of ſo many, which were needfull in ſuch an exerciſe: and aboue all, we had not prouiſion of victuall for ſo long time while they ſhould be made. The day following it pleaſed God, that one of our men came, who ſaid, that hee would make certaine Pipes of wood, and that with the skinnes of wild beaſts, certaine Bellowes ſhould bee made to blow. And finding vs at a time, wherein what thing ſoeuer he would, which had the leaſt colour, or ſhadow of remedie, ſeemed ſufficient: we ſaid, that he ſhould make them, and ſo we agreed, that of the Stirrops, Spurres and Croſſe-bowes, and other things of Iron which were among vs, Nayles, Sawes and Hatchets ſhould be made; and other Tooles of Iron, ſeeing they were ſo needfull. And we tooke for remedie, to haue ſome food while this ſhould be put in execution, that Hard ſhift. foure entries ſhould be made into Aute, with all the Horſe, and others that could goe thither, and that euery third day one Horſe ſhould be killed, to be diuided among them that wrought in the making of the Boates, and them that were ſicke. The entries were made with as many men and horſes, as was poſſible, who brought thence about foure hundred Staras of Maiz, although not without controuerſie and contention, with thoſe Indians. We cauſed many Palmiti alſo to be gathered, that with the woolley part and barke thereof, twiſting and drawing them in length we might be able to vſe them in ſtead of Ockam for the Boats.

And we vſed ſo great diligence therein, that beginning the fourth of Auguſt, the twentieth of September next fiue Boates were finiſhed, of two and twenty Cubits apiece, and we ſtopped Ockam of Palmiti. the chinkes, and calking with Ockam of the Palmiti; and pitched them with a certaine Gumme, which a Grecian called Don Theodoro, brought from certaine Pine-trees, and with the ſame barke of the Palmiti, and of the traines, and haire of Horſes we made cordage and tackling, and made ſayles of our ſhirts, and of the Sauine trees which were there, we made ſuch Oares as we thought neceſſary: and ſuch was that Countrey, whereinto our ſinnes conducted vs, that no ſtones were
No ſtones. found there, to ballaſt the Boates, nor ſaw wee any throughout all that Countrey. Wee likewiſe flayed the whole legges of horſes, and ſewed the skinne together, to make bottles to carrie water. In this meane time, ſome of our men went to gather Tamarindi in the ſtrond of the Sea, where the Indians at two ſeuerall times wherein they incountred them, ſlue ten Chriſtians, ſo neere to our Tents, that we ſaw them, and could not helpe them, and found them ſhot through from ſide Strong ſhot. to ſide, with Arrowes, ſo that although our men had excellent Armour, they were not able to reſiſt their ſtrokes, thoſe Indians ſhooting with ſuch dexteritie and force, as aforeſaid. And our Pi-
Croſſe ſhoare. lots ſaid and ſwore, that from the flat ſhoare which we called by the name of the Croſſe, vnto this place, we had gone about two hundred and foureſcore leagues, little more or leſſe, and in all that Miſerable ſucceſſe of the Spaniards in this Voyage. Countrey we ſaw no Mountaines, nor had any notice by any meanes, that there were any, and before that we imbarked, beſides thoſe which the Indians had ſlaine, there were more then forty other men dead through ſickneſſe and famine.

The two and twentieth day of September, they ceaſed to eate horſes, ſo that only one remayned, and on that day wee imbarked in this order. In the Gouernours Boate went nine and fortie men, and in the other which hee gaue to the Auditour and Commiſſary, went as many more. The third, he gaue to Captaine Alonzo del Caſtiglio, and Andrea Durante, with eight and forty men, and another he gaue vnto two other Captaines, the one called Telles, and the other Pigualoſa, with ſeuen and forty men, and the fift he gaue to the Controuler and mee, with nine and forty men. And after the victuals and furniture, and other things were ſhipped, they aroſe no more then a fourth part aboue the water, and beſide this we were ſo ſtreighted, that we could not guide nor turne in the Boats. Neceſſitie was ſo powerfull, that it made vs aduenture to goe in this manner, and commit our ſelues vnto ſo dangerous a Sea, without hauing any one among vs, who knew the art of Nauigation.

Spiaggia de Caualli. That flat ſhoare from whence we departed, is called the ſhoare of the Horſes, and we went ſeuen dayes through thoſe gulfes with the water vp to the girdle, without ſeeing any ſigne of the Coaſt: and at the end of thoſe ſeuen dayes, we arriued at an Iland which ſtandeth neere vnto the Land. My Boat went before, and we ſaw fiue Canowes of Indians comming, who forſooke them all, and left them in our hands ſeeing vs come towards them. Our other Boates went before, and lighted vpon certane houſes in the ſame Iland, where they found many of their Egges and Thorn-back were dry, and greatly releeued vs in the neceſſitie wherein we were.

After this, we went further, and two leagues from thence we paſſed a Strait which that Iland maketh maketh with the Land, and called it the Strait of Saint Michael, becauſe we paſſed it vpon that holy day. Being gotten out of that Strait, wee arriued at the Coaſt, wherewith the fiue Canowes which I had taken from the Indians, we remooued ſome things out of our Boats, making them faſt and ioyning them to ours, ſo that they aroſe two handfuls aboue water, and therewithall we turned to goe along the Coaſt by the way of the Riuer of Palmes, thirſt and famine alwayes increaſing: becauſe the victuals were very ſcant, and almoſt at an end, and we wanted water, becauſe the bottles which we had made of the skinnes of horſes, became ſuddenly putrified and muſtie, and were good for nothing, and many times wee entred into certaine gulfes and flat ſhoares, which went farre within the Land, and found them all ſhallow and dangerous. And ſo we went thirty dayes, and ſometimes found ſome Indian fiſhers, a poore and miſerable people: and at the end of theſe thirty dayes, when our neceſſitie for want of water, was extreame, going to the Coaſt, one night we perceiued a Canow comming, and ſeeing her wee expected that ſhe would haue arriued; but although we called vnto her ſhe would not come nor behold vs, and becauſe it was night we followed her not, but held on our courſe. When day began to appeare, we ſaw a ſmall Iland, and went thither to ſee if wee could find any water there, but wee laboured in vaine becauſe there was none. While wee ſtayed there, a mightie tempeſt aroſe vpon vs, whereupon we abode there ſixe dayes, not daring to put out to Sea againe, and hauing paſſed fiue dayes without drinking, our thirſt was ſo great, that we were forced to drinke the Sea-water, and ſome dranke ſo largely that fiue of our men dyed ſuddenly. We went out the ſame way, which we had ſeene the Canow goe, the night before we departed thence. This day we ſaw our ſelues many times drowned, and ſo caſt away, that there was none of vs, who did not aſſure himſelfe of death. But it pleaſed our Lord God, who in the greateſt neceſſities vſeth to ſhew his fauour, that about Sunne ſet we weathered a point which the Land maketh, where wee found it very calme and quiet. Heere many Canowes came towards vs, and the Indians that were in them, ſpake vnto vs, and without wondring at vs returned. They were a people of a great bodie and well ſet, and carried neither Bowes nor Arrowes. Some of vs followed them vnto their houſes, which ſtood neere vnto the water ſide, and leaped aland, and before the entrance of the houſes, we found many pots of water, and great quantitie of fiſh, and the Lord of that Countrey offered it all vnto the Gouernour, and taking him by the hand, brought him to his houſe (their houſes are of Mats very well made.) And after we entred into the houſe of their Cazique or Lord, he gaue vs much fiſh, and we gaue them bread of Corne which we brought, and they eat it in our preſence, and demanded more, which we gaue them, and the Gouernour gaue the Cazique many ſmall trifles, and abiding with him in his houſe, about halfe an houre within night, the Indians aſſaulted vs, and the reſt of our men, who road very ill, beeing caſt vpon that Coaſt, they aſſaulted alſo the houſe of the Cazique where the Gouernour was, and with a ſtone ſmote him on the face: and tooke the Cazique. But he hauing his men ſo neere eſcaped away, and left a Mantle of his of the skinnes of the Martinet Sables, which in my iudgement are the beſt of all the World, and haue a ſcent whereunto the ſcent of Ambergriſe, and Muske is not comparable: and the ſcent thereof was ſmelt very farre off. We ſaw alſo other but none like vnto that.

Digitized by Google

The Strait of Saint Michael.

R. of Palmes.

Miſerable thirſt.

Rich Furres & ſweete Martoli Zibellines.

Now ſeeing the Gouernour wounded, we ſet him aboord, and cauſed him to bring with him the greater part of the men vnto the Boats: and fifty of our men only remayned on land, to fight with the Indians, who that night aſſaulted vs three times, and with ſo great violence, that euery time they made vs retyre a ſtones caſt, ſo that there was not one of our men, that was not wounded.

After this we returned to imbarke our ſelues, and ſayled three dayes: and hauing taken a little water, as much as the few veſſels we had, were able to carrie, wee returned to fall into the ſame neceſſitie wherein we were firſt. And going on our Voyage, we entred into a Strait, where abiding we ſaw a Canow of the Indians comming, and as we called vnto them, they came, and the Gouernour to whoſe Boat they were neereſt, demanded water of them, who offered it him if he would giue them veſſels wherein to carrie it: ſo a Greeke Chriſtian, called Theodoro, of whom mention is made before, ſaid that he would goe with them. And although the Gouernour, and many other laboured to diſſwade him, yet he would needs goe thither, and carried a Negro with him, and the Indians left for hoſtages two of their men.

Thoſe Indians returned in the Euening, and brought vs our veſſels without water, but brought not our two Chriſtians againe: and thoſe two men of theirs, who remayned for pledges, as ſoone as they ſpake vnto them, would haue caſt themſelues into the water, but our men who had them in the Boat held them, and ſo the other Indians fled and left vs much confounded and ſorrowful, for the two Chriſtians which we had loſt.

The morning following, many other Canoas of the Indians came vnto vs, demanding their two companions which they left vs for hoſtages. The Gouernour anſwered, that he would giue them vnto them, ſo that they would reſtore vs our two Chriſtians. Fiue, or ſixe Lords came with thoſe people, and it ſeemed to vs, that they were of a very good diſpoſition, and of greater authority, and retinue, then all the reſt wee had found hitherto, although they were not of ſo tall a ſtature as the other before mentioned. They wore their haire looſe, and very long, and were co-

Deſcription of theſe Indians.

uered

uered with mantles of Martinets, of the ſame ſort whereof we ſpake before, and ſome of them were made of a very ſtrange faſhion, hauing certaine laces of the worke of Lions skinnes, which ſeemed very faire. They prayed vs, that we would goe with them, and they would giue vs our two Chriſtians, and water, and many other things: and many Canoas came continually vpon vs, endeauouring to take the mouth of that paſſage, and ſo therefore, becauſe the place was very dangerous, we went out to Sea, where we ſtayed with them vntill noone. But, not being willing to reſtore our Chriſtians, and therefore we alſo would not reſtore their two hoſtages, they began to caſt ſtones at vs with ſlings: making ſhew alſo that they would ſhoot at vs, although we ſaw not aboue three or foure Bowes among them. And while wee continued thus: a freſh gale of winde beganne to blowe, and they went their way. So, we ſayled all that day vntill the euening, at what time my Boat that went before, diſcouered a point which the Land made, and at the other end I ſaw a Riuer: then I anchored at a ſmall Iland, which maketh that point, to ſtay for the other Boats. The Gouernour would not come neere it, but put into a flat ſhoare very neere thereunto, where many ſmall Ilands were, and there wee all met together, and tooke freſh water within the Sea, becauſe the Riuer ranne into the Sea continually, and with great violence. And that wee might bee able to bake a little Maiz which wee brought, becauſe for two dayes before, we had eaten it raw, we went aland on that Iland, but finding no wood there, we agreed to goe vnto the Riuer, which was behind the Point one league from thence. And as wee went, the current of the Riuer was ſo great, that by no meanes it ſuffered vs to arriue, but droue vs backe from the Land.

Current.

§. II.

Miſery purſues them at Sea, and betrayes them to the Indians: their miſerable liues and death.

WEe ſayled foure dayes, euery one eating halfe a handfull of raw Maiz a day by ratement. At the end of theſe foure dayes, a tempeſt tooke vs, which made vs recouer the Boat of Captaine Telles, and through the great mercy which God ſhewed to ſome of vs, we were not wholly drowned. And being Winter, and exceeding cold, and ſo many dayes wherein we had ſuſtained hunger, with many blowes which wee receiued from the Sea, the day following the men began very much to faint, in ſuch manner, that when the Sunne went downe, all thoſe that were in my Boat, were fallen one vpon the other, ſo neere vnto death, that few of them had any ſenſe, and among all them there were not fiue that could ſtand on their feete, and when night came there remained no more but the Maſter and my ſelfe, that could mannage the Boat, and two houres within night the Maſter ſaid vnto mee, that I ſhould take charge of my Boat, becauſe he was in ſuch caſe, that he held it for certainty, that hee ſhould die that night. And ſo I tooke the rudder, and midnight being paſt, I went to ſee if the Maſter were dead, who ſaid vnto me, that ſuddenly he was better, and that hee would guide the Boat vntill day. Then ſurely I found my ſelfe in ſuch ſtate, that much more willingly I would haue receiued death, then ſee ſo many men before me in that manner wherein they were: and after the Maſter tooke charge of the Boat I reſted my ſelfe a little, but very vnquietly, becauſe at that time nothing was further from me then ſleepe. And about the morning me thought that I heard the noiſe and roaring of the Sea, becauſe being a very lowe Coaſt it raged much, whereupon when I heard this, I called to the Maſter, who anſwered me, that he ſuppoſed we were now neere vnto the Land; and ſounding, we found our ſelues in ſeuen fathome, and he thought it fit, that we ſhould abide at Sea vntill the day appeared. And ſo I tooke an Oare and rowed to the Lands ſide, which we found one league diſtant, and put the ſtearne to the Sea. And being neere to the Land, a waue tooke vs, which caſt the Boat backe againe into the Sea as farre as a man might well fling a ſtone, and with the great blowe which it gaue, almoſt all the men who remained there as dead, receiued their ſenſes againe, and ſeeing vs ſo neere vnto the Land, beganne to ariſe and goe on their hands and feete. And hauing landed, wee made fire in certaine trenches, and boyled ſome of the Maiz which wee had brought, and found raine-water: and with the heate of the fire, the men beganne to recouer and take ſtrength: and the day that we arriued there, was the ſixth of Nouember.

After the men had eaten, I commanded Lopez de Oniedo, who was the beſt able, and ſtrongeſt of all the reſt, that he ſhould goe cloſe to any tree of them that were there at hand, and climing vp into one of them, he ſhould diſcouer the Land where we were, and ſee if hee could haue any knowledge thereof. He did ſo, and ſaw that we were in an Iland, and found certaine poore Cottages of the Indians, which ſtood ſolitary, becauſe thoſe Indians were gone vnto the field. And ſo he tooke a pot, a young whelpe, and a little Thorn-backe, and returned vnto vs. About halfe an houre after, an hundred Indian Archers came ſuddenly vpon vs, who though they were great, yet feare made them ſeeme to be Giants: and they ſtood round about vs, where the firſt three were.

Digitized by Google

were. It had beene a vaine thing amongst vs to thinke that there were any to defend vs, because there were scarce sixe that were able to rise from the ground. The Controller and I came towards them, and called vnto them, and they came neere vnto vs, and wee endeauoured the best we could, to secure them; so we gaue them Crownes and Bells, and euery one of them gaue mee an Arrow, which is a token of friendship, and they told vs by signes that they would returne vnto vs in the morning, and bring vs somewhat to eate, because at that time they had nothing.

The next morning at the breake of day, which was the houre whereof the Indians had spoken, they came vnto vs, and brought vs much fish, and certaine Roots which they eate, and are like vnto Nuts, some bigger, and some lesse, which they digge vnder the water with much trouble. At the euening they returned againe, and brought vs more fish, and some of the same Roots, and brought also their wiues and little children with them that they might see vs: and so they returned rich in Crownes and Bells which we gaue them, and the next day they returned to visite vs with the same things, which they had done before.

Then seeing we were now prouided of fish, of those roots, and water, and other things which we could get, we agreed to embarke our selues, and proceed on our Voyage: so wee digged the Boat out of the sand, where it was fast moored, and were constrained to strippe our selues naked, and indured great labour to launch her into the water. Being embarked, about two Crosbow shots within the Sea, there came such a waue of water that it washed vs all, and being naked, and the cold extreme, wee let goe the Oares, and another blowe which the Sea gaue vs, ouerturned the Boat, whereupon the Controller and two other went out to escape by swimming: but the cleane contrary befell them, because the Boat strucke them vnder water, and drowned them. That Coast being very faire, the Sea cast vs all aland on the same Coast, all tumbled in the water, and halfe drowned, so that we lost not a man, but those three, whom the Boat smote vnder water. Wee which remained aliue were all naked, hauing lost all that which wee had, which although it were but a little, yet was it much for vs at that time: and being then Nouember, and the cold very extreme, and being in such case, that a man might easily tell all our bones, we seemed to be the proper and true figure of Death. As for my selfe, I am well able to say, that from the moneth of May past, I had not eaten any other thing then parched Maiz, and sometimes I was in so great necessitie, that I haue eaten it raw, because although the Horses were killed while they made the Boats, yet I could neuer eate them, and I did not eate fish ten times. I speake this, that euery one might consider, how we could continue in that case, and aboue all, the North wind blew that day, so that we were neerer vnto death, then life. It pleased God, that seeking the brands of the fire which we had made before wee embarked, wee found light there, and so making great fires, we stood craning mercy from our Lord God, and pardon of our sinnes, with many teares, euery one of vs grieuing not onely for himselfe, but for all the rest, that hee saw in the same state. At the setting of the Sunne, the Indians supposing that we had not beene gone, came to finde vs, and brought vs somewhat to eate, but when they saw vs thus, in so differing an habite from the first, and in such strange manner, they were so afraid, that they turned backe againe: but I went towards them, and called them, who beheld mee with much feare. Hereupon I gaue them to vnderstand by signes, that the Boat was cast away, and three men drowned, and there they themselues saw two dead, and the rest of vs that were now remayning were going the high way to death.

Three drowned.

The Indians seeing the misfortune which had befallen vs, and the lamentable case wherein we were, with so great calamitie and miserie, came amongst vs, and through great griefe and compassion which they had of vs, beganne mightily to weepe and lament, and that from the heart, insomuch that they might be heard farre from thence, and they thus lamented more then halfe an houre. And surely, seeing these men so depriued of reason, and so cruell after the manner of brute beasts, so bewayled our miseries, it caused that in me, and all the rest of our men, the compassion and consideration of our miseries should be much more increased. The mournfull lamentation being somewhat appeased, I demanded of the Christians, whether they thought it fit, that I should intreate those Indians to bring vs to their houses, whereunto some of them that were of Nona Spagna, answered me, that I should not speake a word thereof, because if they brought vs home to their houses, they would haue sacrificed vs to their Idols. Now seeing there was no other remedie, and that, what other way soeuer, death was more certaine and more neere, I cared not for that which they said, but prayed the Indians, that they would bring vs to their houses, and they shewed vs, that it pleased them very well, and that wee should tarrie a little, and they would doe as much as wee desired, presently thirty of them laded themselues with wood, and went vnto their houses, which were farre from thence: and wee remained with the rest, vntill it was almost night, and then they tooke vs, and conducting vs, we went with much anguish and heauinesse vnto their houses. And because they feared lest through the extreme coldnesse of the way any of vs should die, or swound and faint, they had prouided, that by the way foure or fiue great fires should bee made, some small space distant each from other, and at euery one of them they warmed vs, and when they saw that we had taken a little strength and heate, they brought vs to another, with so great care, that they did not so much as suffer vs to set our

Humanitie of Sauages.

feete

feete on the ground, and after this manner we were brought vnto their houses: where we found that they had prouided an house for vs, & many fires therein, and about one houre after we were come thither, they beganne to dance and reioyce, which continued all the night. Although amongst vs there was neither ioy nor sleepe, expecting when they would haue sacrificed vs. In the morning they returned to giue vs fish, and rootes, and vsed vs so well, that wee somewhat assured our selues, and lost some part of the feare of sacrificing.

In those dayes wherein wee abode there, I saw a small Net, with one of those Indians, and knew that it was not any of them which wee gaue them, and demanding whence they had it, they answered me by signes, that other men, such as we were, gaue it them, who abode behind that place. I seeing this, sent two Christians, and two Indians, to shew them those men, and being gone, they met with them very neere, who came to seeke vs out, because the Indians of those places had told them of vs. These men were Captaine Andrea Dorante, and Alonso del Castiglio, with all the men of their Boat. And being come vnto vs, they were afraid to behold vs in that manner wherein we were, and were very sorrowfull that they had not any thing to giue vs, because they had no other garments, then those which they wore. And they abode there with vs, and told vs, how on the fift day of that same moneth, their Boat had crossed ouer, one league and an halfe from thence, and that they had escaped without losing any thing.

Wee all agreed together, to trimme that Boat of theirs, and that all such as had strengh, and abilitie to doe it, should goe therein, and that the rest should remaine there vntill they recouered: and that when they were able, they should goe along the Coast, and waite there till God should conduct them with the rest of vs vnto a Land of the Christians. And as we determined, so wee did, and before we lanched the Boat into the water, Tanera an Horseman of our companie died: and the Boat which we thought should carrie vs, she also made her end, and was not able to vphold her selfe, but was suddenly drowned. Whereupon being in that manner aforesaid, and naked, and the weather so vnseasonable to trauell, and passe ouer Riuers and Gulfes by swimming, and hauing no victuall, or any sustenance, nor meanes to carrie them, we determined to doe that which necessitie and force compelled vs vnto, that is to say, to winter there. And wee likewise agreed, that foure of our lustiest and strongest men should goe to Panuco, supposing it neere vnto that place. And that if it should please our Lord God, that they arriued there, they should giue intelligence that we were there, and tell them of our necessitie and miseries. They who went were very great swimmers, the one was called Alnaro Ferrante, a Portugall, who was a Carpenter, and a Mariner, the second was called Mendos, and the third Figeroa a natiue of Toledo, and the fourth was borne in Zaffra, and they carried an Indian with them of the Iland of Auia.

Panuco.

These foure Christians being departed, within few dayes after there came such vnseasonable weather of cold and tempests, that the Indians could not finde the roots, and out of the channels where they were wont to fish, they digged no fruit at all, and things falling out so vnhappily, many people began to die: and fiue Christians who were in Xamo, vpon that Coast, came to such extremitie, that they eate one another, vntill there remained but one onely, because there was none to eate him. Their names are these Siera, Diego Lopez, Corral, Palatio, Gonzalo Ruis. The Indians were so altered through this accident, and tooke so great an offence, that without doubt, if they had knowne it in the beginning, they would haue killed them all, so that all wee had beene in very great danger. Finally, in a small time, of fourescore men (which wee were in all) there remained onely fifteene. After this mortalitie, a certaine infirmitie of the stomacke happened to the Indians, through the which halfe of them died, and they beleeued that wee were the men that killed them: and holding it for an assured truth, they contended among themselues to kill all those few of vs that were remaining: and now comming to put it in execution, an Indian which I had, said vnto them, that they should not beleeue that we were those that killed them; for if we had such power, we would haue procured, that so many men of our owne should not haue died, which they had seene dead, without any abilitie of ours to remedie and helpe them, and that now wee were very few remaining, whereof none had done them any preiudice or harme: wherefore it were better that they suffer vs to liue. Thus it pleased our Lord God, that the rest followed his counsell and iudgement, and so ceassed from that purpose. Wee called this Iland the Iland of Malhado.

The Christians eate one another, for hunger.

Indian sicknesse and mortalitie.

Iland Malhado.

The people which wee found there, are of a great stature, and well set, and haue no other weapons but Bowes and Arrowes, with the which they are exceeding readie and quicke. The men haue one of their paps pierced from the one side to the other, and there are some who haue them both pierced, and in the hole which they make, they carrie a Cane acrosse, of the length of two spannes and an halfe and two fingers thicke. They likewise haue the nether lippe bored, and within the same they carrie a piece of a thin Cane, about halfe a finger thicke. The women indure much drudgerie and labour. The habitation which they make in that Iland, is from October vntill the end of Februarie, and their food is the rootes aforesaid, digged vnder water in Nouember and December. They haue Weares, but haue no fish but at this time, and before that they eate roots. At the end of Februarie they goe into other Parts to seeke food: because the roots beginne then to growe, and are not very good. This Nation, aboue all other parts of the world,

Pierced paps, with canes for gallantry.

The Indians poore life.

Digitized by Google

world, loue their children, and vse them best. And when it happeneth that any one of their children dieth, the father, mother, and kindred, with all the people lament him, and the mourning and lamentation, continueth one whole yeere, so that euery day before the Sunne ariseth, the parents beginne first to lament, and after them all the people, and they doe the same at noon, and in the morning: and the yeere being ended, they accomplish their Funerals, and honourable rites of Buriall, which they performe vnto the dead: and then they wash themselues, and shift all the apparell which they wore. They bewayle all their dead in this manner, except the aged, whom they esteeme not, for, say they, that they haue now passed their time, and are no more good for any thing, but occupie the earth, and take away the maintenance from Infants and little children. They vse to bury the dead, vnlesse they be such as are Physicians among them, whom they burne, and while the fire flameth they stand all dancing with great ioy, and make powder of the bones: and when the yeere is past, wherein they performe the honourable rites, vnto their dead, they all tumble, and wallow vpon the earth, and giue that powder of the bones to the kinsfolke, to drinke in water. Euery one haue their proper and peculiar wiues. The Physicians are they that haue most libertie, who may keepe two or three wiues, and among them there is great friendship and conformitie. When any marrieth his daughter, hee that taketh her, bringeth vnto the wife, whatsoeuer he taketh by hunting or fishing, euen vnto the day wherein he is espoused vnto her, who carrieth it vnto the house of the father, without daring to take or eate any thing thereof: and afterward they bring food to the house of the father-in-law for him to eate, and in all this time, neither father-in-law nor mother-in-law enter into their house, nor are they to enter into their house, nor the houses of their kindred. And if by chance they meete each other in the way, they goe a Crosse-bow shot off one from the other, and so long time as they thus goe farre off, they hang downe their heads, and cast their eies on the ground; for they hold it a wicked and an euill thing to be seene, and to be spoken vnto. The women haue libertie to conuerse with the fathers-in-law, and other kinsfolke: and they of that Iland haue this custome more then fiftie leagues within the Land.

Mourning for children.

Age disesteemed.

Physicians burned.

Filthie and foolish customes.

They haue another custome, and that is this, that when any of their brethren or children die, for three moneths they prouide nothing to eate for them of the house where they died, but let them die through hunger, if the kinsfolke and neighbours prouide them not somewhat to eate. Whereupon, at the time that we were there, many people dying, there was very great famine. In the most part of the houses, because they strictly obserue their customes and ceremonies: and they who prouided food for them, it being a very hard time, could finde but a little. And vpon this occasion, those Indians that had me went out of the Iland, and in their Canoas passed ouer vnto the firme Land, vnto certaine flat shoares, where they had many Oysters: and for three moneths in the yeere they eate no other thing, and drinke very bad water. They haue great scarcitie of wood, and great multitudes of Flies: their houses are made of mats spread vpon the shells of Oysters, and ouer them they sleepe vpon the hides of beasts; which yet they haue not but by a chance. And so we continued vntill the middle of Aprill, that wee went to the Sea-coast, where wee eate Mulberries all that moneth, wherein they end their sports, and festiuall iollitie.

In that Iland whereof I haue spoken, they would make vs Physicians, without examining vs, or demanding the titles of our profession, and because they heale the infirmitie with blowing vpon the diseased, and cure them with that, and with their hands: they would that wee also should doe the like, and serue them in any thing whatsoeuer. But wee laughed thereat, saying it was a iest and mockery, and that wee knew not how to heale, whereupon they tooke away our food, vntill we did that which they said. And seeing our vnbeliefe, an Indian said vnto me, that I knew not what I said, because stones and herbes that growe in the fields haue vertue, and that he with an hot stone, laying it vpon the stomacke, cured the paine: and that wee who are men, must of a certaintie haue greater vertue, then all other things of the world. In the end, seeing our selues in so great necessitie, we were constrained to doe it, yet not hoping to helpe any at all: the manner and meanes which they obserue in curing is this, that seeing themselues sicke they send for the Physician, to whom (after they are cured) they giue all that they haue; and besides procure other things from their kindred to giue them. The cure which the Physitians doe vnto them, is to cut certaine gashes where the disease or griefe is, and sucke it round about. They seare it also with fire, which among them is held a verie profitable thing, and I haue proued it and it succeeded well. After this, blowing in the place where the griefe is, they suppose the disease thereby to be remoued. The meanes whereby we cured them, was to blesse them and blow vpon them, and say a Pater noster and an Ave Mary, and pray the best we could vnto our Lord God, that he would giue them their health, and put it into their hearts to vse vs well. It pleased his mercy, that all they for whom he praied, as soone as wee had blessed and hallowed them, said vnto the rest that they were sound and well: and for this they vsed vs verie curteously and left eating themselues to giue it vnto vs, and gaue vs skins and other trifling things. The famine was so exceeding great in that place, that many times I continued three dayes without eating any thing at all, and so did they also, insomuch as I thought it impossible to bee able

They are made Physicians.

Learned argument.

Manner of curing.

Digitized by Google

able to liue: although afterward, I found my ſelfe in farre greater famine and neceſſitie, as I ſhall hereafter ſpeake.

The Indians who had Alonſo del Caſtiglio, and Andrea Dorante and the reſt that remayned aliue: being of another Language, and other parentage, paſſed ouer to another part of the firme Land, to eate Oyſters where they abode vntill the firſt day of Aprill, and preſently after they returned vnto an Iland neere vnto it about two leagues, for that it yeelded more water, and the Iland is halfe a league ouer and fiue in length. All the people of that Countrey goe naked, and the women only haue ſome parts of their bodie couered with a certaine kind of Cotton which they gather from certaine trees, and the Damſels couer themſelues with the skinnes of wild beaſts. The people differ much one from another in their Garments. There is not any Lord or Cazique among them, and all they who are of one Family and ſtocke goe together. Two ſorts of Languages dwell there, one of them that are called Capoques, and the other Han: they haue a cuſtome, that if at any time they ſee ſuch as they know, they ſtand halfe an houre lamenting, before they ſpeake: and after that, he that is viſited ariſeth firſt and giueth vnto the other whatſoeuer hee poſſeſſeth, and he receiueth it: and a little after he goeth away with that Garment, and ſometimes after they haue receiued it, they depart without ſpeaking a word.

Lamentable ſalutations.

After Dorante and Caſtiglio returned to the Iland, they gathered together all the Chriſtians, who were ſomewhat diſperſed, and found them fourteene in all. I (as I ſaid) abode on the other ſide in the mayne Land, whither my Indians had brought me, and where a great ſickneſſe tooke me. Now when the Chriſtians knew that, they gaue the Mantle of Martinets (which wee had taken from the Cazique as aforeſaid) vnto an Indian that he might bring them where I was, to ſee me: and ſo twelue of them came, becauſe the other two were ſo weake, that they feared to bring them with them. And when they were come to the firme Land, they found another of our men, called Franceſco del Leon. All theſe thirteene went along the Coaſt, and as ſoone as the Indians who kept me were gone, they aduiſed mee, and told mee that Ieronimo d' Alaniz, and Lope d' Oniedo, were yet remayning in that Iland. My infirmitie hindered mee that I could not follow them, and ſo I ſaw them not otherwiſe, and I was of neceſſitie to ſtay with thoſe ſame Indians of the Iland more then a yeere. But by reaſon of the great trauell and paines whereunto they put me, as alſo their euill vſage of me, I determined to flye from thence, and paſſe ouer vnto them, who abide in the Mountaines and firme Land, whom they call the Indians of Carruco, becauſe I could not indure the life, which I led with the other. For among many other painfull labours, I was compelled to digge Roots vnder the water, and among the Canes where they grew vnder the ground. And herewith I had my fingers ſo ſpoyled, that a ſtraw that ſhould haue touched me, would haue drawne bloud: and the Canes being full of ſplinters tare mee in diuers parts, among which I was to goe with the Garment aforeſaid, which I wore. Whereupon I endeuoured to goe from thence vnto thoſe other, and with them I continued ſomewhat better. And becauſe I made my ſelfe a Merchant, I was carefull to performe that office with the beſt knowledge I had. And for this cauſe they gaue mee food, and vſed mee well, and prayed mee to goe from place to place for ſuch things as they needed, becauſe in reſpect of the Warres which they continually make among themſelues, there is neither trauelling, nor much trading among them: ſo that now with my trafficke and Merchandiſe, I went throughout the whole Countrie as farre as I would, and trauelled along the Coaſt, fortie or fiftie leagues. The principall trafficke I had, were pieces of ſhels of the Sea, and their hides, and ſhels wherewith they knit a certaine fruit like vnto Beech maſt, with the which they prouide for their dancings and feſtiuall ſports: and this is the greateſt thing of price among them, and crownes of the Sea, and ſuch other like things. And this is that which I carried within Land, I afterward carried hides in exchange, and red Ocre with the which they anoint and die their faces, and their haire: I alſo carried flint ſtones to make Arrow heads and Glue, and ſtiffe Canes to make Arrowes: and certaine flockes which they make of Deeres haire ſo died, that it remayneth coloured. And this office greatly auailed me, becauſe I had libertie to goe whither I would, and was not bound to doe any thing, for I was not a ſlaue, and whitherſoeuer I went they vſed mee well, and gaue mee ſomewhat to eate in reſpect of my Merchandize, but that which moſt imported mee, was, that going thus I ſearched, and ſaw how I might goe further: and among them I was very well knowne. And ſuch as knew mee not deſired my company, and procured meanes to know mee for the fame which I had among them. I continued about ſix yeeres with them in that Countrie alone, and naked as they all goe.

The Indians of Carruco.

Queuenes and Dragnanes, Indians.

I got Lope de Oniedo to trauell with me to ſeeke out the Chriſtians: but hearing by the Indians that only three were left of our company, he left me: and I remained alone with thoſe Indians, who were called Quenenes, and they with whom Lope went, were called Dragnanes. Two daies after Lope de Oniedo was gone, the Indians who kept Alonſo del Caſtiglio, and Andrea Dorante came vnto the place, as thoſe other Indians had foretold vs to eate of certaine Nuts wherewith they maintaine themſelues, grinding certaine graines with them two monethes in the yeere, without eating any other thing: although they haue them not euery yeere, becauſe ſome yeeres they grow, and ſome not. They are of the bigneſſe of thoſe of Galicia, and the trees are very great, great, and are there in great number. Being now neere vnto the place where they lodged, Andrea Dorante came forth to see who it was, because the Indians had now told him that a Christian was come. And as soone as he saw me, he remained much astonished, because they supposed I had beene long since dead, for so the Indians told them. Wee gaue God heartie thankes to see one another, and that day was one of them, wherein wee had the greatest ioy and pleasure in our liues.

And after comming where Castiglio was, they asked mee whether I would goe, I answered, that my purpose was to passe into the Land of the Christians, and that I went seeking and searching how I might doe it. Andrea Dorante answered, that long since hee intreated Castiglio and Estenamico, that we might go further, but they durst not venter to do it, because they could not swimme, and greatly feared the Riuers and Gulfes which they were to passe ouer, there being many in those Countries. Wherefore seeing it had pleased our Lord God to preserue mee among so many dangers and diseases, and in the end to bring mee into their company, they determined to flie, and that I should carrie them ouer the Riuers and Gulfes which wee found. And they aduertized mee, that by no meanes, I should let the Indians know that I would goe further, because they would presently kill me, and that for this cause I was of necessitie to stay with them sixe monethes, which was the time in the which those Indians went into another Countrie to eate Tune.

These Tune are certaine Fruits of the bignesse of an Egge, red and blacke, and of a very good taste. They eate them three monethes in the yeere, wherein they eate no other thing, and because at the time when they gathered them, other Indians beyond would come with Bowes to contract and barter with them, we (when they returned) might escape from our Indians, and goe with them. With this determination I remained there, and yeelded my selfe a slaue vnto an Indian, with whom Dorante abode. Tune, fruits of India.

These Indians are called Mariane, and Castiglio remained with other of their Neighbours, called Iguales. And while we continued there, they reported vnto mee, that after they were come out of the Iland of Malhado vpon the Sea Coast, they found the Boat wherein the Auditor and the Friers crossed ouer, and that passing those Riuers which are foure, and very great: the many currents tooke the Boat wherewith they went to Sea, and foure of them were drowned, the rest with much labour passed the Gulfes: and that fifteene leagues further they found another, and as soone as they met together there, two of their companions died in the time that they had trauelled sixtie leagues, and that all the rest were yet at the point of death, and that all that iournie they had eaten nothing but Creuises and Herbs of the wall, and comming to this last Gulfe, they said, that they found Indians who stood eating of Mulberies, who when they saw the Christians they went vnto the other end, and so they standing still and deuising meanes to passe the Gulfe, an Indian and a Christian came vnto them, and being come, they knew it was Figheroa, one of the foure we had sent before from the Iland of Malhado, who recounted vnto them in what manner he and his companions came to that place where two of them and one Indian died all through cold and famine, because they were come thither in the hardest time of the yeere: and that the Indians had taken Figheroa himselfe and Mendes, which Mendes fled afterwards, trauelling the best hee could towards Pauuco; and that the Indians followed after him and slue him. And that abiding thus with those Indians, hee vnderstood that with the Marianes there was a Christian, who had passed to the other side, and he found him with them whom they call Quemenes. Which Christian was Gernando d' Esquiuel, a Native of Badaioz, who came in the company of the Commissary, and that from Esquiuel, hee vnderstood what end the Gouernour had, together with the Auditor and the rest: telling them how the Auditor and the Friers had launched their Boat into the Riuers, and comming along the Coast, the Gouernour landed his people, and went with his Boat vntill they came vnto that great Gulfe, where he turned to take in his men, and passe ouer to the other side, and returned for the Auditor and the Friers, and all the rest. And he declared, that being thus imbarked, the Gouernour reuoked the authoritie of his Lieutenant, which the Auditor had, and gaue that charge vnto a Captaine that went with him, called Pantoja. And that the Gouernor stayed that night in his Boat, & would not come on Land, and the Master abode with him, and one Page who was not well, and they had neither water nor any thing to eate in the Boat: so about midnight so hard a gale of winde from the North tooke them, that it droue the Boat into the Sea before any one saw it, for he had nothing to releeue him but one flint stone, and they knew not that he had any other thing besides. And when the men who remained on the land saw this, they went along the Coast, and finding the water so rough, they made floats with much trouble and paines, and so passed ouer vnto the other side. And going further they came to the point of an Hill at the water side, and found Indians there, who when they saw them comming, put their things into their Canowes, and passed ouer to the other side of the Coast. So the Christians seeing what the time was being in Nouember, abode in that Mountaine because they found water, wood, and certaine Creuises there, where through cold and famine, by little and little, they beganne to die. And beside this, Pantoja who remained Lieutenant, vsed them very ill, and not being able to indure it, the Sergeant Maior Brother of Marianes. Iguales.

Vasquez Porealle, who came in the fleete from Cuba, Master of the Campe, reuolted from Pantoſſa, and ſmote him with a piece of wood, with the which blow hee died, and ſuch as died became the morſels of the other, and the laſt that died, was the Sergeant Maior, and Eſquimel did the like, and eating him, maintained himſelfe vntill the firſt of March, that an Indian one of them who fled from thence came to ſee if they were all dead, and after brought Eſquimel away from thence with him, who being in ſubiection to this Indian Figheroa ſpake with him, and vnderſtood all this of him which wee haue before declared, and prayed him to come with him, that they might goe together towards Pamico: but Eſquimel would not doe it, ſaying, that hee vnderſtood by Friers that Pamico was behind them, and ſo he remained there, and Figheroa went to the Coaſt where he vſed to abide.

The Spaniards eate one another.

All this Figheroa reported vnto vs, by the relation which Eſquimel made vnto him, and ſo from hand to hand it came vnto me. Whereby hee might ſee and know the end which all that fleete had, and the particular miſchances which happened to euerie one of the reſt. And hee further ſaid, that if the Chriſtians at any time ſhould goe through thoſe parts, it might bee, that they ſhould ſee Eſquimel, becauſe hee knew that hee was fled from that Indian with whom hee abode, vnto the other which are called Marianes, who were their Neighbours. And ſo hauing ended his Diſcourſe, he and Aſturiano, were about to goe vnto the other Indians that were further beyond, but thoſe Indians who kept them perceiuing them, went forth and came to giue them many Baſtinadoes, and ſpoiled Aſturiano, and wounded him on the arme with an Arrow, but yet in the end they fled, and the other Chriſtians remained: and procured thoſe Indians to take them for ſlaues, although abiding with them and ſeruing them, they were as euilly intreated as euer any ſlaues were or other men of the World. Becauſe of ſixe which they were, not being contented continually to buffet, and cudgell them, and plucke off their beards with the skinne, only for their paſtime and recreation and only for going from one houſe to another, they killed three, who are thoſe of whom I ſpoke before, to wit, Diego Durante, Valdenieſſo, and Diego de Helua: and the other three that remained, expected that they alſo ſhould make the like end, and not being able to indure that life, Andrea Dorantes fled to the Marianes, who were they with whom Eſquimel abode, and they themſelues reported that they had kept Eſquimel there, who afterward would haue fled, becauſe a woman had dreamed that hee ſhould kill a childe of hers: the Indians purſued him and ſlue him; and they afterward ſhewed Andrea Durante his Sword, Crowne, Booke, and other things which he had.

A cruell cuſtome of the Indians, who vſe to kill their male children while they ſleep, and caſt their female children (as ſoone as they are borne) to the dogges to eate them, becauſe they would not marrie them to their enemies, nor to their kindred.

They haue this cuſtome alſo euen to kill the ſame male children while they ſleepe, and when the female children are borne, they leaue them for the Dogs to eate; and caſt them away in thoſe places. And the reaſon why they doe it is this, becauſe they ſay that all they of the Countrey are their enemies, and make very great warres with them. Wherefore if by chance they ſhould marrie their Daughters, their enemies ſhould be the more increaſed, who would ſubiect them, and hold them all in captiuitie. And for this cauſe, they would rather kill them, then haue any borne of themſelues to become their enemies. Wee demanded of them why they married them not among themſelues, who anſwered, that it was a beaſtly thing to marrie them vnto their kindred, and that it was much better to kill them, then giue them for wiues vnto their kinſfolke and enemies. And they obſerue this cuſtome, and other of their Neighbours alſo called Iaguanes, and no other of that Countrie, but they obſerue the ſame. And when they take wiues, they get the women of their enemies, and the price which they pay is the beſt Bow that they can get, with two Arrowes. And if peraduenture they haue not a Bow, they giue a Net of the wideneſſe of a mans arme, and as much more in length. Durante abode with them, and not long after fled from them. Caſtiglia and Eſtenanico came into the firme Land to the Iaguanes. All they are Archers, and well ſet, although they be not ſo great as the other which we left behind, and haue all their paps and their lips pierced like them. Their food principally are roots of two or three ſorts, which they ſeeke throughout the whole Countrie, which are very harſh and puffe vp ſuch as eat them. They ſtay two dayes to roaſt them; and many of them are very bitter, and withall they dig them with much paines, but the famine in thoſe Countries is ſo great, that they cannot liue without them: and they goe two or three leagues to ſeeke them. They ſometimes kill any wilde beaſt whatſoeuer, and at certaine times take fiſh, but this is ſo little, and their hunger ſo great, that they eat Frogs, Ants Egs, Wormes, Lizards, Salamanders, Serpents and Vipers, which with their ſtinging kill men: they alſo eat earth, wood, and whatſoeuer they can get the dung of wild beaſts, and other things which I leaue to report, and I certainly beleeue, that if there were ſtones in that Country they would eat them. They keepe the ſharpe bones of fiſhes and Serpents, which they eat to grind them all afterwards, and ſo eate that powder. The men load not themſelues nor carrie burdens, but the old men and women do all this, who are leaſt eſteemed among them, they beare no ſuch loue to their children as the other doe, whereof I haue ſpoken before.

Penurious diet.

The Indians in this Prouince eate Serpents, Vipers, and other beaſtly things, by reaſon of the famine which continually is there.

Women.

There are ſome among them, who vſe that ſinne which is againſt nature. Their women are very ſufficient, and able to indure labour, for of the foure and twentie houres of the day and night, they haue but ſixe houres of reſt, and all the greater part of the night they ſpend in heating their Quens, to dry thoſe Roots which they eate. And when the day beginneth to appeare, they,

Digitized by Google

they beginne to draw water, and carrie wood vnto their houses, and giue order for other things which they want.

The greater part of them are great Theeues, because although among them they are well diuided, yet if the Father or the Sonne turne but their heads about, the one taketh from the other whatsoeuer he can get. They are great and monstrous Liers and great Drunkards, and for that purpose they drink a certaine kind of drinke. They are so well vsed to runne, that without resting themselues, or standing still at all, they runne from Morning vntill the Euening following a Deere, and in this manner they kill many, following them vntill they tire them, and sometimes take them aliue. Their houses are of Mats set vpon foure Arches, and they take them vp and remoone them, euery two or three daies to seeke food. They sow nothing at all to be able to haue fruit thereof, and are a very pleasant and cheerefull people, and notwithstanding the great hunger they indure, they cease not to dance and sport themselues.

Theeues.

Indians which runne a whole day to take a Deere, and tiring him with running, eftsoones take him aliue in the chase.

The best time which they haue is when they eate Tune, because then they haue no hunger, and passe all that time in dancing, and eate day and night all the time they haue them. They wring them, open them, and set them to dry, and beeing thus dried they hang them vp in Garlands like figges, and keepe them to eate by the way, when they returne thence: they also dry their Pils and make powder of them. Many times while we were with them, it so fell out, that we continued foure daies without eating any thing, because it was not there to be had; to make vs merrie they told vs, that wee should shortly haue Tune, and should eate many of them and drinke their juice, and fill our bellies very well, and that wee should be verie cheerefull and contented, and without any hunger. And when they told vs this, it was fiue or sixe monethes to the time of Tune.

Natures nurslings.

Dogs life.

Tune-time.

And when the time came, wee came to eate Tune, and by the way wee found many flies of three sorts, very mischieuous and noisome, and all the rest of the Summer they put vs to much trouble. And to defend vs from them we made fires of rotten and moist wood, that it might not burne but make a smoake, but this defence put vs to another trouble, for all the night wee did nothing else but complaine of the smoake which came into our eyes, and also of the great heate which the much fire gaue vs, and wee went out to sleepe by the side thereof, and if at any time we could sleepe, they remembred vs with their bastinadoes to returne and make the fires burne. They who dwell further within the Land, vse a remedie for these flies, as intollerable as this and worse, that is to say, they goe with fire-brands in their hands burning the Fields and the Woods wheresoeuer they meete with them, to make the flies to flie away: and so also they vse to digge vnder the earth for Lizards, and other such like things to eate them, they vse also to kill Deere, compassing them with many fires. Which they also doe to take away food from the beasts, that they might be constrained to goe from thence to find it, where they would haue them. For they neuer settle themselues to dwell, but where wood and water are, and sometimes they load themselues all with this prouision, and goe to seeke Deere, which (most commonly) abide where there is neither water nor wood: and the day they came thither they killed Deere, and some other hunting game such as they could get, and consumed all the water and wood in preparing them to be eaten, and in the fires which they made to hunt the flies, and tarried till the next day to take some thing to carrie with them by the way.

Flies troublesome.

Noisome remedie.

Deere haunt dry places to auoid Huntsmen.

When they depart they goe so miserably vexed with flyes, that they seeme to haue the disease of Lazarus, and in this manner they expell hunger two or three times in the yeere with so great paines as hath beene said: and because I haue proued it, I dare affirme, that there is no trauell in the World found like vnto this.

They found Oxen there and I saw them three times, and eate of them: and (as I thinke, they are of the bigneſse of those of Spaine. They haue little hornes like the Moreſche cattle, and very long haire, and some of them are ash-colour, and others blacke, and in my iudgement they haue better haire and much thicker then those of our Countries. Of those which are not great, they make Garments to couer them, and of the greater they make shooes and Targets and these came from the North further through the Land vnto the Coast of Florida, and extend themselues farre within the Land more then foure hundred leagues. And in all this way, through the Vallies by which they come, the people that dwell there, come downe and eat of them, and send great store of hides into the Countrie.

Oxen of that Countrie.

When the sixe moneths were ended, wherein I abode with the Christians, hoping to put the determination made betweene vs in execution, the Indians went to eate Tune, which might bee some thirtie leagues from thence, and being now readie to flie from them, the Indians with whom we abode, fell at variance among themselues about a woman, and buffetted and beate her, and broke her head: and for the great hatred and anger they conceiued, they tooke their houses, and euery one went vnto their place. Whereupon it was necessarie, that all the Christians who were there, should separate themselues with them, so that by no meanes wee could meet together againe vntill the next yeere: and in this time I passed much miserie, as well for the great famine I indured, as for the euill vsage, and bad entertainment those Indians gaue mee which was such, that I was faine to flie three times from those Masters that kept me, who all came diligently to seeke me that they might kill me, but it pleased our Lord God, not to suffer them to find mee, and to preserue me from their hands through his infinite mercie.

Digitized by Google

As soone as the time of Tune returned, wee Christians found our selues together againe in the same place where we were before, and hauing now ioyned together to flie from thence, and appointed the day, that very selfe same day the Indians separated vs, and euery one went vnto their place, so I said vnto the Christians, that I would expect them at the Tune, vntill the Moone were full, and that day when I said this vnto them, was the first of September, and the prime of the Moone. And further I assured them, that if they came not within that time, I would go thence alone and leaue them. And so we separated our selues, and euery man went with their Indians, and I stayed with mine vntill the thirteenth of the Moone: and my determination was to flie thence vnto the other Indians, when the Moone should be full. On the thirteenth of the said moneth, Andrea Dorante and Estenamico came vnto me and told me, that they had left Castiglio with other Indians, whom they call Canagadi, who dwelt neere thereabout, and that they had passed many miseries, and had lost their way. And that the day before our Indians remoued from their place, and were gone towards the place where Castiglio abode to ioyne themselues with them who kept him, and make themselues friends hauing beene enemies and at warres, euen vntill that day: and in this manner also we recouered Castiglio. In all the time that wee eate the Tune wee were thirstie and for remedie wee dranke the juice thereof, which wee powred in a trench which we made in the Earth, and when it was full, we dranke thereof vntill we were satisfied: it is sweet and pleasant, and of the colour of new wine boyled, and this they doe because there are no other vessels there wherein to put it. There are many sorts of Tune, among which some are verie good, although all seemed good vnto me, and hunger gaue mee no time to bee able to make choice.

Canagadi Indians.

The greatest part of all this Nation drinke raine water, gathered together in certaine Trenches. For although they haue Riuers there, neuertheless, because they neuer haue any certaine and setled place of abode, they haue no particular water knowne to them, or appointed place where to take it. Throughout the whole Countrie there are many great and goodly fences, and of excellent pasture for flockes and herds of cattle, and it would be a very fruitfull Countrie if it were manured, and inhabited by a people which had reason and knowledge. We saw no Mountaines in all that Countrie all the time we stayed there. Those Indians told vs, that further beyond there were another people, called Cameni, who liue toward the Coast, who had slaine all the men which came in the Boat of Pignaloſa and Tellez, and that they were all so weake and sicke, that although they killed them, they did not any way defend themselues, and so they made an end of them all, and they shewed vs their Garments and Weapons, and that the Barke remayned there on the other side. This is the fift Boat which made vp the account, because wee haue alreadie said, that the Sea carried away the Boat of the Gouernour, and that of the Auditour and the Friers was seene cast athwart the Coast, and Esquimel declared the end of them. The two wherein Castiglio, my selfe, and Dorante went, we haue alreadie said, that they were drowned at the Iland of Malhado.

Pastures.

Cameni Indians.

What became of their fift Boat.

§. III.

Their flight from the Indians to others, wonderfull cures, backe and belly cares: their trauells thorow the Countrey, and hungry aduentures. Diuers peoples and their customes.

AFter we were remoued from the place, about two daies iourney from them, wee recommended our selues vnto our Lord God, and went flying thence, hoping that although the time of the yeere were now late, and the Tune ended, yet with the fruits that remained in the fields, wee should be able to trauell a great part of the Countrie. And so going that first day with much feare that the Indians would haue followed vs, wee saw certaine smoakes, and going towards them after the euening we saw an Indian, who when hee saw vs fled without tarrying for vs. Whereupon we presently sent the Negro vnto him, who when he saw him alone staied for him. The Negro said vnto him, that we came to seeke out those people that made those smoakes, so he answered, that their horses were neere that place, and that hee would guide vs thither, and so we followed him and hee went running to giue notice of our comming. And about sun-set we saw the houses, and about two crosse-bow shoots before wee came thither, we found foure Indians who staied for vs and courteously entertained vs. Wee told them in the language of the Mariames that we came to seeke them, who seemed to be glad of our company, and so they brought vs to their houses, and placed Dorante and the Negro in the house of a Phisitian, and me and Castiglio, with certaine others. These people haue another language, and are called Auanares, and are they who vsed to bring the Bowes vnto those our first masters, and to con-

Auanares Indians.

Digitized by Google

contract with them: and although they be of another nation and language, yet they vnderstand the language of them with whom we first abode: and they themselues also that selfe same day came into that place with their houses. The people presently offered vs much Tune, because they knew vs both that we had healed them.

The verie same night that we came thither, certaine Indians came into Castiglio, and told him that they had verie great paine in their heads, intreating him that he would heale them: and after he had blessed them and recommended them vnto God, in the verie same instant they said that they were well, and that the paine was gone. So they went into their houses and brought vs much Tune, and a piece of flesh of a wilde beast, which we knew not what it was. This being published among them, many other diseased people came that night that he should heale them, and euerie one of them brought a piece of Venison, and they brought so many that we knew not where to put them. We yeelded great thankes vnto God, who so continually euerie day increased his mercie and his grace towards vs. Thus when the cures were ended, they began to dance and sing their rimes, and make their sports vntill the next day at the rising of the Sunne, and this festiuall iollitie continued three daies by reason of our comming thither. Afterward we asked them of the Countrie beyond, and of the people and victualls that are found there, and they answered vs, that throughout all that Countrie there was much Tune, but that they were now ended and that we should find no people, because after they had gathered the Tune, euerie one returned to their houses, and that it was a verie cold Countrie, and verie few skinnes were found there.

Cures very wonderfull, yet true. Benzo (which trauelled fourteene yeeres in the Indies with the Spaniards from 1541.) saith that of six hundred of Naruaez his company scarsly ten returned, which at Mexico reported that they had by breathing on them cured the sicke raised to life three dead men, &c. But, saith hee, Let their holines pardon me; I will easier beleeue that they killed foure liuing men then that they raised halfe one dead man to life. Ben. l. 2. c. 13. I permit some of these relations, more for knowledge of the Countrey, then for credit of Spanish cures in the Indies, which you shal find in Casas of another nature. These here challenge no Diuine end to conuert the people to God, and therefore are not like to haue any diuine beginning, but are either falsly told, or falsly done, or falsly intended by the Father of falshood. And why may they not be ascribed to the Deuill, either as lies if neuer done, or if done, as de-

Seeing this, and considering that the Winter, and cold time of the yeere was come we agreed to winter with them. And at the end of fiue daies, after we came thither they departed thence, and went to seeke other Tune, where other people were of other Nations and diuers languages: and hauing trauelled fiue daies iourney with much hunger, because neither Tune, nor other fruits are found by the way, wee came to a Riuer and set vp our houses there, and after went to seeke certaine fruits of a tree like vnto a fig tree, and there being no high way in all those places, I staled longer then the rest in finding them, and so they returned to their houses, and I remained alone, and comming to seeke our men that night I had almost lost my selfe: and it pleased God that I found a tree vnder the which there was a fire, and at that fire I passed the cold of that night. In the morning I loaded my selfe with wood, and taking two fire brands I returned to seeke them, and went in this manner fiue daies, alwaies with my fire and burden of wood, because if my fire should haue beene extinguished in places where there had been no wood (as in many places there is none) I was to kindle other fire brands, and not to remaine without fire, because I had no other remedie against the cold, being as naked as euer I was borne. And in the night I had this remedie, that I went to any small plat of ground beset with trees neere vnto the Riuer, and there abode before the Sun went downe and made a trench in the ground and put much wood therein, which they vse to doe of certaine trees, whereof in those places there is great abundance, and put many sticks together of such as were falne and drie, and about that trench I made foure fiers a crosse, and thought to come from time to time to renew the fiers, and had made certaine bundels of straw, whereof in those places there is much, and therewith I couered me in that trench, and in this manner defended my selfe from the cold of the nights: and on a certaine night and the fire lite on the straw which couered mee while I was sleeping in the trench. So the fire began to burne verie fiercely, and although with much furie I leaped out, yet the token of the danger which I had passed remained in my haire. In all this time I eate not one morsell nor found any thing to eate, and going thus scorched and singed much bloud issued from my feet, and God vsed great mercie towardes mee that in all this time the North winde blew not, for otherwise there had beene no remedie but I must needs haue died. At the end of my fiue daies I came to a Riuer side where I found my Indians, who together with my Christians held me for dead, and alwaies thought that some viper had stung me. And when they found me they greatly reioyced to see me, but principally the Christians, who said vnto me, that vntill that time they had trauelled with much hunger, and for that cause they came not to seeke mee, and that night they gaue mee of the Tune which they had. The day following we departed thence, and went vnto the place where much Tune was, wherewith we all satisfied the great hunger which we had, and we Christians gaue many thankes vnto our Lord God, who left vs not without remedie.

The next day many Indians came to vs in the morning, and brought fiue sicke men with them, who were lame and verie ill, and they came to seeke Castiglio that he might heale them, and euery one of them that were diseased gaue him their Bowes and Arrowes, which he receiued, and at the setting of the Sun he blessed them, and recommended them vnto God, and wee all besought him with the best deuotion we could that he would giue them health, seeing wee saw there was no other remedie but to doe the best we could that those people might helpe vs, that so we might be able to get out of that miserable life: and his infinite goodnesse dealt so mercifully with vs, that when the morning came they all arose as sound and strong, as if they had neuer had any disease. This caused them much to wonder, and likewise to render infinite thankes vnto our Lord, and that we more entirely acknowledged his great goodnesse, and had assured hope that he would deliuer vs, and conduct vs vnto the place where we might better serue him. And for my selfe, I can boldly speake, that I alwaies had an assured trust in his mercie, that hee would raise me from that captiuitie, and so I alwaies said to my companions. When the Indians were gone, and carried away their sicke men healed, wee went thence, where the other abode eating Tuna, and these are called Cacalcuches and Maticones, who are of another language, and together with them were other called Coaios and Susolas, and on the other side others called Ataios, and they maintaine warres with the Susolas, and they shot euery day amongst them: and because in those places they talked of nothing else but of miracles which our Lord God wrought by our meanes, they came from many parts to seeke vs that we might heale them, and at the end of two daies wherein we staied there, certaine Indians of Susolas came vnto vs and intreated Castiglio that hee would goe to cure one that was wounded and other sicke men, saying, that among them there was one who was readie to die. Castiglio was a verie fearefull Physitian, especially when the cures were grieuous and dangerous, and beleeued that his sinnes would haue caused that all the cures should not succeed well. The Indians said vnto mee, that I should goe to heale them, because they wished mee well, and remembred that I had sometimes healed them where the nuts grew, and that for the same they had giuen me nuts and hides: and this was when I came to ioyne my selfe with the Christians; wherefore I agreed to goe with them, and Dorante and Estevanico went with me.

uillish Arts to maintaine rapine and superstition, which are here mentioned the effects thereof? Acosta tells of a great miracle-worker in the Indies, a vicious man, and hanged for knaueries. This Cowes-Head the Author is also by Schmidel before, recorded for a bad man in his acts at the Riuer of Plate. I will conclude with S. Aug. de vnit. Eccl. c. 16. Remoueantur isti, vel figmenta mendaciums hominum vel portenta fallacium spirituum &c.

Cacalcuches. Maticones. Coaios. Susolas and Ataios. Indians.

And when we were come neere vnto the Cottages which they haue, I saw the sicke man whom we went to cure, who was now dead, and about him stood many people lamenting, and his house plucked downe, which among them is a signe that the master thereof is dead. So when I came I found his eyes distorted, and that he had no pulse, and had all the tokens of a dead man, and as it seemed to mee it was so, and Dorante affirmed the same vnto me. I tooke vp the matt which he had vpon him to couer him, and the best I could I prayed vnto the Lord, that he would giue mee grace to giue health vnto that sicke men, and to all the rest that had need thereof. And after I had blessed him and blowne vpon him many times, they brought me his Bow and gaue it vnto me, and a chest of Tuna; and brought me to cure many other who were ill at ease with giddinesse, and gaue me two other chests of Tuna, which I gaue vnto our Indians which came with vs, and hauing done this wee returned vnto our lodgings: and our Indians to whom I gaue the Tuna remained there, and at night returned to their houses also, and said, that hee who was then dead whom I had cured in their presence, arose vp and was well, and walked, and eate, and spoke with them; and so all the rest which I cured remained sound without any feuer, and very cheerfull. This caused very great admiration and feare, and throughout that whole Countrey they speake of nothing else. All they to whom this report went came to seeke vs, that we might heale them and blesse their children: and when the Indians who abode in the company of our men, who were the Catalcuchi were to go thence, they gaue vs all the Tuna that they had for their iourney, without leauing any for themselues, and gaue vs fire-stones of an handfull and an halfe in length with the which they cut, and among them they are held in great estimation. They intreated vs that we would remember them, and pray vnto God that they might alwaies be in health, and we promised them to doe it, and with this they went away the most contented men in the world, hauing giuen vs all the best of that which they had. So we staied with those Indians Auanares eight moneths, and this account we made by the Moone. In all this time many people came to seeke vs and said certainly that wee were the children of the Sunne. Dorante and the Negro vntill then had not healed any, but through the great importunitie of so many people which flocked together from all parts we became all Physitians, although for the assurance to vndertake euery cure I was most noted amongst them all, and we neuer vndertooke to cure any who told vs not that hee was sound and well: And they had so great confidence in vs, that they thought they could not be healed but by our hands, and they beleeued that as long as wee staied with them not one of them could die.

A dead man raised. If Benzos opinion be not rather to be embraced, that they killed the liuing; as this author also reports of his Country-men in the end of this booke.

Children of the Sunne.

All become Physitians.

They, and those who are further behind them, declared a very strange matter vnto vs, and by the signes which they made it appeared that it fell out fifteene or sixteene yeeres since; and this it is, they say, that a man went about that Countrey (which they call an Euill thing) which was of a little bodie and had a beard, although they could neuer cleerely see his countenance. And when he came to any house all their haire, who were within stood vpright and they trembled, and presently at the doore of the house appeared a flaming fire-brand, and then that man entred into the house and tooke from them whatsoeuer he would, and gaue them three great cuts vpon the flanke with a fire-stone very sharpe, as broad as a mans hand, and two handfulls long, and put his hand vpon those gashes and drew out their bowells, and cut them about an handfull, and that piece which he cut he put vpon the coales to broile: and presently gaue them three other cuts in one arme, and then smote them where he had lanced them, and disioynted their arme and a little

An euill thing or spirit of the Indians.

Diabolicall apparition.

Digitized by Google

Little after returned to set it againe and put his hand vpon their wounds, and they say that they became suddenly whole. And that many times while they danced that Euill thing appeared among them, sometimes in the habite of a woman, and at another time like a man. And sometimes he tooke away an house or a cottage, and tooke it vp on high, and a little after fell downe againe together with it and gaue a great blow. Moreouer they told vs that they giue him meat, but he neuer eateth; and that they asked him whence he came, and in what part his house was; so he shewed them a cleft of the earth, and said that his house was vnder that. At these things which they told vs we laughed exceedingly, and made a iest thereof: who seeing wee beleeued it not they brought vs many of them whom that man had taken, and we saw the signes of the cuts which he had giuen them in the places which they had told vs. Wherefore wee said vnto them that he was a wicked man, and after the best manner we could we gaue them to vnderstand, that if they would beleeue in our Lord God, and become Christians as we were, they should not need to feare him, and that he durst not come to doe those things vnto them: and that they should hold it for a certaintie, that while wee staied in that Countrie hee durst not appeare there, with this they remained verie well contented.

Those Indians told vs that they had seene Austriano and Figheros, with others who abode on the coast beyond, whom we called those of the Fig-trees. All this Nation knew not the times by the Sunne nor Moone, nor keepe any account of the moneths or the yeere: but know the difference of the times according as the fruits come to bee ripe, and by the mouing of the fishes and appearing of the Stars, wherein they are verie wise and well experienced. With them we were alwaies well intreated, although we were faine to dig that which we had to eate with our owne hands, and carrie our burdens of water and wood. Their houses and sustenance are such as the other haue behinde them, although they haue much greater hunger, because they haue neither Maiz, mast, nor Nuts. We went alwayes in leather like them, and in the night wee couered our selues with Doere skins. Of eight moneths which we staied with them, in six of them we indured much hunger, because the fish was not yet found. And at the end of that time the Tuna began now to grow ripe, and before those Indians perceiued vs wee went further vnto the other, called Maiaones. Their computation of times. Maiaones.

They were one dayes iourney from thence, whither I and the Negro came, and at the end of three dayes I sent the Negro to bring Dorantes and Castillio, and when they came wee departed all together, with those Indians, who went to eate certaine small fruites of certaine trees, wherewith they maintaine themselues ten or twelue dayes, vntill the Tuna come. And there other Indians ioyne with them, called Arbadaos; and among them we found many sicke, weake, and swollen, in so much as we greatly marueiled thereat. And the Indians with whom wee came, returned againe the same way, and we said we would remaine with those other, for the which they signified that they were greatly displeased, and so we abode in the field with them, neere vnto those houses. And when they saw vs, they withdrew themselues, and after they had reasoned a little, euery one of them tooke one of vs by the hand, and brought vs to their houses. With them we indured greater hunger then with the other, so that in the whole day we eate but two handfuls of those fruits which were greene, and had so much iuice, that they burned our mouthes; and there being great scarcitie of water, they caused much thirst to them that eate them. And the famine being so great, wee were faine to buy two Hogges of them, and in exchange thereof, wee gaue certaine Nettes, and other things, and one skinne wherewith I couered mee. Arbadaos. Hungers perambulation.

I haue already said, that throughout all that Countrey we went naked, and not being accustomed vnto it before, we changed our skins twice in the yeare, after the manner of Serpents. And the Sunne and the weather caused many great sores to arise vpon the brests & shoulders of some of vs, which put vs to great paine, in respect of the burdens which wee carried, that were very heauie, and made the cords to stick in our armes. And the earth was so rough and iagged, that many times when we gathered wood, when we had made an end of digging, the blound ran down from many parts of our bodies, by reason of the thornes and briers wherewith wee met, which tore vs whersoeuer they touched vs. On a time I happened to seeke wood, and after it had drawne much bloud from me, I could not carrie it on my shoulder, nor traile it along the ground; when I found my selfe in this torment, I had no other remedy nor comfort, but to thinke on the passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of the bloud which he shed for me, and consider how much greater the torment might be, which hee suffered through the crowne of thornes, then that which I indured. I contracted with those Indians, making Combes, Bowes, Arrowes, and Nets for them. Wee also made Mats, which are things whereof they haue very great neede, and although they know how to make them, they will make none for seeking foode to eate the meane while, for when they set themselues to worke, they sustaine very great hunger. At other times they made me shaue skins, and make them thin, and the greatest prosperity that I had among them, was the day when they gaue mee any hide to shaue, because I shaued it much, and eate those shauings, and that sufficed me for two or three dayes; yet it hapned, both with these and the other whom we left behinde, that when they gaue vs a peece of flesh, wee eate it raw, Apparell.

for

for if wee had boiled it, the firſt of them that came would haue taken it, and eate it, wherefore wee thought it had not beene well done to put it to that danger; and beſides, wee were none of them that would bethinke our ſelues whether wee ſhould rather eate it ſodden or raw.

This was the life we led with theſe Indians, and that little ſuſtenance which we had we got it by ſmall trifles which we made with our hands. After we had eaten theſe Dogs, ſuppoſing that we had ſome little ſtrength to be able to goe further, we recommended our ſelues vnto our Lord God, that he would guide vs, and freed our ſelues from thoſe Indians, who brought vs vnto other of their language, who dwelt neere thereunto: and ſo as we went it rained all that day, and beſide that, we loſt the way, and were to ſtay at a very great Mountaine, where wee gathered many leaues of Tune, and bakd them that night in an Ouen which we had made, and put ſo much fire to them, that in the morning they were ready to be eaten, and after wee had eaten them, we recommended our ſelues vnto God, and went from thence, and found the way which we had loſt. And hauing paſſed the Mountaine, we found other houſes of the Indians, and being come thither, we ſaw two women and certaine little children that went on that Mountaine, who ſeeing vs were afraid, and fled to call their Indians, who went through the Mountaine. And being come, they ſtaid to behold vs behinde certaine trees, ſo wee called vnto them, who ranne with much feare, and after we had ſpoken vnto them, they told vs that they had indured great famine, and that neere vnto that place many of their houſes ſtood, and ſaid, that they would bring vs thither: and ſo that night we came where fiftie houſes were, and they were all amazed to behold vs, and ſtood aſtoniſhed through exceeding feare: and after they were ſomewhat comforted, they came neere vnto vs, and laid their hands vpon our faces and bodies, and after put them vpon their owne faces and bodies. So we ſtaied that night, and when the morning came, they brought the diſeaſed that were among them vnto vs, intreating vs that wee would bleſſe them, and gaue vs ſuch as they had to eate, which were the leaues of Tune and greene Tune roſted or dry, and for the good intertainment they gaue vs, and becauſe they parted with that little which they had willingly, and were contented to be without meate themſelues to giue it vnto vs, we abode with them certaine dayes. And while we thus ſtaied, other Indians, of them that were farre beyond, came thither, and when they would be gone, wee ſaid to the former Indians, that we would goe with the other, which much diſpleaſed them, and ſo we left them ſorrowing for our departure, at they which they conceiued great diſpleaſure.

Famines Diſcouerie.

Sine Cerere & Libero friget Venus.

From the Iland of Malhado, all the Indians which we ſaw in that Countrey, obſerue this for a common cuſtome, that if they perceiue their women to be great with childe, they lye not with them, vntill two yeares be paſſed, after the children be borne, to the which they giue ſucke, vntill they be of the age of twelue yeares, that they are now of vnderſtanding to prouide foode for themſelues. We demanded of them, for what reaſon they did thus nouriſh them, who anſwered vs, that they did it for the great famine which was in that Countrey: where, as wee our ſelues ſaw, they were faine to continue ſometimes three or foure dayes without eating, and therefore they let them ſucke, that in that time they might not dye through hunger, and if notwithſtanding ſome ſhould eſcape, they would become too delicate, and of little ſtrength. If by chance it happen that any among them be ſicke, they let them dye in thoſe fields, if he be not a childe, and all the reſt that cannot goe with them remaine there, but for a childe, or a brother of theirs, they lay them vpon their necke, and ſo they carry them.

The Indians let their children ſucke till the age of twelue yeares.

They haue all this cuſtome to be ſeperated from their wiues, when there is no agreement betweene them, and that both they and ſhe may marry againe with whom they pleaſe. And this is vſuall among the yonger ſort; but ſuch as haue children neuer forſake their wiues. And when they contend with other people, or be at variance one with another, they buffet and beate each other with cudgels vntill they be very weary, and then they part, and ſometimes the women part them, going betweene them, becauſe the men come not in to part them: and what choller or paſſion ſoeuer they haue, they fight not together with their Bowes and Arrowes. And after they haue buffetted and cudgelled each other, the braule being ended, they take their houſes and women, and goe to liue in the fields, ſeperated from the reſt, vntill their anger and choller be paſt: and when they are now pacified, it is not needefull that others interpoſe themſelues to make peace and friendſhip, becauſe in this manner they make it themſelues. And if they who be at variance haue no wiues, they goe to other of their neighbours, who although they were their enemies, receiue them courteouſly, and doe them much flattering kindneſſe, and giue them ſuch as they haue, ſo that when their choller is paſt, they returne rich vnto their people. They are all warlike people, and vſe as great ſubtilty to defend them from their enemies, as they would doe, if they had bin brought vp in Italy, and in continuall warre. The horſes are they that onely ouercome them, and which the Indians generally feare. They who are to fight with them, muſt be very wary that they know not that they be faint or cowardly, and while the battaile continueth, they are to vſe them the worſt they can. For if they perceiue them to be timerous or cowards, it is a people that very well knoweth the time to auenge themſelues, and to take courage and ſtrength from the feare of their enemies. When they are ſhot in the warres, and haue ſpent their

No deadly fights.

Vſe of Horſes.

Digitized by Google

Arrowes, they returne euery one their way, without any purſuit of the enemy, although the one part be few, and the other many, and this is their cuſtome. They goe many times away ſhot cleane through with Arrowes, and dye not, if they touch not the bowels or heart, nay, they quickely heale them. They ſee and heare, and haue the ſharpeſt ſences, I thinke, of any men in the world. They are very well able to endure hunger, thirſt, and cold, as they who are more acquainted therewith then any other. Quicke ſenſes.

In the Iland of Malhada there are two languages: the one called Canoques, and the other Han. In the firme land, afront that Iland, are others called Carruco, who take their name from the Mountaines where they liue. Further, vpon the Sea coaſt are others, called Deguenes, and afront them, are others called Mendica. Further vpon the coaſt are the Queuenes, and afront theſe within the firme land are the Marianes, and going further vpon the coaſt are other, called Guaicones, and afront thoſe within the firme land the Ieguazes, at the end of them are other, called Ataos, and behinde them other called Acubadaos, and of theſe there are many along this banke further. Other called Quitoles, liue on the coaſt, and afront them within the firme land, are the Auauares, and with theſe the Maliacones vnite themſelues, and the Cultalculebes, and other called Suſolus, and other called Comos, and further vpon the coaſt abide the Camoles, and on the ſame coaſt beyond are others, whom we called them of the Figtrees. All theſe Nations haue habitations, and people, and diuers languages. Among them there is one language, in the which, when they ſay vnto men, looke there, they ſay arraca, and to the Dogs, they ſay Xo: and in all that Countrey they make themſelues drunke with a certaine ſmoake, and giue whatſoeuer they haue to get it. Names of the Nations of thoſe parts. Malhada. Canoques. Carruco. Deguenes. Mendica. Queuenes. Marianes. Guaicones. Ieguazes. Ataios, and Acubadaes. Quiloles. Auauares, and Matiacones. Cultalculebes. Suſolus. Comos. Camoles. Pichj.

Likewiſe they drinke another thing which they take from the leaues of trees, like vnto the Mulberry trees, and boile it in certaine veſſels on the fire, and after they haue boyled it, they fill the veſſels with water, and ſo keepe it ouer the fire, and when it hath beene twice boiled, they poure it out into certaine veſſels, and coole it with halfe a goord, and when it gathereth much ſome, they drinke it as hot as they are able to ſuffer it, and while they put it out of the veſſell, and vntill they drinke it, they ſtand crying, who will drinke. And when the women perceiue theſe exclamations, they preſently ſettle themſelues, not daring once to moue, although they finde that they are very well beloued. And if by chance any of them moue, they accompt her ſhameleſſe, and cudgell her, and with much choller and anger caſt away the water or drinke which they haue made: and if they haue drunke it, they vomit it out againe, which they doe very eaſily. The reaſon of this their cuſtome, they ſay is this, that if when they will drinke of that water, the women moue themſelues from the place where they heare that voyce, ſome bad thing might be put into that drinke, which entring into the body, in ſhort ſpace would cauſe them to dye. And all the time, that that water is boyled, the veſſell muſt be well cloſed and ſhut, and if peraduenture it ſhould ſtand vncouered, and any woman ſhould come and paſſe by, they caſt it away and drinke no more of it. It is of the colour of Saffron, and they drinke it three dayes without eating, and euery day they drinke one * amphora, and an halfe. And when the women haue their naturall purgation, they prouide no meate but for themſelues, becauſe no other perſon will eate of that which ſhe carrieth. In the time that I continued among them, I ſaw a moſt brutiſh and beaſtly cuſtome, to wit, a man who was married to another, and theſe be certaine effeminate and impotent men, who goe cloathed and attired like women, and performe the office of a woman; they carry no Bowes, but beare very great and waighty burdens: and among them we ſaw many ſuch effeminate perſons, as I haue ſaid, and they are of greater lims and taller then the other men. Fooliſh drinkrites. *A veſſell containing diuers gallons. Sodomy.

After we departed from them whom wee left lamenting, wee were with the other at their houſes, and were very well intertained of them, who brought vs their children that wee ſhould touch their hands, and ſo they gaue vs much Meale of Meſquiquez. Theſe Meſquiquez are certaine Fruits, which when they are on the Tree are very bitter, and are of the ſame ſort that the Carobe are, and they eate them with the earth, and with it they are very ſweet and good to eat. The manner how they prepare them is this; they make a Trench in the Earth of what depth they pleaſe, and after they haue caſt the fruit into this Trench they bruize and breake them very well, with a piece of wood as great as a mans legge, and three Cubits long, and after they are mingled with the earth of the Trench, they take other that are ſifted, and put them into the ſaid Trench, and returne to bruize them a little more, and after put them into a veſſell like vnto a basket, and caſt ſo much water thereon, as is ſufficient to couer it, that the water may riſe to the top, and hee that hath bruized them, taſteth them in his mouth, and if hee thinke they be not ſweet and pleaſant, he demandeth earth and mingleth it therewith. And this he doth vntill he find it ſweet, and ſo afterward they prepare themſelues to ſit round, and euery one putteth in his hand, and taketh as much as he can, and the ſeeds or kernels of thoſe Fruits, and ſo the huskes they caſt vpon certaine hides, and he that hath bruiſed them gathereth them together, and returneth afterward to put them all in a basket, and caſteth water vpon them, as at the firſt, and ſo they returne to wring out the iuyce and water ſo long as it will drop. And likewiſe they returne to put the ſeedes and huskes vpon the hide, and ſo in this manner they doe three or foure times Meſquiquez a fruite of Indie.

Digitized by Google

times for euerie bruising: and they that are found at this banquet, which becauſe it is verie great, remaine with their bellies much puffed vp through the earth and water which they drinke; and of this the Indians made vs many great feaſts, and vſed much dancing and iollitie among themſelues, for ſo long time as we ſtaied there. And when we ſlept in the night, ſixe men watched with great diligence and care, at the doore of the cottage where we abode, not ceaſing to come in vnto ſome of vs till the Sunne aroſe.

And when we would depart from them, certaine women of other people who liued further beyond came thither, and being informed by them where their houſes were, wee departed towards thoſe parts, although they earneſtly entreated vs that we would not depart for that day, becauſe thoſe houſes were very farre from thence, and that there was no way to goe thither, and that the women who came were weary; but reſting themſelues vnto the next day, they would afterwards goe with vs, and conduct vs thither. But we diſpatched our ſelues thence, and went away; and a little after thoſe women who came thither with certaine others of the former Indians, came after vs: but there being no beaten way nor path, we preſently loſt our ſelues, and ſo went foure leagues, at the end whereof we came to drinke at a water, where wee found the women that followed vs, who told vs what great paines and trauaile they had taken to finde vs. Departing thence, and bringing thoſe women for our guides, wee paſſed a Riuer ſomewhat late, and the water tooke vs vp to the breſt, and might be as broad as that of Sinill, and it ranne very ſtrongly. And at the ſetting of the Sunne we came to an hundred houſes of the Indians, who before we came, went all forth to receiue vs with ſo vehement ſhouting and loud exclamation, that it was a fearefull thing, and gaue great blowes with their hands vpon their thighes, and brought hollow guords with ſtones within them, which is the inſtrument of their greateſt iollitie & ſport, and neuer vſe them but for their dancings, and for medicine; and none dare to take them in his hand but they. And they ſay that theſe guords haue vertue and come from heauen, becauſe they grow not in thoſe Countries, nor doe they know from whence they come, vnleſſe the Riuers bring them when they ouerflow. And the feare and confuſion of them was ſo great, that ſtriuing to come neereſt vnto vs and touch vs, they ſo thrunged vs, that it was a wonder that they had not killed vs: and not ſuffering vs to ſet our feete on the ground, they carried vs vnto their houſes, and bare vs ſo aboue ground, and the preſſe of people ſo thrunged vs, that we entred into the houſes which they had prepared for vs, and would not conſent that they ſhould make their feſtiuall ſports any more with vs for that night.

The Toupin Braſilians vſe ſuch Marakas. or Raeles, and haue like conceits thereof.

They paſſed all that night, among themſelues, in ſports and dancing, and the day following, at a good houre, they brought vs before all the people of that place, that we might touch and bleſſe them, as we had done to the reſt with whom we abode. And after this, they gaue many arrowes to the women of another people, who were come with them. The next day we departed thence, and all that people went with vs. And when we came to the other Indians, we were very well entertained, as of the other; and they gaue vs ſuch as they had, and Deere which they had killed that day. Among theſe Indians we ſaw a new cuſtome, to wit, that they who were firſt with vs, tooke the Bowes & Arrowes, Shooes and Crownes (if they had any) from them who came to vs to be healed, and after they had thus taken them away from them, they brought them before vs, that we ſhould heale them, and being healed, that we ſhould haue them, ſo they departed verie well contented, and ſaid that they were whole.

After this, we departed from them, and went vnto other, of whom we were verie courteouſly receiued, and they brought vs their diſeaſed perſons, who when we had bleſſed them, ſaid they were cured, and he that was not whole, beleeued that we could cure him, & for that which others told them whom we had healed, they made ſuch great ſport and dancing, that they ſuffered vs not to ſleepe. Departing from them, we went where many other houſes were, and where another new cuſtome began, to wit, that entertaining euery one of vs very well, they who came with vs, tooke all their ſubſtance from them, and rifled their houſes, without leauing them any kinde of thing, which diſpleaſed vs verie much, ſeeing them ſo ill vſed who ſo curteouſly receiued vs, and alſo fearing that leaſt this might be the occaſion of ſome alteration, or offence among them. But not being able to remedy the ſame, and chaſtiſe thoſe that did it, wee were then to ſuffer it, vntill we ſaw we had more authoritie among them. And ſo, euen they themſelues who loſt their wealth, ſeeing we were diſpleaſed, comforted vs, ſaying, that we ſhould not conceiue any diſpleaſure thereat, conſidering they were ſo well contented that they had ſeene vs, and that they had beſtowed their ſubſtance very well, and would hereafter be paid of others who were exceeding rich.

Blinde and ſquint-eyed people.

The next day they brought all their people before vs, the greateſt part whereof are ſquint-eyed, and other of the ſame people are blinde, whereat we greatly maruelled: they are well ſet, and of good behauiour, and whiter then all the reſt that we had ſeene vntill then. There we began to ſee Mountaines, which ſeemed to extend themſelues towards the Sea, from the North, and by the relation which the Indians made, I ſuppoſe they are fifteene leagues from the Sea. We departed thence with thoſe Indians towards the Mountaines, whereof I now ſpake. And they brought vs where ſome of their kindred were, for they would not bring vs but to their kinsfolk, becauſe becauſe they were vnwilling that their enemies ſhould receiue ſo great a benefit, as they thought it was to ſee vs. And when wee were come thither, they that came with vs ſpoiled the other; who knowing the cuſtome had hid certaine things before we came thither. And after they had receiued vs with much ioy and gladneſſe: they tooke out that which they had hidden, and preſented it vnto vs, and they were Crownes, Magra, and certaine ſmall plates of Siluer. We, according to our cuſtome, gaue them all preſently to the Indians that came with vs, and hauing giuen vs that which they had, they began their dancing and feſtiuall iolliſtie, and ſent to call other people neere thereabouts, that they might come to ſee vs, who came all about the euening, and brought vs Garlands, Bowes, and other trifling things, which for the moſt part we diuided among thoſe other Indians. And the day following, we being deſirous to depart, they would all bring vs to their friends, who remained on the top of the Mountaines, ſaying that there are many houſes and people, that they would giue vs many things: but becauſe it was out of our way we would not goe thither, and therefore tooke our iourney through the plaine neere vnto the Mountaines, which we ſuppoſed ſhould not be very farre from the coaſt. All thoſe people are very poore and miſerable, wherefore we held it better to croſſe ouer the land, becauſe the people that dwelt further into the Countrey were better conditioned, and would vſe vs better, and we were certainely perſwaded, that we ſhould finde a more populous Countrey, and of better ſuſtenance. And laſtly, we therefore did it, becauſe croſſing ouer the land, we ſaw more particularities, ſo that if it ſhould pleaſe our Lord God to bring ſome of vs out of that Countrey, and to conduct vs into the land of the Chriſtians, wee might be able to make relation and report thereof.

The Indians ſeeing that we were determined to goe whither they would not, told vs, that there was neither people nor Tune, nor any other thing to eate, and therefore praied vs that we would ſtay there for that day, and ſo we did. Then they ſent two Indians to diſcouer the people that way which we purpoſed to goe, and the next day we departed, carrying many of them with vs, and the women went laden with water, and our authoritie was ſo great among them, that none durſt preſume to drinke without our leaue. Two of their Phiſicians gaue vs two Gourds, and from that time we afterward began to carry Gourds with vs, ioyning this ceremony to our authority, which among them is very great. They who accompanied vs, rifled the houſes: but the houſes being many, and they but few, they could not carry all away, but ſhould haue bin forced to haue loſt the halfe, and ſo we went thence through many Mountaines; entring within the land more then fiftie leagues, at the end whereof we found fortie houſes, and among other things which they gaue vs, Andrea Dorante had a thicke and great Bell of copper, with a viſage ingrauen in it, which they ſeemed greatly to eſteeme, ſaying that they had gotten it of their other neighbours: who being demanded whence they had it, they ſaid, that they brought it from the Northward, and that it was much worth, and greatly eſteemed there. Whereupon we knew, that from what place ſoeuer it came, the art of caſting and melting of mettals muſt needes be there. And hereupon we departed the day following, and croſſed ouer a Mountaine of ſix leagues; and the ſtones which were there, were of the ſcumme of Iron, and late in the euening we came to many houſes, ſeated on the ſide of a moſt pleaſant Riuer; and the Lords of the ſame came into the middle of the high way to receiue vs with their children in their armes, and gaue vs many ſmall plates of Siluer, and Antimonie made in powder, wherewith they annoint their faces, and gaue vs many garlands, and many mantles of the hides of Kine, and laded all them that came with vs with ſuch as they had: they eate Tune, and Pine apples.

Copper Bell ingrauen.

Plates of Plate

They told vs, that in the place where the Bell was made, were many plates of that mettall vnder ground, and that that Bell among them was a thing greatly eſteemed, and that houſes were built there, and wee ſuppoſed that it was the South Sea, for we alwayes knew that that Sea was alwayes richer then that of the North. So we departed from them, and went through ſo many ſorts of Nations, and diuers languages, that the memory of man is not able to reckon them, and one people alwayes ſpoyled the other, and ſo both they that loſt, and they who gained remained well contented. Through thoſe Valleyes where we paſſed, euery one of them carried a ſticke or cudgell of three handfuls long, and they went all in troopes, and if any Hare aroſe, whereof there are many in that Countrey, they turned her ſuddenly, and ſo many cudgels fell vpon her, that it was a marueilous matter to behold, and in this manner they made her goe from one to another, ſo that in my iudgement it was the goodlieſt hunting that could be imagined, becauſe ſometimes they came euen into their hands. And when wee ſetled our ſelues at night, we had ſo many of them that were giuen vs, that euery one of vs carried eight or ten, and ſuch as carried Bowes, appeared not among vs, but went apart through the Mountaines to ſeeke deere, and when they came in the euening, they brought fiue, or ſix for euery one of vs, and many Powles, and Quailes, and other hunting game; and finally, whatſoeuer all thoſe people tooke, they preſented before vs, not daring to touch or take thereof for themſelues, although they ſhould dye for hunger (becauſe they accuſtomed ſo to doe, ſince they came with vs) vnleſſe they had firſt bleſſed the ſame. The women carried many Mats, with the which they made

South Sea,

Pleaſant hunting.

houſes

houses for vs, to euery one apart, his seuerall house, and with all the people which hee knew.

When that was done, wee commanded them to bake those Deere and Hares, and whatsoeuer else they had taken; which is very quickly done in certaine ouens which they make for the same purpose. Then we first tooke a little of euery thing, and gaue the rest to the principall and chiefe men of the people to diuide it among them all: and when euery one had receiued his part, they came vnto vs that we should blow vpon it and blesse it, for otherwise they durst not presume to eate thereof. And many times we brought with vs three or foure thousand persons; whereupon it was a great trouble to vs to blow vpon and blesse the meate and drinke of euery one of them: and for euery other thing of theirs which they would doe they came to vs to aske leaue: whereby it may be considered how great the incumbrance and trouble was which wee endured. The women brought before vs the Tune, Frogs, Wormes, and whatsoeuer else they could get; because although they should bee readie to die through hunger, they would not haue eaten any thing which they had not receiued from our hands. And so going with them wee passed ouer a great Riuer which came from the North parts, and hauing trauelled ouer certaine Plaines of thirtie leagues, wee found many people who came very farre off to receiue vs, and came forth vnto the way whether wee were to passe, and receiued vs after the same manner that the other had done.

Superstitious sanctifying their meat.

From thence forward they obserued another manner of receiuing vs, as touching sacage and spoiling. For they that came forth into the high-way to bring vs any thing, were not spoiled of them who came with vs; but after we were entred into their houses, they of their owne accord offered vs whatsoeuer they had and the houses also. Wee gaue all vnto the chiefe and principall, to the intent that they should diuide it among them; and alwaies they who remained so spoiled followed vs, whereby the number of people greatly encreased through desire to bee satisfied of their losses. And they said vnto the rest that they should beware how they hide any thing, because it could not be but we should know it, and cause them all suddenly to die. The feare and frighting wherein they put them were so great, that the first daies they abode with vs they stood alwaies trembling, not presuming to speake, nor to lift vp their eyes to heauen. They guided vs aboue eightie leagues through a desert Countrey, and very rough mountaines which were so dry, that there was no hunting game there whereby to sustaine our great hunger. In the end hauing passed ouer a very great Riuer, where the water tooke vp to the brest, many of those who came with vs began to lament, through the exceeding great hunger and trauell which they had endured through those mountaines, which were extreame rough and troublesome to passe. The same people brought vs vnto certaine plaines, and at the end of those mountaines much people came farre off to receiue vs, as the former had done, and gaue so many garments afterward to them that were with vs, that because they could not carry them they left the halfe behinde them; so that we told those Indians that brought them, that they should take them againe that they might not be lost: who answered, that they would not doe it for any thing, because it was not their custome after they had once giuen a thing, to returne afterward to take it againe and so they suffered them to be lost.

Desert Countrey.

A riuer.

Many garments.

Foolish liberalitie.

Then we told them that we would goe toward the place where the Sunne went downe, who said that in those places the people were verie farre off. But wee commanded them to send to vnderstand that wee were comming, yet they excused themselues the best they could; saying, that they were their enemies, and that they were vnwilling we should goe thither; but not daring to doe contrarie to our will, they sent two women thither, whom both the one and the other their enemies kept prisoners. And they sent these, because the women may well negotiate with the men euen in the warres: and we followed them, and rested our selues in a place where wee determined to expect them, but they staied fiue daies before they returned, and the Indians said that they should find no people. Wee told them that they should bring vs toward the North, whereupon they gaue vs the same answere, that is to say, that in those places there were no people but farre off, and that there was nothing there to eate nor water to bee found; yet notwithstanding all this we continued obstinate, and said, that we would goe thither, although they alwaies excused themselues the best they could: and for this cause wee were angrie, so that one night I arose and went out to sleepe in the open fields apart from them, but they came presently where I was, and neuer slept all that night with much feare, and speaking vnto me they said that if we would not continue any longer angrie, they would bring vs whether we purposed to goe, although they were certainly assured to die by the way. Neuertheless wee alwaies fained that we were yet angrie, and because their feare was not remoued, a verie strange accident happened, that is to say, that on the verie same day many of them became sicke, and the day following eight of them died. Whereupon through all the Countrey where it was knowne, they were so afraid of vs that when they saw vs they seemed euen to die as it were for feare. So they besought vs that wee would not continue angrie any longer, and that wee would not cause any more of them to die, certainly perswading themselues that wee killed them onely with our will and desire. We prayed our Lord God that hee would relieue vs, and so all those that were sicke began to recouer: at which time wee ſaw a verie maruellous thing, to wit, that the fathers, brethren, and wiues of them that died were exceedingly grieued to ſee them ſo ſicke, but after they were dead they ſhewed not any ſigne or token of ſorrow, nor did wee ſee them lament nor ſpeake one to the other, nor make any other ſigne, nor durſt they come neere vnto them vntill we commanded them to burie them: And for the ſpace of fifteene daies and more that we abode with them, we neuer ſaw one ſpeake to the other, nor any of their little children either laughed or cried, and if any of them lamented they carried them verie farre from thence: and with verie ſharpe teeth they gaſhed and cut them from the ſhoulders to the legs: ſo ſeeing their crueltie and being angrie thereat, I demanded why they did it, they anſwered me, that they did it to chaſtiſe them for lamenting before me. Al theſe feares which they haue of vs, they yet put into the heads of thoſe who came lately to know vs, becauſe they ſhould giue vs whatſoeuer they haue, for they know that we tooke nothing for our ſelues, but gaue euerie thing to them. This was the moſt obedient people, and beſt conditioned that we found in all that Countrie, and commonly they are well diſpoſed. Thoſe that were ſicke, being recouered and reſtored vnto health, and wee hauing continued there three daies, the women that we had ſent came vnto vs, and ſaid, that they had found verie few people, becauſe they were gone to the kine, which was now their time. Then we commanded them that were weake to remaine behinde, and thoſe that were well to come with vs: and that two daies iourney from thence thoſe two women ſhould goe with two of our men, to cauſe the people to come forth to the highwaies to receiue vs. And ſo the morning following all thoſe that were the luſtieſt departed with vs, and after three daies iourney wee ſetled our ſelues, and the day following Alonſo del Caſtiglio and Eſtenanicco the Negro, together with thoſe two women for their guides; and that who was their priſoner brought them vnto a Riuer which ranne within a mountaine where a people abode, among whom their father was; and theſe were the firſt houſes that wee ſaw, which had the forme and manner of true houſes.

Women-eaters.

to

No lamenting for the dead.

Houſes artificially built.

There Caſtiglio and Eſtenanicco arriued, and after they had ſpoken with thoſe Indians, at the end of three dayes Caſtiglio returned to the place where they left vs, and brought fiue or ſixe of thoſe Indians, and ſaid, That hee had found houſes of people and of artificiall building, and that the people eate pulſe and gourds, and that hee had ſeene Maiz there.

Mays.

There wee abode one day, and the next wee departed, they bringing vs with them to other built houſes, where wee did eate of the ſame food that they eate. And after from thence forth there was another cuſtome, that they who knew of our comming came not forth into the high-way to meete vs as the other did; but wee found them in their houſes, and they did nothing elſe for vs. And they were all ſitting, and all held their faces towards the wall, hanging downe their heads with their haire ouer their eyes, and all their clothes were hanged vp aloft in the middle of the houſe, and from thence forward they began to giue vs many mantles of hides, and they had not any thing which they gaue vs not. It is a Nation of the beſt and goodlieſt proportion of bodie that euer wee ſaw there, and of a more liuely ſpirit and agilitie, and that vnderſtood vs better, and anſwered vs to whatſoeuer wee demanded them, and wee call them, The people of the Kine, becauſe the greater part of the Kine which dye in thoſe Countries is neere thereabouts, and vp that Riuer more then fiftie leagues, they goe killing many. Theſe people goe all naked, after the manner of thoſe whom wee found firſt. The women goe couered with certaine Deere skinnes; and ſo doe ſome few men alſo, and particularly the aged, who are not ſeruiceable for the warres: It is a verie populous Countrey; and being demanded why it did not ſowe Maiz, they ſaid, They did it becauſe they would not leeſe that which they ſhould ſowe for two yeeres ſince their water failed, and the ſeaſons was ſo dry, that they all loſt the Maiz that they had ſowed, and that they could not by any meanes be aſſured to ſowe, vnleſſe firſt it had rained very much; and they prayed vs to ſpeake vnto the Heauens that they might ſend downe raine: they boyle pulſe in this manner. They fill a great pot halfe full with water, and put many of thoſe ſtones in the fire, which will quickely burne, and when they ſeeth them on fire they take them vp with certaine tongs of Wood, and caſt them into that water in the gourd vntill they make it boyle with that fire of thoſe ſtones; and when they perceiue that the water boyleth, they put in that which they haue to boyle, and all this time they doe nothing elſe but take out one ſtone and put in another fired redde hot to make the water boyle.

Other ſtrange behauiour.

Goodly people.

Old faſhion of boiling pulſe.

℣. IIII.

They come to the South Sea, and trauell through a plentifull Countrey, till they meet with Spaniards; whose cruelty and manner of conuerting Sauages is related.

They come to the South Sea.

WE went Westward on our iourny, & crossed ouer all the land vntil we came forth at the South Sea, and the feare wherein they had put vs of the great famine which we were to passe (as surely we passed it for seuenteen daies together, as they had told vs) was not able to diuert vs from our intended purpose. Throughout all that Countrey vp the Riuer, they gaue vs many Mantles of the hides of Kine, and wee did not eate of those their fruites, but our sustenance was euery day a piece of the fat of Deere, of the bigneſſe of a mans hand, which for this neceſſitie wee prouided alwaies to haue in a readineſſe, and so wee passed all those seuenteene daies iourney, and at the end of them wee crossed ouer the Riuer, and trauelled other seuenteene daies more to the West, through certaine plaines and verie great mountaines which are found there: and there wee met with a people; who the third part of the yeere eate no other thing saue the powder of straw, and because wee passed that way at that season of the yeere wee also were constrained to eate it, vntill hauing finished those daies iourney wee found setled houses, where there was great quantitie of Maiz, and of that and Meale they gaue vs enough, and Gourds, and Pulse, and Mantles of Bombasin Cotton, withall which we laded them whom wee had hyred there, who returned the most contented men in the world. Wee yeelded many thankes vnto God who had brought vs thither, where we found such plentie of sustenance.

Barren Countrey.

People which liue on the powder of straw.

A plentifull Countrey with houses and corne.

Among these houses they had some that were of earth, and all the rest were of mats and from thence wee passed more then an hundred leagues into the Countrey, and alwaies found setled houses and much sustenance of Maiz and Pulse: and they gaue vs many Deeres skinnes and Mantles of Bombasin Cotten, better then those of New Spaine; and gaue vs also many Garlands, and certaine Corall which grow in the South Sea, and many Turkie stones which come from toward the North. And finally they gaue vs whatsoeuer they had, and vnto Dorante they gaue Emeralds made into Arrow heads, and with those Arrowes they make their sports and festiuall iollitie, seeming to mee very good. I demanded of them whence they had them, who told me that they brought them from certaine very high mountaines, which lye towards the North, and that they got them by exchange and barter for quills and Parrats feathers, and there were many people there and very great houses. Among them wee saw the women more honourably and honestly vsed, then in any other part of India which wee had seene. They weare certaine smockes of Bombasin Cotton which reach to the knee and ouer them soft sleeues of certaine folds or plaits of Deere skinnes without haire which touch the ground, and they perfume them with certaine roots which make them very fine, and so they vse them very well: they are open before and tied together with silken strings. They goe shod with shooes. All this Nation came vnto vs, that we should touch and blesse them, and they were so importunate herein that they put vs to much trouble; because the sicke and the whole would all goe from vs blessed: and it often happened that of the women that came with vs; some were deliuered, and as soone as the children were borne they brought them vnto vs, that wee should touch and blesse them. They accompanied vs vntill they left vs with another Nation, and among all these people they held it for a certaintie that wee came from Heauen: because all the things which they haue not, and know not whence they come: they say, that they descend from Heauen. For so long time as wee went with them, wee trauelled all the day without eating vntill night, and wee eate so little that they were astonied to see it. They neuer knew vs wearie, and surely wee were so accustomed to trauell that we were neuer weary. We had great authoritie among them, and they held a reuerent opinion of vs, and to preserue the the same wee seldome spake vnto them. The Negro was the man that alwaies spoke and informed himselfe of the way that wee would goe by the direction of the people that were there, and touching euery other thing which we desired to know. We passed through diuers languages, and our Lord God fauoured vs withall, for they alwaies vnderstood vs and we vnderstood them, and if we demanded any thing of them by signes they answered vs as if they should haue spoken our language and wee theirs. For although we, vnderstood six languages, we could not thereby preuaile with all, because wee found more then a thousand differences of language. Throughout all these Countries they who haue warre among themselues, became suddenly friends that they might come vnto vs and receiue vs, and bring vs whatsoeuer they had.

Corall and Turkesses. Emeralds.

Women well vsed.

Desire of the Spaniards blessing.

Conceit that they came from heauen.

Many languages.

Il popolo de' Cuori.

Dorante had sixe hundred Deeres hearts giuen him, whereupon we called it the people of Hearts. Through this Countrey, entrie is made into many Prouinces which stand vpon the South Sea, and if they that desire to goe thither enter not from hence, they are lost, because the Coast hath hath no Maiz, so that they are faine to eate the powder of beetes, straw, and fish, which they take in the Sea with floates, because they haue no Canowes, nor any Boat. The women couer their priuities with herbs and straw: they are a people of little vnderstanding and miserable. We supposed that neere vnto the Coast by the way of those people which way wee went, it is more then a thousand leagues of a populous Countrey, and that they haue much prouision wherein they liue, for they sowe Pulse and Maiz three times in the yeere. We saw three sorts of Deere there, one as great as the biggest steeres of Castiglia. The houses of all those people for habitation are cottages. They haue poyson of a certaine kind of tree of the bignesse of an apple tree, and they doe no more but gather the fruit and anoint the Arrow therewith, and if they haue no fruit they breake of a bough, and with a certaine milkie iuyce which it hath they doe the same. There are many of these trees that are so poysonous, that if the leaues thereof be bruised and cast into any standing poole and not running water, all the Deere and whatsoeuer other beast that drinketh thereof suddenly burst asunder. Wee abode three daies with these people, and about one daies iourny from thence there was another people, where such showres of raine came powring downe vpon vs, that by reason the Riuer which was there was so growne we could not passe it, and so we continued there fifteene daies.

A thousand leagues of a populous Countrey.

Great Deere.

Poisonous tree

In this meane time, Castiglio saw the buckle of a Spanish girdle about an Indians necke, and an Iron key sewed together with it, which he tooke from him: then we demanded what that thing was, and they answered, that it came from heauen, and questioning further with them who brought them, they answered, that certaine men brought them which had beards like vnto vs, who came from heauen: and comming to that riuer with Horses, brought Lances and Swords, and two of them passed ouer with their Lances. Afterward, as cunningly as we could, we asked them what became of those men, so they answered vs, that they went to the Sea. Wee went through many Countries, and found them all dispeopled and not inhabited, for the countrie people went their way flying through the mountaines, not daring to keepe their houses nor labour for feare of the Christians. It greatly discontented vs, seeing the Countrie verie fruitfull and exceeding pleasant and full of water and goodly riuers, and to see them afterward so solitarie and scorched, and the people so feeble and weake fled away and all hid, and because they sowed not in so great famine, they maintained themselues onely with the barkes of trees and roots. Wee had our part of this famine in all this iourney, because they could not so well prouide for vs being so euilly hired, that it seemed they would all die. They brought vs couethings and beades, which they had hid for feare of the Christians, and gaue them vnto vs, and declared how at other times the Christians had entred and passed through that Countrie, and had destroied and burned the people, and carried halfe the men away, and all the women and little children, and that such as were able to escape out of their hands fled away. Wee seeing them so affrighted that they could not be secured to settle themselues in any place, and that they neither would nor could sowe nor labour and manure the Countrie: nay, they rather determined to suffer themselues to die, which seemed better vnto them, then to expect to bee so ill intreated with so great crueltie as they had beene vntill that time: and they seemed to bee greatly pleased with vs. Notwithstanding wee feared that being come vnto them who were vpon the Frontiers, and in warre with the Christians least they would vse vs cruelly, and make vs pay for that which the Christians had done vnto them. But God being pleased to conduct vs where they were, they began to feare and reuerence vs, as the former had done and somewhat more, whereat we did not a little maruell. Whereby it may cleerely appeare, that to allure this Nation to become Christians, and make them obedient to the Imperiall Maiestie, they ought to be gently and curteously vsed, and this is the onely and most certaine way of all other. They brought vs to a people that abode on the top of a mountaine, where they were faine to climbe vp by reason of the exceeding roughnesse of those places, where we found many people gathered together for feare of the Christians. These people receiued vs with great good will and kindnesse, and gaue vs whatsoeuer they had, and aboue two thousand burdens of Maiz, which wee gaue vnto those miserable and famished people who followed vs and conducted vs thither: and the day following wee dispatched foure Messengers through the Countrie, as we vsed to doe, to the intent that they should assemble and gather together as many people as they could, vnto one people which abode three daies iourney off from thence: and hauing done this, wee departed with all the people that were there, and alwaies found the tracks and tokens where the Christians had lodged, and about midday wee found our Messengers, who told vs that they could not meet with any people, because they were all gone and fled, and hidden in the mountaines, least the Christians should either kill them or make them slaues. And that the night before they had seene the Christians, they themselues standing behinde certaine trees to behold what they did, and they saw that they led certaine Indians in a Chaine tied.

Newes of Spaniards.

Countries dispeopled by Spaniards.

Gentlenesse fitter then crueltie.

From this place, which is called the Riuer of Petutan, vnto the Riuer where Diego di Guzman arriued, where we vnderstood of the Christians, may be some fourescore leagues: and from thence where the waters staied vs, twelue leagues: and from thence to them whom we called the people of the Harts, fiue leagues: and from thence to the South Sea, were twelue leagues. Throughout

R. Petutan.

De Cuoi.

Shewes of Gold.

out all that Countrey whereſoeuer wee found mountaines, wee ſaw great ſhew and tokens of Gold, Iron, Antimony, and Copper, and other mettalls. In thoſe places where the ſetled houſes are, in Ianuary it is very hot. From thence towards the South of the vnpeopled Country, vnto the North Sea, it is a very naughtie Countrey and poore, where wee endured incredible famine, and they who inhabit there are a moſt cruell people, and of a very euill nature and behauiour. The Indians that haue ſettled houſes, and the reſt alſo make no account of Gold, nor of Siluer, nor know for what purpoſe it may ſerue.

He ſpeaketh with his countrey-men.

I tooke the Negro and eleuen Indians with mee, and following the Chriſtians by the tracke which they found, I went to three places where they had lodged, and the firſt day I trauelled ten leagues, and in the morning following found foure Chriſtian Horſe-men, who wondered much to ſee me ſo ſtrangely attired, and in the company of the Indians, and when they ſaw me they made a ſtand, and beheld me a good ſpace, ſo much aſtoniſhed that they durſt not ſpeake to me nor aske mee any queſtion. Wherefore I ſpake vnto them, intreating them to bring me where there Captaine was; and ſo we went about halfe a league where Diego de Alcaraz abode, who was their Captaine, and after I had ſpoken vnto him, he told me that hee was in verie euill caſe, becauſe he had beene there many daies and could not take any Indian, and that he had not any prouiſion to depart, becauſe they began to be in great neceſſitie and famine there. I told him that Dorante and Caſtiglio were remaining behinde, who abode ten leagues from thence, with many people who had conducted vs: Whereupon he preſently ſent three Horſe-men, and fiftie Indians of thoſe they brought, and the Negro returned with them to guide them; but I remained there, and requeſted him to make me a teſtimoniall of the yeere, moneth, and day that I came into that place, and ſo he did. From this Riuer, vnto the people of the Chriſtians called Saint Michael, which pertaineth to the iuriſdiction of that Prouince, which they call Nona Galitia, are thirtie leagues.

After ſixe daies were paſt Andrea Dorante, and Arlonzo del Caſtiglio came vnto vs, with thoſe who came for them, and brought aboue ſixe hundred perſons with them, which were of them whom the Chriſtians had cauſed to climbe into the mountaines, and hide themſelues in the Countrey; and they, who vntill then were come with vs brought them, and accompanied with the Chriſtians, and they had diſpatched away all the other people which they had brought thither, and came where I was. Alcaraz intreated me that I would ſend to call the people who abode at the Riuer ſides, and had fled into the mountaines, and that they ſhould command them to bring them victualls although it were not needfull, becauſe of their owne accord they brought vs as much as they could, and ſo we preſently ſent out Meſſengers to call them: whereupon ſix hundred perſons came who brought vs all the Maiz they had, and they brought it in certaine pipkins couered with clay, wherein they had hid it vnder ground, and they brought vs whatſoeuer they had beſides: but wee would not take any thing ſaue victualls to eate, but gaue all the reſt to the Chriſtians to be diuided among them. And after this we had much controuerſie with them; becauſe they would haue made thoſe Indians, ſlaues whom wee brought with vs: And through this diſpleaſure and diſdaine at our departure, we left many Turkiſh Bowes which we brought, and many Budgees and Arrowes, and among them fiue of Emeraulds, which wee remembred not and ſo we loſt them. We gaue the Chriſtians many Mantles of the hides of Kine, and other things which we brought, and much adoe with the Indians to cauſe them to returne to their houſes, and to ſecure them and make them ſowe their Maiz. They were not willing to goe but with vs, vntill they left vs with other Indians as the cuſtome was: for otherwiſe if they returned without being left with others, they feared leaſt they ſhould die, and comming with vs they feared not the Chriſtians nor their Lances. This thing greatly diſpleaſed the Chriſtians, who cauſed an Interpreter to ſpeake vnto them in their owne language, and tell them that wee were the very ſame men, who for a long time had beene terrified and loſt, and were a people of meane condition and of ſmall force, and that they were Lords of the Countrey whom they were to ſerue. But the Indians made little no no account of all this, ſo that among themſelues they ſaid one to another that the Chriſtians lied, becauſe we came from the place where the Sunne riſeth, and the other Chriſtians from the place where the Sunne wents downe: and that wee healed the ſicke, they killed them that were ſound; and that wee went naked and without garments, they clothed on horſeback and with Lances, and that wee had not any couetous or inſatiable deſires: ſo that whatſoeuer was giuen vs, wee preſently gaue it vnto others and had nothing our ſelues: and the Chriſtians intend nothing elſe, but to rob and ſteale whatſoeuer they find and giue nothing to any: and after this manner thoſe Indians gaue their iudgement of vs, cenſuring all our actions cleane contrary to that which the Chriſtians doe. And thus they anſwered the Chriſtians in their language, and did the like to others in a language which was among them which we vnderſtood, and thoſe that vſe it wee call Prinhaitu: which wee had found vſed for aboue the ſpace of foure hundred leagues of the Countrey where we trauelled, ſo that we found no other language for the ſpace of foure hundred leagues and more. Finally, it was not poſſible for vs to make thoſe Indians beleeue that we were any of thoſe other Chriſtians; yet with much adoe, and through our perſwaſion we made them returne vnto their houſes, commanding them to reſt ſatisfied, and bring backe Ingratefull cruelty.

Language of farre extent.

backe their people to sowe and till the ground, which because it was so desolate, became now full of woods, albeit of it owne nature surely, it were the best Countrey, and more fertile and abundant then any in all those Indies: for they sowe three times in the yeare, and haue many fruites, and many goodly Riuers, and other very good waters. There are many signes, and great tokens of Mines of Gold and Siluer. The people are very well conditioned, and serue the Christians, that are their friends, with a very good will: they are much better disposed then the people of Mexico; and finally, it wanteth nothing to make it an absolute Countrey. The Indians being dispatched, they told vs, that they would doe as much as they had commanded, and bring backe their people, if the Christians would suffer them to continue: whereupon I said and certainely affirmed, that if they did it not, the Christians should be much to blame. And after wee had sent them away, the Christians sent vs with an Alcade, named Zebrero, and with him three other Christians, whereby it appeareth how much the imaginations of men were deceiued, in that we went to seeke liberty among the Christians, and when wee had thought to haue found it, the quite contrary befell vs, and by seperating vs from the conuersation of the Indians, they brought vs through desolate Mountaines, because we should not see what they did, nor their euill vsage; for they had determined to goe to assault the Indians, whom wee sent away secured and in peace, and so they did as they imagined: they brought vs two dayes through those Mountaines, without water, and without any beaten way or path, insomuch as we thought we should haue burst for thirst, whereof seuen of our men died, & many friends which the Christians brought with them, could not come till the next day at noone, where we found water: and we trauailed with them about fiue and twenty leagues, at the end whereof, we came vnto a people of the Indians, which were in peace, and there the Alcade, who brought vs, left vs, and went three leagues further to a people called Culiacan, where Melchior Diaz, the Sergeant Maior, and Captaine of that Prouince abode. As soone as he knew of our comming, hee presently came the same night to finde vs out, and lamented much with vs, highly praising our Lord God, for his exceeding mercy towards vs, and spake vnto vs, and vsed vs very well, and in the behalfe of the Gouernour Nunnez di Guzman, and himselfe, offered vs whatsoeuer hee had or could procure, and began to speake much of the euill vsage wherewith Alcarde and the rest had vsed vs, so that we hold it for certaine, that if hee had bin there, that which was done vnto vs had not bin done, and that night being passed, we departed for Anbacan, and the Sergeant Maior intreated vs earnestly to stay there, and that wee might doe great seruice vnto our Lord God, and to your Maiestie, because the Countrie was desolate, without manuring, and altogether destroyed, and the Indians went and hid themselues, flying through the Mountaines, vnwilling to come and stay with their people, and that we should send to call them, and command them in the name of our Lord God, and of your Maiesty, to come and inhabit the Plain, and till the Countrie. But this seemed a troublesome matter vnto vs to put it in execution, because wee had not any of our Indians, or those who were wont to accompany vs, to helpe and further vs in such like offices. Notwithstanding we thought good to proue two of our Indians which we had prisoners there, who were of the same Country, and were found with the Christians when we first came among them, and saw the people that accompanied vs, & vnderstood by them the great authority & dominion which we had had throughout all those Countries, & the miraculous things which we had done in healing the diseased, and many other things, and with these we sent others of the same people which were also with them, to call the Indians that abode in the Mountains, & those of the riuer Petatlan, where we had found the Christians. And we willed them to tell them, that they should come vnto vs, because we would speake with them, and so secure them that went, and the other who should come, we gaue them a great gourd, of those which we caried in our hands, which was a principall token and speciall argument of great state, and with this they went and trauailed seuen daies, and in the end came and brought with them three Lords of those who had fled into the Mountaines, who were accompanied with fifteene men, who brought vs Crownes, Turkies, and plumes of Feathers: and the messengers told vs, that they had not found them of the Riuer from whence we came, because the Christians had caused them to flye into the Mountaines: So Melchior Diaz willed the Interpreter to speake vnto those Indians in our behalfe, and say vnto them, that we were come from God, who abideth in heauen, and had trauailed through the world nine yeares, saying vnto all them that we found, that they should beleeue in God, and serue him, because he is Lord of all the things in the world, and that he giueth a reward and paiment vnto the good, and perpetuall punishment of hell fire vnto the wicked: and that when the good men dye, he taketh them vp into heauen, where afterwards they shall neuer dye any more, nor suffer hunger or cold, or endure any other necessitie; but finde there greater glory then can be imagined. And they who will not beleeue nor obay him, shall be throwne downe vnder the earth in the company of Diuels, into an exceeding huge fire which neuer shall haue end, but continually and eternally torment them. And besides that, if they will become Christians, and serue God after the manner that we will tell them, the Christians shall hold them for brethren, and vse them very well; and that we would command that they should not doe them any hurt, nor take their Countrie from them, but become their good friends. And if they would not doe it, the Christians should vse them very cruelly, and carry them for slaues into farre and remote Countries. To this they Sauage infidelity of Christians worse then Infidels and Sauages.

Manner of Spanish Preaching to the Indians.

they answered the Interpreter, that they would become very good Christians, and serue God. And demanding of them, whom they adored, and to whom they sacrificed, and of whom they asked water for their seede time, and health and safety for themselues; they answered, that they praied vnto a man which is in heauen, and being demanded how they called him, they said Aguar; and they beleeued that he created all the world, and the things therein. Then wee questioned them further, whence they knew that, who answered, that their Parents told them so, and that of a long time they vnderstood it, and knew that he sent water, and all other good things. So wee caused the Interpreter to tell them, that hee whom they called Aguar, we called God, and that they also should call him so, and serue him, and adore him, as we had appointed, and they should finde it very good for them. They answered, that they vnderstood all very well, and that they would doe so; wherefore wee commanded them to descend from the Mountaines, and that they should liue secure and in peace, and dwell in the Countrey, and build their houses, and among them make a house for God, and set a Crosse at the entry thereof, like vnto that which we had there: and when the Christians should come, they should goe to meete them with the Crosse, without Bowes and weapons, and conduct them to their houses, and giue them such as they had to eate, and so they would not doe them any harme, but would become their friends: and the Captaine gaue them some of the Mantles, and vsed them very well. So they departed, carrying with them the two Indians, which before were prisoners, whom we had sent as Messengers, and all this was done in the presence of the Secretary of the Gouernour, and many other witnesses. Now when the Indians were returned, all the rest of that Prouince, who were friends vnto the Christians, came to see vs, and brought vs Crownes and Feathers, and wee commanded them to make Churches, and set Crosses there, because vntill then they had not made them, and wee made them bring the children of the principall Seigniory to Baptise them: whereupon the Captaine presently made a vowe and promise vnto God, neither to make nor cause any entry to be made vpon them, nor take slaues or people in those Countries, which we had secured, and that he would obserue this, vntill your Maiesty or the Gouernour Nunez di Guzman, or the Viceroy in his name, should prouide better for the seruice of our Lord God, and of your Maiesty.

200. leagues betwixt the coast of the North and South Seas.

Christianity shall not be so difficult a matter to bring in, because two thousand leagues which we trauailed by land and Sea, and other ten moneths, after we came out of captiuitie, we trauailed without stay, and neuer found Sacrifices nor Idolatry. In this time, we crossed ouer from one Sea to another, and by the notice, which through much diligence wee procured to haue, from the one coast to the other, wee suppose it to be about two hundred leagues broad and more, and wee vnderstand that on the coast of the South Sea are Pearles and great riches, and that all the best and richest are neere there abouts. We abode in the towne of Saint Michael, vntill the fifteenth of the moneth of May, and the occasion why we staied there so long was this, because from thence vnto the Citie of Compostella, where the Gouernour Nunez di Guzman made his residence, it was 100. leagues distance; and the Country was not inhabited & enemy, and it was fit, that other people should go with vs to conduct vs, among whom there were forty horsemen, who accompanied vs about fortie leagues, and from thence forward, six Christians came with vs, who brought fiue hundred Indian slaues, and being come to Compostella, the Gouernour Nunez receiued vs very curteously, and gaue vs such as he had to cloath vs, which apparell for many dayes, I was not able to carry, and wee could not sleepe but on the ground. And so after tenne or twelue dayes wee departed for Mexico, and came thither on Saint Iames his euen, where the Viceroy and the Marquesse of the Valley kindely intreated vs, and gaue vs apparell and whatsoeuer they had.

He could not weare apparell for many daies nor sleepe on the ground. He also describeth his voiage to Spaine, which is here omitted.

To the Reader.

This Preface is contained more at large in the sixe first Chapters of the authors Booke: which being no part of Florida discouery, I haue here reduced to a Preface.

Captaine Soto was the sonne of a Squire of Xerez of Badaioz. Hee went into the Spanish Indies when Peter Arias of Auila was Gouernour of the West Indies: And there he was without any thing else of his owne, saue his Sword and Target: and for his good qualities and valour, Peter Arias made him Captaine of a troope of horsemen, and by his commandment he went with Fernando Pizarro to the conquest of Peru: where (as many persons of credit reported, which were there present) as well at the taking of Atabalipa, Lord of Peru, as at the assault of the Citie of Cusco, and in all other places where they found resistance, whereseeuer he was present, he surpassed all other Captaines and principall persons. For which cause, besides his part of the treasure of Atabalipa, he had a good share: whereby in time hee gathered an hundred and fourescore thousand Duckets together, with that which fell to his part; which he brought into Spaine: whereof the Emperour borrowed a certaine part, which he repaied againe with 60000. Rials of Plate in the rent of the Silkes of Granada, and all the rest was deliuered him in the Contractation house of Siuil. From Siuil he went to the Court, and in the Court, there accompanied him Iohn Danusco of Siuil, and Lewis Moscoso D'aluarado, Nunno de Touar, and Iohn Rodriguez Lobillo.

Except

Digitized by Google

Except Iohn Danusco, all the rest came with him from Peru, and euery one of them brought fourteene or fifteene thousand Duckets: all of them went well and costly apparelled. And although Soto of his owne nature was not liberall, yet because that was the first time that he was to shew himselfe in the Court, he spent franckly, and went accompanied with those which I haue named, and with his seruants, and many other which resorted vnto him. He married with Donna Isabella de Bouadilla, daughter of Peter Arias of Auila, Earle of Punno en Rostro. The Emperour made him the Gouernour of the Isle of Cuba, and Adelantado or President of Florida; with a title of Marquesse of certaine part of the lands that hee should conquer.

None of those men prospered which were guilty of Atabalipa or Atuhalpas death: but by ciuill wars or otherwise were consumed. And so it happened to this Soto.

This History partly for better knowledge of those parts of the world and partly for the profit of Virginian aduenturers, and discouerers, I haue here published far briefer then the author in Portugese (and out of him Master Hakluyt) had done; and added this to that of Neruaz Cabeza de Vaca. the Author of that, at this time had come to the Court to beg the conquest of Florida: but seeing Don Ferdinando de Soto had gotten it already, for his oathes sake, he said, he might tell nothing of that which they would know. Soto made him great offers: and being agreed to go with him, because he would not giue him money to pay for a Ship, which he had bought, they brake off, and he went for Gouernour to the Riuer of Plate. His kinsmen Christopher de Spindola, and Baltatar de Gallegos went with Soto. Those passed and were counted and enroled, which Soto liked and accepted of, and did accompany him into Florida; which were in all six hundred men. He had already bought seuen Ships, and had all necessary prouision aboord them.

Cabeza de Vaca was the Gouernour of the Riuer of Plate.

600. men went with Soto into Florida. Ynca in his large story of this voiage containing six Books, saith he had 1000. men with him.

In the yeare of our Lord 1538. in the moneth of Aprill, the Adelantado deliuered his Shippes to the Captaines which were to goe in them. They arriued at Saint Iago in Cuba on Whitsunday. The Citie of Iago hath eightie houses which are great and well contriued. The most part haue the wals made of boords, and are couered with thatch; it hath some houses builded with lime and stone, and couered with tiles. It hath great Orchards and many trees in them, differing from those of Spaine: there be Figge-trees which beare Figges as big as ones fist, yellow within, and of small taste; and other trees which beare fruite which they call Ananes, in making and bignesse like to a small Pineapple: it is a fruit very sweete in taste: the shel being taken away, the kernell is like a peece of fresh cheese. In the granges abroad in the Countrie there are other great Pineapples, which grow on low trees, and are like the Aloetree: they are of a very good smell and exceeding good taste. Other trees doe beare a fruite, which they call Mameis of the bignesse of Peaches. This the Islanders doe hold for the best fruit of the country. There is another fruit which they call Guayabas like Filberds, as bigge as figges. There are other trees as high as a tamarine, hauing one onely stocke without any bough, and the leaues as long as a casting dart: and the fruit is of the bignesse and fashion of a Cucumber, one bunch beareth twenty or thirty, and as they ripen the tree bendeth downwards with them: they are called in this Countrie Plantanos, and are of a good taste, and ripen after they be gathered, but those are the better which ripen vpon the tree it selfe: they beare fruit but once, and the tree being cut downe, there spring vp others out of the but, which beare fruit the next yeare. There is another fruit, whereby many people are sustained, and chiefly the slaues, which are called Batatas. These grow now in the Isle of Terzera, belonging to the Kingdome of Portugall, and they grow within the earth, and are like a fruit called Iname, they haue almost the taste of a Chestnut. The Bread of this countrie is also made of rootes which are like the Batatas. And the stocke whereon those rootes doe grow is like an Elder tree: they make their ground in little hillocks, and in each of them they thrust foure or fiue stakes; and they gather the rootes a yeare and an halfe after they set them. If any one, thinking it is a Batata or Potato root, chance to eate of it neuer so little, he is in great danger of death; which was seene by experience in a Soldier, which as soone as he had eaten a very little of one of those roots he died quickly. They peare these roots and stampe them, and squese them in a thing like a presse: the iuyce that commeth from them is of an euill smell. The Bread is of little taste and lesse substance. Of the fruits of Spaine there are Figs and Oranges, & they beare fruit all the yeare, because the soile is very ranke and fruitfull. In this Countrie are many good Horses, and there is greene grasse all the yeare. There be many wilde Oxen and Hogs, whereby the people of the Island is well furnished with flesh: Without the townes abroad in the Countrie are many fruits. And it happeneth sometimes that a Christian goeth out of the way and is lost fifteene or twenty daies, because of the many paths in the thicke groues that crosse to & fro made by the Oxen: and being thus lost, they sustaine themselues with fruits and palmitos: for there be many great groues of Palme trees through all the Island; they yeelde no other fruite that is of any profit. The Isle of Cuba is 300. leagues long from the East to the West, and is in some places 30. in others 40. leagues from North to South. It hath six townes of Christians: to wit, S. Iago, Baracoa, Bayamo, Puerto de Principes, S. Espirito, and Hauana. Euery one hath betweene thirty and forty houshold, except S. Iago and Hauana, which haue about sixtie or eightie houses. They haue Churches in each of them, and a Chaplen which confesseth them and saith Masse. In S. Iago is a Monasterie of Franciscan Friers: it hath but few Friers, and is well prouided of almes, because the Countrie is rich: The Church of S. Iago hath honest reuenew, and there is a Curat and Prebends and many Priests, as the Church of that Citie, which is the chiefe of all the Island. There is in this Countrie much Gold, and few slaues to get it: For many haue made away themselues, because of the Christians euill vsage of them in the Mines. A Steward of Vasques Porcallo, which was an inhabitour in that Island, vnderstanding that his slaues would make away themselues, stood for them with a cudgell in his hand at the place where they were to meete, and told them, that Great Figs.

Ananes.

Great Pine-apples.

* Erua baboſa.

Mameis, an excellent fruit.

Guayabas.

Plantanos.

Batatas, or Potatos.

The Cassaui root.

Store of good Horses.

The length and breadth of Cuba.

A wittie stratagem.

Digitized by Google

that they could neither doe nor thinke any thing, that hee did not know before, and that hee came thither to kill himselfe with them, to the end, that if he had vsed them badly in this World, hee might vse them worse in the World to come: And this was a meane that they changed their purpose, and turned home againe to doe that which he commanded them.

CHAP. II.

FERDINANDO de SOTO his Voyage to Florida and Discouerie of the Regions in that Continent: With the Trauels of the Spaniards foure yeeres together therein, and the accidents which befell them: written by a Portugall of the Company, and here contracted.

§. I.

SOTOS entrance into Florida, taking of IOHN ORTIZ one of Naruaz his company, comming to Paracossy, and diuers other Caciques, with accidents in the way.

May 18. 1539. Inca Garcilasso de la Vega hath written a story of this voyage. He saith Soto had with him 950. souldiers, besides Mariners, which he had entertained for the conquest of Florida, and came with him in this Fleet from Saint Lucars. This Author hath but 600. The ships came vp to the Towne of Vcita.

ON Sunday the eighteenth of May, in the yeere of our Lord 1539. the Adelantado or President departed from Hauana in Cuba with his fleet, which were nine vessels, fiue great shippes, two Carauels, and two Brigantines: They sayled seuen dayes with a prosperous wind. The fiue and twentieth day of May, the day de Pasca de Spiritu Santo (which we call Whitson Sunday) they saw the Land of Florida; and because of the shoalds, they came to an anchor a league from the shoare. On Friday the thirtieth of May they landed in Florida, two leagues from a Towne of an Indian Lord, called Vcita. They set on Land two hundred and thirteene Horses, which they brought with them, to vnburden the ships, that they might draw the lesse water. He landed all his men, and only the Seamen remained in the ships, which in eight daies, going vp with the tide euerie day a little, brought them vp vnto the Towne. Assoone as the people were come on shore, he pitched his Campe on the Sea side, hard vpon the Bay which went vp vnto the Towne. And presently the Captaine Generall Vasques Porcallo with other seuen Horsemen foraged the Countrie halfe a league round about, and found sixe Indians, which resisted him with their Arrowes, which are the weapons which they vse to fight withall: The Horsemen killed two of them, and the other foure escaped; because the Countrie is cumbersome with Woods and Bogs, where the Horses stacke fast, and fell with their Riders, because they were weake with trauelling vpon the Sea. The same night following the Gouernour with an hundred men in the Brigantines lighted vpon a Towne, which he found without people, because, that assoone as the Christians had sight of Land, they were descried, and saw along the Coast many smokes, which the Indians had made to giue aduice the one to the other. The next day Luys de Moscoso, Master of the Campe set the men in order, the Horsemen in three Squadrons, the Vantgard, the Batalion, and the Rereward: and so they marched that day, and the day following, compassing great Creekes which came out of the Bay: They came to the Towne of Vcita, where the Gouernour was, on Sunday the first of Iune, being Trinitie Sunday. The Towne was of seuen or eight houses. The Lords house stood neere the shoare vpon a very high Mount, made by hand for strength. At another end of the Towne stood the Church, and on the top of it stood a fowle made of wood with gilded eies. Here we found some Pearles of small value, spoiled with the fire, which the Indians doe pierce and string them like Beads, and weare them about their neckes and hand-wrists, and they esteeme them very much. The houses were made of Timber, and couered with Palme leaues.

The Towne of Vcita.

Iune.

Some Pearles found.

From the Towne of Vcita the Gouernour sent Alcalde Maior Baltasar de Gallegos with fortie Horsemen and eightie Footmen into the Countrie to see if they could take any Indians: and the Captaine Iohn Rodriguez Lobillo another way with fiftie Footmen. Iohn Rodriguez Lobillo returned to the Campe with sixe men wounded, whereof one died, and brought the foure Indian women, which Baltasar Gallegos had taken in the Cabbins or Cottages. Two leagues from the Towne, comming into the plaine field, he espied ten or eleuen Indians, among whom was a Christian, which was naked and scorched with the Sunne, and had his armes razed after the manner of the Indians, and differed nothing at all from them. And assoone as the Horsemen saw them they they ranne toward them. The Indians fled, and some of them hid themselues in a Wood, and they ouertooke two or three of them which were wounded: and the Christian seeing an Horseman runne vpon him with his Lance, began to crie out, Sirs, I am a Christian, slay mee not, nor these Indians, for they haue saued my life. And straight way hee called them, and put them out of feare, and they came forth of the Wood vnto them. The Horsemen tooke both the Christian and the Indians vp behind them; and toward night came into the Campe with much ioy: which thing being knowne by the Gouernour, and them that remained in the Campe, they were receiued with the like.

Iohn Ortiz liued 12. yeeres, among the Floridians of Vcita and Mocoço. Nauaez.

This Christians name was Iohn Ortiz, and hee was borne in Seuill, of Worshipfull Parentage. He was twelue yeeres in the hands of the Indians. He came into this Countrie with Pamphilo de Narnaez, and returned in the ships to the Iland of Cuba, where the Wife of the Gouernour Pamphilo de Narnaez was: and by his commandement with twentie or thirtie other in a Brigandine, returned backe againe to Florida: and comming to the Port in the sight of the Towne, on the shoare they saw a Cane sticking in the ground, and riuen at the top, and a Letter in it: and they beleeued that the Gouernour had left it there to giue aduertisement of himselfe, when hee resolued to goe vp into the Land: and they demanded it of foure or fiue Indians, which walked along the Sea shoare: and they bad them by signes to come on shoare for it: which against the will of the rest Iohn Ortiz and another did. And assoone as they were on the Land, from the houses of the Towne issued a great number of Indians, which compassed them about, and tooke them in a place where they could not flee: and the other which sought to defend himselfe, they presently killed vpon the place, and tooke Iohn Ortiz aliue, and carried him to Vcita their Lord. And those of the Brigandine sought not to land, but put themselues to Sea, and returned to the the Iland of Cuba. Vcita commanded to bind Iohn Ortiz hand and foot vpon foure stakes aloft vpon a raft, and to make a fire vnder him, that there he might bee burned: But a daughter of his desired him that he would not put him to death, alleaging, that one only Christian could do him neither hurt nor good, telling him, that it was more for his honour to keepe him as a Captiue. And Vcita granted her request, and commanded him to bee cured of his wounds: and assoone as he was whole, he gaue him the charge of the keeping of the Temple: because that by night the Wolues did carrie away the dead corpses out of the same: who commended himselfe to God and tooke vpon him the charge of his Temple. One night the Wolues gate from him the corpses of a little child, the Sonne of a principall Indian; and going after them he threw a Dart at one of the Wolues, and strooke him that carried away the corps; who feeling himselfe wounded, left it, and fell downe dead neere the place: and hee not woting what he had done, because it was night, went backe againe to the Temple: the morning being come, and finding not the bodie of the childe, he was very sad. Assoone as Vcita knew thereof, he resolued to put him to death; and sent by the track, which hee said the Wolues went, and found the bodie of the childe, and the Wolfe dead a little beyond: whereat Vcita was much contented with the Christian, and with the watch which hee kept in the Temple; and from thence forward esteemed him much. Three yeeres after he fell into his hands, there came another Lord called Mocoço, who dwelleth two daies iourney from the Port, and burned his Towne. Vcita fled to another Towne that he had in another Sea Port. Thus Iohn Ortiz lost his office and fauour that he had with him. These people being worshippers of the Deuill, are wont to offer vp vnto him the liues and blood of their Indians or of any other people they can come by: and they report, that when hee will haue them doe that Sacrifice vnto him, he speaketh with them, and telleth them that hee is athirst; and willeth them to sacrifice vnto him. Iohn Ortiz had notice by the Damosell that had deliuered him from the fire, how her father was determined to sacrifice him the day following, who willed him to flee to Mocoço: for she knew that he would vse him well: for she heard say, that he had asked for him, and said he would be glad to see him: and because he knew not the way, she went with him halfe a league out of the Towne by night, and set him in the way, and returned because she would not be discouered. Iohn Ortiz trauelled all that night, and by the morning came vnto a Riuer, which is in the Territorie of Mocoço. Three or foure Indians carried the newes to their Lord: who came forth a quarter of a league from the Towne to receiue him, and was very glad of him. He caused him presently to sweare according to the custome of the Christians, that he would not runne away from him to any other Lord: and promised him to entreate him very well; and that if at any time there came any Christians into that Countrie, he would freely let him goe, and giue him leaue to goe to them: and likewise tooke his oath to performe the same according to the Indian custome. He dwelt with Mocoço nine yeeres, with small hope of seeing any Christians. Assoone as our Gouernour arriued in Florida, it was knowne to Mocoço, and straightway he signified to Iohn Ortiz, that Christians were lodged in the Towne of Vcita. And Mocoço gaue him ten or eleuen principall Indians to beare him company: and as they went to the Port where the Gouernour was, they met with Baltasar de Gallegos, as I haue declared before. Assoone as hee was come to the Campe, the Gouernour commanded to giue him a suite of apparell, and very good Armour, and a faire Horse; and enquired of him, whether hee had notice of any Countrie where there was any Gold or Siluer? He answered, No, because hee neuer went Mocoço dwelleth two dayes iournie from Vcita.

Humane Sacrifice.

A Riuer.

Wolues.

ten leagues compasse from the place where he dwelt: But that thirty leagues from thence dwelt an Indian Lord, which was called Paracossi, to whom Mosaco and Voita, with all the rest of that Coast payed Tribute, and that he peradventure might haue notice of some good Countrie: and that his Land was better then that of the Sea-coast, and more fruitfull and plentifull of Maiz. Whereof the Gouernour receiued great contentment: and said that hee desired no more then to find victuals, that he might goe into maine Land, for the Land of Florida was so large, that in one place or other there could not choose but bee some Countrie. The Cacique Mosaco came to the Port to visit the Gouernour.

Paracossi 30. leagues from Puerto de Spiritu Santo.

The Gouernour answered him, That although in freeing and sending him the Christian, he had preserued his honour and promise, yet he thanked him, and held it in such esteeme, as it had no comparison; and that he would alwayes hold him as his Brother, and would fauour him in all things to the vtmost of his power. Then he commanded a shirt to be giuen him, and other things wherewith the Cacique being very well contented, tooke his leaue of him, and departed to his owne Towne.

From the Port de Spirito Santo where the Gouernour lay, he sent the Alcalde Maior Baltasar de Gallegos with fiftie Horsemen, and thirtie or fortie Footmen to the Prouince of Paracossi, to view the disposition of the Countrie, and informe himselfe of the Land farther inward, and to send him word of such things as he found. Likewise he sent his ships backe to the Iland of Cuba, that they might returne within a certaine time with victuals. Vasques Porcallo de Figueroa, which went with the Gouernour as Captaine Generall, (whose principall intent was to send slaues from Florida, to the Iland of Cuba, where he had his goods and Mynes) hauing made some In-rodes, and seeing no Indians were to be got, because of the great Bogges and thicke Woods that were in the Countrie, considering the disposition of the same, determined to returne to Cuba. And though there was some difference betweene him and the Gouernour, whereupon they neither dealt nor conuersed together with good countenance, yet notwithstanding with louing words hee asked him leaue and departed from him. Baltasar de Gallegos came to the Paracossi: There came to him thirty Indians from the Cacique, and said, that their Lord was ill at ease, and therefore could not come, but that they came on his behalfe to see what he demanded. Hee asked them if they knew or had notice of any rich Country where there was Gold or Siluer. They told them they did: and that toward the West, there was a Prouince which was called Cale; and that others that inhabited other Countries had warre with the people of that Countrie, where the most part of the yeere was Summer, and that there was much Gold: and that when those their enemies came to make warre with them of Cale, these Inhabitants of Cale did weare hats of Gold, in manner of Head-pieces. Baltasar de Gallegos, seeing that the Cacique came not, thinking all that they said was fained, with intent that in the meane time they might set themselues in safetie, fearing, that if he did let them goe, they would returne no more, commanded the thirtie Indians to be chained, and sent word to the Gouernour by eight Horsemen what had passed whereof the Gouernour with all that were with him, at the Port de Spirito Santo receiued great comfort, supposing that that which the Indians reported, might be true. Hee left Captaine Calderan at the Port, with thirtie Horsemen and fiftie Footmen, with prouision for two yeeres, and himselfe with all the rest marched into the mayne Land, and came to the Paracossi, at whose Towne Baltasar de Gallegos was: and from thence with all his men tooke the way to Cale. He passed by a little Towne called Acela; and came to another called Tocaste: and from thence he went before with thirtie Horsemen, and fiftie Footmen toward Cale. And passing by a Towne, whence the people were fled, they saw Indians a little from thence in a Lake; to whom the Interpretor spake. They came vnto them and gaue them an Indian for a guide: and hee came to a River with a great current; and vpon a Tree, which was in the midst of it, was made a Bridge, whereon the men passed: the Horses swamme ouer by a Hawser, that they were pulled by from the other side: for one which they drowe in at the first without it, was drowned. From thence the Gouernour sent two Horsemen to his people that were behind, to make haste after him; because the way grew long, and their victuals short. He came to Cale, and found the Towne without people. He tooke three Indians which were Spies, and tarried there for his people that came after, which were sore vexed with hunger and euill wayes, because the Countrie was very barren of Maiz, low, and full of water, bogs, and thicke woods; and the victuals, which they brought with them from the Port de Spirito Santo, were spent. Whersoeuer any Towne was found, there were some Beetes, and he that came first gathered them, and sodden with water and salt, did eate them without any other thing: and such as could not get them, gathered the stalkes of Maiz and eate them, which because they were young had no Maiz in them. When they came to the River which the Gouernour had passed, they found Palmitos vpon low Palme-trees like those of Andaluzia. There they met with the two Horsemen which the Gouernour sent vnto them, and they brought newes that in Cale there was plentie of Maiz; at which newes they all reioyced. Assoone as they came to Cale, the Gouernour commanded them to gather all the Maiz that was ripe in the field, which was sufficient for three moneths. At the gathering of it the Indians killed three Christians, and one of them which were taken told Paracossi.

Cale.

Acela.
Tocaste.
Another Towne.
A Lake.
A swift Riuer.

Cale.

Boggie countrey.

the

the Gouernour, that within ſeuen dayes iourney, there was a very great Prouince, and plentifull of Maiz, which was called Apalache. And preſently hee departed from Cale with fiftie Horſemen, and ſixtie Footmen. He left the Maſter of the Campe Luys de Moſcoſo with all the reſt of the people there, with charge that he ſhould not depart thence vntill he had word from him. And becauſe hitherto none had gotten any ſlaues, the bread that euery one was to eate, hee was faine himſelfe to beate in a Morter made in a piece of Timber with a Peſtle, and ſome of them did ſift the flowre through their ſhirts of Mayle. They baked their bread vpon certaine Tile-ſhares which they ſet ouer the fire. It is ſo troubleſome to grinde their Maiz, that there were many that would rather not eat it, then grind it: and did eate the Maiz parched and ſodden.

Trauelling Souldiers ſhifts for bread.

The eleuenth day of Auguſt 1539. the Gouernour departed from Cale; hee lodged in a little Towne called Ytara, and the next day in another called Potano, and the third day at Vtinama, and came to another Towne, which they named the Towne of Euill peace; becauſe an Indian came in peace, ſaying, That he was the Cacique, and that he with his people would ſerue the Gouernour, and that if he would ſet free eight and twentie perſons, men and women, which his men had taken the night before, he would command prouiſion to be brought him, and would giue him a guide to inſtruct him in his way: The Gouernour commanded them to be ſet at libertie, and to keepe him in ſafegard. The next day in the morning there came many Indians, and ſet themſelues round about the Towne neere to a Wood. The Indian wiſhed them to carrie him neere them; and that he would ſpeake vnto them, and aſſure them, and that they would doe whatſoeuer he commanded them. And when he ſaw himſelfe neere vnto them he brake from them, and ranne away ſo ſwiftly from the Chriſtians, that there was none that could ouertake him, and all of them fled into the Woods. The Gouernour commanded to looſe a Greyhound, which was alreadie fleſhed on them, which paſſing by many other Indians, caught the counterfeit Cacique, which had eſcaped from the Chriſtians, and held him till they came to take him. From thence the Gouernour lodged at a Towne called Cholupaha: and becauſe it had ſtore of Maiz in it, they named it Villa fuerte. Beyond the ſame there was a Riuer, on which he made a Bridge of Timber, and trauelled two daies through a deſert. The ſeuenteenth of Auguſt, he came to Caliquen, where hee was informed of the Prouince of Apalache: They told him that Pamphilo de Naruaez had beene there, and that there he tooke ſhipping, becauſe he could find no way to goe forward: That there was none other Towne at all; but that on both ſides was all water. The whole company were verie ſad for theſe newes; and counſelled the Gouernour to goe backe to the Port de Spirito Santo, and to abandon the Countrie of Florida, leſt he ſhould periſh as Naruaez had done: declaring, that if he went forward, he could not returne backe when he would, and that the Indians would gather vp that ſmall quantitie of Maiz which was left. Whereunto the Gouernour anſwered, that he would not goe backe, till he had ſeene with his eies that which they reported: ſaying, that he could not beleeue it, and that wee ſhould be put out of doubt before it were long. And he ſent to Luys de Moſcoſo to come preſently from Cale, and that hee carried for him heere. Luys de Moſcoſo and many others thought, that from Apalache they ſhould returne backe; and in Cale they buried their Iron Tooles, and diuers other things. They came to Caliquen with great trouble; becauſe the Countrie, which the Gouernour had paſſed by, was ſpoiled and deſtitute of Maiz. After all the people were come together, he commanded a Bridge to bee made ouer a Riuer that paſſed neere the Towne. Hee departed from Caliquen the tenth of September, and carried the Cacique with him. After hee had trauelled three dayes, there came Indians peaceably, to viſit their Lord, and euery day met vs on the way playing vpon Flutes; which is a token that they vſe, that men may know that they come in peace. They ſaid, that in our way before was there a Cacique, whoſe name was Vzachil, a Kinſman of the Cacique of Caliquen their Lord, wayting for him with many preſents, and they deſired the Gouernour that hee would looſe the Cacique. But hee would not, fearing that they would riſe, and would not giue him any Guides, and ſent them away from day to day with good wordes. He trauelled fiue daies, paſſed by ſome ſmall Townes, came to a Towne called Napetuca, the fifteenth day of September. There were thirtie or fortie Indians ſlaine. The reſt fled to two very great Lakes, that were ſomewhat diſtant the one from the other: There they were ſwimming, and the Chriſtians round about them. The Calieuermen and Croſſe-bowmen ſhot at them from the banke; but the diſtance being great, and ſhooting afarre off, they did them no hurt. The Gouernour commanded that the ſame night they ſhould compaſſe one of the Lakes, becauſe they were ſo great, that there were not men enow to compaſſe them both: beeing beſet, aſſoone as night ſhut in, the Indians, with determination to runne away, came ſwimming very ſoftly to the banke; and to hide themſelues, they put a water Lilly leafe on their heads. The Horſemen aſſoone as they perceiued it to ſtirre, ranne into the water to the Horſes breaſts, and the Indians fled againe into the Lake. So this night paſſed without any reſt on both ſides. Iohn Ortiz perſwaded them, that ſeeing they could not eſcape, they ſhould yeeld themſelues to the Gouernour: which they did, enforced thereunto by the coldneſſe of the water; and one by one, hee firſt whom the cold did firſt ouercome, cried to Iohn Ortiz, deſiring that they would not kill him, for he came to put himſelfe into the hands of the Gouernour. By the morning watch they made an end of yeelding Ytara. Potano. Vtinama. The Towne of Euill peace.

Greyhound catcheth the fugitiue.

Cholupaha. A Riuer. Caliquen.

A Riuer.

Some ſmall Townes. Napetuca. Two very great Lakes.

Indian ſubtletie.

Digitized by Google

ding themselues: only twelue principall men, being more honourable and valorous then the rest, resolued rather to die then to come into his hands. And the Indians of Paracossi, which were now loosed out of chaines, went swimming to them, and pulled them out by the haire of their heads, and they were all put in chaines, and the next day were diuided among the Christians for their seruice. Being thus in captiuitie, they determined to rebell; and gaue in charge to an Indian, which was Interpretor, and held to bee valiant, that assoone as the Gouernour did come to speake with him, hee should cast his hands about his necke, and choake him: Who, when he saw opportunitie, laid hands on the Gouernor, and before he cast his hands about his necke, he gaue him such a blow on the nostrils, that he made them gush out with bloud, and presently all the rest did rise. He that could get any weapons at hand or the handle wher with he did grind the Maiz, fought to kill his Master, or the first hee met before him: and hee that could get a Lance or Sword at hand, bestirred himselfe in such sort with it, as though he had vsed it all his life time. One Indian in the Market place enclosed betweene fifteene or twentie Footmen, made away like a Bull with a Sword in his hand, till certaine Halbardiers of the Gouernor came, which killed him. Another gat vp with a Lance to a loft made of Canes, which they build to keepe their Maiz in, which they call a Barbacoa, and there he made such a noyse, as though tenne men had beene there defending the doore: they slue him with a partisan. The Indians were in all about two hundred men. They were all subdued. And some of the youngest the Gouernour gaue to them which had good chaines, and were carefull to looke to them that they gat not away. All the rest he commanded to be put to death, being tyed to a stake in the midst of the Market place: and the Indians of the Paracossi did shoot them to death.

A new Conspiracie.

Two hundred Indians taken.

The Gouernour departed from Napetuca the three and twentieth of September: hee lodged by a Riuer, where two Indians brought him a Bucke from the Cacique of Vzachil. The next day he passed by a great Towne called Hapalaya; and lodged at Vzachil, and found no people in it, because they durst not tarrie for the notice the Indians had of the slaughter of Napetuca. Hee found in that Towne great store of Maiz, French Beanes and * Pompions, which is their food, and that wherewith the Christians there sustained themselues. The Maiz is like course Millet, and the Pompions are better and more sauourie then those of Spaine. From thence the Gouernour sent two Captaines each a sundry way to seeke the Indians. They tooke an hundred men and women: of which aswell there as in other places where they made any inrodes, the Captain chose one or two for the Gouernour, and diuided the rest to himselfe, and those that went with him. They led these Indians in chaines with Iron collars about their neckes; and they serued to carrie their stuffe, and to grind their Maiz, and for other seruices that such Captiues could doe. Sometimes it happened that going for wood or Maiz with them, they killed the Christian that led them, and ranne away with the chaine: others filed their chaines by night with a piece of stone, wherewith they cut them, and vse it in stead of Iron. Those that were perceiued paid for themselues, and for the rest, because they should not dare to doe the like another time. The women and young boyes, when they were once an hundred leagues from their Countrie, and had forgotten things, they let goe loose, and so they serued; and in a very short space they vnderstood the Language of the Christians. From Vzachil the Gouernour departed toward Apalache, and in two dayes iourney, he came to a Towne called Axille, and from thence forward the Indians were careleſſe, because they had as yet no notice of the Christians. The next day in the morning, the first of October, he departed from thence, and commanded a Bridge to be made ouer a Riuer which he was to passe.

A Riuer.

Hapalaya a great Towne.
Vzachil.
* Aboberas.

Axille.

A Riuer.

The Gouernour passed vpon Wednesday, which was Saint Francis his day, and lodged at a Towne which was called Vitachuco, subiect to Apalache: he found it burning; for the Indians had set it on fire. From thence forward the Countrie was much inhabited, and had great store of Maiz. He passed by many Granges like Hamlets. On Sunday the fiue and twentieth of October, he came to a Towne, which is called Vzela, and vpon Tuesday to Anaica Apalache, where the Lord of all that Countrie and Prouince was resident: in which Towne the Campemaster, whose office it is to quarter out and lodge men, did lodge all the company round about within a league and halfe a league of it. There were other Townes, where was great store of Maiz, Pompions, French Beanes, and Plummes of the Countrie, which are better then those of Spaine, and they grow in the fields without plantin. The victuals that were thought necessary to passe the Winter, were gathered from these Townes to Anaica Apalache. The Gouernour was informed, that the Sea was ten leagues from thence. He presently sent a Captaine thither with Horsemen and Footmen: And sixe leagues on the way he found a Towne, which was named Ochete, and so came to the Sea, and found a great tree felled, and cut it into peeces, with stakes set vp like mangers, and saw the skuls of horses. He returned with this newes. And that was held for certaine, which was reported of Pamphilo de Narnaez, that there he had builded the barkes wherewith he went out of the land of Florida, and was cast away at Sea. Presently the Gouernour sent Iohn Danusco with thirty horsemen to the port de Spiritu Santo, where Calderan was, with order that they should abandon the port, and all of them come to Apalache. He departed on Saturday the seuenteenth of Nouember. In Vzachil and other townes that stood in the way hee found Vitachuco.

October 25.
Vzela.
Anaica Apalache.

Apalache within ten leagues of the Sea.
Ochete.
The Sea.

Digitized by Google

found great ſtore of people already careleſſe. He would take none of the Indians for not hindring himſelfe, becauſe it behooued him to giue them no leaſure to gather themſelues together: Hee paſſed through the Townes by night, and reſted without the Townes three or foure houres. In ten daies he came to the Port de Spirito Santo. Hee carried with him twenty Indian women, which he tooke in Ytara, and Potano, neere vnto Cale, and ſent them to Donna Iſabella, in the two Carauels, which he ſent from the Port de Spirito Santo to Cuba. And he carried all the footemen in the Brigandines, and coaſting along the ſhoare, came to Apalache. And Calderan with the horſemen, and ſome crosbow-men on foote went by land; and in ſome places the Indians ſet vpon him, and wounded ſome of his men. As ſoone as he came to Apalache, preſently the Gouernour ſent ſawed plankes and ſpikes to the Sea ſide, wherewith was made a Piragna or Barke, wherein were embarked thirty men well armed, which went out of the Bay to the Sea, looking for the Brigandines. Sometimes they fought with the Indians, which paſſed along the harbour in their Canoes. Vpon Saturday, the twenty nine of Nouember, there came an Indian through the Watch vndiſcouered, and ſet the Towne on fire, and with the great winde that blew, two parts of it were conſumed in a ſhort time. On Sunday the twenty eight of December came Iohn Danuſco with the Brigandines. The Gouernor ſent Franciſco Maldonado, a Captain off ootmen, with fiftie men to diſcouer the coaſt Weſtward, & to ſeeke ſome Port, becauſe he had determined to goe by land, & diſcouer that part. That day there went out eight horſemen by commandement of the Gouernour into the field, two leagues about the Towne to ſeeke Indians: for they were now ſo emboldened, that within two croſſebow ſhot of the campe, they came & ſlew men. They found two men and a woman gathering French Beanes: the men, though they might haue fled, yet becauſe they would not leaue the woman, which was one of their wiues, they reſolued to die fighting: and before they were ſlaine, they wounded three horſes, whereof one died within a few daies after. Calderan going with his men by the Sea-coaſt, from a wood that was neere the place, the Indians ſet vpon him, and made him forſake his way, and many of them that went with him forſooke ſome neceſſary victuals, which they carried with them. Three or foure dayes after the limited time giuen by the Gouernor to Maldonado for his going and comming, being already determined and reſolued, if within eight dayes he did not come, to tarry no longer for him, hee came, and brought an Indian from a Prouince, which was called Ochus, ſixty leagues Weſtward from Apalache, where he had found a good Port of good depth and defenſe againſt weather. And becauſe the Gouernor hoped to finde a good Countrie forward, he was very well contented. And he ſent Maldonado for victuals to Hauana, with order, that hee would tarrie for him at the Port of Ochus, which he had diſcouered, for he would goe ſeeke it by land: and if he ſhould chance to ſtay, and not come thither that ſummer, that then he ſhould returne to Hauana, & ſhould come againe the next ſummer after, and tarry for him at that Port: for he ſaid he would doe none other thing but goe to ſeeke Ochus. Franciſco Maldonado departed, and in his place for Captaine of the footemen remained Iohn de Guzman. Of thoſe Indians which were taken in Napetuca, the treaſurer Iohn Gaytan had a yong man, which ſaid, that he was not of that Countrie, but of another far off toward the Sunne-riſing, and that it was long ſince he had trauelled to ſee Countries; and that his Countrie was called Yupaha, and that a woman did gouerne it: and that the Towne where ſhee was reſident was of a wonderfull bigneſſe, and that many Lords round about were tributaries to her: and ſome gaue her clothes, and others Gold in abundance: and he told, how it was taken out of the Mines, and was moulten & refined, as if he had ſeene it done, or the Diuell had taught it him. So that all thoſe which knew any thing concerning the ſame, ſaid that it was impoſſible to giue ſo good a relation, without hauing ſeene it: And all of them, as if they had ſeene it, by the ſignes that he gaue, beleeued all that he ſaid to be true.

The Port de Spiritu Sancto ten daies iourney from Apalache.

Ochus ſixtie leagues Weſt of Apalache.

Chap. 12.

Abundance of Gold.

On Wedneſday the third of March, of the yeere 1540. the Gouernour departed from Amaica Apalache to ſeeke Yupaha. He commanded his men to goe prouided with Maiz for ſixtie leagues of deſert. The horſemen carried their Maiz on their horſes, and the footemen at their ſides: becauſe the Indians that were for ſeruice, with their miſerable life that they lead that winter, being naked and in chaines, died for the moſt part. Within foure dayes iourney they came to a great Riuer: and they made a piragua or ferrie boate, and becauſe of the great current, they made a cable with chaines, which they faſtened on both ſides of the Riuer; and the ferrie boate went along by it, and the horſes ſwam ouer, being drawne with capſtans. Hauing paſſed the Riuer, in a day and a halfe they came to a Towne called Capachiqui. Vpon Friday, the eleuenth of March, they found Indians in armes. The next day fiue Chriſtians went to ſeeke morters, which the Indians haue to beate their Maiz, and they went to certaine houſes on the backe-ſide of the Campe enuironed with a wood: and within the wood were many Indians which came to ſpie vs; of the which came other fiue and ſet vpon vs. One of the Chriſtians came running away, giuing an alarme vnto the Campe. Thoſe which were moſt ready anſwered the alarme. They found one Chriſtian dead, and three ſore wounded. The Indians fled vnto a lake adioyning neere a very thicke wood, where the horſes could not enter. The Gouernour departed from Capachiqui, and paſſed through a deſert. On Wedneſday the twenty one of the moneth he came to a Towne called Toalli: And from thence forward there was a diffe-

Death of Indians ſlaues.

A great Riuer.

Capachiqui.

Digitized by Google

Toalli. Their houses for winter and summer.

rence in the houses. For those which were behinde vs were thatched with straw, and those of Toalli were couered with reedes, in manner of tiles. These houses are very cleanly. Some of them had walls daubed with clay, which shewed like a mudwall. In all the cold Countries the Indians haue euery one a house for the winter daubed with clay within & without, and the doore is very little; they shut it by night, and make fire within, so that they are in it as warme as in a stouet and so it continueth all night that they neede not cloathes: and besides these, they haue others for Summer; and their kitchins neere them, where they make fire and bake their bread; and they haue barbacoas wherein they keepe their Maiz; which is an house set vp in the aire vpon foure stakes, boorded about like a chamber, and the floore of it is of cane hurdles. The difference which Lords or principall mens houses haue from the rest, besides they be greater, is, that they haue great galleries in their fronts, & vnder them seates made of canes in manner of benches: and round about them they haue many lofts, wherein they lay vp that which the Indians doe giue them for tribute, which is Maiz, Deeres skins, and mantles of the Countrie, which are like blankets: they make them of the inner rinde of the barkes of trees, & some of a kinde of grasse like vnto nettles, which being beaten, is like vnto flaxe. The women couer themselues with these Mantles; they put one about them from the waste downeward; and another ouer their shoulder, with their right arme out, like vnto the Egyptians. The men weare but one Mantle vpon their shoulders after the same manner; and haue their secrets hid with a Deeres skin, made like a linnen breech, which was wont to be vsed in Spaine. The skins are well corried, and they giue them what colour they list, so perfect, that if it be red, it seemeth a very fine cloath in graine, and the blacke is most fine: and of the same leather they make shoes, and they dye their Mantles in the same colours. The Gouernor departed from Toalli the foure and twentieth of March: he came on Thursday at euening to a small Riuer, where a bridge was made, whereon the people passed, and Benit Fernandez a Portugall fell off from it, and was drowned. As soone as the Gouernour had passed the Riuer, a little distance thence he found a Towne called Achese. The Indians had notice of the Christians; they leaped into a Riuer: some men and women were taken; among which was one that vnderstood the youth which guided the Gouernour to Tapalte: whereby that which he had reported was more confirmed: For they had passed through Countries of diuers languages, and some which he vnderstood not. The Gouernour sent by one of the Indians that were taken to call the Cacique, which was on the other side of the Riuer. He came. The Gouernour told him that he was the Sonne of the Sunne, and came from those parts where he did dwelt, and trauelled through that Countrie, and sought the greatest Lord, and richest Prouince that was in it. The Cacique told him, that farther forward dwelt a great Lord, and that his dominion was called Ocute. He gaue him a guide and an Interpreter for that Prouince. The Gouernour commanded his Indians to be set fast, and trauelled through his Countrie vp a Riuer very well inhabited. Hee departed from his Towne the first of April, and left a very high crosse of Wood set vp in the middest of the market place: and because the vnderstood no more language, but declared to him onely, that that crosse was a memoriall of the same, whereon Christ, which was God and man, and created the heauens and the earth, suffered for our sakes: wherefore he exhorted them that they should reuerence it: and they made shew as though they would doe so. The fourth of April they passed by a Towne called Altamaca, and the tenth of the moneth he came to Ocute. The Cacique sent him two thousand Indians with a present, to wit, many Conies, Partridges, bread of Maiz, two Hens, and many Dogs: which among the Christians were esteemed as if they had beene fat Wethers, because of the great want of flesh meat and Salt, and here of in many places, and many times was great neede; and they were so scarse, that if a man fell sicke, there was nothing to cherrish him withall; and with a sicknesse, that in another place easily might haue beene remedied, he consumed away till nothing but skin and bones were left: and they died of pure weakenesse, some of them saying, If I had a slice of meate, or a few corns of Salt, I should not die. And because they were thus scanted of flesh, when six hundred men that went with Soto, came to any Towne, and found thirty or forty Dogs, he that could get one and kill it, thought himselfe no small man: and he that killed it, and gaue not his Captaine one quarter, if he knew it, he frowned on him, and made him feele it, in the watches, or in any other matter of labour that was offered, wherein he might doe him a displeasure. On Monday, the twelth of April, the Gouernour departed from Ocute. The Cacique gaue him two hundred Tamines, to wit, Indians to carrie burdens: he passed through a Towne, the Lord whereof was named Cofaqui, and came to a Prouince of an Indian Lord, called Patofa.

A grasse like flaxe.

Excellent colours.

A small Riuer.

Achese.

Soto pretends to be the Son of the Sunne.

A Riuer very well inhabited.

Manner of Spaniards praying.

Atamaco Ocute.

Conies, Partridges, Hens, Dogges.

Cofaqui. Patofa.

This Countrie, from the first peaceable Cacique, vnto the Prouince of Patofa, which were fiftie leagues, is a fat Countrie, Beautifull, and very fruitfull, and very well watered, and full of good Riuers. And from thence to the Port de Spirito Santo, where we first arriued in the land of Florida (which may be 350. leagues, little more or lesse) is a barren land, and the most of it groues of wilde Pine-trees, low and full of lakes, and in some places very high and thicke groues, whither the Indians that were in armes fled, so that no man could finde them, neither could any horses enter into them.

An excellent Countrie for fiftie leagues.

Barren Countrie.

In the Towne of Patofa, the youth which the Gouernour carried with him for an Interpre-

tour

tour and a guide, began to fome at the mouth, and tumble on the ground, as one poſſeſſed with the Diuell: They ſaid a Goſpell ouer him; and the fit left him. And he ſaid, that foure daies iournie from thence toward the Sunne riſing, was the Prouince that hee ſpake of. The Indians of Patofa ſaid, that toward that part they knew no habitation; but that toward the Northweſt, they knew a Prouince which was called Coço, a very plentifull Countrie, which had very great Townes in it. The Cacique told the Gouernour, that if he would goe thither, he would giue him guides and Indians for burdens; and if he would goe whither the youth ſpake of, that hee would likewiſe giue him thoſe that he needed: and ſo with louing words and offers of courteſie, they tooke their leaues the one of the other. He gaue him ſeuen hundred Indians to beare burdens. He tooke Maiz for foure dayes iournie. He trauelled ſix daies by a path which grew narrow more and more, till it was loſt altogether: He went where the youth did lead him, and paſſe two Riuers which were waded: each of them was two croſſebowſhot ouer: the water came to the ſtirrops, and had ſo great a current, that it was needefull for the horſemen to ſtand one before another, that the footemen might paſſe aboue them leaning vnto them. He came to another Riuer of a greater current and largeneſſe, which was paſſed with more trouble, becauſe the horſes did ſwim at the comming out about a lances length. Hauing paſſed this Riuer, the Gouernour came to a groue of Pinetrees, and threatned the youth, and made as though hee would haue caſt him to the dogs, becauſe he had told him a lye, ſaying, it was but foure daies iournie, and they had trauelled nine, euery day ſeuen or eight leagues, and the men by this time were growne wearie and weake, and the horſes leane through the great ſcanting of the Maiz. The youth ſaid, that he knew not where he was. It ſaued him that hee was not caſt to the dogs, that there was neuer another whom Iohn Ortiz did vnderſtand. The Gouernour with them two, and with ſome horſemen and footemen, leauing the Campe in a groue of Pinetrees, trauelled that day fiue or ſix leagues to ſeeke a way, and returned at night very comfortleſſe, and without finding any ſigne of way or towne. The next day, the Gouernour ſent other foure with as many horſemen that could ſwim, to paſſe the Oſe and Riuers which they ſhould finde, and they had choiſe horſes the beſt that were in the Campe. The Captaines were Baltaſar de Gallegos, which went vp the Riuer; and Iohn Danuſco, downe the Riuer: Alfonſo Romo, and Iohn Rodriguez Lobillo went into the inward parts of the land. The Gouernour brought with him into Florida thirteene Sowes, and had by this time three hundred Swine: Hee commanded euery man ſhould haue halfe a pound of Hogs-fleſh euery day: and this he did three or foure dayes after the Maiz was ſpent. With this ſmall quantitie of fleſh, and ſome ſodden hearbes, with much trouble the people were ſuſtained. Iohn Danuſco came on Sunday late in the euening, and brought newes that hee had found a little Towne twelue or thirteene leagues from thence: he brought a Woman and a Boy that he had tooke there. With his comming and with thoſe newes, the Gouernour and all the reſt were ſo glad, that they ſeemed at that inſtant to haue returned from death to life. Vpon Monday, the twenty ſix of Aprill, the Gouernour departed to goe to the Towne, which was called Aymay; and the Chriſtians named it the Towne of Reliefe. He left where the Campe had lien at the foote of a Pinetree a letter buried, and letters carued in the barke of the Pine, the contents whereof was this: Digge here at the foot of this Pine, and you ſhall finde a letter. And this he did, becauſe when the Captaines came, which were ſent to ſeeke ſome habitation, they might ſee the letter, and know what was become of the Gouernour, and which way hee was gone. There was no other way to the Towne, but the markes that Iohn Danuſco left made vpon the trees. The Gouernour with ſome of them that had the beſt horſes came to it on the Monday: And all the reſt inforcing themſelues the beſt they could, ſome of them lodged within two leagues of the Towne, ſome within three and foure, euery one as he was able to goe, and his ſtrength ſerued him. There was found in the Towne a ſtorehouſe full of the flowre of parched Maiz; and ſome Maiz, which was diſtributed by allowance. Here were foure Indians taken, and none of them would confeſſe any other thing, but that they knew of none other habitation. The Gouernor commanded one of them to be burned; and preſently another confeſſed, that two daies iournie from thence, there was a Prouince that was called Cutifa-Chiqui. Vpon Wedneſday came the Captaines Baltaſar de Gallegos, Alfonſo Romo, and Iohn Rodriguez Lobillo: for they had found the letter, and followed the way which the Gouernour had taken toward the towne. As ſoone as they came, he departed toward Cutifa-Chiqui. In the way three Indians were taken, which ſaid, that the Lady of that Countrie had notice already of the Chriſtians, and ſtaied for them in a Towne of hers.

Two ſwift Riuers.

Another great Riuer.

Nine dayes iourney.

The great increaſe of ſwine.

Aymay.

An Indian burned for his falſehood.

Within a little while the Lady came out of the Towne in a Chaire, whereon certaine of the principall Indians brought her to the Riuer. She entred into a Barge which had the Sterne tilted ouer, and on the floore her mat ready laied with two cuſtions vpon it one vpon another, where ſhe ſat her downe; and with her came her principall Indians in other Barges, which did wait vpon her. She went to the place where the Gouernour was. She preſented vnto him great ſtore of cloathes of the Countrie, which ſhe brought in other Canoes; to wit, Mantles and Skins; and tooke from her owne necke a great cordon of Pearles, and caſt it about the necke of the Gouernour, entertaining him with very gracious ſpeeches and courteſie, and commanded Canoes to

A great cordon of Pearles

Digitized by Google

They passe the Riuer.

Walnut trees. Mulbery trees for silke. The Sea two dayes iournie off. Mantles of the barkes of trees. Mantles of Feathers. Pearles found in graues.

Three hundred ninetie two pounds of Pearles found.

This Towne was but two daies iournie from the hauen of Santa Helena. In the yeere 1525. It is in 32. deg. and a halfe.

Chiaha twelue daies iournie from Santa Helena: and Coste seuen daies iournie from Chiaha: at which towne of Coste, they had an Oxe hide. Chap. 16.

be brought thither, wherein the Gouernor & his people passed the Riuer. As soon as he was lodged in the Town, she sent him another present of many Hens. This Countrie was very pleasant, fat, and hath goodly Medows by the Riuers. Their woods are thin, & full of Walnut trees & Mulberry trees. They said the Sea was two daies iourny from thence. Within a league & halfe about this Towne were great Townes dispeopled, and ouergrown with grasse; which shewed, that they had been long without inhabitants. The Indians said, that two yeers before there was a Plague in that Countrie, and that they remoued to other Townes. There was in their store-houses great quantity of Clothes, Mantles of yarne made of the barkes of trees, and others made of Feathers, white, greene, red, and yellow, very fine after their vse, and profitable for winter. There were also many Deeres skins, with many compartiments traced in them, and some of them made into hose, stockings, and shooes. And the Lady perceiuing that the Christians esteemed the Pearles, aduised the Gouernour to send to search certaine graues that were in that Towne, and that he should finde many: and that if he would send to the dispeopled Townes, he might loade all his Horses. They sought the graues of that Towne, and there found foureteene roones of Pearles, and little Babies and Birds made of them. The people were browne, well made, and well proportioned, and more ciuill then any others that were seene in all the Countrie of Florida, and all of them went shod and cloathed. The youth told the Gouernour, that he began now to enter into the land which he spake of: and some credit was giuen him that it was so, because hee vnderstood the language of the Indians: and he requested that he might be Christened, for he said he desired to become a Christian: He was Christened, and named Peter; and the Gouernour commanded him to be loosed from a chaine, in which vntill that time he had gone. This Countrie, as the Indians reported, had beene much inhabited, and had the fame of a good Countrie. And as it seemeth, the youth which was the Gouernours guide, had heard of it, and that which hee knew by hearsay, he affirmed that he had seene, and augmented at his pleasure. In this Towne was found a Dagger and Beades, that had belonged to Christians. The Indians reported, that Christians had beene in the hauen, which was two dayes iournie from this Towne, many yeeres agoe. He that came thither was the Gouernour, the Licenciate Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, which went to conquer this Countrie, and at his comming to the Port hee died; and there was a diuision, quarrels and slaughters betweene some principall men which went with him, for the principall gouernment: And without knowing any thing of the Countrie, they returned home to Hispaniola. All the Company thought it good to inhabit that Countrie, because it was in a temperate climate: And that if it were inhabited, all the Ships of New Spaine, of Peru, Santa Martha, and Tierra firme, in their returne for Spaine, might well touch there: because it was in their way; and because it was a good Countrie, and fited fit to raise commoditie. The Gouernour, since his intent was to seeke another treasure, like that of Atabalipa Lord of Peru, was not contented with a good Countrie, nor with Pearles, though many of them were worth their weight in Gold. And if the Countrie had beene diuided among the Christians, those which the Indians had fished for afterward, would haue beene of more value: for those which they had, because they burned them in the fire, did leese their colour. The Gouernour answered them, that vrged him to inhabit, That in all the Countrie, there were not victuals to sustaine his men one moneth; and that it was needefull to resort to the Port of Ocus, where Maldonado was to stay for them: and that if no richer Countrie were found, they might returne againe to that whensoeuer they would; and in the meane time the Indians would sow their fields, and it would be better furnished with Maiz. He inquired of the Indians, whether they had notice of any great Lord farther into the land. They told him, that twelue daies iourney from thence, there was a Prouince called Chiaha, subiect to the Lord of Coça. Presently the Gouernour determined to seeke that land. And being a sterne man, and of few words, though he was glad to lift and know the opinion of all men, yet after he had deliuered his owne, hee would not be contraried, and alwayes did what liked himselfe, and so all men did condescend vnto his will.

§. II.

SOTOS further Discoueries in Florida and manifold various Aduentures till hee came to Tulla.

Baggage of the Campe.

THE Gouernour departed from Cutifa Chiqui the third day of May. And because the Indians had reuolted, and the will of the Ladie was perceiued, that if shee could, shee would depart without giuing any Guides or men for burdens, for the wrongs which the Christians had done to the Indians: (for there neuer want some among many of a base sort, that for a little gaine doe put themselues and others in danger of vndoing.) The Gouernour commanded her to be kept in safegard, and carried with him, not with so good vsage as shee deserued for the good will she shewed. And he carried her on foot with his bond-women to looke vnto her. In all the Townes where the Gouernour passed, the Lady commanded the Indians to come come and carrie the burdens from one Towne to another. Wee passed through her Countrie an hundred leagues, in which, as wee saw, shee was much obeyed. For the Indians did all that shee commanded them with great efficacie and diligence. In seuen dayes spate the Gouernour came to a Prouince called Chalaque, the poorest Countrie of Maiz that was seene in Florida. The Indians fed vpon Roots and Herbes which they seeke in the fields, and vpon wilde beasts, which they kill with their Bowes and Arrowes: and it is a very gentle people. All of them goe naked, and are very leane. There was a Lord, which for a great Present, brought the Gouernour two Deeres skinnes: and there were in that Countrie many wilde Hens. In one Towne they made him a Present of seuen hundred Hens, and so in other Townes they sent him those which they had or could get. From this Prouince to another, which is called Xualla, hee spent fiue dayes: here he found very little Maiz; and for this cause, though the people were wearied, and the horses very weake, hee stayed no more but two dayes. From Ocute to Cutifa-chiqui may bee some hundred and thirtie leagues, whereof eightie are Wildernesse. From Cutifa-chiqui to Xualla, two hundred and fiftie, and it is an Hilly Countrie. The Gouernour departed from Xualla toward Guaxule: he passed very rough and high hils. In that iourney, the Lady of Cutifa-chiqui (whom the Gouernour carried with him, as is aforesaid, with purpose to carrie her to Guaxule, because her Territorie reached thither) going on a day with the bond-women which lead her, went out of the way, and entred into a Wood, saying, shee went to ease her selfe, and so shee deceiued them, and hid her selfe in the Wood; and though they fought her they could not find her. She carried away with her a little cheest made of Canes in manner of a Coffer, which they call Petaca, full of vnbored Pearles. Some which could iudge of them, said, that they were of great value. An Indian woman that waited on her did carrie them. The Gouernour not to discontent her altogether, left them with her, making account that in Guaxule he would aske them of her, when he gaue her leaue to returne: which Coffer shee carried away, and went to Xualla with three slaues which fled from the Campe, and one Horseman which remained behind, who falling sicke of an Ague went out of the way, and was lost. This man, whose name was Alimamos, dealt with the slaues to change their euill purpose, and returne with him to the Christians: which two of them did; and Alimamos and they ouertooke the Gouernour fiftie leagues from thence in a Prouince called Chiaha, and reported how the Lady remayned in Xualla with a slaue of Andrew de Vasconcelles which would not come backe with them, and that of a certaintie they liued as man and wife together, and meant to goe both to Cutifa-chiqui. Within fiue dayes the Gouernour came to Guaxule. The Indians there gaue him a Present of three hundred Dogges, because they saw the Christians esteeme them, and sought them to feed on them: for among them they are not eaten. In Guaxule, and all that way, was very little Maiz. The Gouernour sent from thence an Indian with a message to the Cacique of Chiaha, to desire him to gather some Maiz thither, that he might rest a few dayes in Chiaha. The Gouernour departed from Guaxule, and in two dayes iourney came to a Towne called Canasagua. There met him on the way twentie Indians euery one loaden with a basket full of Mulberries: for there be many, and those very good, from Cutifa-chiqui thither, and so forward in other Prouinces, and also Nuts and Plums. And the trees grow in the fields without planting or dressing them, and are as bigge and as tanke, as though they grew in Gardens digged and watered. From the time that the Gouernour departed from Canasagua, he iourned fiue dayes through a Desert; and two leagues before he came to Chiaha, there met him fifteene Indians loaden with Maiz, which the Cacique had sent; and they told him on his behalfe, that he waited his comming with twentie Barnes full of it; and farther, that himselfe, his Countrie, and subiects, and all things else were at his seruice. On the fift day of Iune, the Gouernour entred into Chiaha: The Cacique voided his owne houses, in which hee lodged, and receiued him with much ioy.

Chalaque seuen dayes iournie from Cutifa-chiqui.

700. Hens.

Xualla fiue dayes off.

Rough and high hils.

Guaxule fiue dayes off.

Canasagua two dayes iourney off.

Great store of Mulberie trees to make silke.

There was in this Towne much Butter in Gourds melted like Oyle: they said it was the fat of Beares. There was found also great store of Oyle of Walnuts, which was cleere as Butter, and of a good taste, and a pot full of Honie of Bees, which neither before nor afterward was seene in all the Countrie. The Towne was in an Hand betweene two armes of a Riuer, and was seated nigh one of them. The Riuer diuideth it selfe into those two branches two Crosse-bow shot aboue the Towne, and meeteth againe a league beneath the same. The plaine betweene both the branches is sometimes one Crosse-bow shot, sometimes two Crosse-bow shot ouer. The branches are very broad, and both of them may be waded ouer. There were all along them very good Medowes, and many fields sowne with Maiz. And because the Indians stayed in their Towne, the Gouernour only lodged in the houses of the Cacique, and his people in the fields; where there was euer a tree, euery one tooke one for himselfe. Thus the Campe lay separated one from another, and out of order. The Gouernour winked at it, because the Indians were in peace, and because it was very hot, and the people should haue suffered great extremitie, if it had not beene so. The horses came thither so weake, that for feeblenesse, they were not able to carry their Masters; because that from Cutifa-chiqui, they alwayes trauelled with very little Prouender, and were hunger-starued and tired euer since they came from the Desert of Ocute. And because the most of them were not in case to vse in battell, though need should require, they sent

The fat of Beares.

Oyle of Walnuts.

Hony of Bees.

Chiaha seated in an Hand.

The Desert of Ocute, chap. 8.

Thirtie dayes rest.

them to feed in the night a quarter of a league from the Campe. The Christians were there in great danger, because that if at this time the Indians had set vpon them, they had beene in euill case to haue defended themselues. The Gouernour rested there thirtie dayes, in which time, because the Countrie was very fruitfull, the horses grew fat. A Cacique of a Prouince called Coste, came to this Towne to visit the Gouernour. After he had offered himselfe, and passed with him some words of tendring his seruice and courtesie; the Gouernor asking him whether he had notice of any rich Countrie? he said, yea: to wit, that toward the North, there was a Prouince named Chisca: and that there was a melting of Copper, and of another metal of the same colour, saue that it was finer, and of a far more perfect colour, and far better to the sight; and that they vsed it not so much, because it was softer. And the selfe same thing was told the Gouernour in Cutifachiqui; where we saw some little Hatchets of Copper, which were said to haue a mixture of Gold. But in that part the Countrie was not wel peopled, and they said there were Mountaines, which the horses could not passe: and for that cause, the Gouernour would not goe from Cutifachiqui directly thither: And he made account, that trauelling through a peopled Countrie, when his men and horses should bee in better plight, and hee were better certified of the truth of the thing, he would returne toward it, by Mountaines, and a better inhabited Countrie, whereby he might haue better passage. He sent two Christians from Chiaha, with certain Indians which knew the Countrie of Chisca, and the language thereof to view it, and to make report of that which they should find; where he told them that he would tarrie for them.

Mines of Copper and Gold in Chisca toward the North.

Hatchets of Copper holding Gold.

Chisca is directly North from Cutifi-chiqui, which is within two daies of Santa Helena.

In seuen dayes he came to Coste. The second of Iuly he commanded his Campe to be pitched two Crosse-bow shot from the Towne: and with eight men of his guard he went where hee found the Cacique, which to his thinking receiued him with great loue. As he was talking with him, there went from the Campe certaine Footmen to the Towne to seeke some Maiz, and not contented with it, they ransacked and searched the houses, and took what they found. With this despite the Indians began to rise and to take their armes: and some of them with cudgels in their hands, ranne vpon fiue or sixe Christians, which had done them wrong, and beat them at their pleasure. The Gouernour seeing them all in an vprore, and himselfe among them with so few Christians, to escape their hands vsed a stratagem, farre against his owne disposition, being, as he was, very franke and open: and though it grieued him very much that any Indian should bee so bold, as with reason, or without reason to despise the Christians, he tooke vp a cudgell, and tooke their parts against his owne men; which was a meanes to quiet them: And presently hee sent word by a man very secretly to the Campe, that some armed men should come toward the place where he was; and he tooke the Cacique by the hand, vsing very milde words vnto him, and with some principall Indians that did accompany him, he drew them out of the Towne into a plaine way, and vnto the sight of the Campe, whither by little and little with good discretion the Christians began to come and to gather about them. Thus the Gouernour led the Cacique, and his chiefe men vntill he entred with them into the Campe: and neere vnto his Tent, hee commanded them to be put in safe custodie: and told them, that they should not depart without giuing him a guide and Indians for burthens, and till certaine sicke Christians were come, which he had commanded to come down the Riuer in Canoes from Chiaha; and those also which he had sent to the Prouince of Chisca: (for they were not returned; and he feared that the Indians had slaine the one, and the other.) Within three dayes after, those which were sent to Chisca returned, and made report, that the Indians had carried them through a Countrie so poore of Maiz, and so rough, and ouer so high Mountaynes, that it was impossible for the Armie to trauell that way; and that seeing the way grew very long; and that they lingred much, they consulted to returne from a little poore Towne, where they saw nothing that was of any profit, and brought an Oxe hide, which the Indians gaue them, as thin as a calues skin, and the haire like a soft wool, betweene the course and fine wooll of sheepe. The Cacique gaue a guide, and men for burdens, and departed with the Gouernours leaue. The Gouernour departed from Coste the ninth of Iuly, and lodged at a Towne called Tali.

A wise Stratagem.

Those which were sent to seeke Chisca returne.

High Mountaines.

A little poore Towne,

An Oxe Hide with haire like wooll. cap. 215. saith so.

Tali, one day from Coste.

The Cacique commanded prouision necessary for two dayes, while the Gouernour was there, to be brought thither: and at the time of his departure, he gaue him foure women and two men, which he had need of to beare burthens. The Gouernour trauelled sixe dayes through many Townes subiect to the Cacique of Coça: and as he entred into his Countrie many Indians came vnto him euery day from the Cacique, and met him on the way with messages, one going, and another comming. He came to Coça vpon Friday, the sixe and twentieth of Iuly. The Cacique came forth to receiue him, two Crosse-bow shot from the Towne in a chaire, which his principall men carried on their shoulders, sitting vpon a cushion, and couered with a garment of Marterns, of the fashion and bignesse of a womans Huke: hee had on his head a Diadem of feathers, and round about him many Indians playing vpon Flutes, and singing.

Many Townes of Coça.

Coça.

Iuly 26.

Marterns.

There was in the Barnes, and in the fields great store of Maiz and French Beanes: The Countrie was greatly inhabited with many great Townes, and many sowne fields, which reached from the one to the other. It was pleasant, fat, full of good Meadowes vpon Riuers. There were in the fields many Plum-trees, as well of such as grow in Spaine, as of the Countrie: and wild

Many great Townes.

Many Plum-trees of diuers sorts.

wild tall Vines, that runne vp the trees; and beſides theſe, there were other low Vines with bigge and ſweet Grapes; but for want of digging and dreſſing, they had great kernels in them. The Gouernour vſed to ſet a guard ouer the Caciques, becauſe they ſhould not abſent themſelues, and carried them with him, till he came out of their Countries: becauſe that carrying them along with him, he looked to find people in the Townes, and they gaue him guides, and men to carrie burdens: and before hee went out of their Countries, hee gaue them licenſe to returne to their houſes, and to their Porters likewiſe, aſſoone as hee came to any other Lordſhippe, where they gaue him others. The men of Coça ſeeing their Lord detained, tooke it in euill part, and reuolted, and hid themſelues in the Woods, aſwell thoſe of the Towne of the Cacique, as thoſe of the other Townes of his principall ſubiects. The Gouernour ſent out foure Captaines, euery one his way to ſeeke them. They tooke many men and women, which were put into chaines: They ſeeing the hurt which they receiued, and how little they gained in abſenting themſelues, came againe, promiſing to doe whatſoeuer they were commanded.

Two ſorts of Grapes. Note.

The Gouernor reſted in Coça fiue and twentie dayes. He departed from thence the twentieth of Auguſt to ſeeke a Prouince called Taſcaluca: he carried with him the Cacique of Coça. Hee paſſed that day by a great Towne called Tallimuchaſe, the people were fled: hee lodged halfe a league farther neere a Brooke. The next day he came to a Towne called Ytaua, ſubiect to Coça. He ſtayed there ſixe dayes becauſe of a Riuer that paſſed by it, which at that time was very high; and aſſoone as the Riuer ſuffered him to paſſe, he ſet forward, and lodged at a Towne named Vlibahali. There came to him on the way, on the Caciques behalfe of that Prouince, ten or twelue principall Indians to offer him his ſeruice; all of them had their plumes of feathers, and Bowes and Arrowes. The Gouernour comming to the Towne with twelue Horſemen, and ſome Footmen of his Guard, leauing his people a Croſſe-bow ſhot from the Towne, entred into it, hee found all the Indians with their weapons: and as farre as he could gheſſe, they ſeemed to haue ſome euill meaning. It was knowne afterward, that they were determined to take the Cacique of Coça from the Gouernour, if he had requeſted it. The Gouernour commanded all his people to enter the Towne, which was walled about, and neere vnto it paſſed a ſmall Riuer. The wall, aſwell of that, as of others, which afterward wee ſaw, was of great poſts thruſt deepe into the ground and very rough, and many long railes as bigge as ones armes laid acroſſe betweene them, and the wall was about the height of a Lance, and it was daubed within and without with clay, and had loope-holes. On the otherſide of the Riuer was a Towne, where at that preſent the Cacique was. The Gouernour ſent to call him, and he came preſently. After he had paſſed with the Gouernour ſome words of offering his ſeruices, he gaue him ſuch men for his carriages as he needed, and thirtie women for ſlaues. In that place was a Chriſtian loſt, called Mançano, borne in Salamanca, of noble Parentage, which went aſtray to ſeeke for Grapes, whereof there is great ſtore, and thoſe very good.

20. of Auguſt.

Tallimuchaſe, a great Towne.

Ytaua.

A great Riuer.

Vlibahali.

Vlibahali walled about.

The faſhion of their wals.

Great ſtore of good Grapes.

The day that the Gouernour departed from thence, he lodged at a Towne ſubiect to the Lord of Vlibahali: and the next day hee came to another Towne called Toaſi. The Indians gaue the Gouernour thirtie women, and ſuch men for his cariages as hee needed. He trauelled ordinarily fiue or ſixe leagues a day when he trauelled through peopled Countries: and going through Deſerts, he marched as faſt as he could, to eſchew the want of Maiz. From Toaſi, paſſing through ſome Townes ſubiect to a Cacique, which was Lord of a Prouince called Talliſe, he trauelled fiue dayes: He came to Talliſe the eighteenth of September: The Towne was great, and ſituated neere vnto a maine Riuer. On the other ſide of the Riuer were other Townes, and many fields ſowne with Maiz. On both ſides it was a very plentifull Countrie, and had ſtore of Maiz: they had voided the Towne. The Gouernour commanded to call the Cacique; who came, and betweene them paſſed ſome words of loue and offer of his ſeruices, and he preſented vnto him fortie Indians. There came to the Gouernour in this Towne a principall Indian in the behalfe of the Cacique of Taſcaluca.

Toaſi.

Hee trauelled ordinarily fiue or ſixe leagues a day.

Talliſe a great Towne.

Septem. 18.

A maine riuer.

After hee had reſted there twenty dayes, hee departed thence toward Taſcaluca. That day when he went from Taliſſe, he lodged at a great Towne called Caſiſte. And the next day paſſed by another, and came to a ſmall Towne of Taſcaluca; and the next day hee camped in a Wood two leagues from the Towne where the Cacique reſided, and was at that time. And he ſent the Maſter of the Campe, Luys de Moſcoſo, with fifteene Horſemen, to let him knowe how he was comming. The Cacique was in his Lodgings vnder a Canopie: and without doores, right againſt his Lodgings, in an high place, they ſpread a Mat for him, and two Cuſhions one vpon another, where he ſate him downe, and his Indians placed themſelues round about him, ſomewhat diſtant from him, ſo that they made a place, and a voide roome where hee ſate: and his chiefeſt men were neereſt to him, and one with a ſhadow of Deeres skinne, which kept the Sunne from him, being round, and of the bigneſſe of a Targe, quartered with blacke and white, hauing a rundell in the middeſt: afarre off it ſeemed to be of Taffata, becauſe the colours were very perfect. It was ſet on a ſmall ſtaffe ſtretched wide out. This was the deuice which he carried in his warres. He was a man of a very tall ſtature, of great limmes, and ſpare and well proportioned, and was much feared of his neighbours and ſubiects. Hee was Lord of many Territories and much people:

Caſiſte a great Towne.

Taſcaluca.

In

In his countenance he was graue. After the Master of the Campe had spoken with him, he and those that went with him coursed their Horses, pranling them to and fro, and now and then toward the place where the Cacique was, who with much grauitie and dissimulation now and then lifted vp his eyes, and beheld them as it were with disdaine. At the Gouernours comming, hee made no offer at all to rise. The Gouernour tooke him by the hand, and both of them sate down together on a seate which was vnder the Cloth of Estate.

Piache. When he departed from thence, he determined to carrie him along with him for some causes, and at two dayes iourney he came to a Towne called Piache, by which there passed a great Riuer.
A great Riuer. The Gouernour demanded Canoas of the Indians: they said, they had them not, but that they would make Rafts of canes and drie timber, on which hee might passe well enough: And they made them with all diligence and speed, and they gouerned them; and because the water went very slowe, the Gouernour and his people passed very well.

The course of Soto's trauels, whereby it appeareth that hee iourneyed not farre from Virginia. From the Port de Spirito Santo to Apalache, which is about an hundred leagues, the Gouernour went from East to West: and from Apalache to Cutifa-chiqui, which are foure hundred and thirtie leagues, from the South-west to the North-east: and from Cutifa-chiqui to Xualla, which are about two hundred and fiftie leagues, from the South to the North: and from Xualla to Tascaluca, which are two hundred and fiftie leagues more, an hundred and ninety of them he trauelled from East to West, to wit, to the Prouince of Coça: and the other sixtie from Coça to Tascaluca, from the North to the South.

Hauing passed the Riuer of Piache, a Christian went from his companie from thence to seeke a woman-slaue that was runne away from him, and the Indians either tooke him captiue, or slue him. The Gouernour vrged the Cacique that he should giue account of him, and threatned him, that if he were not found, he would neuer let him loose. The Cacique sent an Indian from thence to Manilla, whither they were trauelling, which was a Towne of a principall Indian and his subiect, saying, that he sent him to aduise them to make ready victuals, and men for carriages. But (as afterward appeared) he sent him to assemble all the men of warre thither, that hee had in his Countrie. The Gouernour trauelled three dayes, and the third day he passed all day thorow a peopled Countrie: and he came to Manilla vpon Monday the eighteenth of October.
Manilla. 18. of October. He went before the Campe with fifteene Horsemen, and thirtie Footmen. And from the Towne came a Christian, whom he had sent to the principall man, three or foure dayes before, because he should not absent himselfe, and also to learne in what sort the Indians were: who told him, that he thought they were in an euill purpose: for while he was there, there came many people into the Towne, and many weapons, and that they made great haste to fortifie the wall. Luys de Moscoso told the Gouernour, that it would bee good to lodge in the field, seeing the Indians were of such dispositions: and he answered, that he would lodge in the Towne, for he was weary of lodging in the field. When he came neere vnto the Towne, the Cacique came forth to receiue him with many Indians playing vpon Flutes and singing: and after hee had offered himselfe, he presented him with three mantles of Marterns. The Gouernour, with both the Caciques, and seuen or eight men of his guard, and three or foure Horsemen, which alighted to accompanie him, entred into the Towne, and sate him downe vnder a Cloth of Estate. The Cacique of Tascaluca requested him, that he would let him remaine in that Towne, and trouble him no more with trauelling: and seeing he would not giue him leaue, in his talke hee changed his purpose, and dissemblingly fained that hee would speake with some principall Indians, and rose vp from the place where he sate with the Gouernour, and entred into a house, where many Indians were with their Bowes and Arrowes. The Gouernour when he saw he returned not, called him, and he answered, that he would not come out from thence, neither would hee goe any further then that Towne, and that if he would goe his way in peace, hee should presently depart, and should not seeke to carrie him perforce out of his Countrie and Territorie.

Manilla walled

Three mantles of Marterns.

Baltasar de Gallegos, which stood by, tooke hold of a Gowne of Marterns which hee had on; and he cast it ouer his head, and left it in his hands: and because all of them immediatly began to stirre, Baltasar de Gallegos gaue him such a wound with his Coutilas, that hee opened him downe the backe, and presently all the Indians with a great crie came out of the houses shooting their Arrowes. The Gouernour considering, that if he taried there, he could not escape, and if he commanded his men to come in, which were without the Towne, the Indians within the houses might kill their Horses, and doe much hurt, ranne out of the Towne, and before he came out, he fell twice or thrice, and those that were with him did helpe him vp againe; and hee and those that were with him were sore wounded: and in a moment there were fiue Christians slaine in the Towne. The Gouernour came running out of the Towne, crying out, that euery man should stand further off, because from the wall they did them much hurt. The Indians seeing that the Christians retired, and some of them, or the most part, more then an ordinarie pace, shot with great boldnesse at them, and strooke downe such as they could ouertake. The Indians which the Christians did leade with them in chaines, had laid down their burthens neere vnto the walls and assoone as the Gouernour and his men were retired, the men of Manilla laid them on the Indians backes againe, and tooke them into the Towne, and loosed them presently from their

A gowne of Marterns.

chaines,

Digitized by Google

chaines; and gaue them Bowes and Arrowes to fight withall. Thus they poſſeſſed themſelues of all the Clothes and Pearles, and all that the Chriſtians had, which their ſlaues carried. And becauſe the Indians had beene alwaies peaceable vntill wee came to this place, ſome of our men had their weapons in their fardels and remained vnarmed. And from others that had entred the Towne with the Gouernour they had taken Swords and Holbards, and fought with them. When the Gouernour was gotten into the field, he called for an Horſe, and with ſome that accompanied him, he returned and ſlue two or three Indians: All the reſt retired themſelues to the Towne, and ſhot with their Bowes from the wall. And thoſe which preſumed of their nimbleneſſe, ſallied forth to fight a ſtones caſt from the wall: And when the Chriſtians charged them, they retired themſelues at their leaſure into the Towne. At the time that the broyle beganne, there were in the Towne a Frier, and a Prieſt, and a ſeruant of the Gouernour, with a woman-ſlaue: and they had no time to come out of the Towne: and they tooke an houſe, and ſo remained in the Towne. The Indians become Maſters of the place, they ſhut the doore with a field gate: and among them was one Sword which the Gouernours ſeruant had, and with it he ſet himſelfe behind the doore, thruſting at the Indians which ſought to come into them: and the Frier and the Prieſt ſtood on the other ſide, each of them with a barre in their hands to beate him downe that firſt came in. The Indians ſeeing they could not get in by the doore, beganne to vncouer the houſe top. By this time, all the Horſemen and Footmen which were behind, were come to Manilla.

All the clothes and Pearles of the Chriſtians were loſt.

As ſoone as the battell and the rereward were come to Manilla, the Gouernor commanded all thoſe that were beſt armed to alight, and made foure ſquadrons of Footmen. The Indians ſeeing how he was ſetting his men in order concluded with the Cacique that hee ſhould goe his way, ſaying vnto him, as after it was knowne by certaine women that were taken there, that he was but one man, and could fight but for one man, and that they had there among them many principall Indians, very valiant and expert in feates of Armes, that any one of them was able to order the people there. The Gouernour was informed how there went men out of the Towne, and he commanded the Horſemen to beſet it, and ſent in euery ſquadron of Footmen one Souldier with a fire-brand to ſet fire on the houſes, that the Indians might haue no defenſe: all his men being ſet in order, he commanded an Harquebuſe to be ſhot off. The ſigne being giuen, the foure ſquadrons, euery one by it ſelfe with great fury, gaue the onſet, and with great hurt on both ſides they entred the Towne. The Frier and the Prieſt, and thoſe that were with them in the houſe were ſaued, which coſt the liues of two men of account, and valiant, which came thither to ſuccour them. The Indians fought with ſuch courage, that many times they draue our men out of the Towne. The fight laſted ſo long, that for wearineſſe and great thirſt many of the Chriſtians went to a Poole that was neere the wall, to drinke, which was all ſtained with the bloud of the dead, and then came againe to fight. The Gouernour ſeeing this, entred among the Footmen into the Towne on horſebake, with certaine that accompanied him, and was a meane that the Chriſtians came to ſet fire on the houſes, and brake and ouercame the Indians, who running out of the Towne from the Footmen, the Horſemen without draue in at the gates againe, where being without all hope of life, they fought valiantly, and after the Chriſtians came among them to handy blowes, ſeeing themſelues in great diſtreſſe without any ſuccour, many of them fled into the burning houſes, where one vpon another they were ſmothered and burnt in the fire. The whole number of the Indians that died in this Towne, were two thouſand and fiue hundred, little more or leſſe. Of the Chriſtians there died eighteene; of which one was Don Carlos, brother in law to the Gouernour, and a Nephew of his, and one Iohn de Gamez, and Men Rodriguez Portugals, and Iohn Vazquez de Villanoua de Barea Rota, all men of honour, and of much valour: the reſt were Footmen. Beſides thoſe that were ſlaine, there were an hundred and fiftie wounded with ſeuen hundred wounds of their Arrowes: and it pleaſed God that of very dangerous wounds they were quickly healed. Moreouer, there were twelue Horſes ſlaine, and ſeuenty hurt. All the Clothes which the Chriſtians carried with them to clothe themſelues withall, and the ornaments to ſay Maſſe, and the Pearles, were all burnt there: and the Chriſtians did ſet them on fire themſelues; becauſe they held for a greater inconuenience, the hurt which the Indians might doe them from thoſe houſes, where they had gathered all thoſe goods together, then the loſſe of them. Here the Gouernour vnderſtood, that Franciſco Maldonado waited for him at the Port of Ochuſe, and that it was ſixe dayes iourney from thence; and he deale with Iohn Ortiz to keepe it ſecret, becauſe hee had not accompliſhed that which hee determined to doe; and becauſe the Pearles were burnt there, which he meant to haue ſent to Cuba for a ſhew, that the people hearing the newes, might be deſirous to come to that Countrie.

A conſultation of the Indians to ſend away their Cacique.

The death of 2500. Indians.

The Port of Ochuſe 6. dayes iourney from Manilla.

From the time that the Gouernour entred into Florida, vntill his departure from Manilla, there died an hundred and two Chriſtians, ſome of ſickneſſe, and others which the Indians ſlue. He ſtayed in Manilla, becauſe of the wounded men, eight and twentie dayes; all which time he lay in the field. It was a well inhabited and a fat Countrie, there were ſome great and walled Townes: and many houſes ſcattered all about the fields, to wit, a Croſſ-bow ſhot or two, the one from the other. Vpon Sunday, the eighteenth of Nouember, when the hurt men were knowne Great and walled Towns. 18. of Nouember.

knowne to be healed, the Gouernour departed from Manilla. Euery one furnished himselfe with Maiz for two dayes, and they trauelled fiue dayes through a Desart: they came to a Prouince called Pasallaya, vnto a Towne, named Taliepatana: and from thence they went to another, called Cabusto: neere vnto it ranne a great Riuer. The Indians on the other side cried out, threatning the Christians to kill them, if they sought to passe it. The Gouernour commanded his men to make a Barge within the Towne, because the Indians should not perceiue it: it was finished in foure dayes, and being ended, hee commanded it to bee carried one night vpon sleds halfe a league vp the Riuer. In the morning there entred into it thirtie men well armed. The Indians perceiued what was attempted, and those which were neerest, came to defend the passage. They resisted what they could, till the Christians came neere them; and seeing that the Barge came to the shoare, they fled away into the Groues of Canes. The Christians mounted on Horsebacke, and went vp the Riuer to make good the passage, whereby the Gouernour and his companie passed the Riuer. There were along the Riuer some Townes well stored with Maiz, and French Beanes. From thence to Chicaça the Gouernour trauelled fiue dayes through a Desart. He came to a Riuer, where on the other side were Indians, to defend the passage. He made another Barge in two dayes; and when it was finished, the Gouernour sent an Indian to request the Cacique to accept of his friendship, and peaceably to expect his comming: whom the Indians that were on the other side the Riuer slue before his face, and presently making a great shout went their way. Hauing passed the Riuer, the next day, being the seuenteenth of December, the Gouernour came to Chicaça, a small Towne of twentie houses. And after they were come to Chicaça, they were much troubled with cold, because it was now Winter, and it snowed, while most of them were lodged in the field, before they had time to make themselues houses. This Countrie was very well peopled, and the houses scattered like those of Manilla, fat and plentifull of Maiz, and the most part of it was fielding: they gathered as much as sufficed to passe the Winter. Some Indians were taken, among which was one whom the Cacique esteemed greatly. The Gouernour sent an Indian to signifie to the Cacique, that hee desired to see him and to haue his friendship. The Cacique came vnto him, to offer him his person, Countrie and Subiects, and told him, that he would cause two other Caciques to come to him in peace; who within few dayes after came with him, and with their Indians: The one was called Alimamu, the other Nicala. They gaue a present vnto the Gouernour of an hundred and fiftie Conies, and of the Countrie garments, to wit, of Mantles of skinnes. The Cacique of Chicaça came to visite him many times; and sometimes the Gouernour sent to call him, and sent him an Horse to goe and come. He complained vnto him, that a Subiect of his was risen against him, and depriued him of tribute, requesting his aide against him, for he meane to seeke him in his Countrie, and to punish him according to his desert. Which was nothing else but a fained plot. For they determined, as soone as the Gouernour was gone with him, and the Campe was diuided into two parts, the one part of them to set vpon the Gouernour, and the other vpon them that remained in Chicaça. Hee went to the Towne where he vsed to keepe his residence, and brought with him two hundred Indians with their Bowes and Arrowes. The Gouernour tooke thirtie Horsemen, and eightie Footmen, and they went to Saquechuma (for so was the Prouince called of that Chiefe man, which he said had rebelled.) They found a walled Towne, without any men: and those which went with the Cacique set fire on the houses, to dissemble their treason. But by reason of the great care and heedfulnesse that was as well in the Gouernours people which hee carried with him, as of those which remained in Chicaça, they durst not assault them at that time. The Gouernour inuited the Cacique, and certaine principall Indians, and gaue them Hogs flesh to eate. And though they did not commonly vse it, yet they were so greedy of it, that euery night there came Indians to certaine houses a Crosbow shot from the Campe, where the Hogs lay, and killed, and carried away as many as they could. And three Indians were taken in the manner. Two of them the Gouernour commanded to be shot to death with Arrowes; and to cut off the hands of the other; and he sent him so handled to the Cacique. Who made as though it grieued him that they had offended the Gouernour, and that he was glad that he had executed that punishment on them. He lay in a plaine Countrie halfe a league from the place, where the Christians lodged. Foure Horsemen went a stragling thither, to wit, Francisco Osorio, and a seruant of the Marquesse of Astorga, called Reynoso, and two seruants of the Gouernour, the one his Page called Ribera, and the other Fuentes his Chamberlaine: and these had taken from the Indians some Mantles, wherewith they were offended, and forsooke their houses. The Gouernour knew of it, and commanded them to be apprehended; and condemned to death Francisco Osorio, and the Chamberlaine as principals, and all of them to losse of goods. The Friers and Priests and other principall persons were earnest with him to pardon Francisco Osorio his life, and to moderate his sentence, which he would not grant for any of them. While he was ready to command them to be drawne to the Market place to cut off their heads, there came certaine Indians from the Cacique, to complaine of them. Iohn Ortiz, at the request of Baltasar de Gallegos and other persons, changed their words, and told the Gouernour, that the Cacique said, hee had notice how his Lordship held those Christians in prison for his sake, and that they were in no fault, neither had Taliepatana. Cabusto. A great Riuer. Canauerales. Some Towns. A Riuer. December 17. Chicaça. Snowe and much cold. Conies. An Indian stratagem. Saquechuma. A walled Towne.

Digitized by Google

had they done him any wrong, and that if hee would doo him any fauour, hee should set them free. And he told the Indians, that the Gouernour said, he had them in prison, and that he would punish them in such sort, that they should be an example to others. Hereupon the Gouernour commanded the prisoners to be loosed. As soone as March was come, he determined to depart from Chicaça, and demanded of the Cacique two hundred men for carriages. Hee sent him answere, that he would speake with his principall men. Vpon Tuesday the eighth of March, the Gouernour went to the Towne where he was, to aske him for the men: he told him, he would send the next day. As soone as the Gouernour was come to Chicaça, he told Luys de Moscoso the Camp-master, that hee misliked the Indians, and that hee should keepe a strong watch that night, which he remembred but a little. The Indians came at the second watch in foure squadrons, euery one by it selfe, and as soone as they were descried, they sounded a Drum, and gaue the assault with a great crie, and with so great celeritie, that presently they entred with the scouts, that were somewhat distant from the Campe. And when they were perceiued of them which were in the Towne, halfe the houses were on fire, which they had kindled. That night three Horsemen chanced to be scouts, two of them were of base callings and the worst men in all the Campe, and the other, which was a Nephew of the Gouernour, which vntill then was held for a tall man, shewed himselfe there as great a coward, as any of them: for all of them ranne away. And the Indians without any resistance came and set the Towne on fire; and taried behind the doores for the Christians, which ranne out of the houses, not hauing any leasure to arme themselues; and as they ranne hither and thither amazed with the noise, and blinded with the smoke and flame of the fire, they knew not which way they went, neither could they light vpon their weapons, nor saddle their Horses, neither saw they the Indians that shot at them. Many of the Horses were burned in the Stables, and those which could breake their Halters gat loose. The disorder and flight was such, that euery man fled which way he could, without leauing any to resist the Indians. But God (which chastiseth his according to his pleasure, and in the greatest necessities and dangers sustaineth them with his hand) so blinded the Indians, that they saw not what they had done, and thought that the Horses which ranne loose, were men on Horsebacke, that gathered themselues together to set vpon them. The Gouernour onely rode on Horsebacke, and with him a Souldier called Tapia, and set vpon the Indians, and striking the first he met with his Lance, the Saddle fell with him, which with haste was euill girded, and so hee fell from his Horse. And all the people that were on foot were fled to a Wood out of the Towne, and there assembled themselues together. And because it was night, and that the Indians thought the Horses were men on horsebacke which came to set vpon them, as I said before, they fled; and one onely remayned dead, and that was hee whom the Gouernour slue with his Lance. The Towne lay all burnt to ashes. There died in this hurliburlie eleuen Christians, and fiftie Horses; and there remained an hundred Hogges, and foure hundred were burned. If any perchance had saued any clothes from the fire of Manilla, here they were burned, and many were clad in shirtes, for they had no leasure to take their Coates. They indured much cold in this place, and the chiefest remedie were great fires. They spent all night in caruings without sleepe: for if they warmed one side, they freezed on the other. Some inuented the weauing of certaine Mats of drie Iuie, and did weare one beneath, and another aboue: many laughed at his deuice, whom afterward necessitie inforced to doo the like. The Christians were so spoyled, and in such want of Saddles and weapons which were burned; that if the Indians had come the second night, they had ouercome them with little labour. They remoued thence to the Towne where the Cacique was wont to lie, because it was in the champaine Countrie. Within eight dayes after, there were many Lances and Saddles made. There were Ash-trees in those parts, whereof they made very good Lances and Bisayes.

Chicaza set on fire by the Indians.

The increase of Hogs.

The Towne where the Cacique lay. Ash trees.

Vpon Wednesday the 19. of March, 1541. after the Gouernour had lodged eight dayes in a Plaine, halfe a league from the place which he had wintered in, after he had set vp a forge, and tempered the Swords which in Chicaça were burned, and made many Targets, Saddles, and Lances; on Tuesday night, at the morning watch, many Indians came to assault the Campe in three squadrons, euery one by themselues: Those which watched gaue the alarme. The Gouernour with great speed set his men in order in three squadrons, and leauing some to defend the Campe, went out to encounter them. The Indians were ouercome and put to flight. The ground was champaine and fit for the Christians to take the aduantage of them; and it was now breake of day. But there happened a disorder, whereby there were slaine but three or foure Indians in flight: and this it was that a Frier cried out in the Campe without any iust occasion, To the Campe, To the Campe. Whereupon the Gouernour and all the rest repaired thither, and the Indians had time to saue themselues. There were some taken, by whom the Gouernour informed himselfe of the Countrie, through which he was to passe. The fiue and twentieth of April, hee departed from Chicaça and lodged at a small Towne called Alimamu. They had very little Maiz, and they were to passe a Desart of seuen dayes iourney. The next day, the Gouernour sent three Captaines euery one his way with Horsemen and Footmen to seeke prouision to passe the Desart. And Iohn Danusco the Auditor went with fiftene Horsemen, and fortie Footmen that way.

March, 1541.

April 25. Alimamu.

way that the Gouernour was to goe, and found a strong Fort made, where the Indians stayed for him, and many of them walked on the top of it with their weapons, hauing their bodies, thighes and armes okered and died with blacke, white, yellow and red, striped like vnto panes, so that they shewed as though they went in hose and doublets: and some of them had Plumes, and others had hornes on their heads, and their faces blacke, and their eyes done round about with streakes of red, to seeme more fierce.

Blacke, white, yellow and red colours.

Iohn Dansco sent three horsemen to aduertise the Gouernour hereof. He came presently: for his intent was to driue them from thence, saying, that if he did it not, they would be emboldned to charge him another time, when they might doe him more harme. Hee made the horsemen to alight, and set his men in foure Squadrons: The signe being giuen, they set vp the Indians, which made resistance till the Christians came neere the Fort, and assoone as they saw they could not defend themselues, by a place where a Brooke passed neere the Fort, they ran away, and from the otherside they shot some Arrowes: and because at that instant wee knew no ford for the horses to passe, they had time enough to get out of our danger. Three Indians were slaine there, and many Christians were hurt, whereof within few dayes, there died fifteene by the way.

A Desert of seuen dayes.

The Gouernour was inforced to depart presently toward Quizquiz. He trauelled seuen dayes through a Desert of many Marishes and thicke Woods: but it might all bee trauelled on horseback, except some Lakes which they swamme ouer. Hee came to a Towne of the Prouince of Quizquiz without being descried, and tooke all the people in it before they came out of their houses.

A Towne of Quizquiz.

An old Prophesie.

There came to the Campe sixe principall Indians, and said, they came to see what people they were, and that long agoe, they had beene informed by their fore-fathers, That a white people should subdue them: and that therefore they would returne to their Cacique, and bid him come presently to obey and serue the Gouernour: and after they had presented him with sixe or seuen skins and Mantles which they brought, they tooke their leaue of him, and returned with the other, which waited for them by the Brookes side. The Cacique neuer came againe nor sent other message. And because in the Towne where the Gouernour lodged, there was small store of Maiz, he remoued to another halfe a league from Rio Grande, where they found plentie of Maiz: And he went to see the Riuer, and found, that neere vnto it was great store of Timber to make Barges, and good situation of ground to incampe in. Presently he remooued himselfe thither. They made houses, and pitched their Campe in a plaine field a Crosse-bow shot from the Riuer. And thither was gathered all the Maiz of the Townes, which they had lately passed. They began presently to cut and hew downe Timber, and to saw plankes for Barges. The Indians came presently downe the Riuer: they leaped on shoare, and declared to the Gouernour, That they were subiects of a great Lord, whose name was Aquixo, who was Lord of many Townes, and gouerned many people on the other side of the Riuer, and came to tell him on his behalfe, that the next day he with all his men would come to see, what it would please him to command him. The next day with speed, the Cacique came with two hundred Canoes full of Indians with their Bowes and Arrowes, painted, and with great plumes of white feathers, and many other colours, with shields in their hands, wherewith they defended the Rowers on both sides, and the men of Warre stood from the head to the sterne, with their Bowes and Arrowes in their hands. The Canoe wherein the Cacique was, had a Tilt ouer the sterne, and hee sate vnder the Tilt; and so were other Canoes of the principall Indians. And from vnder the Tilt where the chiefe man sat, he gouerned and commanded the other people. All ioyned together, and came within a stones cast of the shoare. From thence the Cacique said to the Gouernour, which walked along the Riuers side with others that wayted on him, that he was come thither to visit, to honor, and to obey him; because he knew he was the greatest and mightiest Lord on the Earth: therefore hee would see what he would command him to doe. The Gouernour yeelded him thankes, and requested him to come on shoare, that they might the better communicate together. And without any answere to that point, hee sent him three Canoes, wherein was great store of fish and loaues, made of the substance of Prunes like vnto Brickes. After hee had receiued all, hee thanked him, and prayed him againe to come on shoare. And because the Caciques purpose was, to see if with dissimulation he might doe some hurt, when they saw that the Gouernour and his men were in readinesse, they beganne to goe from the shoare: and with a great cry, the Crosse-bowmen which were ready, shot at them, and slue fiue or sixe of them. They retired with great order: none did leaue his Oare, though the next to him were slaine; and shielding themselues, they went farther off. Afterward they came many times and landed: and when any of vs came toward them, they fled vnto their Canoes, which were very pleasant to behold: for they were very great and well made, and had their Tilts, Plumes, Paueses, and Flagges, and with the multitude of people that were in them, they seemed to be a faire Armie of Gallies. In thirtie dayes space, while the Gouernour remayned there, they made foure Barges. Assoone as those that passed first, were on Land on the other side, the Barges returned to the place where the Gouernour was: and within two houres after Sunne rising, all the people were ouer. The Riuer

Aquixo, a great Lord on the West side of Rio Grande.

200. Canoes.

Loaues made of Prunes.

Goodly great Canoes.

Foure Barges made.

They passe ouer Rio Grande.

was

was almost halfe a league broad. If a man stood still on the other side, it could not bee discerned, whether hee were a man or no. The Riuer was of great depth, and of a strong current: the water was alwayes muddie: there came downe the Riuer continually many trees and timber, which the force of the water and streame brought downe. There was great store of fish in it of sundry sorts, and most of it differing from the fresh water fish of Spaine, as hereafter shall bee shewed.

Hauing passed Rio Grande, the Gouernour trauelled a league and an halfe, and came to a great Towne of Aquixo, which was dispeopled before hee came thither. They espied thirtie Indians comming ouer a plaine, which the Cacique sent to discouer the Christians determination: and assoone as they had sight of them, they tooke themselues to flight. The Horsemen pursued them, and slue eleuen, and tooke fifteene. And because the Towne, whither the Gouernour went, was neere vnto the Riuer, hee sent a Captaine, with as many men as hee thought sufficient to carrie the Barges vp the Riuer. And because in his trauelling by land, many times hee went farre from the Riuer to compasse the creekes that came from it, the Indians tooke occasion to set vpon them of the Barges, and put them in great danger, because that by reason of the great current, they durst not leaue the shoare, and from the banke they shot at them. Assoone as the Gouernour was come to the Towne, hee presently sent Crosse-bowmen downe the Riuer, which came to rescue them: and vpon the comming of the Barges to the Towne, hee commanded them to be broken, and to saue the Iron for others, when it should be needfull. He lay there one night, and the day following, he set forward to seeke a Prouince, called Pacaha: which he was informed to bee neere vnto Chisca, where the Indians told him there was gold. Hee passed through great Townes of Aquixo, which were all abandoned for feare of the Christians. Hee vnderstood by certaine Indians that were taken, that three dayes iourney from thence dwelt a great Cacique, whose name was Casqui. He came to a small Riuer, where a Bridge was made, by which they passed: that day till Sun-set, they went all in water, which in some places came to the waste, and in some to the knees. When they saw themselues on dry land, they were very glad, because they feared they should wander vp and downe as forlorne men all night in the water. At noone they came to the first Towne of Casqui: they found the Indians careless, because they had no knowledge of them. There were many men and women taken, and store of goods, as Mantles and skinnes, as well in the first Towne, as in another, which stood in a field halfe a league from thence in sight of it; whither the Horsemen ranne. This Countrie is higher, driet, and more champaine, then any part bordering neere the Riuer, that vntill then they had seene. There were in the fields many Walnut-trees, bearing soft shelled Walnuts, in fashion like bullets, and in the houses they found many of them, which the Indians had laid vp in store. The trees differed in nothing else from those of Spaine, nor from those which we had seene before, but onely that they haue a smaller leafe. There were many Mulberie trees and Plum trees, which bare red Plums like those of Spaine, and other gray, somewhat differing, but farre better. And all the trees are all the yeere so fruitfull, as if they were planted in Orchards: and the Woods were very thinne. The Gouernour trauelled two dayes through the Countrie of Casqui, before he came to the Towne where the Cacique was: and the most of the way was alway by Champaine ground, which was full of great Townes, so that from one Towne, you might see two or three. Hee sent an Indian to certifie the Cacique, that hee was comming to the place where hee was, with intent to procure his friendship, and to hold him as his brother. Whereunto hee answered, That he should be welcome, and that he would receiue him with speciall good will, and accomplish all that his Lordship would command him. He sent him a Present vpon the way; to wit, skinnes, Mantles, and fish: And after these complements, the Gouernour found all the Townes as he passed, inhabited with people, which peaceably attended his comming, and offered him skinnes, Mantles, and fish. The Cacique accompanied with many Indians came out of the Towne, and stayed halfe a league on the way to receiue the Gouernour.

Within a while after both of them vsed words of great offers and courtesie the one to the other, and the Cacique requested him to lodge in his houses. The Gouernour, to preserue the peace the better, excused himselfe, saying, that hee would lodge in the fields. And because it was very hot, they camped neere certaine trees a quarter of a league from the Towne. The Cacique went to his Towne, and came againe with many Indians singing. Assoone as they came to the Gouernour, all of them prostrated themselues vpon the ground. Among these came two Indians that were blind. The Cacique made a speech: that seeing the Gouernour was the Sonne of the Sunne, and a great Lord, he besought him to doe him the fauour to giue sight to those two blind men. The blind men rose vp presently, and very earnestly requested the same of the Gouernour. He answered, That in the high Heauens was hee that had power to giue them health, and whatsoeuer they could aske of him; whose seruant he was: And that this Lord made the Heauens and the Earth, and man after his owne likenesse, and that hee suffered vpon the Crosse to saue Mankind, and rose againe the third day, and that he died as he was man, and as touching his Diuinitie, he was, and is immortall; and that he ascended into Heauen, where hee standeth with his armes open to receiue all such as turne vnto him: and straight way hee commanded him to make a very high Crosse of wood.

Pacaha neere vnto Chisca.

Great townes.

The first towne of Casqui.

Walnut trees, with soft shels.

Many Mulberie trees and Plum trees.

Many great Townes.

The chiefe Towne of the Cacique of Casqui.

Spanish Indian Preaching.

Digitized by Google

which was set vp in the highest place of the Towne; declaring vnto him, that the Christians worshipped the same in resemblance and memorie of that whereon Christ suffered. The Gouernour and his men kneeled downe before it, and the Indians did the like. The Gouernour willed him, that from thence-forth he should worship the same, and should aske whatsoeuer they stood in need of, of that Lord that he told him was in Heauen. Then he asked him how farre it was from thence to Pacaha: He said, one dayes iournie, and that at the end of his Countrie, there was a Lake like a Brooke which falleth into Rio Grande, and that hee would send men before to make a Bridge whereby hee might passe. The same day that the Gouernour departed thence, hee lodged at a Towne belonging to Casqui: and the next day he passed in sight of other Townes, and came to the Lake, which was halfe a Crosse-bow shot ouer, of a great depth and current. At the time of his comming, the Indians had made an end of the Bridge, which was made of timber, laid one tree after another: and on one side it had a course of stakes higher then the Bridge, for them that passed to take hold on. The Cacique of Casqui came to the Gouernour, and brought his people with him. The Gouernour sent word by an Indian to Cacique of Pacaha, that though he were enemie to the Cacique of Casqui, and though he were there, yet hee would doe him no disgrace nor hurt, if hee would attend him peaceably, and imbrace his friendship; but rather would intreate him as a Brother. The Indian, which the Gouernour sent, came againe, and said, that the Cacique made none account of that which he told him, but fled with all his men out at the other side of the Towne. Presently the Gouernour entred, and ranne before with the Horsemen, that way, by which the Indians fled; and at another Towne distant a quarter of a league from thence, they tooke many Indians: and assoone as the Horsemen had taken them, they deliuered them to the Indians of Casqui, whom, because they were their enemies, with much circumspection and reioycing, they brought to the Towne where the Christians were: and the greatest griefe they had, was this, that they could not get leaue to kill them. There were found in the Towne many Mantles, and Deere skinnes, Lions skinnes, and Beares skinnes, and many Cats skinnes. Many came so farre poorely apparelled, and there they clothed themselues: of the Mantles, they made them Coates and Cassocks, and some made Gownes, and lined them with Cats skinnes; and likewise their Cassocks. Of the Deeres skinnes, some made them also Ierkins, Shirts, Hose and Shooes: and of the Beare skinnes, they made them very good Clokes: for no water could pierce them. There were Targets of raw Oxe Hides found there, with which Hides they armed their Horses.

A Towne belonging to Casqui.
Other townes.
Targets of raw Oxe hides.
Pacaha, a verie great Towne beset with Towres.
Great walled Townes.
Nets found.
The diuers sorts of excellent fish in Rio Grande.
Gold & Copper in Chisca.
A poore towne
Great store of Oxen toward the North of Pacaha.
This is like Quiuera.

Vpon Wednesday the nineteenth of Iune, the Gouernour entred into Pacaha: He lodged in the Towne, where the Cacique vsed to reside, which was very great, walled, and beset with Towres, and many loope-holes were in the Towres and Wall. And in the Towne was great store of old Maiz, and great quantitie of new in the fields. Within a league and halfe a league were great Townes all walled. Where the Gouernour was lodged, was a great Lake, that came neere vnto the wall: and it entred into a ditch that went round about the Towne, wanting but a little to enuiron it round. From the Lake to the great Riuer was made a weare by the which the fish came into it; which the Cacique kept for his recreation and sport: with Nets that were found in the Towne, they tooke as much as they would: and tooke they neuer so much, there was no want perceiued. There was also great store of fish in many other Lakes that were thereabout, but it was soft, and not so good as that which came from the Riuer, and the most of it was different from the fresh water fish of Spaine. There was a fish which they called Bagres: the third part of it was head, and it had on both sides the gils, and along the sides great prickes like very sharpe Awles: those of this kind that were in the Lakes were as bigge as Pikes: and in the Riuer, there were some of an hundred, and of an hundred and fiftie pounds weight, and many of them were taken with the hooke. There was another fish like Barbels; and another like Breames, headed like a delicate fish, called in Spaine Besugo, betweene red and grey. This was thereof most esteeme. There was another fish called a Pele fish: it had a snowt of a Cubit long, and at the end of the vpper lip it was made like a Peele. There was another fish like a Welterne Shad: And all of them had scales, except the Bagres, and the Pele fish. There was another fish, which somtimes the Indians brought vs, of the bignesse of an Hogge, they call it the Pereo fish: it had rowes of teeth beneath and aboue.

From thence he sent thirtie Horsemen, and fiftie Footmen to the Prouince of Caluça, to see if from thence he might trauell to Chisca, where the Indians said, there was a worke of Gold and Copper. They trauelled seuen dayes iournie through a Desert, and returned very wearie, eating greene Plums and stalkes of Maiz, which they found in a poore Towne of sixe or seuen houses. From thence forward toward the North, the Indians said, That the Countrie was very ill inhabited, because it was very cold: And that there were such store of Oxen, that they could keepe no Corne for them: and that the Indians liued vpon their flesh. The Gouernour seeing, that toward that part the Countrie was so poore of Maiz, that in it they could not bee sustained, demanded of the Indians, which way it was most inhabited: and they said, they had notice of a great Prouince, and a very plentifull Countrie, which was called Quigaate, and it was toward the South.

The

The Gouernour tooke his iournie toward Quigaute. The fourth day of Auguſt, hee came to the Towne, where the Cacique vſed to keepe his Reſidencie: on the way hee ſent him a Preſent of many Mantles and Skinnes, and not daring to ſtay for him in the Towne, hee abſented himſelfe. The Towne was the greateſt that was ſeene in Florida. Quigaute. The greateſt Towne ſeene in Florida.

They tooke many men and women. Now ſeeing the hurt which they ſuſtained for their Rebellion, they came to ſee what the Gouernour would command them, and paſſed to and fro many times, and brought Preſents of Cloth and Fiſh. The Cacique and his two wiues were in the lodging of the Gouernour looſe, and the Halbardiers of his Guard did keepe them. The Gouernour asked them which way the Countrie was moſt inhabited? They ſaid, that toward the South downe the Riuer were great Townes and Caciques, which commanded great Countries, and much people: And that toward the North-weſt, there was a Prouince neere to certaine Mountaines that was called Coligoa: The Gouernour and all the reſt thought good to goe firſt to Coligoa: ſaying, that peraduenture the Mountaines would make ſome difference of ſoile, and that beyond them there might be ſome Gold or Siluer: As for Quigaute, Caſqui, and Pacaha, they were plaine Countries, fat grounds, and full of good Medowes on the Riuers, where the Indians ſowed large fields of Maiz. From Tuſcaluca to Rio grande, or the great Riuer, is about three hundred leagues: it is a very low Countrie, and hath many Lakes. From Pacaha to Quigaute may bee an hundred leagues. The Gouernour left the Cacique of Quigaute in his owne Towne: And an Indian, which was his Guide, led him through great Woods without any way ſeuen dayes iournie through a Deſert, where at euery lodging, they lodged in Lakes and Pooles in very ſhoald water: there was ſuch ſtore of fiſh, that they killed them with cudgels; and the Indians which they carried in chains, with the mud troubled the waters, and the fiſh being therewith, as it were, aſtonied, came to the top of the water, and they tooke as much as they liſted. The Indians of Coligoa had no knowledge of the Chriſtians, and when they came ſo neere the Towne, that the Indians ſaw them, they fled vp a Riuer, which paſſed neere the Towne, and ſome leaped into it; but the Chriſtians went on both ſides of the Riuer, and tooke them. There were many men and women taken, and the Cacique with them. And by his commandement within three dayes came many Indians with a Preſent of Mantles and Deeres skinnes, and two Oxe hides: And they reported, that fiue or ſixe leagues from thence toward the North, there were many of theſe Oxen, and that becauſe the Countrie was cold, it was euill inhabited: That the beſt Countrie which they knew, the moſt plentifull, and moſt inhabited, was a Prouince called Cayas, lying toward the South. From Quigaute to Coligoa may be ſortie leagues. It was a fat ſoile and ſo plentifull of Maiz, that they caſt out the old, to bring in the new. There was alſo great plentie of French Beanes and Pompions. The French Beanes were greater, and better then thoſe of Spaine, and likewiſe the Pompions, and being roaſted, they haue almoſt the taſte of Cheſtnuts. The Cacique of Coligoa gaue a Guide to Cayas, and ſtayed behind in his owne Towne. We trauelled fiue dayes, and came to the Prouince of Paliſema. The houſe of the Cacique was found couered with Deeres skins of diuers colours and workes drawne in them, and with the ſame in manner of Carpets was the ground of the houſe couered. The Cacique left it ſo, that the Gouernour might lodge in it, in token that hee ſought peace and his friendſhip. But hee durſt not tarrie his comming. The Gouernour, ſeeing he had abſented himſelfe, ſent a Captaine with Horſemen and Footmen to ſeeke him: He found much people, but by reaſon of the roughneſſe of the Country, he tooke none ſaue a few women and children. The Towne was little and ſcattering, and had very little Maiz. For which cauſe the Gouernour ſpeedily departed from thence. He came to another Towne called Tatalicoya, he carried with him the Cacique thereof, which guided him to Cayas. From Tatalicoya are foure dayes iournie to Cayas. When he came to Cayas, and ſaw the Towne ſcattered; he thought they had told him a lye, and that it was not the Prouince of Cayas, becauſe they had informed him that it was well inhabited: He threatned the Cacique, charging him to tell him where he was: and he and other Indians which were taken neere about that place, affirmed that this was the Towne of Cayas, and the beſt that was in that Country, and that though the houſes were diſtant the one from the other, yet the ground that was inhabited was great, and that there was great ſtore of people, and many fields of Maiz. This Towne was called Tanico: he pitched his Campe in the beſt part of it neere vnto a Riuer. The ſame day that the Gouernour came thither, he went a league farther with certaine Horſemen, and without finding any, he found many skinnes in a pathway, which the Cacique had left there, that they might bee found, in token of peace. For ſo is the cuſtome in that Countrey.

Clothe

Coligoa neere to certaine Mountaines North-weſt.

A new way to take fiſh.

Coligoa. A Riuer.

Two oxe hides Store of oxen toward the North.

The Prouince of Paliſema.

Tatalicoya.

Cayas.

Tanico.

The Gouernour reſted a moneth in the Prouince of Cayas. In which time the horſes fattened and thriued more, then in other places in a longer time, with the great plentie of Maiz and the leanes thereof, which I thinke was the beſt that hath beene ſeene, and they dranke of a Lake of very hot water, and ſomewhat brackiſh, and they dranke ſo much, that it ſwelled in their bellies when they brought them from the watering. Vntill that time the Chriſtians wanted Salt, and there they made good ſtore, which they carried along with them. The Indians doe cartie it to other places to exchange it for Skins and Mantles. They make it along the Riuer, which when it

A Lake of hot and ſomewhat brackiſh water

Store of Salt made at Cayas.

it ebbeth, leaueth it vpon the vpper part of the sand. And because they cannot make it, without much sand mingled with it, they throw it into certaine baskets which they haue for that purpose, broad at the mouth, and narrow at the bottome, and set it in the Aire vpon a barre, and throw water into it, and set a small Vessell vnder it, wherein it falleth: Beeing strained and set to boyle vpon the fire, when the water is sodden away, the Salt remayneth in the bottome of the Pan. On both sides of the Riuer the Countrie was full of sowne fields, and there was store of Maiz.

Many Oxe hides with wool on them, as soft as sheeps wooll. Gomara Histor. Gener. cap. 215.

Immediately the Gouernour with certaine Horsemen and fifty Footmen, departed toward Tulla, hee found the Towne abandoned: for the Indians durst not tarrie his comming. The Cacique came, and eightie Indians with him. He brought a Present of many Oxe hides: which, because the Countrie was cold, were very profitable, and serued for Couerlets, because they were very soft, and woolled like sheepe. Not farre from thence toward the North were many Oxen. The Christians saw them not, nor came into the Countrie where they were, because those parts were euill inhabited, and had small store of Maiz where they were bred. The Cacique of Tulla made an Oration to the Gouernour, wherein he excused himselfe, and offered him his Country, subiects, and person. Aswell this Cacique as the others, and all those which came to the Gouernour on their behalfe, deliuered their message or speech in so good order, that no Oratour could vtter the same more eloquently.

Many Oxen toward the North.

The great eloquence of the Indians.

§. III.

His departure to Autiamque, ORTIZ his death and disasters following: SOTO takes thought and dieth. MOSCOSCO succeedeth. They leaue Florida, and arriue at Panuco.

THE Gouernour informed himselfe of all the Countrie round about; and vnderstood, that toward the West was a scattered dwelling, and that toward the South-east were great Townes, especially in a Prouince called Autiamque, ten daies iourney from Tulla; which might be about eightie leagues; and that it was a plentifull Countrey of Maiz. And because Winter came on, and that they could not trauell two or three moneths in the yeere for cold, waters, and snow: and fearing, that if they should stay so long in the scattered dwelling, they could not be susteined; and also because the Indians said, that neere to Autiamque was a great water, and according to their relation, the Gouernour thought it was some arme of the Sea: And because hee now desired to send newes of himselfe to Cuba, that some supply of men and horses might be sent vnto him: (for it was aboue three yeeres, since Donna Isabella, which was in Hauana, or any other person in Christendome had heard of him, and by this time hee had lost two hundred and fiftie men, and one hundred and fiftie horses) he determined to winter in Autiamque, and the next Spring, to goe to the Sea Coast, and to make two Brigantines, and send one of them to Cuba, and the other to Nueua Espanna, that that which went in safetie, might giue newes of him: Hoping with the goods which he had in Cuba, to furnish himselfe againe, and to attempt the Discouerie and conquest toward the West: for he had not yet come where Cabeça de Vaca had beene. Thus hauing sent away the two Caciques of Cayas and Tulla, hee tooke his iournie toward Autiamque: He trauelled fiue dayes ouer very rough Mountaines, and came to a Towne called Quipana, where no Indians could bee taken for the roughnesse of the Countrie: and the Towne being betweene Hils, there was an ambush laid, wherewith they tooke two Indians; which told them, that Autiamque was sixe dayes iournie from thence, and that there was another Prouince toward the South eight dayes iournie off, plentifull of Maiz, and very well peopled, which was called Guahata. But because Autiamque was neerer, and the most of the Indians agreed of it, the Gouernor made his iournie that way. In three dayes hee came to a Towne called Anoixi. He sent a Captaine before with thirtie Horsemen, and fiftie Footmen, and tooke the Indians carelesse, he tooke many men and women prisoners. Within two dayes after the Gouernour came to another Towne called Catamaya, and lodged in the fields of the Towne. Two Indians came with a false message from the Cacique to know his determination. He bad them tell their Lord, that hee should come and speake with him. The Indians returned and came no more, nor any other message from the Cacique. The next day the Christians went to the Towne, which was without people: they tooke as much Maiz as they needed. That day they lodged in a Wood; and the next day they came to Autiamque. They found much Maiz laid vp in store, and French Beanes, and Walnuts and Prunes, great store of all sorts. They tooke some Indians which were gathering together the stuffe which their wiues had hidden. This was a Champaine Countrie, and well inhabited. The Gouernor lodged in the best part of the Towne, and commanded presently to make a fence of timber round about the Campe distant from the houses,

A winter of two or three moneths.

Quipana, fiue dayes iournie from Tulla.

Guahata.

Anoixi.

Catamaya.

Autiamque sixe dayes iournie from Quipana.

ſes, that the Indians might not hurt them without by fire. And meaſuring the ground by paces, he appointed euery one his part to doe according to the number of Indians which he had: preſently the timber was brought by them; and in three dayes there was an incloſure made of very high and thicke poſts thruſt into the ground, and many rayles laid acroſſe. Hard by this Towne paſſed a Riuer, that came out of the Prouince of Cayas; and aboue and beneath it was very well peopled. They ſtayed in Antiamque three moneths with great plentie of Maiz, French Beanes, Walnuts, Prunes, and Conies: which vntill that time they knew not how to catch. And in Antiamque the Indians taught them how to take them: which was, with great ſpringes, which lifted vp their feet from the ground: And the ſnare was made with a ſtrong ſtring, whereunto was faſtned a knot of a cane, which ranne cloſe about the necke of the Conie, becauſe they ſhould not gnaw the ſtring. They tooke many in the fields of Maiz, eſpecially when it freezed or ſnowed. The Chriſtians ſtayed there one whole moneth ſo incloſed with ſnowe, that they went not out of the Towne: and when they wanted fire-wood, the Gouernour with his Horſmen going and comming many times to the Wood, which was two Croſ-bow ſhot from the Towne, made a path-way, whereby the Footmen went for wood. In this meane ſpace, ſome Indians which went looſe, killed many Conies with their Gines, and with their Arrowes. Theſe Conies were of two ſorts, ſome were like thoſe of Spaine, and the other of the ſame colour and faſhion, and as bigge as great Hares, longer, and hauing greater loines.

A Riuer.

Three months abode in Antiamque.

Froſt and ſnow

A moneth of ſnow.

Conies of two ſorts.

Vpon Monday the ſixt of March, 1542. the Gouernour departed from Antiamque to ſeeke Nilco, which the Indians ſaid was neere the Great Riuer, with determination to come to the Sea, and procure ſome ſuccour of Men and Horſes: for he had now but three hundred Men of warre, and fortie Horſes, and ſome of them lame, which did nothing but helpe to make vp the number: and for want of Iron, they had gone aboue a yeere vnſhod: and becauſe they were vſed to it in the plaine Countrie, it did them no great harme. Iohn Ortiz died in Antiamque; which grieued the Gouernour very much: becauſe that without an Interpreter he feared to enter farre into the Land, where hee might bee loſt: whereby it often happened, that the way that they went one day, and ſometimes two or three dayes, they turned backe, and went aſtray through the wood here and there. The Gouernour ſpent ten dayes in trauelling from Antiamque to a Prouince called Ayays; and came to a Towne that ſtood neere the Riuer that paſſeth by Cayas and Antiamque. There hee commanded a Barge to bee made, wherewith hee paſſed the Riuer. When he had paſſed the Riuer, there fell out ſuch weather, that foure dayes he could not trauell for Snow. As ſoone as it gaue ouer ſnowing, he went three dayes iourney through a Wilderneſſe, and a Countrie ſo lowe, and ſo full of Lakes and euill wayes, that he trauelled one time a whole day in water, ſometimes knee deepe, ſometimes to the ſtirrup, and ſometimes they ſwamme. He came to a Towne called Tutelpinco, abandoned, and without Maiz: there paſſed by it a Lake, that entred into the Riuer, which carried a great ſtreame and force of water.

March 6. 1542.

The death of Iohn Ortiz, and the great miſſe of him, being their Interpreter.

Ayays.

A Riuer.

Great ſnow about the twentieth of March

Tutelpinco.

A great Lake.

The Gouernour went a whole day along the Lake ſeeking paſſage, and could finde none, nor any way that did paſſe to the other ſide. Comming againe at night to the Towne he found two peaceable Indians, which ſhewed him the paſſage, and which way hee was to goe. There they made of canes, and of the timber of houſes thatched with canes, rafts wherewith they paſſed the Lake. They trauelled three dayes, and came to a Towne of the Territorie of Nilco, called Tiamo. There they tooke thirtie Indians, and among them two principall men of this Towne. The Gouernour ſent a Captaine with Horſemen and Footmen before to Nilco, becauſe the Indians might haue no time to carrie away the prouiſion. They paſſed through 3. or 4. great Towns; and in the Towne where the Cacique was reſident, which was two leagues from the place where the Gouernour remained, they found many Indians with their Bowes and Arrowes, in manner as though they would haue ſtayed to fight, which did compaſſe the Towne; and as ſoone as they ſaw the Chriſtians come neere them without misdoubting them, they ſet the Caciques houſe on fire, and fled ouer a Lake that paſſed neere the Towne, through which the Horſes could not paſſe.

Rafts wherewith they paſſed the Lake.

Tiamo.

3. or 4. great Townes.

The next day being Wedneſday the nine and twentieth of March, the Gouernour came to Nilco: he lodged with all his men in the Caciques Towne, which ſtood in a plaine field, which was inhabited for the ſpace of a quarter of a league: and within a league and halfe a league were other very great Townes, wherein was great ſtore of Maiz, of French Beanes, of Walnuts, and Prunes. This was the beſt inhabited Countrie, that was ſeene in Florida, and had moſt ſtore of Maiz, except Coça, and Apalache. There came to the Campe an Indian accompanied with others, and in the Caciques name gaue the Gouernour a Mantle of Marterns skinnes, and a Cordon of Pearles. The Gouernour gaue him a few ſmall Margarites, which are certaine Beades much eſteemed in Peru, and other things, wherewith he was very well contented. He promiſed to returne within two dayes, but neuer came againe; but on the contrary the Indians came by night in Canoas, and carried away all the Maiz they could, and made them Cabins on the other ſide of the Riuer.

March 29.

Nilco.

Very great Townes.

The beſt Countrie of Florida.

Marterns skinnes.

A cordon of Pearles.

This Riuer which paſſed by Nilco, was that which paſſed by Cayas and Antiamque, and fell into Rio grande, or the Great Riuer, which paſſed by Pachaba and Aquixo, neere vnto the Prouince of Guacheya. Within few dayes the Gouernour determined to goe to Guacheya, to learne there whether the Sea were neere, or whether there were any habitation neere, where he might relieue his companie, while the Brigantines were making, which he meant to ſend to the Land of the Chriſtians. He came to Guachoya vpon Sunday the ſeuenteenth of Aprill: hee lodged in the Towne of the Cacique, which was incloſed about, and ſeated a Croſs-bow ſhot diſtant from the Riuer. Here the Riuer is called Tamaliſeu; and in Nilco, Tapatu; and in Coça, Mico; and in the Port or Mouth, Ri.

A Riuer falling into Rio grande.

Guachoya.

Foure names of Rio grande.

The Cacique of Guachoya brought with him many Indians with great ſtore of Fiſh, Dogges, Deeres skinnes, and Mantles. Hee asked him whether he had any notice of the Sea. Hee anſwered, no, nor of any Townes downe the Riuer on that ſide. The Gouernour thought that the Cacique lyed vnto him, to rid him out of his owne Townes, and ſent Iohn Danuſco with eight Horſemen downe the Riuer, to ſee what habitation there was, and to informe himſelfe, if there were any notice of the Sea. He trauelled eight dayes, and at his returne he ſaid, that in all that time he was not able to goe aboue fourteene or fifteene leagues, becauſe of the great creekes that came out of the Riuer, and groues of Canes, and thicke Woods that were along the bankes of the Riuer, and that he had found no habitation. The Gouernour fell into great dumpes, to ſee how hard it was to get to the Sea: and worſe, becauſe his Men and Horſes euery day diminiſhed, being without ſuccour to ſuſtaine themſelues in the Countrie: and with that thought hee fell ſicke. But before he tooke his bed, he ſent an Indian to the Cacique of Quigalta, to tell him, that he was the Child of the Sunne, and that all the way that he came all men obeyed and ſerued him, that he requeſted him to accept of his friendſhip, and come vnto him; for he would be very glad to ſee him: and in ſigne of loue and obedience to bring ſomething with him of that which in his Councrie was moſt eſteemed. The Cacique anſwered by the ſame Indian:

The Gouernor falleth ſicke of thought.

A moſt wittie and ſtout anſwer of the Cacique of Quigalta.

That whereas he ſaid, that he was the Childe of the Sunne, if he would drie vp the Riuer hee would beleeue him: and touching the reſt, that he was wont to viſit none: but rather that all thoſe of whom hee had notice did viſit him, ſerued, obeyed and paid him tributes willingly or perforce: therefore if hee deſired to ſee him, it were beſt he ſhould come thither: that if he came in peace, hee would receiue him with ſpeciall goodwill; and if in warre, in like manner he would attend him in the Towne where he was, and that for him or any other he would not ſhrinke one foote backe.

By that time the Indian returned with this anſwere, the Gouernour had betaken himſelfe to bed, being euill handled with Feuers, and was much aggrieued, that hee was not in caſe to paſſe preſently the Riuer, and to ſeek him, to ſee if he could abate that pride of his, conſidering the Riuer went now very ſtrongly in thoſe parts; for it was neere halfe a league bread, and 16. fathoms deepe, & very furious, and ran with a great current; and on both ſides were many Indians, and his power was not now ſo great, but that he had need to helpe himſelfe rather by ſlights then force.

The Gouernour felt in himſelfe that the houre approached, wherein he was to leaue this preſent life, and called for the Kings Officers, Captaines and principall perſons. Hee named Luys de Moſcoſo de Aluarado his Captaine generall. And preſently he was ſworne by all that were preſent, and elected for Gouernour. The next day, being the one and twentieth of May, 1542. departed out of this life, the valorous, virtuous, and valiant Captaine, Don Fernando de Soto, Gouernour of Cuba, and Adelantado of Florida: whom fortune aduanced, as it vſeth to doe others, that he might haue the higher fall. Hee departed in ſuch a place, and at ſuch a time, as in his ſickneſſe he had but little comfort: and the danger wherein all his people were of periſhing in that Countrie, which appeared before their eyes, was cauſe ſufficient, why euery one of them had neede of comfort, and why they did not viſite nor accompanie him as they ought to haue done. Luys de Moſcoſo determined to conceale his death from the Indians, becauſe Ferdinando de Soto had made them beleeue, That the Chriſtians were immortall; and alſo becauſe they tooke him to be hardy, wiſe, and valiant: and if they ſhould knowe that hee was dead, they would be bold to ſet vpon the Chriſtians, though they liued peaceably by them. In regard of their diſpoſition, and becauſe they were nothing conſtant, and beleeued all that was told them, the Adelantado made them beleeue, that he knew ſome things that paſſed in ſecret among themſelues, without their knowledge, how, or in what manner he came by them: and that the figure which appeared in a Glaſſe, which he ſhewed them, did tell him whatſoeuer they practiſed and went about: and therefore neither in word nor deed durſt they attempt any thing that might be preiudiciall vnto him.

The death of Don Ferdinando de Soto, the 21. of May, 1542. at Guacoya.

A wittie ſtratagem.

As ſoone as he was dead, Luys de Moſcoſo commanded to put him ſecretly in an houſe, where he remayned three dayes: and remouing him from thence, commanded him to be buried in the night at one of the gates of the Towne within the wall. And as the Indians had ſeene him ſick, and miſſed him, ſo did they ſuſpect what might be. And paſſing by the place where he was buried, ſeeing, the earth moued, they looked and ſpake one to another. Luys de Moſcoſo vnderſtanding of it, commanded him to be taken vp by night, and to caſt a great deale of ſand into the Mantles, wherein he was winded vp, wherein he was carried in a Canoa, and throwne into the midſt of the Riuer. The Cacique of Guachoya inquired of him, demanding what was become of his brother and Lord, the Gouernor: Luys de Moſcoſo told him, that he was gone to Heauen, as many other times he did: and becauſe he was to ſtay there certaine dayes, he had left him in his place.

The

The Cacique thought with himselfe that he was dead; and commanded two young and well proportioned Indians to be brought thither; and said, that the vse of that Countrie was, when any Lord died, to kill Indians, to waite vpon him, and serue him by the way: and for that purpose by his commandement were those come thither: and prayed Luys de Moscoso to command them to be beheaded, that they might attend and serue his Lord and brother. Luys de Moscoso told him, that the Gouernour was not dead, but gone to Heauen, and that of his owne Christian Souldiers, he had taken such as he needed to serue him, and prayed him to command those Indians to be loosed, and not to vse any such bad custome from thenceforth: straightway he commanded them to be loosed, and to get them home to their houses. And one of them would not goe; saying, that he would not serue him, that without desert had iudged him to death, but that hee would serue him as long as he liued, which had saued his life.

This is also the custome of the old Tartars.

All were of opinion, that it was best to goe by land toward the West, because Nueua Espanna was that way; holding the Voyage by Sea more dangerous, and of greater hazard, because they could make no ship of any strength to abide a storme, neither had they Master, nor Pilot, Compas, nor Chart, neither knew they how farre the Sea was off, nor had any notice of it; nor whether the Riuer did make any great turning into the Land, or had any great fall from the Rockes, where all of them might be cast away. And some which had seene the Sea-chart, did finde, that from the place where they were, by the Sea-coast to Nueua Espanna, might be foure hundred leagues little more or lesse; and said, that though they went somewhat about by Land in seeking a peopled Countrie, if some great Wilderneſſe which they could not passe did not hinder them, by spending that Summer in trauell, finding prouision to passe the Winter in some peopled Countrie, that the next Summer after they might come to some Christian Land, and that it might fortune in their trauell by Land, to finde some rich Countrie, where they might doe themselues good. The Gouernour, although he desired to get out of Florida in shorter time, seeing the inconueniences they layed before him, in trauelling by Sea, determined to follow that which seemed good to them all.

Their generall resolution to trauell by land Westward.

On Monday the fifth of Iune, he departed from Guachoya. The Cacique gaue him a Guide to Chaguate, and stayed at home in his owne Towne. They passed through a Prouince called Catalte: and hauing passed a Wilderneſſe of sixe dayes Iourney, the twentieth day of the moneth he came to Chaguate. There he was informed of the habitation that was toward the West. They told him, that three dayes Iourney from thence was a Prouince called Aguacay. The Gouernour came to this Towne on Wednesday, the fourth of Iuly. He found the Towne without people, and lodged in it; he stayed there about a day; during which, he made some roades, and tooke many men and women. There they had knowledge of the South Sea.

Iune 5. Catalte. Chaguate. Aguacay. Knowledge of the South Sea.

The next day he came to a small Towne called Pato. The fourth day after his departure from Aguacay he came to the first habitation of a Prouince called Amaye. There an Indian was taken, which said that from thence to Naguatex, was a day and a halfes Iourney; which they trauelled, finding all the way inhabited places. Hauing passed the peopled Countrie of Amaye, on Saturday the twentieth of Iuly they pitched their Campe at noone between Amaye and Naguatex. The next day he came to the habitation of Naguatex, which was very scattering. Within foure dayes he departed thence, and comming to the Riuer, hee could not passe, because it was growne very bigge; which seemed to him a thing of admiration, being at that time that it was, and since it had not rained a moneth before. The Indians said, that it increased many times after that manner without rayning in all the Countrie. It was supposed, that it might bee the tide that came into it. It was learned that the floud came alway from aboue, and that the Indians of all the Countrie had no knowledge of the Sea.

Pato. Amaye. Iuly 20. Naguatex. The Riuer growne vnpassable in August at Naguatex. Coniectures of a Sea to the Northward.

Hee departed from Naguatex, and within three dayes Iourney came to a Towne of foure or fiue houses, which belonged to the Cacique of that Prouince, which is called Nissoone: it was euill inhabited, and had little Maiz. Two dayes iourney forward the Guides which guided the Gouernour, if they were to goe Westward, guided him to the East; and sometimes went vp and downe through very great Woods out of the way. The Gouernour commanded them to bee hanged vpon a tree: and a woman that they tooke in Nissoone guided him, and went backe againe to seeke the way. In two dayes he came to another miserable Towne, called Lacane: an Indian was taken in that place, and said, that the Countrie of Noudacao was a Countrie of great habitation, and the houses scattering the one from the other, as they vse to be in Mountaines, and had great store of Maiz. The Cacique came with his men weeping, like them of Naguatex: for this is their vse, in token of obedience: he made him a present of much fish, and offered to doe what he would command him.

Nissoone. Lacane. Noudacao.

The Gouernour departed from Noudacao toward Soacatino, and in fiue dayes iourney came to a Prouince called Aays. That day that the Gouernour departed from thence, the Indian that guided him said, that in Noudacao he had heard say, that the Indians of Soacatino had seene other Christians, whereof they were all glad; thinking it might be true, and that they might haue entred into those parts by Nueua Espanna; and that if it were so, it was in their owne hands to goe out of Florida, if they found nothing of profit: for they feared they should lose themselues in some wilderneſſe. This Indian led him two dayes out of the way. The Gouernour commanded to torture him. He ſaid, that the Cacique of Nondacao, his Lord, commanded him to guide them ſo, becauſe they were his enemies, and that he was to doe as his Lord commanded him. The Gouernour commanded him to be caſt to the dogs: and another guided him to Soacatino, whither he came the day following. It was a very poore Country: there was great want of Maiz in that place. He asked the Indians whether they knew of any other Chriſtians. They ſaid, that a little from thence toward the South they heard they were. He trauelled twentie dayes through a Country euill inhabited, where they ſuffered great ſcarſitie and trouble. For that little Maiz which the Indians had, they had hidden and buried in the woods, where the Chriſtians, after they were well wearied with trauell, at the end of their iourney went to ſeeke by digging what they ſhould eate. At laſt, comming to a Prouince that was called Guaſco, they found Maiz, wherewith they loaded their horſes, and the Indians that they had.

Aays.

in

Soacatino.

Twenty daies trauell toward the South.

Guaſco: here they found ſome Turkie ſtones, & mantles of Cotten wooll.

The Indians told them there, that ten daies iournie from thence toward the Weſt, was a Riuer called Daycao: whither they went ſometimes a hunting and killing of Deere: and that they had ſeene people on the other ſide, but knew not what habitation was there. There the Chriſtians tooke ſuch Maiz as they found and could carry, and going ten daies iournie through a wilderneſſe, they came to the Riuer which the Indians had told them of. Ten horſemen which the Gouernour had ſent before, paſſed ouer the ſame, and went in a way that led to the Riuer, and lighted vpon a company of Indians that dwelt in very little cabins; who, as ſoone as they ſaw them, tooke themſelues to flight, leauing that which they had; all which was nothing but miſerie and pouertie. The Countrie was ſo poore, that among them all there was not found halfe a pecke of Maiz. The horſemen tooke too Indians, and returned with them to the Riuer, where the Gouernour ſtaied for them. He ſought to learne of them what habitation was toward the Weſt. There was none in the Campe that could vnderſtand their language. The Gouernour aſſembled the Captaines and principall perſons, to determine with their aduice what they ſhould doe. And the moſt part ſaid, that they thought it beſt to returne backe to Rio grande, or the great Riuer of Guachoya; becauſe that id Nilco and thereabout was ſtore of Maiz; ſaying, that they would make Pinnaces that winter, and the next Summer paſſe downe the Riuer to the Seaward in them, and comming to the Sea they would goe along the coaſt to Nueua Eſpanna. For though it ſeemed a doubtfull thing and difficult, by that which they had already alleadged, yet it was the laſt remedy they had. For by land they could not goe for want of an Interpreter. And they held that the Countrie beyond the Riuer of Dayaca, where they were, was that which Cabeça de Vaca mentioned in his relation that he paſſed of the Indians, which liued like the Alarbes, hauing no ſetled place, and fed vpon Tunas and rootes of the fields, and wilde beaſts that they killed. Which if it were ſo, if they ſhould enter into it, and finde not victuals to paſſe the winter, they could not chooſe but periſh. For they were entred already into the beginning of October: and if they ſtaied any longer, they were not able to returne for raine and ſnowes, nor to ſuſtaine themſelues in ſo poore a Countrie. The Gouernour (that deſired long to ſee himſelfe in a place where hee might ſleepe his full ſleepe, rather then to conquer and gouerne a Countrie where ſo many troubles preſented themſelues) preſently returned backe that ſame way that he came.

The Riuer of Daycao: which ſeemeth to be Rio del oro.

No trauelling by land without an Interpreter.

When that which was determined was publiſhed to the Campe, there were many that were greatly grieued at it: for they held the Sea voyage as doubtfull, for the euill meanes they had, and as great danger as the trauelling by land: and they hoped to finde ſome rich Countrey before they came to the land of the Chriſtians, by that which Cabeça de Vaca had told the Emperour: and that was this; That after he had found cloathes made of Cotten wooll, hee ſaw Gold and Siluer, and ſtones of great value. And they had not yet come where hee had beene: For vntill that place he alwayes trauelled by the Sea coaſt: and they trauelled farre within the land; and that going toward the Weſt, of neceſſitie they ſhould come where he had beene. For he ſaid, That in a certaine place he trauelled many dayes, and entred into the land toward the North. And in Guaſco they had already found ſome Turkie ſtones, and Mantles of Cotten wooll; which the Indians ſignified by ſignes that they had from the Weſt: and that holding that courſe they ſhould draw neere to the land of the Chriſtians. From Daycao, where now they were, to Rio grande, or the great Riuer, was one hundred and fiftie leagues: which vnto that place they had gone Weſtward. They departed from Nilco in the beginning of December; and all that way, and before from Chilano, they endured much trouble; for they paſſed through many waters, and many times it rained with a Northren winde, and was exceeding colde, ſo that they were in open field with water ouer and vnderneath them: and when at the end of their dayes iourney they found dry ground to reſt vpon, they gaue great thankes to God. With this trouble almoſt all the Indians that ſerued them died. And after they were in Minoya, many Chriſtians alſo died: and the moſt part were ſicke of great and dangerous diſeaſes, which had a ſpice of the lethargie.

Gold, Siluer and precious ſtones in Florida.

Turkie ſtones and Mantles of Cotten woollfound in Guaſco.

150. leagues betweene the Riuer of Daycao, and Rio grande.

The beginning of December.

Raine with Northren winde exceeding cold.

As ſoone as they came to Minoya, the Gouernour commanded them to gather all the chaines together, which euery one had to lead Indians in; and to gather all the Iron which they had for their prouiſion, and all the reſt that was in the Campe: and to ſet vp a forge to make nailes, and commanded them to cut downe timber for the Brigandines. And a Portugall of Ceuta, who hauing hauing bin a prisoner in Fez, had learned to saw timber with a long Saw, which for such purposes they had carried with them, did teach others, which helped them to saw timber. And a Genowis, whom it pleased God to preserue (for without him they had neuer come out of the Countrie; for there was neuer another that could make Ships but he) with foure or fiue other Biscaine Carpenters, which hewed his plankes and other timbers, made the Brigandines: And two calkers, the one of Genoa, the other of Sardinia did calke them with the tow of an hearbe like Hempe, whereof before I haue made mention, which there is named Enequen. And because there was not enough of it, they calked them with the flaxe of the Countrie, and with the Mantles, which they rauelled for that purpose. A Cooper made for euery Brigandine two halfe hogsheads, which the Mariners call quarterers, because foure of them hold a Pipe of water. In the moneth of March, when it had not rained a moneth before, the Riuer grew so big, that it came to Nilco, which was nine leagues off: and on the other side, the Indians said, that it reached other nine leagues into the land. In the towne where the Christians were, which was somewhat high ground, where they could best goe, the water reached to the stirrops. They made certaine rafts of timber, and laid many boughes vpon them, whereon they set their horses, and in the houses they did the like. But seeing that nothing preuailed, they went vp to the lofts: and if they went out of the houses, it was in Canoes, or on horseback in those places where the ground was highest. So they were two moneths, and could doe nothing, during which time the Riuer decreased not. The Indians ceased not to come vnto the Brigantines as they were wont, and came in Canoes. At that time the Gouernour feared they would set vpon him. He commanded his men to take an Indian secretly of those that came to the Towne, and stay him till the rest were gone: and they tooke one. The Gouernour commanded him to be put to torture, to make him confesse whether the Indians did practise any treason or no. Hee confessed that the Caciques of Nilco, Guachoya, and Taguanate, and others, which in all were about twenty Caciques, with a great number of people, determined to come vpon him; and that three dayes before, they would send a great present of fish to colour their great treason and malice, and on the very day they would send some Indians before with another present. And these with those which were our slaues, which were of their conspiracie also, should set the houses on fire, and first of all possesse themselues of the lances which stood at the doores of the houses; and the Caciques with all their men should be neere the Towne in ambush in the wood, and when they saw the fire kindled, should come, and make an end of the conquest. The Gouernour commanded the Indian to be kept in a chaine, and the selfe same day that he spake of, there came thirty Indians with fish. Hee commanded their right hands to be cut off, and sent them so backe to the Cacique of Guachoya, whose men they were. He sent him word, that he and the rest should come when they would, for he desired nothing more, and that he should know, that they taught not any thing which he knew not before they thought of it. Hereupon they all were put in a very great feare: And the Caciques of Nilco and Taguanate came to excuse themselues; and a few dayes after came he of Guachoya. The Brigandines being finished in the moneth of Iune, the Indians hauing told vs, That the Riuer increased but once a yeare, when the Snowes did melt, in the time wherein I mentioned, it had already increased, being now in Summer, and hauing not rained a long time, it pleased God that the flood came vp to the Towne to seeke the Brigandines, from whence they carried them by water to the Riuer. Which if they had gone by land, had beene in danger of breaking and splitting their keeles, and to be all vndone; because that for want of Iron, the spikes were short, and the plankes and timber were very weake. They shipped two and twenty of the best Horses that were in the Campe, the rest they made dried flesh of; and dressed the Hogges which they had in like manner. They departed from Mineya the second day of Iuly 1543.

There went from Mineya three hundred twenty and two Spaniards in seuen Brigandines, well made, saue that the plankes were thin, because the nailes were short, and were not pitched, nor had any decks to keepe the water from comming in. In stead of decks they laid plankes, whereon the Marriners might run to trim their sailes, and the people might refresh themselues aboue and below. They sailed downe the Riuer seuenteene dayes; which may be two hundred and fiftie leagues iourney, little more or lesse; and neere vnto the Sea the Riuer is diuided into two armes; each of them is a league and a halfe broad. By the way the Indians set on them: slew some, and wounded many.

The eighteenth of Iuly, they went forth to Sea with faire and prosperous weather for their voyage. They sailed with a reasonable good winde that day and the night following, and the next day till euening long, alwaies in fresh water, whereat they wondred much; for they were very farre from land. But the force of the current of the Riuer is so great, and the coast there is so shallow and gentle, that the fresh water entreth farre into the Sea.

They indured an intolerable storme first, and after that the torment of an infinite swarme of Moskitos which fell vpon them, which as soone as they had stung the flesh, it so infected it, as Enequen is an herbe like Hempe.

Flaxe of the Countrie.

The mighty increasing of the Riuer for two moneths space, to wit, all March and Aprill.

The grand conspiracie of the Indians against the Christians.

Note well.

Thirty Indians of the Caciques of Guachoya haue their right hands cut off.

The Riuer increaseth but once a yeare when the snowes doe melt in March & April.

A miraculous accident.

They saile downe Rio Grande from Mineya 17. daies before they came to the mouth thereof. This Author accounteth but 300. lost, but Inca. l. 6. reckoneth 700. saying, that he carried with him from Cuba 1000 Hee addeth, that Iuan Ponce de Leon, the first discouerer of Florida, lost himselfe and 80. men. Lucas Vasques was also slaine there with aboue 220. Pamphilo de Narnaez went with 400 Spaniards, of which not aboue foure escaped, &c. Donna Isabella Sotos wife died also with griefe. So fatall hath Florida beene to Spaine, that (I hope) Virginia may haue the greater dowry for her English husband.

They sailed 17. daies down the Riuer, which is about 252. leagues. Fresh water almost two daies sailing in the Sea. A swarme of grieuous Moskitoes.

though

Digitized by Google

though they had beene venomous. For the sayles which were white seemed blacke with them. Those which rowed, vnlesse others kept them away, were not able to rowe. Hauing passed the feare and danger of the storme, beholding the deformities of their faces, and the blowes which they gaue themselues to driue them away, one of them laughed at another. They met all together in the creeke, where the two Brigandines were, which outwent their fellowes. There was found a skumme, which they call Copee, which the Sea casteth vp, and it is like Pitch, wherewith in some places, where Pitch is wanting, they pitch their ships: there they pitched their Brigandines. They rested two dayes, and then eftsoones proceeded on their Voyage. They sailed two dayes more, and landed in a Bay or arme of the Sea, where they stayed two dayes.

A scum of the Sea like Pitch called Copee.

Another deep Bay.

From the time that they put out of Rio Grande, to the Sea, at their departure from Florida, vntill they arriued in the Riuer of Panuco, were two and fiftie dayes. They came into the Riuer of Panuco the tenth of September, 1543. There arriued there of those that came out of Florida, three hundred and eleuen Christians.

They arriued in the Riuer of Panuco, 1543. Septemb. 10. 311. Christians arriued at Panuco.

From the Port de Spiritu Santo, where they landed when they entred into Florida, to the Prouince of Ocuste, which may be foure hundred leagues, little more or lesse, is a very plaine Countrie, and hath many Lakes and thicke Woods, and in some places they are of wilde Pine-trees; and is a weake soyle: There is in it neither Mountaine nor Hill. The Countrie of Ocuste is more fat and fruitfull; it hath thinner Woods, and very goodly Medowes vpon the Riuers. From Ocuste to Cutifachiqui may be an hundred and thirty leagues: eightie leagues thereof are Desart, and haue many Groues of wilde Pine-trees. Through the Wildernesse great Riuers doe passe. From Cutifachiqui to Xuala, may bee two hundred and fifty leagues: it is all an hilly Countrie. Cutifachiqui and Xuala stand both in plaine ground, high, and haue goodly Medowes on the Riuers. From thence forward to Chiaha, Coça, and Talise, is plaine ground, drie and fat, and very plentifull of Maiz. From Xuala to Tascaluça may be two hundred and fifty leagues. From Tascaluça to Rio Grande, or the Great Riuer, may be three hundred leagues: the Countrie is lowe, and full of Lakes. From Rio Grande forward, the Countrie is higher and more champaine, and best peopled of all the Land of Florida. And along the Riuer from Aquixo to Pacaha, and Coligoa, are an hundred and fifty leagues: the Countrie is plaine, and the woods thinne, and in some places champaine, very fruitfull and pleasant. From Coligoa to Autiamque are two hundred and fifty leagues of hilly Countrie. From Autiamque to Aguacay, may bee two hundred and thirtie leagues of plaine ground. From Aguacay to the Riuer of Daycao an hundred and twentie leagues, all hilly Countrie.

Ocuste.
Cutifachiqui.
Xuala.
Chiaha, Coça, and Talise.
Tascaluça.
Rio Grande.
Aquixo.
Coligoa.
Autiamque.
Aguacay.

From the Port de Spiritu Santo vnto Apalache, they trauelled from East to West, and North-west. From Cutifachiqui to Xuala from South to North. From Xuala to Coça from East to West. From Coça to Tascaluça, and to Rio Grande, as farre as the Prouince of Quizquiz and Aquixo from East to West. From Aquixo to Pacaha to the North. From Pacaha to Talla from East to West: and from Talla to Autiamque from North to South, to the Prouince of Guachoya and Daycao, &c.

This Relation of the discouery of Florida was printed in the house of Andrew de Burgos, Printer and Gentleman of the house of my Lord Cardinall the Infant. It was finished the tenth of February, in the yeare one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and seuen, in the Noble and most loyall Citie of Euora.

CHAP. III.

Diuers expeditions from Mexico and other parts of New Spaine and New Biskay, especially to the more Northerly parts of America, by diuers Spaniards in a hundred yeares space.

§. I.

The Relation of NVNNO di GVSMAN written to CHARLES the fift Emperour; translated out of RAMVSIOS third Tome, and abridged.

I Writ fom Mechuacan to your Maiestie (after I had written from Mexico) that I went thence with one hundred and fiftie horsemen, and as many footemen well armed, and with twelue small Peeces of artillery, and 7. or 8000. * Indians our friends, and all necessaries for the discouery and conquest of the Countrey from the Terlichichemechi which continue with New Spaine. I arriued at the Riuer of the purification of Saint Mary, so called, for passing it on that day. And because that Countrey was of the enemies, I determined to plant there three great Crosses, which I had carried

* Ant de Mendoza writeth to the Emperour, that hee had 14000. Indians and 400. horsemen.

Mechuacan.

Crosses erected.

Digitized by Google

carried with me, well wrought and of good proportion, which after Masse said in Procession with Trumpets, the Captaines and I carried on our shoulders, and planted one on the Riuer, and the second before a Church of the Purification, then begun to be builded, and the third before the way which I was to passe, * to the which Crosses with all deuotion wee after made due prayer. This done, the standerds of the Crosse began to be directed in the land of those infidels, which had not beene done since the Christians entred those parts. Incontinently some people met vs in peace, yeelding themselues and promising seruice. Meane while the Church was finished and walled about, that fifteene or twenty horsemen might lodge within. There Masse was said, and a Sermon was preached; after which certaine ordinances were red for good orders to be kept in the Armie. After this, on the seuenth of February possession was taken in your Maiesties name of that New Discouery, and on the foureteenth was made the request which is accustomed to be made.

* Alle quari, to or at the which.

In regard of accusations made against Caconci Lord of Mechmacan for rebellion and conspiracie to haue slaine vs, I marched against him and found the information true, besides other inormities in sacrificing Indians and Christians, as he had vsed to doe before he was a Christian, whereupon I condemned him to the fire, as may be seene in the processe made against him. Hauing executed this man and pacified the Countrie, I left a Spaniard in a fortresse there built by the Indians, and trauelled six daies in a Countrie not inhabited, three of them downe the Riuer, leauing at euery lodging place a Crosse. On the sixt day we came to the Prouince Cuinco, full of good Townes and abounding in victuals. The people had at first armed themselues for resistance, but when I sent Barim against them, they were all fled to the Mountaines. The light horse tooke some of the slowest not without making some defence. I sent them word not to be afraid, but to returne to their houses and giue their obedience, which they refusing, I marched against them with three squadrons, and sent the Ouerseer on one part, and Captaine Ognate on the other, and I was at their backes. The Ouerseer found none but women and children. Ognate incountred with about one hundred men with their Bowes and Arrowes wounded slightly two horses and three men, but many of them were slaine, others taken with women and children about fiue hundred, which I caused to be kept together, lest the Indians should sacrifice them after their wont. The Cacique was fled to the next Prouince, called Cuinaquire, of another signiorie and language. Because hee came not at my sending, I went to seeke him. Entring that Prouince where were many Townes, and great store of Maiz and Fruites, wee found many people dead, sacrificed, which had out of the former Prouince retired thither for feare of vs, with many peeces of flesh which they vse to eate. I sent many prisoners to their friends to let them see that I came not to slay them. The language of this people none of ours could vnderstand. The Ouerseer encountred three hundred armed with Bowes and Arrowes, which the day before had killed foure of our Indians: they set vpon ours singing, and killed a Horse, but hauing lost one hundred of their company, the rest escaped. I found my men cutting the Horse in peeces, that the enemies might see no signe of him, whereby they might know that a Horse could dye. I sent the Campe Master to discouer the foord: three Indians set on him, one of which had a two hand sword of wood, which gaue him two blowes, but the Indian was slaine. I moued forwards, and discouered many inhabited places. Another skirmish happened with the Indians wherein aboue one hundred of them were slaine. All the Countrie is full of Maiz, Kidney-beanes, Hens, Parrats, Palmitos: there growes much Cotten, and some shewes appeared of Gold and Siluer found with some of the inhabitants.

Caconci Lord of Mechmacan burned.

Cuindo.

Cuinquire. Wretched hollpirality.

Courageous Indian.

I procured the Cacique to come to me with all his principall men, whom I entertained with much kindnesse, and made a speech to them, giuing them to vnderstand what God was, and the Pope, and what they ought to doe to be saued: and how the King of Castile was the Minister of God in earth, and Lord of all those parts subiect to him; and that to me in his royall name they were to yeelde obedience and seruice; and that they should abstaine from sacrificing & adoration to Idols and Diuels, which they had hetherto done, because God alone was to be worshipped, feared and serued, and after him they ought to serue and obey on earth the King of Castile. The Cacique answered that till that houre hee had neuer knowne any thing of that which I had spoken, nor had euer heard of any but me that which I declared; but that he now conceiued great pleasure to haue vnderstood it, and that from henceforth he would hold for God the King of Castile, and would worship him. I answered that hee ought not so to doe, for the King of Castile was a mortall man as we our selues are, but that hee was Lord and Soueraigne ouer vs all, and giuen to vs of God to rule and gouerne vs, and we were to serue and obey him. And God aboue, which created heauen and earth, and all things visible and inuisible, is he which ought to be worshipped, feared, and serued aboue all things, forasmuch as he giueth vs, and of his hands we hold the life and being which we haue, and he is able to take it from vs at his pleasure.

Spaniſh preaching to conuert Infidels.

Indian simplicitie.

In this manner he stood aduised of that which he ought to doe, although their wit and capacitie be very small, and their will much disagreeing, by reason of their ancient customs of seruing the Diuell. But seeing all things must haue a beginning and labour, and herein especially the the grace of God is necessary and the holy Ghost to be infused; it is to be beleeued and hoped of his infinite gentlenesse and mercy, that hauing directed your Maiestie to discouer this place and conquest, in vertue thereof and good fortune, after that of God, all things shall be done prosperously, and he will suffer to giue to this Nation knowledge of the truth. And if it be not so suddenly done, yet the way shall be opened, and the Countrie conuersed in, and inhabited of Christians, which adore and laud his holy Name, where before, the Deuill was adored with so many idolatries; and the Baners of his most holy Crosse shall be fixed in all those Countries, that when he shall send his Grace, those Nations may be prepared to receiue it. I gaue to that Cacique all the people which I had taken, and they beganne to reinhabite their houses, and after a most sumptuous Crosse placed there, and possession of those Prouinces taken in your Maiesties name, Cuiseo. I departed by the way of another Prouince called Cuiseo, situate on the other side of a great Riuer issuing out of a great Lake. After a battell with this People, wherein we preuailed by our Artillerie, the Cacique sent a Messenger to me, by whom I sent him word, that we came thither to haue them our friends, and to take possession of that Countrie, in the name of the King of Castile. Hauing obtayned prouisions, and passing further, in an Iland in the Riuer happened a hard skirmish, in which diuers were hurt, many of theirs slaine and taken, and the rest fled. The last which was taken, and which fought most couragiously, was a man in habite of a woman;

Sodomite professed. which confessed, that from a childe he had gotten his liuing by that filthinesse, for which I caused him to be burned.

Returning to the Campe, I caused the principall Lords of the Countrie to come to me, and pacified them, giuing them clothes, restoring the prisoners, and bidding them returne to their habitations: giuing them to vnderstand on behalfe of the King of Castile, That he was Lord and the Minister of God in Earth, in which God, the King and all men of the world are to beleeue, to adore, feare and serue him as God alone, maker and Creator of all things: and on Earth to be vassals, and to obey the commandements of the King of Castile, as his Minister: and to mee in his Royall name, and that they should not worship Idols, nor eate mans flesh. They answered me, that so they would doe, and their sacrificing to Idols hitherto grew from hence, that they knew not what God was; and because the Deuill commanded them to obserue those formes, and desired flesh and bloud of them, giuing them to vnderstand, that he was the Lord of all the world, whereupon for feare they had committed this errour, which henceforth they would cease to doe. Great are the sinnes of all men liuing, seeing God permits so great abominations to bee committed against his diuine Maiestie, and that such a multitude of soules are lost, and remaine blinde as brute beasts,

Note well this Diuinitie. and worse: for they follow their naturall course, which these haue lost: although some not onely publish the warre which is made vpon them to be vniust, but also seeke to disturbe it, being the most worthie and holy worke, and of most merit, (with the punishing of that Nation) that nothing can be done in the seruice of God greater, howsoeuer it be done by the hands of great sinners, and especially by mee who am the greatest of all, since that nothing is hidden from his heate, and as the mercifull and giuer of all good, I hope in his infinite clemency, that he will receiue my meane desire, and small paine and labour,

Preachiag by the Sword a worthie, holy, meritorious, satisfactory worke. in diminution of my sinnes; and will permit by his infinite bountie and grace, and because your Maiestie doth all for the seruice of God which it doth, whose charge is is to guide the enterprise in such manner, that the beginning be with manifesting his Name, where before, that of the Enemie was serued wholly, and adored. Bee it knowne to your Maiestie, that whersoeuer I come, I giue all the people to vnderstand what God is, and who your Maiestie is. The Towne aboue this place or ford of the Riuer is Guarzebi. called Guanzebi, where a Crosse was planted.

Tonola a free State. Departing toward the Prouince of Tonola, I sent the Ouerseer to the Prouince of Cuynaccaro, on the other side of the Riuer. The Seniory of that Prouince (for they had no particular Lord) sent Messengers that they expected mee in peace, and would giue mee what I would, howsoeuer Coiula, Coiutla, and Cuynaccaro, the three neighbour Prouinces were foules, and resolued vpon warre, These fought with vs so valiantly, that some one Indian would turne his head against a Light-horseman, and taking his Lance with one hand, with the other would lay on him with a club which they vse; others would lay hold on the Bridles, and those which haue beene in New Spaine, and other parts, testifie that more couragious Indians haue not beene seene. They vse Bowes, Arrowes, Clubs, and two-hand Swords of wood, a Sling, and some Targets. The most of them feare the Horses, holding opinion that they would eate them, and a thousand of them haue beene afraid of three Horsemen; yet neuertheless some are thus hardy. The Countrie is temperate, they are great Sacrificers, haue Siluer, and some Gold: but I made shew not to care for it, and said I had no need of Gold, but that they should serue, and not sacrifice as before. In the place of the victorie was erected a faire Church called, The victorie of the Crosse, and a Crosse of sixtie foot long there erected. Zapatula receiued me in peace, Aximocuntla people fled, yet sent store of victuals, as did also Ixtatlan.

Cuinaccaro, Coiula, and Coiutla.

Valiant Indians.

Zapatula. Aximocuntla.

Our Indians in our march had slaine and sacrificed certaine women and children, the signes whereof I found, it being a thing impossible to remedie, notwithstanding all the punishment I inflicted, howsoeuer some say, they are good Christians. And let your Maiestie beleeue, that they doe at this present time as they did before, but secretly. And for this, and for other iust causes Indian Christianitie but in name and names.

which

which I haue written to your Maiestie, there ought not so much libertie be giuen them, nor more then that which is accustomed to their state and liuing; for to doe otherwise, is to giue occasion to them to be bad, and especially this People is of such nature, that they must be very much holden vnder, and made to feare, that they may be good Christians.

Christians for feare.

From Xalpa three Embassadors came to me, with offer of peace, subiection, and certaine Siluer plates, and an Idoll made of Cotton, and full of bloud, and a Rasor of stone in the midst, wherewith they sacrificed, which was burned in their sight, to their great amazement, who thought it would haue destroyed all. Against Mandie Thursday a Church was erected of reeds in a day, and deuout Procession was then made of more then thirtie Disciplinants. On Easter Tuesday I departed thence to Tesspano, thence by Mount Amec. to Teulinchano, a strong place, being all of stone cut round, where euery Lord of the Prouince ought to haue a house wherein to sacrifice; there had beene a great Idoll of Gold, destroyed in other warres. The Palaces were of stone engrauen, some pieces of eighteene spannes, with great Statues of men, with other things like those of Mexico. The Courts of the Palaces were spacious, and faire, with Fountaines of good water. Thence I sent Captaine Verdugo to Xaltenango, thorow a Valley of sixe leagues, but the people were fled to the Mountaines. A Crosse was planted, and Masse said for the seruice of God, there where the Deuill had so long beene serued, and had receiued so many Sacrifices. I diuided the Armie, one part to goe to Mechuacan (another Prouince, not that of New Spaine) neere to the South Sea I marched with the other to Guatatlan, and there planted a Crosse on a Hill, and thence to Tetitlan, accompanied with the Caciques of the Countrie; thence to Xalisco. Heere the way was so bad that in fifteene dayes I rode not three, and many beasts were lost.

Bloudy Idoll.

Bloudy Procession.

Teulinchan.

Xaltenango.

Mechuacan on the South Sea.

Xalisco.

I sent to the principall Lords of Xalisco, to whom I made the request accustomed. They were all retired to the Mountaines. Finding my selfe neere the Sea, I tooke possession thereof for your Maiestie. At Tepique two of the Lords of Xalisco came to me in peace, and to yeeld obedience, as three other Townes had done neere the Sea, where are said to bee Mines of Gold. There I made Officers in your Maiesties name, as being a new Discouerie and Conquest separate from New Spaine, that there might be some to receiue your Maiesties fifths. Two Crosses were erected in Xalisco and two in Tepeque, a place well watered, and very fertile. In marching from thence a great and dangerous battell was giuen vs by the Indians, wherein we obtained victorie. They wounded fiftie Horses, of which onely sixe died (one Horse I assure your Maiestie, is worth aboue foure hundred Pezos) diuers of the principall Commanders were wounded also. The next day I made a Procession with a Te Deum. Thence I passed the great Riuer of the Trinitie, to come to Omitlan, the chiefe of that Prouince. The Countrie is very hot, and the Riuer full of Crocodiles, and there are many venomous Scorpions. Here was erected one Church, and two Crosses. Aztatlan is three dayes iourney hence where they prepare to giue mee battell. From thence ten dayes further I shall goe to finde the Amazons, which some say dwell in the Sea, some in an arme of the Sea, and that they are rich, and accounted of the people for Goddesses, and whiter then other women. They vse Bowes, Arrowes and Targets: haue many and great Townes; at a certaine time admit them to accompanie them, which bring vp the males, as these the female issue, &c. From Omitlan a Prouince of Mechuacan of the greater Spaine, on the eighth of Iuly, 1530.

Tepique a new Prouince.

Amazonian Dreames.

I had thought but for prolixitie, here to haue added Aluarados Conquests the other way from Mexico, two of whose Letters are extant in Ramusio. The later of them is dated from the Citie of Saint Iago, which hee founded. Hee writes that hee was well entertained in Guatimala, and passed alongst with diuers fortunes, foure hundred leagues from Mexico conquering; and let your Lordship beleeue mee, this Countrie is better inhabited and peopled then all that which your Lordship hath hitherto gouerned. In this Prouince I haue found a Vulcan, the most dreadfull thing that euer was seene; which casteth forth stones as great as a house, burning in light flames, which falling, breake in pieces, and couer all that fiery Mountaine. Threescore leagues before wee saw another Vulcan, which sends forth a fearefull smoake, ascending vp to Heauen, and the body of the smoake encompasseth halfe a league. None drinke of the streames which runne downe from it, for the Brimstone sent. And especially there comes thence one principall Riuer, very faire, but so hot, that certaine of my companie were not able to passe it, which were to make out-roades into certaine places; and searching a Ford, found another cold Riuer running into it, and where they met together, the Ford was temperate and passable. I beseech your Lordship to grant mee the fauour to bee Gouernour of this Citie, &c. From Saint Iago, July 28. 1524.

Pet. Aluarados Letters to Cortes which hath sent him on this Discouery and Conquest. Two most terrible Vulcans.

§. II.

The Voyages of Frier Marco de Niça, Don Fr. Vasquez de Coronado, Don Antonio de Espeio, and diuers into New Mexico, and the adioyning Coasts and Lands.

Lop. Gomara. hist. gen. c. 212.

THere arose some strife betwixt Don Antonio de Mendoza Vice-roy of New Spaine, and Cortes, each striuing to exceed the other in New Discoueries, and complaining of each other to the Emperour. Whiles Cortez went to that end into Spaine, Mendoza hearing somewhat by Dorantez, one of Naruaez his companions in the former inland Discoueries from Florida, sent both Frier Marco de Niça, with Steph. a Negro of Dorantez, and afterwards Captaine Francis Vasquez de Coronado, by Land as likewise Ferdinando Alarchon by Sea. Cortez also sent Francis Ulloa with a Fleet of three ships for discouerie of the same Sea, commonly called the South Sea. The Voyages Ramusio hath published at large in Italian, and Master Hakluyt out of him in English. I shall borow leaue to collect out of them and Gomara, and F. Iuan Gonzales de Mendoza, and others, some breefe heads of things agreeing to our purpose for the better knowledge of the Northerne America.

Topira.

Francis Vasquez de Coronado Gouernour of Nueua Galicia, Anno 1539. writes, that hee arriued in the Prouince of Topira, where the Indians were fled into the Mountaines for feare of the Christians. They haue houses of stone, store of Gold, Emeralds, and other Iewels; haue strong armour of Siluer fashioned in shapes of beasts, worship herbs and birds, and sing songs to them. Neere thereto is another Prouince where the people goe naked. Their Priests which they call Chichimechas keepe in the woods without houses, and eate things giuen of almes by the people. Both men and women goe naked; the men tye their priuie member to the knee; they haue Temples couered with straw, the windowes full of dead mens skulls. They haue in a ditch before the Temple the figure of a Serpent of diuers metals, with his tayle in his mouth. One euery yeere is sacrificed by lot, crowned with flowers and layd in that ditch, and fire put to him; which his death he takes patiently, and the yeere following is worshipped with hymnes, and after that his head is set vp with the rest. They sacrifice their prisoners burning them in another ditch without such ceremonies.

Impious pieties.

F. Marco de Nigas Voyage to Cebola.

Frier Marco de Niça went from Saint Michael in Culuacan, two hundred leagues from Mexico, with Stephen the Negro, and other Indians, and came to Petatlan, and thence passed a Desart foure dayes, and came to certaine Indians, which made much of him, sought to touch his garments, and called him Hayota, that is, A man comne from Heauen. Thence he trauelled to Vacapa, fortie leagues from the Sea (of California) and thence to Ceuola, which in thirty dayes iourney: hee learned that the people by the Sea haue store of Pearles, and Targets of Kow-hides. By the way he had vnderstanding of the Kingdomes of Totonteac and Acus. They shewed him an hide halfe as big againe as the hide of an Oxe, and said, it was the skinne of a beast which had but one horne vpon his fore-head, bending toward his breast, and that out of the same goeth a point forward with which he breakes any thing that he runneth against. The colour of the hide was as of a Goat-skinne, the haire a finger thicke. He passed thorow two Desarts. The men of Ceuola slue Stephen the Negro. Frier Marke went within sight of it, and sayth it is a faire Citie seated at the foot of a Hill. Vpon this newes Captaine Vasquez aforesaid in Aprill, 1540. trauelled with 400. Horsemen, and a great Armie of Spaniards and others; many of which died of famine both Indians and Horses. The wayes were so rough, that the Sheepe and Dambes which they carried for their prouision lost their hoofes. The sixe and twentieth of May hee arriued in the Valley of Coracones, fiue dayes iourney from the Westerne Sea, and thence hee went to Chichiloale, and with much trauaile to Ceuola, which is the name of a Prouince in which are seuen Cities neere together: their houses are of stone foure or fiue stories high; they vse Ladders in stead of staires, and haue Cellers vnder the ground made for Winter in manner of Stoues. The seuen Cities are but small Townes with in foure leagues together. In one were two hundred houses compassed with walls, and some three hundred other vnwalled. They goe for the most part naked, vse painted Mantles, seeme not witty enough to build such houses; haue good quantitie of Turquesses, some Emeralds also and Granates, great Gunnes Corkes; and season (in Summer) as in Mexico; many beasts, as Tigres, Beares, Lions, Porkespicks, and certaine Sheepe as big as Horses, with very great hornes and little tayles. I haue seene their hornes so great that it is a wonder. I haue seene the heads of wilde Goats, pawes of Beares and skinnes of wilde Boares. There is game of Deere, Ounces, and very great Stags, Hares, Conies. He sent the Vice-roy an embroidered garment of Needle-worke wrought by those Indians, and clothes painted by them with the pictures of the beasts of the Countrey. It is very cold in Winter, although it be in 37. degrees and a halfe. The snow continueth seuen moneths, in so much that the people vse furred Mantles, and other winter prouisions. The Souldiers seeing little here to bee had, were offended with the Friers which had commended Sinola, and loth to returne emptie to Mexico, they proceeded to Acuco, and Cardenas with his troope of Horse went thence to the Sea, Vasquez with the

An vnknowne kinde of Vnicorne.

Expedition of Don Francisco Vasquez.

Ill wayes.

Cibola.

Sheepe as big as Horses, with huge hornes.

Indian emprotderie.

* I haue a Map made in Mexico, 1585. which placeth Cibola in 30. and an halfe, and describeth in New Mexico, on Rio del Norte about 50. Townes with Spanish names, standing neere each other, from 32. to 33. and a little more. But the Prouince of Cibola he maketh to be another.

Digitized by Google

the rest to Tignex, on the banke of a great Riuer. There they had newes of Axa and Quiuira. They heard of a bearded rich King also called Tatarrax, whom they would visit; they burne a Towne, and lost thirtie Horses in their way, and spent 45. dayes in siege of a Towne, which dranke snowe in stead of water and burned their goods to preuent the Spanish spoyle, then issuing by force with their wiues and children, few escaping: and diuers Spaniards alſo were slaine, and 80. wounded, besides Horses. They burnt the Towne and marched to Cicuic, horse and men passing ouer the Riuer vpon the Ice being in 37. degrees: and foure leagues from thence met with a new kind of Kine wilde and fierce, of which they slue 80. the first day for their prouision. From Cicuic they went to Quiuira neere 300. leagues, thorow woodlesse Plaines, making heapes of Oxe-dung for way-markes against their returne. All that Plaine is as full of bunch-backed Kine as Serena in Spaine of Sheepe, and no other people but the Herd-men. It hailed one day stones as big as Oranges *. At length they came to Quiuira and there found King Tatarrax, a hoary man, naked and with a brasse Iewell at his necke; whereat not a little vexed to see themselues gulled with reports of riches, and the Crosse worshipped, and Queene of Heauen, of which they saw no signe, they returned to Mexico, and there arriued in March, 1542. Vasquez fell from his Horse in Tignex, and withall out of his wits.

Strange Kine.

Great haile.
* Melangole.

Quiuira is in 40. degrees temperate, well watered, and hath store of fruits. They are apparelled with Oxe hides, and Deeres skinne. They saw ships on the coast with Alcatrazes of Gold and Siluer in their Prowes, which they esteemed to bee of China, making signes that they had sayled thirtie dayes. Some Friers returned to Quiuira, and were slaine. As for those bunch-backed Kine, they are the food of the Natiues, which drinke the bloud hot, and eate the fat, and often ruine the flesh raw. They wander in companies, as the Alarbes (and Tartars) following the pastures according to the seasons. That which they eate not raw, they rost, or warme rather at a fire of Oxe-dung, and holding the flesh with his teeth, cut it with Rasors of stone. These Oxen are of the bignesse of our Bulls, but their hornes lesse, with a great bunch on their fore-shoulders, and more haire on their fore-parts then behind, which is like wooll; a mane like a Horses on their backe bone, and long haire from the knees downward, with store of long haire at the chinne and throat, a long flocke also at the end of the males tailes. The Horses fled from them, of which they slue some, being enraged. They are meat, drinke, shooes, houses, fire, vessels, and their Masters whole substance. Other creatures as big as Horses the Spaniards for their fine wooll called Sheepe; one of their hornes ordinarily weighed fiftie pounds. There are also great Dogs which will fight with a Bull, able to carrie fiftie pounds weight in their huntings and remouals.

Quiuira described out of Gomara.

Ships seene.

The bunch-backed Oxen described.

Sheepe with hornes of fifty pounds.

Great Dogs: such the Sauages had in Frobushers voyage.

Anno 1581. Frier Augustine Rodz, with two other Friers, and eight Souldiers trauelled from the Mines of Saint Barbara to Los Tignex, two hundred and fifty leagues Northwards, where, vpon occasion of one of the Friers being slaine, the Souldiers returned. The two Friers and a Mestizo stayed. Whereupon the Franciscans carefull of their two Brethren, procured Antonio de Espeio, a rich Mexican, with Frier Bernardine Beltran, and others, licensed to follow him to set forth on the said Discouerie, in Nouember, Anno 1582. with an hundred and fifteene Horses, and store of prouisions. Hee passed the Conchos, and the Passaguates, and Tobosos, and Iumanes, (finding many Siluer Mines in the way) and then came to people, which for want of Language they could not name, and heard by one of the Conchos, of a great Lake, and Townes neere it, with houses of three or foure stories, but went not thither. Fifteene dayes they trauelled thorow Woods of Pine-trees, and two thorow Woods of Poplars and Walnuts, still keeping by the Riuer of the North, as they called it, till they came to a Countrie which they called New Mexico. They came to ten Townes situate on both sides the Riuer, which vsed them kindly. Their houses are of foure stories, well built, with Stoues for Winter: their apparel of Cotton, and Deeres skinnes; both men and women ware Boots and Shooes with soles of Neats leather. Each house had an Oratorie for the Deuill, where they set him meate, for whose ease (as they say) they erect Chappels also in the high-way. Thence they came to Tignex in which were sixteene Townes: in Poala they had slaine the two Friers, and now therefore fled to the Mountaines. They found many Hennes in the Countrey, and many metals. Hearing that there were rich Townes Eastwards, they trauelled two dayes, and found eleuen Townes, and (as they thought) fortie thousand people. There are signes of rich Mines. They heard of a Prouince Quires, sixe leagues higher vp the Riuer, which they visited, and found fiue Townes. They saw there a Pie in a Cage, and certaine tirasols or shadowes, such as they vse in China, in which were painted the Sunne, Moone and Starres. They found themselues in 37. degrees and a halfe. Fourteene leagues more to the North, they came to the Cuames, which had fiue Townes; the greatest was Cia, with eight Market places, the houses plaistered and painted with diuers colours, the people many and more ciuill then any they had seene.

Antonio de Espeio his New Mexico.

Rodz his Voyage to Tignex.

Neats leather Shooes.

Friers slaine.

Hennes many.

Quires.

Painted Vmbrellas.

Note the neerenesse of Virginia.

They trauelled thence North-westward to a Countrie which had seuen great Townes, and in them thirtie thousand soules. Fifteene leagues further Westward they came to Acoma, a Towne of sixe thousand persons, seated on a Rocke fifty paces high, without any passage to it but by ſtaires hewen in the Roéke; all their water was kept in Ciſternes. They trauelled hence foure and twentie leagues Weſtward to Zuny or Cibola, where Vaſquez had beene, and erected Croſſes, ſtill ſtanding. Three Indians of his Armie were ſtill aliue here, which told Eſpeio, of a great Lake ſixtie dayes iourney thence, vpon the bankes whereof were many Townes which had ſtore of Gold. Whereupon, the reſt returning, hee with nine companions determined to goe thither, and came to a populous Prouince, called Mohotze, and being well entertained, hee perſwaded the Indians to build a Fort, to ſecure them from the Horſes, which hee ſaid would otherwiſe eate them; which they did. Here he left ſome of his companie, and went to diſcouer certaine rich Mines, whereof he had heard, fiue and fortie leagues Weſtward; which hee found rich of Siluer. He had further intelligence alſo of that great Lake, and hauing trauelled twelue leagues to the Hubates and Tamos, populous Prouinces, being ſo few, they returned in Iuly, 1583. by another way, downe a Riuer called, De las Vacas, or Of Kine, an hundred and twenty leagues, ſtill meeting with ſtore of thoſe cattell, and thence to Conchos, and ſo to the Valley of Saint Bartholmew in New Biſcay.

Acoma.

Digitized by Google

Mohotze.

Pretie policy.

10

Canos Letter is in Mast. Hakl.

Bartholmew Cano writ from Mexico, in May, 1590. that Rodrigo del Rio, Gouernour of New Biſcay was ſent by the Vice-roy with fiue hundred Spaniards to the conqueſt of Cibola.

Francis de Vlloas Voyage in the South Sea. California.

NOw for Cortez his three ſhips, they ſet forth from Acapulco, the eighth of Iuly, 1539. and ſayled alongſt the coaſt Northwards to Cape Roxo, (as they ſtiled it, and ſo to the Riuer of Saint Croſſes, which coaſt ſome thought to bee part of the Continent; others to bee but broken Lands or Ilands: and ſayled ſo farre in the ſame, that I am loth to follow them, the particulars being both in Ramuſio, and Maſter Hakluyts. Fernando Alarchon, Anno 1540. was ſent by Mendoza the Vice-roy, with two ſhips, who ſayth, hee went to the bottome of the Bay (of California) and ſayled vp the Riuer farre into the Countrie. I remit the deſirous Reader to the Authours aforeſaid. To mee, Ulloa the Marqueſſes Generall ſeemes to make California nothing but Ilands, and to haue ſayled within a great way, and after out of them: this other æmulous Diſcouerer would ſeeme to finde it a Bay, and therefore goeth vp the Riuer; later Maps make it an Iland, as wee haue ſaid; a Letter 1595. from Los Angelos, calleth them Ilands, and ſayth, they are rich, and that the Vice-roy ſent to conquer them. But I am Sea-ſicke, and therefore returne to our Land-diſcouerers. In which wee haue a Ieſuite firſt, to entertaine you, and after that, a Letter of later Newes of Onnates Diſcoueries in thoſe Northerne parts of America. All which may be of vſe one day, when our Virginian Plantation (which bluſheth to ſee ſo little done after eighteene yeeres continued habitation, with ſo much coſt, and ſo many liues and liuelihoods ſpent thereon) ſhall lift vp her head with more viue alacritie, and ſhake her glorious lockes, and diſparkle her triumphant lookes, thorow the inland Countries to the Weſterne Ocean. And indeed for Virginias ſake wee haue ſo long held you in Spaniſh diſcourſes, of whoſe Acts this Chapter had beene the laſt, but that the leauen which leaueneth in ſo great part the Spaniſh lumpe may be knowne, to awaken Engliſh vigilance to preuent it in themſelues (they had a faire caueat 1588.) and to auoide the like with others, I ſhall adde to theſe their Diſcoueries a Spaniſh Trauueller, Frier, Biſhop, to diſcouer their Diſcouerers; which ſhall caſt vp the American parcels, the particular relations of which you haue had already, and yeeld you the totall ſumme for a concluſion to our Spaniſh-Indian Peregrinations.

F. Alarchons Voyage.

Letter in Maſter Hakl.

§. III.

Extracts out of certaine Letters of Father Martin Perez of the Societie of Ieſus, from the new Miſſion of the Prouince of Cinoloa to the Fathers of Mexico, dated in the moneth of December, 1591. With a Letter added, written 1605. of later Diſcoueries.

Tanteca. Iuly 6. 1590.

SInce my laſt Letters, dated the ſixth of Iuly, among the Tanteca, on which day wee came into this Prouince of Cinoloa, being guided by the Gouernour Roderigo del Rio, we paſſed and trauelled through diuers Caſtles, Countrie Villages, Mines of Metall, Shepheards houſes, Townes of Spaniards, and certaine Signiories, helping our neighbours by our accuſtomed duties, ſo that wee were alwaies full of buſineſſe. Wee paſſed ouer in eight dayes the rough and hard and painefull Mountaine Tepeſnan, ſeeing no liuing creature, ſaue certaine Fowles. The cauſe whereof is, the force of certaine Muskitos, which trouble Horſes, whereof is exceeding abundance in all the Mountaine, which were moſt noiſome to our Horſes. There met vs certaine Cuimechi, which are warlike Indians, which offered vs bountifully ſuch as they had, without doing vs any harme. There are almoſt an infinite number of theſe, which wander diſperſed vp and downe, doing nothing elſe but hunt and ſeeke their food. And it was told vs, that three thouſand of them were aſſembled in a part of the hill, which beſought the Gouernour, Tepeſnan a mightie high Mountaine.

Cuimechi warlike Indians.

Digitized by Google

Gouernour, that he would cause them to be taught and instructed in the Christian Faith. Their Minister, which was but onely one, came to visite vs. There met vs also a certaine Spanish Captaine, which had the gouernment of six Castles or Countrie Villages in a part of the Mountaine, who knowing well enough what the societie ment by these missions, wrote vnto the father Visitor, requesting him to grant him one of the Fathers, by whose trauell twenty thousand soules might be instructed, which he would recommend vnto him.

These and other Villages we passed by not without griefe, because it was resolued already among vs, that we should stay in no other place, but in this Prouince. A few dayes before our comming thither we wrote to six or seuen Spaniards, which dwell there without any Priest, and heard Masse onely once a yeare, to wit, when any Priest, dwelling thirtie or forty leagues off, came vnto them, to confesse and absolue them being penitent; who being accompanied with most of the chiefe Indians, met vs with exceeding great ioy and gladnesse, aboue twenty leagues distant from their dwellings, and accompanied vs vnto the second Riuer of this Prouince, wherein the towne of Saint Philip and Iacob standeth. This Prouince is from Mexico aboue three hundred leagues, and is extended towards the North. On the right hand it hath the Mountaines of the Tepessanes, on the left hand the Mediterrane Sea, or the Gulfe of California: on another part it stretcheth euen to Cibola and California, which are Prouinces toward the West, very great and well inhabited. On one side, which regardeth the North, new Mexico is but two dayes iourney distant from the vttermost Riuer of this Prouince (as we were entormed by the Gouernour) which is so famous and renowned, and so full of Pagan superstition, whereof diuers haue often written.

The towne of Saint Philip and Iacob on the second Riuer of Cinoloa. It is but 190. leagues indeed from Mexico.

Often writing of new Mexico.

They measure and diuide the Prouince of Cinaloa with eight great Riuers which runne through the same. The reason of that diuision is this, because all the Castels and Villages of the inhabitants are setled neere the bankes and brinkes of the Riuers, which are replenished with fish, and which in short space doe fall into the Mediterrane Sea, or Gulfe of California. The soyle is apt for tillage and fruitfull, and bringeth forth such things as are sowne in it. The ayre is cleere and wholesome. The Pesants and husband men reape twice a yeare, and among other things, store of Beanes, Gourds, Maiz, and such kinde of Pulse, whereof wee and they eate so plentifully, that there is no speech of the rising of the price of things, or of Famine; nay rather a great part of the old crop perisheth oftentimes, and they cast away their old Maiz, to make roome for the new. They haue great store of Cotten Wooll, whereof they make excellent cloathes, wherewith they are apparelled. Their apparell is a peece of cloath tyed vpon their shoulders, wherewith as with a cloak they couer their whole body, after the manner of the Mexicans.

Cotten woolle.

Their apparel.

True it is, that though they be all workemen, yet for the most part of the yeare they are not couered, but goe naked; yet all of them weare a broad girdle of the said Cotten cloath cunningly and artificially wrought, with figures of diuers colours in the same, which the shels of Cockles and Oysters ioyned artificially with bones doe make. Moreouer, they thrust many threds through their eares, whereon they hang earerings; for which purpose they bore the eares of their children as soone as they be borne in many places, and hang earerings, round Stones, and Corall in them, so that each eare is laden with fiftie of these Ornaments at least, for which cause they alwayes sleepe not lying on their sides, but with their face vpward. The women are decently couered from their waste downeward, being all the rest naked. The men as well as the women weare long haire; the women haue it hanging downe their shoulders, the men often bound vp and tyed in diuers knots: they thrust Corals in it, adorned with diuers feathers and cockle shels, which adde a certaine beautie and ornament to the head. They weare many round Beades of diuers colours about their neckes. They are of great stature, and higher then the Spaniards by a hand-full, so that as wee sate vpright vpon our horses, without standing on tiptoe, they easily could embrace vs. They are valiant and strong, which the warres which they had with the Spaniards doe easily shew, wherein though they sustained no small damages, yet were they not vnreuenged, nor without the bloud of their aduersaries. When they would fight resolutely for their vttermost libertie, they denounced and appointed the day of battell. Their weapons are Bowes and poysoned Arrowes, and a kinde of clubbe of hard wood, wherewith they neede not to strike twice to braine a man. They vse also certaine short iauelins made of red wood, so hard and sharpe, that they are not inferiour to our armed speares. And as fearefull and terrible as they be to their enemies, so quiet and peaceable are they among themselues and their neigbours, and you shall seldome finde a quarrellour or contentious person. The Spaniards after certaine conflicts at length made friendship with them, leauing their Countrie to them: but those eight Spaniards, whom I mentioned before, liue quietly among them: and though they be called Lords, yet are they contented with such things as the Indians giue them, offering no violence nor molestation to any man.

Their great Stature.

Their valour.

Their weapons.

Eight Spaniards liuing in Cinaloa.

Vpon our comming into these Countries, the Indians stirred vp with the fame of new men, came by flockes vnto our lodging, and witnessed their loue, with exceeding great signification of good will, with salutation and words, which yet we vnderstood not, staying so long with vs till they were friendly dismissed by vs: neither neglected they the opportunitie offred vpon the first occasion, to shew how greatly they affected the Christian religion; for assoone as we entred into the first Villages of this Prouince, the day following there assembled a great number of old and yong folkes to be baptized, which was a great comfort vnto vs; we christened full foure-scoore boyes and girles; we raised the mindes of the rest with good hopes, that assoone as they were instructed with necessary doctrine, they should be partakers of the same Sacrament. Wee found foure hundred Christians, which hauing bin baptized by the Franciscane Fathers, which came into these parts twelue yeares past, when at length they were slaine by the Inhabitants were left destitute of a teacher; neither can all of them be instructed by vs, vnlesse some helpe be sent vs; for besides that the people are many, they also differ in language and tongues, although there be two chiefe and most generall.

Digitized by Google

Readinesse to heare the Gospell.

Foure hundred baptized by Franciscans, (slaine there) twelue yeares before.

Difference of language.

We learne two tongues with great celeritie, which albeit they be not so vulgar and generall, yet are they more necessary: and we haue profited so much in three moneths, that wee could easily vnderstand the Indians when they spake. Wherefore wee began to instuct in the Catechisme, and with godly speeches to exhort the Nation, to keepe them within the compasse of their duetie, and to deliuer them of all feare: when they see that they receiue of vs the seruice and formes of praying to God, not in a strange but in their owne language; the which together with the Catechisme they learne with great care and shortnesse of time. And now wee haue Christened aboue sixteene hundred, as well those of yeares as boyes; besides those foure hundred, which being christened by the aforesaid Fathers, almost in their infancie, and fully twelue yeares neglected, had scarsely any shew of Christendome, but were married with Pagans after their Countrey fashion. From many of them we tooke away their Concubines, because such is the custome of this Nation, that they take as many as they are able to keepe. Many of them we likewise married.

Instruction in the Catechisme

And why doe you teach Babylon, or to babble in a strange tongue here, instead of praying?

Sixteene hundred newly Christened.

Concubines.

There are also many more which desire to be baptized, but since the people be exceeding many, and the workemen but two onely, we are not able to sustaine the labour. The last of Nouember I visited the people of this tract or Riuer, and in the space of twelue or thirteene miles, there are foure thousand Indians at the least, which vse Bowes and Arrowes, besides women and children. Among these are certaine of bad name and fame, which haue familiarity and acquaintance with the Diuell, with whom they commit abominable and very horrible sinnes.

Familiarity with the Diuel

Many of them fled into the Mountaines, that their children might not be Christened, because the Diuell had reported abroad, that all they should die that were Baptized. Notwithstanding in seuen or eight dayes we Christened two hundred and fortie children. Necessitie enforced me to leaue them, and to goe to another place, to helpe our neighbours: yet I am greatly desirous to returne moued with a certaine pitie, because I see this people so strongly possessed by the Diuell being vtterly ignorant of the faith.

240. children Christened.

There are now thirteene Churches in these three Riuers, besides those which are erected by little and little, neither haue we any more holy Vestments for them, then those which we carry about with vs, and one other furniture of an Altar, which belongeth to the Spaniards: we haue neuer a Bell in any of these Churches. We furnished an Alter with one Crosse and certaine paper Images, which were brought hither from Culhuacan, because we want other furniture, which we looke from your Reuerencies, and it will be very profitable, since this Nation is so delighted with outward ornaments.

Thirteene Churches in three Riuers.

Culhuacan.

We celebrated the dedication of a Church at Petatlan, on the day of the conception of the Virgin, the Mother of God. In the same I set vp a certaine small Image consecrated to the conception of the blessed Virgin: We went on Procession, wherein the Boyes sang the Te Deum laudamus in the vulgar language: I added a Prayer, and then red Masse, because the singers are yet ignorant of Song, and can sing nothing else but Amen, with a rude and vntuned voyce. Many of the Pagans were present, which were inuited to this holy day from other places, and were almost amazed beholding these first beginnings, wishing that the like solemnitie might be kept in their Villages. As farre as hitherto we are able to gather, the Indians the inhabitants of these and the neighbour Pagan Castles, where there is greater store of people, and lesse diuersitie of languages, are quicke and prompt, tractable, and of easier conuersion, then any that I haue hitherto seene or knowne. I could wish that I might sometime liue priuately with my selfe, but such is the concourse of commers, that they loue me not thus quiet, and though I be silent, yet they minister diuers speeches, inquiring of our things, and rehearsing their owne, and come to vs in the night to prayer. They are ingenious and docile, although they haue no teacher, by whose instruction this force of nature should be exercised. They liue in Castles and Countrey villages, in houses ioyned neere the one to the other, and builded of chalke and timber, which they adore with Mats and couerings of reedes.

Petatlan in 25. degrees and a halfe.

The Christianity there taught.

Their houses

In the marriages which they make, when they take many wiues, it seemeth not inconueni-

ent

Digitized by Google

ent or indecent vnto them, to take their ſiſter, mother, or daughter, becauſe they thinke that this maketh much for domeſticall peace, and that thereby all emulation may be auoided. And though they make no account of affinitie, yet they haue exceeding great regard of conſanguinitie. They loue their children moſt tenderly for a certaine time, and teach them nothing elſe but ſuch things as they know themſelues, and neuer beate them nor chaſtiſe them for any thing, and ſo they liue like beaſts. They marrie them at their time; and this is the forme of their marriage: The Parents of each partie meete together, and after conferences had betweene them, they dance according to their Countrie cuſtome, and giuing hands returne home; if the Bridegroome or Bride be vnder age, they ſtay certaine moneths and ſometime a yeare, neuer ſeeing one the other: afterward at time conuenient the Father of the ſpouſe giueth an houſe to his daughter and ſon in law, with furniture thereto belonging.

Their plurality and inceſts in marriages.

The bad education of their children.

Forme of Marriages.

They alſo make the Bridegroome a Knight, if he be of a worthy familie, with diuers rites, whereof theſe be the chiefeſt ceremonies: They deliuer him a Bowe, and inſtruct him how to vſe his new weapons; and to ſhew a ſigne of his induſtrie and abilitie, he is turned out to ſome yong Lyon or wilde beaſt, which when he hath killed, he is aduanced to ſome honour and dignitie, whereby he excelleth others which are not Knights. Among the things belonging to policie, this is one which they doe obſerue; that they adopt other mens children for their owne; but this adoption into another familie hath very ſeuere and dangerous ceremonies, for they thruſt a ſticke into their mouthes into the bottome of their throates, wherewith they are almoſt choaked; if it fall out well, they vomit vp all the meate in their ſtomacke, and ſo they paſſe ouer into the right of another man. Whatſoeuer time remaineth from labour and trauaile they ſpend in a play, which is like to Dice, but conſiſteth of diuers ſignes. They play with exceeding great moderation and patience of minde, being moſt cunning in this kinde of ſport, no oath is heard among them, nor any contentions or brabling word, though they looſe their apparell and all that they haue, and goe home naked, as ſometime it falleth out.

Their forme of making Knights.

Adoption.

Their quietneſſe and kinde play.

When they be ſicke, if the diſeaſe be ſore and dangerous, they digge a place for their buriall, and ſometimes it ſtandeth fiue or ſixe dayes open, which cuſtome was very profitable to a certaine woman; for when I came into a certaine Village, and ſaw the ground digged very deeply, knowing what the matter was, I came vnto her lying on her Couch and ſicke, and hauing inſtructed her in the Catechiſme which I had written in the vulgar Tongue, in the principles of Chriſtian Religion, I baptiſed her, but ſhe recouered. Now the cauſe why they open the places of their burials is this, That preſently they may couer the bodie or aſhes of him that is dead (for ſomtimes they burne the bodies with all the houſe and houſehold ſtuffe.) They ſprinkle the Sepulchre with a certaine duſt, whereof they make a drinke, and bring meate with them, and after they haue wept ouer the Graue, they make themſelues drunke, the Kinſfolke of the dead making a Feaſt for them that doe aſſiſt them. And theſe be their Funerals.

Their burials.

The Vicar of the Church of Culiacan, which is fortie two leagues from Cinoloa, where the foreſaid Fathers liue, in his Letters ſent to a certaine friend writeth after this manner: In Cinaloa the Fathers labour painfully in the Lord in conuerting the Indians vnto the Faith ſo fruitfully and happily, that we all hold it for a Miracle. Neither can it be beleeued, both with what celeritie they haue learned and ſpeak the tongue of that Countrie, and with what facilitie and contentment. The Inhabitants come to bee baptized, and deſire to bee inſtructed in the Articles of our faith. Doubtleſſe it is the worke of God; wherefore the Diuine Maieſtie doth fauour and promote the ſame.

A Letter written from Valladolid by LVDOVICVS TRIBALDVS TOLETVS to Maſter RICHARD HAKLVYT, tranſlated out of Latine, touching IVAN de ONATE his Diſcoueries in new Mexico, fiue hundred leagues to the North from the old Mexico.

VVHen you ſhall ſee the Engliſh returned home out of our Spaine, and can finde no Letters ſent vnto you from vs, perhaps, and that worthily you will accuſe vs of breach of our friendſhip, and alſo as little mindfull of our promiſe. Yet we as free from this fault ſalute you moſt willingly. For it is not long ſince we arriued here, that is to ſay in this Court, a little after the departure of your Countrimen into England. Yet we made our iourney by Sea and by Land indifferent pleaſantly and according to our deſire. After we had reſted our ſelues a ſmall while, we deſired nothing more then to viſit Andrew Garſia Ceſpedes, a man for many reſpects linked vnto vs in moſt ſtraight bands of friendſhip. He greatly reioyced of your good will toward him: And ſhewed me a certaine briefe yet very perſpicuous Relation of things atchieued by Don Iuan de Onate, among the Indians of New Mexico.

Their burials.

Don Iuan de Onate his firſt relation.

For therein is written, that he departed from old Mexico in the yeere 1599. with an Armie and carriages of fiue thouſand men, in which number boyes, women, youngmen and Souldiers

5000. men 1599

are

500. leagues trauell.

are included. He carried also great store of victuals with him, flockes of Sheepe and Goates, Herds of Oxen, and all things necessarie for life, also Horses and Armour, and other things which in these kind of Expeditions ought to be prouided. Therefore hauing trauelled through diuers Countries fiue hundred leagues, hee found diuers Nations by the way, noble for their builded Townes and reasonable ciuill manners. All which he receiued into the friendship of the King of Spaine, and they openly testified the same by publike instruments, and giuing of their faith. And when with his company he came vnto a Towne very strong by situation of the place, built vpon a most high and mightie Rocke, and was freely receiued by the Inhabitants, giuing their right hands to each other, they courteously supplied them with all things necessarie for their relieue, and promised within a while after that they would furnish them with more, sufficient to make a very long iournie. When Onate had waited for this thing, at the day appointed hee sent his Nephew by his sister with a few Souldiers, who entring the Towne, came into the Market place, where almost all the multitude of the Townesmen were assembled together. Now while hee with his company was busie in buying of things, suddenly the Traitours from all parts rushed vpon him and his fellowes vnawares, and by most wicked treason cut off the Captaines head and sixe others; the rest being wounded hardly escaped by flight from so great a multitude that assaulted them, yet some of the enemies were slaine and thrust through. When speedily the fame hereof came to Onate, taking with him a choice number of Souldiers, in a great furie he came vnto the Towne, besiged it, and after a long fight by maine force he tooke the same, slue most part, tooke the rest, burnt the Towne and razed it to the ground, that no tokens might remaine of so great a wickednesse committed against him. The Townes name was Acoma: and none of our men was slaine in the siege thereof.

Treacherous people.

Their Towne taken. Acoma is in 32. degrees, and two third parts

After this he easily proceeded forward on his iournie as he did before, till he came to a mightie great Citie: he inforced this City with the villages adioyning to sweare obedience to the King of Spaine, not altogether vnwilling, yet feared by the example and ruine of the towne that was destroyed. From hence he came to a greater Citie, which likewise after hee had obtained it by great friendship he sent certain men from thence to search out the oxen of Cibola, long since known by the report of one, (to wit of Vasquez de Coronado) whether they were such indeed or no. Who when they had found a great multitude of these oxen, and would compasse them about, and force them into certaine inclosures or toiles, their enterprize preuailed but a little: they are so wild and so swift. Yet after they had killed many of them, bringing store of them with them, as though they had bin Deere, returning to their company and General, to the great admiration of all men, they declared the wildnesse and innumerable number of these Oxen.

A mighty city.

Another greater Citie. Cibola is in 33. degrees.

The Towne of Saint Iohn.

Sundry Mynes of gold and siluer newly found.

A second Discouerie 1602.

The most famous Riuer of the North discouered. Antonie de Espio vno Rio mas que otro leguas de ancho.

The Lake of Conibas. Auia vna lagnua o lago muy guade. Anton. de Espeio.

A faire and goodly Citie.

A fterward employing of themselues to keepe those things which they had gotten, they builded a Towne, which they called Saint Iohns Towne, and entring into very great friendship with the people which they had lately discouered, after they had found certaine very rich Mynes of gold and siluer, being laden with store of other riches, they determined to liue pleasantly and quietly, and to end their trauels, with singular profit of the Inhabitants in the Christian Religion, and abiuring of their Idols, which in former time they worshipped most religiously.

At length within these two yeeres, leauing his fellowes there, Onate vndertooke a new Discouerie toward that most famous Riuer of the North, which at length he discouered, being euerywhere courteously entertained by the Inhabitants. At last he came to the Lake whereof long since, haue gone many reports. This is the Lake of Conibas, on the brinke whereof hee beheld a farre off a Citie seuen leagues long, and aboue two leagues broad. The houses of this Citie were separated the one from the other, and trimly and artificially builded, adorned with many trees and most goodly Gardens; and often diuided with streames running betweene them. Yet none of the Inhabitants did appeare. Therefore being not furnished with a sufficient Armie, he kept his Souldiers about him in a strong place, yet he sent certaine Horsemen into the Towne to view it: who after they had ridden by a certaine space through certaine exceeding faire streets of the Citie, and could see none of the Citizens, at length came to an exceeding great Market place, which was filled with an exceeding great company of men, fortified with Rampiers and other fortifications in manner of a Fortresse. Therefore perceiuing themselues to be vnequall to so infinite a number, they retired backe to their fellowes without attempting any thing, and so returned home to their owne houses vnder the conduct of Onate, defferring the assaulting of so great a Towne vntill a more conuenient time: and now they keepe those places diligently, which they haue alreadie found, and doing violence to none of the Inhabitants, they liue in all happinesse and prosperitie.

Westerne coast of America discouered neere Cape California, which it seemes at this time was more perfectly discouered to be an Iland, as you see in M. Brigs his Map.

Moreouer, other newes is brought from New Spaine, to wit, that by the commandement of the Vice-roy, the Coasts of the South Sea toward Cape Mendocino are discouered, and that exceeding faire and large Hauens are found neere the Californias, which hitherto no man knew, and that Castles are there to be builded and fortified, fit to withstand the force of the enemie: which I haue painted with the precise longitudes and latitudes, annexed vnto them.

There is no newes come of the Voyage to the Iland lately found out toward Nona Guinea. If any newes come, I will carefully aduertise you thereof.

Digitized by Google

It remaineth, that I speake somewhat of the instruction which I promised you, and now send vnto you: to wit, that the same was sent to the West Indies, and that according to the precepts therein contained, all things are obserued very exactly, and written to the Councell of the Indies: and that Cespedes our friend hauing diligently read ouer these Writings, hath written an excellent Volume; but he hath not obtained leaue to publish the same: for they will not haue all these things particularly to come to light.

And these be the things which I now thought good to write vnto you, my Haklyt, meaning to haue written more, if there had beene any fresher things to haue written of. Neither haue I yet sought out all those that might informe me of these new Discoueries: for I could not yet doe it by reason of the shortnesse of the time. I hope hereafter I shall haue leisure: and I know you will commend mee for my friendship towards you. Farewell from Valladolid the Nones of Iuly 1605.

TO THE READER.

After so many other Spanish Discourses and Discoueries, I haue added for a Spanish farewell this of Bartholomew de las Casas a zealous Dominican Frier, after made Bishop of Chiapa, touching the excesses committed by some Spaniards in the Continent and Ilands of America, from their first Discouerie till the yeere 1542. in which this was written; the rather beere annexed, as our conclusion of Spanish Relations. The occasion (it seemeth) was his godly zeale of conuerting soules to Iesus Christ from the power of Ethnike darknesse, which was hindered by a worse darknesse in those which professed themselues children of Light, and had the name and Sacraments of Christians. For it beeing then the custome, as you haue seene in Soto, and others before, to get so much of the American Regions in Partition, Commendam, or a Commission from the King (then Charles the fifth Emperour) to discouer and pacifie, as their stile hath it, that is, as the Popes Bull prescribeth, to bring into Spanish subiection, and to conuert to the Christian Faith, so much as their Commission limited, paying the fifth part of whatsoeuer they got to the Crowne; they abusing the Emperours lenitie, and concealing their out-rages, proceeded in conuerting, as that word is deriued from conuerrere, not from conuertere, and in such course as this Author expresseth, if he and other Diuines which made complaint thereof to the Emperour bee to be credited. Neither is it incredible for the maine part of the Historie (we see their owne Iournals insinuate as much in milder and closer termes) how soeuer his zeale flings forth fiery tearmes, and paints out their Acts in the blackest Inke, and most Hyperbolicall Phrases. The Issue was the alteration of gouernment in the Indies, by the gentlenesse of the Kings of Spaine, which freed them from slauerie, and tooke better order both for their bodily and spirituall estate, as before wee haue read in Herera. And if any thinke that I publish this in disgrace of that Nation; I answere, Euery Nation (We see it at home) hath many euill men, many Deuill-men. Againe, I aske whether the Authour (himselfe a Spaniard and Diuine) intended not the honour and good of his Countrie thereby: which also was effected, euill manners prouoking good Lawes. And indeed it is as much honour to this Bishop and the Bishop of Mexico, with other Spaniards that shewed their zeale of reformation herein, as also to the Kings of Spaine which haue effected it; as the doing it is shame to other Spaniards, and the generalitie here touched. The like abuses of Sauages in Brasill, you haue seene by Portugals, complained of by Iesuites, sup. l. 7. c. 2. For my part I honour vertue in a Spaniard, in a Frier, in a Iesuite: and haue in all this voluminous storie not beene more carefull to shew the euill acts of Spaniards, Portugals, Dutch in quarrels twixt them and vs, then to make knowne whatsoeuer good in any of them, when occasion was offered. And so farre am I from delighting to thrust my finger in sores (which yet I doe on necessitie, euen with the English also) that I haue left out many many inuectiues and bitter Epithetes of this Author, abridging him after my wont, and lopping of such superfluities, which rather were the fruit of his zeale, then the flowre of his History. I could also haue added the names of those which he here calleth Tyrants, the Captaines in those Expeditions: but he spared them, as then liuing, and in Herera before you haue them, which yet is angry with Ramusio for that wherein this storie doth excuse him, the concealment of their names being best commendation of such men. In these prunings and omission of some things (in their owne places, before related) aboue a third part is left out, and yet more then enough left to testifie that Mans heart giuen ouer to couetousnesse or other vice, is a bottomlesse Hell, wicked and deceitfull aboue all; who can search it? The colours which the Spaniards pretended for such executions, were the Man-eatings, Sodomies, Idolatries and other vices of Americans; perhaps made worse in the telling, and certainly with worse vices in this sort punished by vniustest Iustice in respect of the Spaniards, whose vniustice is neuertheless most iust in regard of God, which knoweth how to punish sinne by sinne, by Sinners. This Booke is extant in Spanish, Latine, Dutch, and in English also printed 1583. when as peace was yet betwixt England and Spaine, which English Copie I haue followed.

The

The Prologue of the Bishop Frier BARTHOLOMEW delas CASAS or CASAVS, to the most high and mightie Prince, Our Lord Don PHILIP Prince of Spaine.

MOst high and mightie Lord, as God by his Prouidence hath for the guiding and commoditie of mankind in this World, in Realmes and Prouinces, appointed Kings to be as Fathers, and as Homer nameth them Shepherds, and so consequently the most noble and principall members of Common-weales: so can we not iustly doubt by reason of the good wils that Kings and Princes haue to minister Iustice, but that if there be any things amisse, either any violences or iniuries committed, the only cause that they are not redressed, is, for that Princes haue no notice of the same. For certainly if they knew of them, they would imploy all diligence and indeuour in the remedie thereof. Whereof it seemeth that mention is made in the holy Scripture, in the Prouerbs of Solomon, where it is said, Rex qui sedet in solio Iudicij dissipat omne malum intuitu suo. For it is sufficiently to be presupposed euen of the kindly and naturall vertue of a King, that the only notice that hee taketh of any mischiefe tormenting his Kingdome, is sufficient to procure him, if it bee possible, to roote out the same as beeing a thing that he cannot tollerate euen one only moment of time.

Considering therefore with my selfe most mightie Lord the great mischiefes, damages and losses (the like whereof it is not to be thought, were euer committed by Mankind) of so large and great Kingdomes, or to speake more truely, of this so new World of the Indies, which God and holy Church haue committed and commended vnto the King of Castile, to the end they might gouerne, conuert, and procure their prosperitie as well temporally as spiritually. I therefore (I say) being a man of experience, and fiftie yeeres of age or more, considering these euils, as hauing seene them committed, at my being in those Countries: Also that your Highnesse hauing information of some notable particularities, might bee mooued most earnestly to desire his Maiestie, not to grant or permit to those Tyrants such conquests as they haue found out, and which they doe so name, (whereunto if they might bee suffered they would returne) seeing that of themselues, and being made against this Indian, peaceable, lowly and milde Nation which offendeth none, they be wicked, tyrannous, and by all Lawes either Naturall, Humane or Diuine, vtterly condemned, detested and accursed: I thought it best, least my selfe might become also guiltie, by concealing the losse of an infinite number both of souls & bodies which are so committed, to cause a few of their dealings which of late I had selected from among infinite others, and that might truly be reported to be printed, to the end your Highnesse might with more ease peruse and reade them ouer. Also whereas your Highnesse Master the Archbishop of Tolete, when hee was Bishop of Carthagena required them at my hands, and then presented them to your Highnesse: peraduenture by reason of such great Voyages as your Highnesse tooke vpon you, both by Sea and by Land for matters of Estate wherein you haue beene busied, it may bee you haue not perused, either haue forgotten them, and in the meane time the rash and disordinate desire of those which thinke it nothing to doe wrong, to shed such abundance of mans bloud, to make desolate these so large Countries of their naturall Inhabitants and Owners, by slaying infinite persons, either to purloine such incredible treasures, do daily augment, these Tyrants proceeding vnder al counterfeit titles and colours in their instant and importunate sute, namely, to haue the said Conquests permitted and granted vnto them: Which in truth cannot bee granted without transgressing the Law both of Nature and of God, and so consequently not without incurring mortall sinne, worthy most terrible and euerlasting torments: I thought it expedient to doe your Highnesse seruice in this briefe Summarie of a most large Historie, that might and ought to bee written of such slaughters and spoiles as they haue made and perpetrated. Which I beseech your Highnesse to receiue and reade ouer, with that Royall clemencie and courtesie, wherewith you vse to accept and peruse the workes of such your seruants, as no other desire, but faithfully to employ themselues to the common commoditie, and to procure the prosperitie of the Royall Estate.

This Summarie being perused, and the vildnesse of the iniquitie committed against these poore innocent people, in that they are slaine and hewed in pieces without desert, only through the auarice ambition of those that pretend to the doing of such execrable deeds, being considered. It may please your Highnesse to desire, and effectually to perswade his Maiestie to denie any whosoeuer shall demand or require so hurtfull and detestable enterprises: yea, euen to burie any such suite or petition in the infernall pit of perpetuall silence, thereby shewing such terrour and dislike as hereafter no man may bee so bold, as once to name or speake thereof. And this (most mightie Lord) is very expedient and necessarie, to the end God may prosper, preserue and make the estate of the Royall Crowne of Castile for euer to flourish both spiritually and temporally.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. IIII.

A briefe Narration of the destruction of the Indies by the Spaniards: written by a Frier BART. de las CASAS a Spaniard, and Bishop of Chiapa in America.

THe Indies were discouered the yeere 1492. and inhabited by the Spanish the yeere next after ensuing: so as it is about fortie nine yeeres sithence that the Spaniards some of them went into those parts. And the first Land that they entred to inhabite, was the great and most fertile Ile of Hispaniola, which containeth sixe hundred leagues in compasse. There are other great and infinite Iles round about, and in the Confines on all sides: which we haue seene the most peopled, and the fullest of their owne native people, as any other Countrie in the World may be. The firme Land lying off from this Iland two hundred and fiftie leagues, and somewhat ouer at the most, containeth in length on the Sea Coast more then ten thousand leagues: which are alreadie discouered, and daily be discouered more and more, all full of people, as an Emmote hill of Emmots. Insomuch, as by that which since, vnto the yeere the fortieth and one hath beene discouered: It seemeth that God hath bestowed in that same Countrie, the gulfe or the greatest portion of Mankind.

God created all these innumerable multitudes in euery sort, very simple, without subtletie, or craft, without malice, very obedient, and very faithfull to their naturall Liege Lords, and to the Spaniards whom they serue, very humble, very patient, very desirous of peace making, and peacefull, without brawles and strugglings, without quarrels, without strife, without rancour or hatred, by no meanes desirous of reuengement.

They are also people very gentle, and very tender, and of an easie complexion, and which can sustaine no trauell, and doe die very soone of any disease whatsoeuer, in such sort as the very children of Princes and Noblemen brought vp amongst vs, in all commodities, ease, and delicatenesse, are not more soft then those of that Countrie: yea, although they bee the children of Labourers. They are also very poore folke, which possesse little, neither yet doe so much as desire to haue much worldly goods, and therefore neither are they proud, ambitious, nor couetous. Their diet is such (as it seemeth) that of the holy Fathers in the Desert hath not bin more scarce, nor more straight, nor lesse daintie, nor lesse sumptuous. Their apparelling is commonly to goe naked: all saue their shamefast parts alone couered. And when they be clothed, at the most, it is but a of a Mantle of Bombacie of an ell and a halfe, or two ells of linnen square. Their lodging is vpon a Mat, and those which haue the best: sleepe as it were vpon a Net fastened at the foure corners, which they call in the Language of the Ile of Hispaniola, Hamaca. They haue their vnderstanding very pure and quicke, being teachable and capeable of all good Learning, very apt to receiue our holy Catholike Faith, and to be instructed in good and vertuous manners, hauing lesse incumberances and disturbances to the attaining thereunto, then all the folke of the world besides, and are so enflamed, ardent, and importune to know and vnderstand the matters of the faith after they haue but begunne once to taste them, as likewise the exercise of the Sacraments of the Church, and the diuine Seruice: that in truth, the religious men haue need of a singular patience to support them. And to make an end, I haue heard many Spaniards many times hold this as assured, and that which they could not denie, concerning the good nature which they saw in them. Vndoubtedly these folkes should bee the happiest in the World, if onely they knew God.

Vpon these Lambes so meeke, so qualified and endued of their Maker and Creator, as hath bin said, entred the Spanish incontinent as they knew them, as, Wolues, as Lions, and as Tigres most cruell of long time famished: and haue not done in those quarters these fortie yeeres past, neither yet doe at this present, ought else saue teare them in pieces, kill them, martyr them, afflict them, torment them, and destroy them by strange sorts of cruelties neuer neither seene, nor read, nor heard of the like (of the which some shall be set downe hereafter) so farforth that of aboue three Millions of soules that were in the Ile of Hispaniola, and that we haue seene, there are not now two hundred natiues of the Countrey. The Ile of Cuba, the which is in length as farre as from Valladolid vntill Rome, is at this day as it were all waste. Saint Iohns Ile, and that of Iamayca, both of them very great, very fertill, and very faire: are desolate. Likewise the Iles of Lucayos, neere to the Ile of Hispaniola, and of the North side vnto that of Cuba, in number being aboue three score Ilands, together with those which they call the Iles of Geanis, one with another, great and little, whereof the very worst is fertiler then the Kings Garden at Ciuill, and the Countrie the healthsomest in the World: there were in these same Iles more then fiue hundred thousand soules, and at this day there is not one only creature. For they haue beene all of them slaine, after that they had drawne them out from thence to labour in their Minerals in the Ile of Hispaniola, where there were no more left of the Natiues of that Iland. A ship riding for the space of three yeeres betwixt all these Ilands, to the end, after the ioining of this kind of Vintage, to gleane and cull the remainder of these folke (for there was a good Christian moued with pittie and compassion, to conuert and win vnto Christ such as might be found) there were not found but eleuen persons which I saw: other Iles more then thirty, neere to the Ile of Saint Iohn haue likewise bin dispeopled and marred. All these Iles containe aboue two thousand leagues of land, and are all dispeopled and laid waste.

Three Millions perished in Hispaniola, Oviedo hath but 1600000.

500000. lost in the Lucayes.

As touching the maine firme land, we are certaine that our Spaniards, by their cruelties and cursed doings haue dispeopled and made desolate more then ten Realmes greater then all Spaine, comprising also therewith Aragon & Portugall, and twise as much or more land then there is from Seuill to Ierusalem, which are aboue a thousand leagues: which Realmes as yet vnto this present day remaine in a wilderneſſe and vtter desolation, hauing bin before time as well peopled as was possible. We are able to yeelde a good and certaine accompt, that there is within the space of the said fortie yeares, by those said tyrannies and diuelliſh doings of the Spaniards, doen to death vniustly and tyrannously more then twelue Milions of soules, men, women, and children. And I doe verily beleeue, and thinke not to mistake therein, that there are dead more then fifteene Millions of soules.

*12. or 15. miles See the end of this discourse.

The cause why the Spaniſh haue destroyed such an infinite of soules, hath beene onely, that they haue held it for their last scope and marke to get Gold, and to enrich themselues in a short time, and to mount at one leape to very high estates, in no wise agreeable to their persons: or to say in a word, the cause hereof hath beene their auarice and ambition. And by this meanes haue died so many Millions without faith and without Sacraments.

Of the Ile of Hiſpaniola.

In the Ile Hiſpaniola, which was the first (as we haue said) where the Spaniards arriued, began the great slaughters and spoyles of people: the Spaniards hauing begun to take their wiues and children of the Indies, for to serue their turne and to vſe them ill, and hauing begun to eate their victuals, gotten by their sweate and trauell; not contenting themselues with that which the Indians gaue them of their owne good will, euery one after their abilitie, the which is algates very small, forasmuch as they are accustomed to haue no more store then they haue ordinarily neede of, and that such as they get with little trauell: And that which might suffice for three households, reckoning ten persons for each household for a moneths space, one Spaniard would eate and destroy in a day.

Now after sundry other forces, violences, and torments, which they wrought against them: the Indians began to perceiue that those were not men discended from heauen. Some of them therefore hid their victuals, others hid their wiues and children, some others fled into the Mountaines, to separate themselues a farre off from a Nation of so hard natured and ghastly conuersation. The Spaniards buffeted them with their fists and bastonades; pressing also to lay hands vpon the Lords of the Townes. And these cases ended in so great an hazard and desperateneſſe, that a Spaniſh Captaine durst aduenture to rauish forcibly the wife of the greatest King and Lord of this Ile. Since which time the Indians began to search meanes to cast the Spaniards out of their lands, and set themselues in armes: but what kinde of armes? very feeble and weake to withstand or resist, and of lesse defence. The Spaniards with their Horses, their Speares and Lances, began to commit murders, and strange cruelties: they entred into Townes, Borowes, and Villages, sparing neither children nor old men, neither women with childe, neither them that lay In, but that they ripped their bellies, and cut them in peeces, as if they had beene opening of Lambes shut vp in their fold. They laid wagers with such as with one thrust of a sword would paunch or bowell a man in the middest, or with one blow of a sword would most readily, and most deliuerly cut off his head, or that would best pierce his entrals at one stroake. They tooke the little soules by the heeles, ramping them from the mothers dugges, and crushed their heads against the clifts. Others they cast into the Riuers laughing and mocking, and when they tumbled into the water, they said, now shift for thy selfe such a pnes corpes. They put others, together with their mothers, and all that they met, to the edge of the sword. They made certaine Gibbets long and low, in such sort, that the feete of the hanged on, touched in a manner the ground, euery one enough for thirteene, in honour and worship of our Sauiour and his twelue Apostles (as they vsed to speake) and setting to fire, burned them all quicke that were fastened. Vnto all others, whom they vsed to take and reserue aliue, cutting off their two hands as neere as might be, and so letting them hang, they said, Get you with these Letters, to carry tydings to those which are fled by the Mountaines. They murdered commonly the Lords and Nobility on this fashion; They made certaine grates of pearches laid on pickforkes, and made a little fire vnderneath, to the intent, that by little and little yelling and despairing in these torments, they might giue vp the Ghost.

Ambition.

Cruelty.

Torments.

One time I saw foure or fiue of the principall Lords roasted and broyled vpon these gredirons. Also I thinke that there were two or three of these gredirons, garnished with the like furniture, and for that they cryed out pitiously, which thing troubled the Captaine that he could not not then sleepe: he commanded to strangle them. The Sergeant, which was worse then the Hangman that burned them (I know his name and friends in Siuil) would not haue them strangled, but himselfe putting Bullets in their mouthes, to the end that they should not cry, put to the fire, vntill they were softly roasted after his desire. I haue seene all the aforesaid things and others infinite. And forasmuch, as all the people which could flee, hid themselues in the Mountaines, and mounted on the tops of them, fled from the men so without all manhood, emptie of all pitie, behauing them as sauage beasts, the slaughterers and deadly enemies of mankinde: they taught their Hounds, fierce Dogs, to teare them in peeces at the first view, and in the space that one may say a Credo, assailed and deuoured an Indian as if it had beene a Swine. These Dogges wrought great destructions and slaughters. And forasmuch as sometimes, although seldome, when the Indians put to death some Spaniards vpon good right and Law of due Iustice: they made a Lawe betweene them, that for one Spaniard they had to slay an hundred Indians. Dogges.

Digitized by Google

There were in this Ile Hispaniola, fiue great principall Realmes, and fiue very mighty Kings, vnto whom almost all other Lords obayed, which were without number. There were also certaine Lords of other seuerall Prouinces, which did not acknowledge for soueraigne any of these Kings: One Realme was named Magua, which is as much to say, as the Kingdome of the plaine. This Plaine is one of the most famous and most admirable things of all that is in the world. For it containeth fourescore leagues of ground, from the South Sea vnto the North sea, hauing in breadth fiue leagues, and eight vnto ten. The Realmes which were in this Ile of Hispaniola.

It hath on one side and other exceeding high Mountaines. There entreth into it aboue thirty thousand Riuers and Lakes, of the which twelue are as great as Ebro, and Duero, and Guadalquemir. And all the Riuers which issue out of a Mountaine which is towards the West, in number about fiue and twenty thousand, are very rich of Gold. In the which Mountaine or Mountaines, is contained the Prouince of Cibao, from whence the Mines of Cibao take their names, and from whence commeth the same exquisite Gold and fine of foure and twenty Karrets, which is so renowned in these parts. The King & Lord of this Realme was called Guarionex, which had vnder him his Vassals & Lieges so great and mighty, that euery one of them was able to set forth threescore thousand men of armes for the seruice of the King Guarionex. Of the which Lords I haue known some certain. This Guarionex was very obedient and vertuous, naturally desirous of peace, and well affectioned to the deuotion of the Kings of Castile, and his people gaue by his commandement, euery housekeeper a certaine kinde of Drum full of Gold: but afterwards being not able to fill the Drum, cut it off by the middest, and gaue the halfe thereof full. For the Indians of that Ile had little or none industrie or practise to gather or draw Gold out of the Mines. The Cacique presented vnto the King of Castile his seruice, in causing to be manured all the lands from the Isabella, where the Spanish first sited, vnto the Towne of Saint Domingo, which are fiftie leagues large, on condition that he should exact of them no Gold: for hee said (and hee said the truth) that his Subiects had not the skill to draw it out. As for the manuring which he said he would procure to be done: I know that he could haue done it very easily, and with great readinesse, and that it would haue beene worth vnto the King euery yeere more then three Millions of Castillans, besides that it would haue caused, that at this houre there had bin aboue fiftie Cities greater then Siuill. Great Riuers in Spaine. 25000. Riuers rich in Gold: Cibao.

The paiment that they made to this good King and Lord, so gracious and so redoubted, was to dishonour him in the person of his wife, an euill Christian, a Captaine rauishing her. This King could haue attended the time and opportunitie to auenge himselfe in leuying some armie: but he aduised to withdraw himselfe rather, and onely to hide him out of the way, thus being banished from his Realme and state, into a Prouince of the Cignaios, where there was a great Lord his vassall. After that the Spaniards were ware of his absence, and he could no longer hide himselfe: they make warre against the Lord which had giuen him entertainment, and make great slaughters through the Countrey as they goe, till in the end they found and tooke him, thrusting him loden with chaines and irons into a Ship, to carry him to Castile: which Ship was lost vpon the Sea, and there were with him drowned many Spaniards, and a great quantity of Gold, amongst the which also was the great wedge of Gold, like vnto a great loafe, weying three thousand six hundreth Castillans. Thus it pleased God to wreake vengeance of matters so lewd and so enormous. The greatest peece of Gold which euer was found naturall lost.

The other Realme was called of Marien, where is at this day the Port at one of the bounds of the plaine, towards the North: and it is farre greater then the Realme of Portugall, and much fertiler, worthy to be inhabited, hauing great Mountaines, and Mines of Gold, and Copper very rich. The King was called Guacanagari, which had vnder him many great Lords, of the which I haue knowne and seene sundry. In this Kings Countrey arriued first the old Admirall, when he discouered the Indies, whom at that time that he discouered the Ile, the said Guacanagari receiued so graciously, bountifully, and curteously with all the Spaniards who were with him, in giuing him all entertainement and succour, for at the very instant was the Ship lost (which the Admirall was carried in) that hee could not haue bin better made off in his owne Countrie of his owne Father. This did I vnderstand of the Admirals owne mouth. This King Marien.

Digitized by Google

dyed, in flying the slaughters and cruelties of the Spaniards through the Mountaines, being destroyed and depriued of his estate. And all the other Lords his subiects dyed in the tyrannie and seruitude that shall be declared hereafter.

Maguana. The third Realme and dominion was Maguana, a Countrie also admirable, very healthfull, and very fertile, where the best Sugar of the Ile at this day is made.

The King of this Countrie was named Caonabo, who surpassed all the others in strength and state, in grauitie, and in the ceremonies of his seruice. The Spaniards tooke this King with great subtiltie and malice, euen as he was in his owne house, doubting of nothing. They conueied him afterwards into a Ship to carry him to Castile; but as there attended them six other Ships in the port, all ready to hoise vp saile: behold how God by his iust iudgement, would declare, that it, with other things, was an exceeding great iniquitie and vniust, by sending the same night a tempest, which sunke and drenched that Nauie with the Spaniards that were within. There died also with them the said Caonabo, charged with bolts and irons.

The Prince had three or foure brothers valiant men, and couragious like himselfe, who considering the imprisonment of their Lord & brother so against all equitie, together with the wasts and slaughters which the Spaniards made in other Realmes, and specially after that they had heard that the King their brother was dead, they put themselues in armes to encounter the Spaniards, and to auenge the wrong; who on the otherside meeting with them on horsebacke; so they rage in discomfitures and massacres, that the one moytie of this Realme hath beene thereby desolate and displeopled.

Xaragua. The fourth Realme is the same which is named of Xaragua. This Realme was as it were the centre or middle point, or to speake of, as the Court of this Isle, the diamond ouer all the other Realmes in language and polished speech, in policie and good manners, the best composed and ordered. For as much as there were many noble Lords and Gentlemen, the people also being the best made and most beautifull. The King had to name Behechio, which had a sister called Anacaona. These two, the brother and sister, had done great seruices to the Kings of Castile, and great good turnes to the Spaniards, deliuering them from sundry dangers of death.

After the decease of Behechio, Anacaona remained sole Soueraigne of the Realme. At a time came into this Realme the Gouernour of this Ile with threescore Horses, and more then three hundreth footemen (the horsemen alone had beene enough to spoyle and ouerrunne not this Ile alone, but all the firme land withall:) And to him came, being called, more then three hundred Lords vnder assurance, of whom the chiefest, he fraudulently caused to be conueyed into a house of thatch, and commanded to set to fire. Now on this wise were these Lords burned all aliue: all the rest of the Lords, with other folke infinite, were smitten to death with their Speares and Swords. But the Soueraigne Lady Anacaona, to doe her honour, they hanged. It happened that certaine Spaniards, either of pittie or of couetousnesse, hauing taken and detained certaine yong striplings to make them their Pages; because they would not haue them slaine, and setting them behinde them on their horse backes; another Spaniard came behinde, which stabbed them through with a speare. If so be any childe or boy tombled downe to the ground, another Spaniard came and cut off his legges. Some certaine of these Indians which could escape this crueltie so vnnaturall, passed ouer vnto a little Ile neere vnto the other, within an eight leagues. The Gouernour condemned all those which had passed the water, to become slaues; because they had fled from their butcherie.

Higuey. The fifth Realme was called Higuey, ouer the which raigned an ancient Queene named Higuanama, whom the Spaniards hanged vp. The people were infinite whom I saw burnt aliue, and rent in peeces, and tormented diuersly and strangely, and whom I saw made slaues, euen so many as they tooke aliue. And now for as much as there are so many particularities in these Massacres and destruction of those peoples, that they cannot conueniently be compriſed in writing (yea I doe verily beleeue, that of a number of things to be spoken of, there cannot be disciphered of a thousand parts one:) I will onely in that which concerneth the warres aboue mentioned, conclude, auerre, and iustifie in conscience, and as before God, that of all others, which I ouerpasse to speake of, or shall be able to speake of, the Indians neuer gaue no more occasion or cause, then might a conuent of good religious persons well ordered, why they should be robbed and slaine, and why those that escaped the death, should be retained in a perpetuall captiuitie and bondage. I affirme yet moreouer, for ought that I can beleeue or coniecture, that, during all the time that all this huge number of these Islanders haue beene murdered and made away vtterly, they neuer committed against the Spaniards any one mortall offence, punishable by the law of man. And concerning offences, of the which the punishment is reserued vnto God, as are desire of reuengement, hatred and rancour, which these people might beare against enemies so capitall as were the Spaniards, that very few persons haue beene attached with the blemish, and lesse violent and forcible did I finde them, by the good experience I had of them, then children of tenne or twelue yeares of age. And I know for certaine and infallible, that the Indians had euermore most iust cause of warre against the Spaniards; but the Spaniards neuer had any iust cause of warre against the Indians, but they were all diabolicall and most vnrighteous more

Digitized by Google

more then can be spoken of any tyrant that is on the whole earth. And I affirme the selfe same for all their other acts and gests by them done throughout all the Indies.

The warres atchieued, and all the men done to death thereby, reserued commonly the yong folke, women, and children (the which they departed among them, in giuing to one thirtie, to another fortie, and to another an hundreth, or two hundreth, according as euery one had the fauour of the head tyrant, whom they called the Gouernour) they gaue them to the Spaniards vpon that condition and colour, that they would teach them the Catholike faith, they themselues who tooke vpon them this charge of soules, commonly all idiots, or vtterly ignorant persons, barbarous men, extreamely couetous and vicious.

Now the carke and care that these had of them, was to send the men vnto the Mines, to make them dreine them out Gold, which is an intollerable trauell; and the women they bestowed into the Countrie to their Farmes, to manure and till the ground, which is a sore trauell, euen for the very men, the ablest and mightiest. They gaue to eate neither to one nor other, nought saue grasses and such like things of no substance; in such sort as the milke of the breasts of the wiues new deliuered of their childebirth dried vp; and thus dried vp in a small season, all the little creatures their yong children. Further, by reason of the separation and not cohabiting of the men with their wiues, the generation ceased betweene them. The men died with toyle and famine in the Minerals: these the women died of the same in the fields. By these meanes were consumed and brought to their ends so huge a number of the folke of this Iland. By the like might be abolished and exterpate all the inhabitants of the world. Gens sine generatione perit.

As touching loding, they laid vpon them fourescore or an hundreth pounds waight, which they should carrie an hundreth or two hundreth leagues: The Spanish also causing themselues to be carried in Lyters vpon mens armes, or beds made by the Indians, in fashion of Nets. For they serued their turnes with them to transport their carriages and baggage as beasts, whereby they had vpon their backes and shoulders, whales and gals as poore galled beasts. Also as touching whippings, bastonading, buffeting, blowes with the fist, cursing, and a thousand other kindes of torments, which they practised vpon them during the time that they trauailed, of a truth, they cannot be recounted in a long season, nor written in a great deale of paper, and they should be euen to affright men withall.

It is to be noted, that the destruction of these Iles and lands, began after the decease of the most gracious Queene, dame Isabel, which was the yeare one thousand fiue hundred and foure. For before there were laid waste in this Ile, but certaine Prouinces by vniust warre, and that not wholly altogether, & these for the more part, or in a manner all were concealed from the knowledge of the Queene (vnto who it may please God to giue his holy glory) forasmuch as she had a great desire, and a zeale admirable, that those people might be saued and prosper, as we do know good examples, the which we haue seene with our eyes, and felt with our hands. Further note here, that in what part of the Indies the Spanish haue come, they haue euermore exercised against the Indians; these innocent peoples, the cruelties aforesaid, and oppressions abominable, and inuented day by day new torments, huger and monstrouser, becomming euery day more cruell, wherefore God also gaue them ouer to fall headlong downe with a more extreame downfall into a reprobate sense.

Of the two Iles Saint Iohn, and Iamayca.

THe Spanish passed ouer the Ile of Saint Iohn, and to the end of Iamaica which were like Gardens for Bees) 1509. setting before them the same end which they had in the Ile Hispaniola, and committing the robberies and crimes aforesaid, adioyning thereunto many great and notable cruelties, killing, burning, rosting and casting them to the Dogs: furthermore, afterwards oppressing, and vexing them in their Minerals and other trauell, vnto the rooting out of those poore innocents which were in these two Iles, by supputation six hundred thousand soules; yea I beleeue that they were more then a Million, although there be not at this day in either Ile two hundred persons, and all perished without faith and without Sacraments. 600000. or a Million in S. Iohn and Iamaica.

Of the Ile of Cuba.

IN the yeare 1511. they passed to the Ile of Cuba (where were great Prouinces, and great multitudes of people) they both began and concluded with them after the fashion afore spoken, yea worse and farre more cruelly. There came to passe in this Iland matters worth the noting: A Cacique, named Hathuey, which had conueied himselfe from the Ile Hispaniola to Cuba, with many of his people, to auoide the calamities & practises so vnnaturall of the Spanish: when as certain Indians had told him tidings that the Spaniards were comming towards Cuba, he assembled his men, and bespake them: Now you know that the Spaniards are comming on this side, and yee know also by experience, how they haue entreated such, and such, and the people of Hayti (meaning Dances made to Gold.

thereby Hiſpaniola) hither they come to doe the like here. Wot yee why they doe it? they anſwered, no, vnleſſe it be that they are by nature voide of humanitie. He replied: They do it not onely for that; but becauſe they haue a God whom they honour, and doe demand very much, and to the end to haue from vs as well as others to honour him withall, they doe their vttermoſt to ſubdue vs. He had then by him a little Cheſt full of Gold and Iewels, and ſaid, Behold here the God of the Spaniards, let vs doe to him, if it ſo ſeeme you good, Aretes (which are windleſſes and dances) thus doing, we ſhall pleaſe him, and he will command the Spaniards that they ſhall doe vs no harme: They anſwered all with a loud voyce: Well ſaid Sir, well ſaid. Thus then they danced before it, vntill they were weary, then quoth the Lord Hathuey, Take wee heede how euer the world goe, if we keepe him, to the end that he be taken away from vs, in the end they will kill vs; wherefore let vs caſt him into the Riuer: whereunto they all agreed, and ſo they caſt it into a great Riuer there.

Hathuey burned.

This Lord and Cacique went alwayes flying the Spaniſh, incontinent as they were arriued at the Ile of Cuba, as he which knew them but too well, and defended himſelfe when he met them. In the end he was taken, and onely for becauſe that hee fled from a Nation ſo vniuſt and cruell, and that he defended himſelfe from ſuch as would kill him, and oppreſſe him euen vnto the death, with all his folke, he was burned aliue. Now as he was faſtned to the ſtake, a religious man of Saint Francis order, a deuout perſon, ſpake to him ſomewhat of God and of our Faith, which things this ſaid Lord had neuer heard of, yet might be ſufficient for the time which the butchers gaue him, that if he would beleeue thoſe things which were ſpoken to him, hee ſhould goe to heauen, where is glory and reſt euerlaſting, that if he did not beleeue, hee ſhould goe to hell, there to be tormented perpetually. The Lord after hauing a little paused to thinke of the matter, demanded of the Religious man, whether that the Spaniards went to heauen; who anſwered, yea; ſuch of them that were good. The Cacique anſwered againe immediately without any further deliberation, that he would not goe to heauen, but that he would goe to hell, to the end, not to come in the place where ſuch people ſhould be, and to the end not to ſee a Nation ſo cruell. Loe here the praiſes and honour which God and our faith haue receiued of the Spaniards, which haue gone to the Indies.

His choiſe to goe to hell, and why.

One time the Indians came to meete vs, and to receiue vs with victuals, and delicate cheere, and with all entertainment ten leagues of a great Citie, and being come at the place, they preſented vs with a great quantity of fiſh, and of bread, and other meate, together with all that they could doe for vs to the vttermoſt. See incontinent the Diuell, which put himſelfe into the Spaniards, to put them all to the edge of the ſword in my preſence, without any cauſe whatſoeuer, more then three thouſand ſoules, which were ſet before vs, men, women, and children. I ſaw there ſo great cruelties, that neuer any man liuing either haue or ſhall ſee the like.

3000. ſlaine.

Another time, but a few dayes after the premiſſes. I ſent meſſengers vnto all the Lords of the Prouince of Hauana, aſſuring them, that they ſhould not neede to feare (for they had heard of my credit) and that without withdrawing themſelues, they ſhould come to receiue vs, and that there ſhould be done vnto them no diſpleaſure: for all the Countrie was afraid, by reaſon of the miſchiefes and murderings paſſed, and this did I by the aduice of the Captaine himſelfe. After that we were come into the Prouince, one and twenty Lords and Caciques came to receiue vs, whom the Captaine apprehended incontinently, breaking the ſafe conduct which I had made them, and intending the day next following to burne them aliue, ſaying that it was expedient ſo to doe, for that otherwiſe thoſe Lords one day, would doe vs a ſhrewd turne. I found my ſelfe in a great deale of trouble to ſaue them from the fire; howbeit in the end they eſcaped.

After that the Indians of this Iland were thus brought into bondage and calamitie, like vnto thoſe of the Ile of Hiſpaniola, and that they ſaw that they died and periſhed all without remedy: ſome of them began to flye into the Mountaines, others quite deſperate hanged themſelues, and there hung together husbands with their wiues, hanging with them their little children. And through the crueltie of one only Spaniard, which was a great tyrant, and one whom I know, there hung themſelues more then two hundred Indians: and in this faſhion died an infinite of people.

Out of the frying-pan into the fire.

There was in this Ile an officer of the Kings, to whom they gaue for his ſhare three hundred Indians, of whom at the end of three moneths there died by him in the trauell of the Mines, two hundred and ſixty: in ſuch ſort, that there remained now but thirty, which was the tenth part. Afterwards they gaue him as many more, and more, and thoſe alſo hee made hauocke of in like manner, and ſtill as many as they gaue him, ſo many he ſlew, vntill he died himſelfe, and that the Diuell carried him away.

6000. Infants loſt.

In three or foure moneths (my ſelfe being preſent) there died more then ſixe thouſand children, by reaſon that they had plucked away from them their fathers and mothers, which they ſent into the Mines. I beheld alſo other things frightfull. Shortly after they reſolued to climbe after thoſe which were in the Mountaines, where they wrought alſo ghaſtly ſlaughters, and thus laid waſte all this Ile; which we beheld not long after, and it is great pitie to ſee it ſo diſpeopled and deſolate as it is.

Of

Of Terra Firma, or the firme land.

IN the yeere 1514. there landed in the Maine a mischieuous Gouernour. Hee not onely wasted or dispeopled the Sea Coast, but sacked also great Realmes and Countries, making hauocks by slaying and murdering of peoples, infinite to be numbred, and sending them to Hell. He ouerranne and harried most of the places in the Land, from Darien vpward, vnto the Realme and Prouinces of Nicaragua within being, which are more then fiue hundred leagues of the best, and most fertile ground in the whole World, where there were a good number of great Lords, with a number of Townes, Boroughes, and Villages, and store of gold in more abundance then was to be found on the earth vntill that present.

This Gouernour with his men, found our new sorts of cruelties and torments, to cause them to discouer and giue him gold. There was a Captaine of his, which slue in one walke and course which was made by his commandement, to rob and roote out more then fortie thousand soules, putting them to the edge of the Sword, burning them, and giuing them to the Dogges, and tormenting them diuersly: which also a Religious man of the Order of Saint Francis, who went with him, beheld with his eies, and had to name Frier Francis of Saint Romane.

The most pernicious blindnesse, which hath alwaies possessed those who haue gouerned the Indians, in stead of the care which they should haue for the conuersion and saluation came to that passe, as to command orders to bee set downe vnto the Indians to receiue the faith, and render themselues vnto the obedience of the King of Castile, or otherwise to bid them battle with fire and Sword, and to slay them or make them slaues: he commanded (or peraduenture the theeues, whom he dispatched to doe the execution, did it of their heads) when they were purposed to goe a rouing and robbing of any place, where they knew that there was any gold, the Indians being in their Townes and dwelling houses, without mistrusting any thing, the wicked Spaniards would goe after the guize of Theeues, vnto within halfe a league neere some Towne, Borough, or Village, and there by themselues alone, and by night make a reading, publication, or Proclamation of the said Ordinances, saying thus, O yes, Caciques and Indians of this firme Land of such a place; Be it knowne vnto you, that there is one God, one Pope, one King of Castile, which is Lord of theese Lands: make your appearance, all delay set aside, here to doe him homage, &c. Which if you shall not accomplish: Be it knowne vnto you, that we will make warre vpon you, and we will kill you, and make you slaues. Hereupon at the fourth watch in the morning, the poore Innocents, sleeping yet with their wiues and children: these Tyrants set vpon the place, casting fire on the houses which commonly were thatched, and so burne vp all quicke men, women and children, more suddenly then that they could of a great many be perceiued. They massacred at the instant those that seemed them good; and those whom they tooke prisoners, they caused them cruelly to die vpon the Racke, to make them to tell in what places there were any more Gold then they found with them: and others which remained aliue, they made them slaues, marking them with a hot Iron, so after the fire being out and quenched, they goe seeke the gold in their houses. This is then the deportment in these affaires of this person, with all the bond of his vngodly Christians, which he trained from the fourteenth yeere, vnto the one and twentie, or two and twentieth yeere, sending in these Exploits sixe or moe of his Seruants or Souldiers, by whom he receiued as many shares, ouer and besides his Captaines Generals part, which hee leuied of all the Gold, of all the Pearles, and of all the Iewels which they tooke of those whom they made their slaues. The selfe-same did the Kings Officers, euerie one sending forth as many seruants as he could.

God and King abused.

The Bishop also, which was the chiefe in the Realme, he sent his seruants to haue his share in the bootie: They spoiled more gold within the time, and in this Realme, as farre forth as I am able to reckon, then would amount to a Million of Ducates, yea, I beleeue, that I make my reckoning with the least. Yet will it be found, that of all this great theeuing, they neuer sent to the King ought saue three thousand Castillans, hauing thereabout killed and destroyed aboue eight hundred thousand soules. The other Tyrant Gouernours which succeeded after, vnto the yeere thirtie and three, slue or at least wise consented, for all those which remained to slay them in that tyrannicall sluerie.

800000. Indians slaine.

Amongst an infinite sort of mischiefes, which this Gouernour did, nor consented vnto the doing during the time of his gouernment, this was one: To wit, that a Cacike or Lord giuing him, either of his good will, or which is rather to be thought for feare, the weight of nine thousand Ducates: the Spaniards not content withall, tooke the said Lord, and tied him to a stake, setting him on the earth, his feet stretched vp; against the which they set fire to cause him to giue them some more gold. The Lord sent to his house, whence there were brought, yet moreouer three thousand Castillans. They goe afresh to giue him new torments. And when the Lord gaue them no more, either because he had it not, or because he would giue them no more, they bent his feet against the fire, vntill that the verie marrow sprang out, and trilled downe the soles of his feete: so as hee therewith died. They haue oftentimes exercised these kinde of torments towards the Lords, to make them giue them gold, wherewith they haue also slaine them.

Another time, a certaine companie of Spaniards, vsing their thefts and robberies, came to a Mountaine, where were assembled and hid a number of people, hauing shunned those men so pernicious and horrible: whom incontinent entring vpon, they tooke about three or fourescore, as well women as maids, hauing killed as many as they could kill. The morrow after, there assembled a great companie of Indians, to pursue the Spaniards, warring against them for the great desire they had to recouer their wiues and daughters.

The Spaniards perceiuing the Indians to approach so neere vpon them, would not so forgoe their prey, but stabd their Swords thorow the bellies of the wiues and wenches, leaning but one alone aliue of all the fourescore. The Indians felt their hearts to burst for sorrow and griefe which they suffered, yelling out in cries and speaking such words: O wicked men, O yee the cruell Spaniards: doe yee kill Las Iras: They terme Iras in that Countrie the women: as if they would say, to kill women, those be acts of abominable men, and cruell as beasts.

There was about ten or fifteene leagues from Ieanama, a great Lord named Paris, which was very rich of gold: The Spaniards went thither, whom this Lord receiued as if they had beene his owne brethren, and made a Present vnto the Captaine of fiftie thousand Castillans of his owne voluntarie accord. It seemed vnto the Captaine and the other Spaniards, that he which gaue such a great summe of his owne will, should haue a great treasure, which should be the end and easing of their trauels. They pretend in words to depart: but they returne at the fourth watch of the morning, setting vpon the Towne which mistrusted nothing set it on fire, whereby was burnt and slaine a great number of people, and by this meanes they brought away in the spoile fiftie, or threescore thousand Castillans moe. The Cacike or Lord escaped without being slaine or taken, and leuied incontinent as many of his as he could. And at the end of three or foure daies ouertaketh the Spaniards which had taken from him an hundred and thirtie, or fortie thousand Castillans, and set vpon them valiantly, killing fiftie Spaniards, and recouering all the gold which they had taken from him. The others saued themselues by running away, being well charged with blowes and wounded. Not long after, diuers of the Spanish returne against the said Cacike, and discomfite him with an infinite number of his people. Those which were not slaine, they put them to the ordinarie bondage: in such sort, as that there is not at this day, neither tracke nor token, that there hath beene liuing there either people, or so much as one man alone borne of woman within thirtie leagues of the Land, which was before notably peopled and gouerned by diuers Lords. There is no reckoning able to be made of the murders which this Caitiffe with his companie committed in these Realmes which he so dispeopled.

Of the Prouince of Nicaragua.

THe yeere 1522. or twentie three, this Tyrant went farther into the Land: to bring vnder his yoke the most fertile Prouince of Nicaragua, and so in thither he entred in an euill houre. There is no man which is able worthily and sufficiently to speake of the fertiltie, healthsomenesse, prosperitie, and frequencie, of those Nations that there were.

He sent fiftie Horsemen, and caused to slay all the people of this Prouince, (which is greater then the Countie of Rossillon) with the Sword: in such sort, as that hee left aliue, nor man, nor woman, nor old, nor young, for the least cause in the World: as if they came not incontinent at his command: or if they did not bring him so many load of Maiz, which signifieth in that Countrie bread Corne: or if they did not bring him so many Indians to serue him and others of his company: for the Countrie lay leuell, as was said, and no creature could escape his horses and deuillish rage. He sent Spaniards to make out rodes, that is to say, to go a theeuing into other Prouinces: and gaue leaue to those Rouers, to carrie with them as many Indians of this peaceable people as they listed, and that they should serue them, whom they put to the chaine, to the end they should not giue ouer the burdens of three or fourescore pounds weight, wherewith they loaded them, whereof it came to passe oftentimes that of foure thousand Indians, there returned not home to their houses six aliue: but euen fell downe starke dead in the high way: and when any were so wearie that they could march no farther for the weight of their burdens, or that some of them fell sicke, or fainted for hunger or thirst, because it should not need to stand so long as to vnlocke the chaine, and to make the speedier dispatch, hee cut off the head from the shoulders, and so the head tumbled downe one way, and the bodie another. Now consider with your selues, what the other poore soules might thinke the whiles.

He was the cause that the Indians sowed not their grounds one whole yeeres continuance. So as now, when they wanted bread, the Spaniards tooke away from the Indians their Maiz, which they had in store for prouision, to nourish them and their children: whereby there died of famine more then twentie or thirtie thousand soules. And it came to passe, that a woman falne mad with the famine slue her Sonne to eate him.

Cause and extremitie of famine.

They haue discomfited and oppressed in this Prouince a great number of people, and hastened their death in causing them to beare boords and timber vnto the Hauen thirty leagues distance, to make ships with: and sent them to go seeke Honie and Wax amiddest the Mountaines, where the the Tigres deuoured them: Yea they haue laden women with childe, and women new deliuered or lying in, with burdens enough for beasts.

The greatest plague which hath most dispeopled this Prouince, hath beene the licence which the Gouernour gaue to the Spaniards, to demand or exact of the Caciks and Lords of the countrie slaues. They did giue them euery foure or fiue moneths, or as oftentimes as euery one could obtaine licence of the Gouernour fiftie slaues: with threatnings, that if they gaue them not, they would burne them aliue, or cause them to be eaten with Dogges. Now ordinarily the Indians doe not keepe slaues, and it is much if one Cacike doe keepe two, three or foure: Wherefore to serue this turne, they went to their subiects, and tooke first all the Orphelins, and afterwards they exacted of him that had two children one, and of him that had three, two: and in this manner was the Cacicke faine to furnish still to the number that the Tyrant imposed, with the great weeping and crying of the people: for they are people that doe loue (as it seemeth) tenderly their children. And for because that this was done continually, they dispeopled from the yeere 23. vnto the yeere 33. all this Realme. For there went for sixe or seuen yeeres space, fiue or sixe ships at a time, carrying forth great numbers of those Indians, for to sell them for slaues at Ioanama and Peru: where they all died not long after. For it is a thing proued and experimented a thousand times, that when the Indians are transported from their naturall Countrey, they soone end their liues: besides that these giue them not their sustenance, neither yet diminish they of their toile, as neither doe they buy them, for ought else but to toile. They haue by this manner of doing drawne out of this Prouince of the Indies, whom they haue made slaues, being as free borne as I am, more then fiue hundred thousand soules. And by the Deuillish warres which the Spanish haue made on them, and the hideous thraldome that they haue laid vpon them, they haue broughe to their deaths, other fiftie or threescore thousand persons, and do yet daily make hauocke of them at this present. All these slaughters haue beene accomplished within the space of fourteene yeeres. There may be left at this day in all this Prouinces of Nicaragua, the number of about foure or fiue thousand persons, which they also cause to die as yet euery day, through bondages and oppressions ordinarily and personall, hauing beene the Countrey the most peopled in the World, as I haue alreadie said.

Tribute slaues.

500000. Indians transported.
50000. slaues.

Of New Spaine.

IN the yeere 1517. was New Spaine discouered: at the Discouerie whereof were committed great disorders and slaughters of the Indians, by those which had the doing of that Exploite. The yeere 1518. there went Spanish Christians (as they terme themselues) to rob and slay, notwithstanding that they said they went to people the Countrie. Sithence that yeere, 1518. vnto this present yeere 1542. the vniust dealings, the violencie, and the Tyrannies which the Spaniards haue wrought against the Indians, are mounted to the highest degree of extremitie: those selfe-same Spaniards, hauing thorowly lost the feare of God, and of the King, and forgotten themselues. For the discomfitures, cruelties, slaughters, spoiles, the destructions of Cities, pillages, violences, and Tyrannies which they haue made in so many Realmes, and so great haue been such and so horrible, that all the things which we haue spoken of, are nothing in comparison of those which haue beene done and executed from the yeere 1518. vnto the yeere 1542. and as yet at this time, this moneth current of September, are in doing and committing the most grieuousest, and the most abominablest of all: in such sort that the rule which wee set downe before is verified: That is, That from the beginning they haue alwaies proceeded from euill to worse, and haue gone beyond themselues in the most greatest disorders and deuillish doings.

In the former discourse of Hereta, you may find the names of all these first planters, or as this Author reckoneth, supplanters; which did rather depopulate then people whole Prouinces. I could haue added their names, but was loth to doe more then the Author had done then; whiles many of them liued: yea his most passionate and bitter inuectiues I haue taken out, only minding the Storie, therein also mollifying many things.

In such wise, as that since the first entring into New Spaine, which was on the eighe day of Aprill, in the eighteenth yeere vnto the thirtieth yeere, which make twelue yeeres complete: the slaughters and the destructions haue neuer ceassed, which the bloudie and cruell hands of the Spaniards haue continually executed in foure hundred and fiftie leagues of Land or thereabout in compasse, round about Mexico, and the Neighbour Regions round about, such as the which might containe foure or fiue great Realmes, as great and a great deale farre fertiler then is Spaine. All this Countrie was more peopled with Inhabitants, then Toledo, and Siuill, and Valledolid, and Samagoca, with Barcelona. For that there hath not beene commonly in those Cities, nor neuer were such a world of people, when they haue beene peopled with the most, as there was then in the said Country, which containeth in the whole compasse more then 1800. leagues: during the time of the aboue mentioned twelue yeeres, the Spaniards haue slaine and done to death in the said 450. leagues of Land what men, what women, what young and little children, more then foure Millions of soules, with the dint of the Sword and Speare, and by fire, during (I say) the Conquests (as they call them.) Neither yet doe I here comprize those, whom they haue slaine, and doe slay as yet euery day, in the aforesaid slauerie and oppression ordinarie.

Foure Millions slaine.

Amongst other Murders and Massacres they committed this one which I am now to speake of, in a great Citie more then of a thirtie thousand houshold, which is called Cholula: that is, that comming before them the Lords of the Countrie and places neere adioyning, and first and for-

Of New Spaine in particular.

formost the Priests with their chiefe high Priest in procession, to receiue the Spaniards with great solemnitie and reuerence, so conducting them in the middest of them, towards their Lodgings in the Citie, in the houses and place of the Lord, or other principall Lords of the Citie: the Spaniards aduised with themselues to make a massacre, or a chastise (as they speake) to the end, to raise and plant a dread of their cruelties in euery corner of all that Countrie.

Now this hath beene alwaies their customary manner of doing, in euery the Regions which they haue entred into, to execute incontinent vpon their first arriuall, some notable cruell butcherie, to the end, that those poore and innocent Lambes should tremble for feare which they should haue of them: in this wise they sent first to summon all the Lords and Noblemen of the Citie, and of all the places subiect vnto the same Citie: who so soone as they came to speake with the Captaine of the Spaniards, were incontinent apprehended before that any body might perceiue the matter, to be able thereupon to beare tidings thereof vnto others. Then were demanded of them fiue or sixe thousand Indians, to carry the lodings and carriages of the Spaniards: which Indians came forthwith, and were bestowed into the base Courts of the Houses. It was a pitifull case to see these poore folke, what time they made them ready to beare the carriages of the Spaniard. They come all naked, only their secret parts couered, hauing euery one vpon their shoulder a Net with a small deale of victuall: they bow themselues euery one, and hold their backes cowred downe like a sort of Ellie Lambes, presenting themselues to the Swords: and thus being all assembled in the base Court, together with others, one part of the Spanish all armed, bestowe themselues at the gates to hemme them in, whiles the rest put these poore Sheepe to the edge of the Sword and the Speares, in such sort, that there could not escape away one only person, but that he was cruelly put to death: saiuing that after a two or three dayes you might haue seene come forth sundry all couered with bloud which had hid and saued themselues vnder the dead bodies of their fellowes, and now presenting themselues before the Spaniards, asking them mercy and the saiuing of their liues: they found in them no pitie nor compassion any whit at all, but were all hewed in pieces.

All the Lords which were aboue and vnderneath, were all bound, the Captaine commanding them to be brent quicke being bound vnto stakes pitched into the ground. Howbeit one Lord, which might be peraduenture the principall and King of the Countrie saued himselfe, and cast himselfe with thirtie or fortie other men into a Temple thereby, which was as good vnto them as a Fort, which they call in their Language, Qowe: and there he defended himselfe a good part of the day. But the Spaniards, whose hands nothing can escape specially armed for the warre, cast fire on the Temple, and burned all those which were within.

The Mexican cruelties are before related, and therefore here omitted.

From Cholula they went to Mexico. The King Motenzuma sent to meet them a thousand of presents, and Lords, and people, making ioy and mirth by the way.

After great and abhominable tyrannies committed in the Citie of Mexico, and in other Cities, and the Countrey, ten, fifteene, and twenty leagues compasse of Mexico: this tyrannie and pestilence aduanced it selfe forward, to waste also, infect, and lay desolate the Prouince of Panuco. It was a thing to be wondred at of the world, of people that there were, and the spoyles and slaughters there done. Afterward they wasted also after the selfe manner, all the Prouince of Tuttepeke, and the Prouince of Ipelzingo, and the Prouince of Columa: each Prouince contayning more ground then the Realme of Leon and Castile.

This Captaine tyrant, with this gorgeous and pretended title, dispatched two other Captaines, as very tyrants and farre more cruell, and lesse pitifull then himselfe, into great Realmes most flourishing, and most fertile, and full of people, to wit, the Realme of Guatimala, which lieth to the Seaward on the South side, and the same of Naco, and Honduras, otherwise called Guaymura, which coasteth on the Sea on the North side, confronting and confining the one with the other, three hundred leagues distance from Mexico. He sent the one by Land, and the other by Sea: both the one and the other carried with them a many of troopes to serue on horsebacke and a foot.

He which went by Sea, committed exceeding pillings, cruelties, and disorders amongst the people on the Sea-coast.

The Prouinces and Realmes of Naco and Honduras, which resembled a Paradise of pleasures: and were more peopled, frequented, and inhabited, then any Countrey in the world: now of late, wee comming along thereby, haue seene them so dispeopled and destroyed, that who so should see them, his heart would cleaue for sorrow, ware hee neuer so flinty. They haue slaine within these eleuen yeeres, more then two millions of soules, hauing not left in more then an hundred leagues of the Countrey square, but two thousand persons, whom they slay as yet daily in the said ordinary bondage.

Two millions slaine.

The great tyrant and Captaine, which went to Guatimala (as hath beene said, exceeded all) from the Prouinces neere to Mexico, (according as himselfe wrote in a Letter to the principall Tyrant which had sent him) distant from the Realme of Guatimala foure hundred leagues (keeping the way by him traced) as he went, slue, robbed, burned and destroyed all the Countrey, whersoeuer he became, vnder the shadow of title aboue mentioned, saying: that they should submit ſubmit themſelues vnto them, in the name of the King of Spaine, who was vnto them vnknowne, and of whom they had neuer heard ſpeake: and which thoſe Nations there eſteemed more vniuſt and more cruell then they his men were. And the Tyrants giuing them no reſpite of time to deliberate, they fling vpon the poore folke, in a manner as ſoone as the meſſage was done, putting all to fire and bloud.

Pretence of rebellion againſt that Prince to which they neuer had beene ſubiect.

Of the Prouince and Realme of Guatimala.

NO ſooner arriued hee into this ſaid Realme: but that hee beganne with great ſlaughter of the Inhabitants. This notwithſtanding the chiefe Lord came to receiue him, being carried in a Lighter, with Trumpets and Tabours, reioycings, and diſports, accompanied with a great number of the Lords of the Citie of Vtlatan, head Citie of the whole Realme, doing them alſo ſeruice with all they had, but ſpecially in giuing them food abundantly, and whatſoeuer they demanded beſides. The Spaniſh lodged this night without the Citie, foraſmuch as the ſame ſeemed vnto them ſtrong, and there might be thereby danger.

This Captaine called to him the next morrow the chiefe Lord, with other great Lords, who being come as meeke ſheepe, he apprehended them all, and commanded them to giue him certaine ſummes of gold. They anſwering that they had none, foraſmuch as the Countrie yeelded none: he commandeth incontinent to burne them aliue, without hauing committed any crime whatſoeuer, and without any other forme of Proceſſe or ſentence.

As the Lords of all theſe Prouinces perceiued, that they had burned their ſoueraigne Lords, onely becauſe they gaue them no Gold, they fled all to the Mountaines, commanding their Subiects to goe to the Spaniards, and to ſerue them as their Lords, but that they ſhould not diſcouer them, nor giue them intelligence where they were. With this, loe all the people of the Countrey, preſenting them, and proteſting to be theirs, and to ſerue them as their Lords: The Captaine made anſwere that he would not accept of them, but that he would kill them if they told not where were their Lords. The Indians anſwered, they could not tell ought: but as touching themſelues they were content, that they ſhould employ them to their ſeruice, with their wiues and children: and that they ſhould vſe their houſes, and that there they might kill, or doe whatſoeuer them pleaſed.

It is a wonderfull thing, that the Spaniards went to their Villages and Burrowes, and finding there theſe ſilly people at their worke, with their wiues and children, neither miſdoubting any thing, they pierced them with their Boare-ſpeares, and hackled them to pieces. They came to one Burrow great and mighty, which held it ſelfe more aſſured then any other, becauſe of their innocency: whom the Spaniſh laid deſolate in a manner all whole, in the ſpace of two houres, putting to the edge of the ſword, children, with women, and aged perſons, and all thoſe which could not eſcape by fleeing.

The Indians aduiſed betweene them to digge certaine ditches in the middeſt of the wayes, to make their Horſes tumble into, and piercing their bellies with Pikes ſharpned and brent at one end, there beſtowed of purpoſe, and couered ouer ſo orderly with greene turfe, that it ſeemed there was no ſuch matter.

There fell in Horſes once or twice: for the Spaniards afterwards could beware of them. But now to auenge them, they made a Law, that as many Indians as might bee taken aliue, ſhould be flung into the ſame pits. Hereupon they caſt in women with child, and women new deliuered of child-birth, and old folke as many as they could come by, vntill that the ditches were filled vp. It was a lamentable thing to behold the women with their children ſtabbed with theſe pickes. All beſides, they ſlue with thruſt of Speares, and edge of Sword. They caſt of them alſo to fleſh fraunching Dogs, which tare them and deuoured them. They brent a Lord at a great fire of quicke flames: ſaying, they would herein doe him honour. And they perſiſted in theſe butcheries ſo vnnaturall, about ſeuen yeeres, from the yeere 24. vntill the yeere 31.

The Indians which eſcaped, with all other of the Countrie ſeeing all the miſchiefes of the Spaniſh, began to aſſemble, and put themſelues in Armes: whereupon the Spaniards worke great diſcomfitures and ſlaughters, returning to Guatimala, where they builded a Citie, the which God of a iuſt iudgement hath reuerſed with three ouerwhelmings falling all three together: the one was with water, the other with earth, and the third with ſtones, of the bigneſſe of ten or twentie Oxen. By ſuch like meanes all the Lords, and the men that were able to beare Armes being ſlaine: thoſe which remayned, were reduced into the Diabolicall ſeruitude aforeſaid, being made tributary ſlaues or villaines regardant, but giuing for their tribute ſonnes and daughters, for they will haue none other kinde of bond-men. And ſo the Spaniards ſending whole ſhips laden with them to Peru, to ſell them, with their other ſlaughters, haue deſtroyed and laid deſart an whole Realme, of an hundred leagues ſquare, or aboue, a Countrie the moſt bleſſefull, and peopled the moſt that might be in the world. For the Tyrant himſelfe wrote hereof, that it was more peopled then Mexico: and herein he ſaid the truth. He hath done to death, with his conſorts and confreres, more then foure or fiue millions of ſoules in fifteene or ſixteene yeeres ſpace, Guatimala deſtroyed with Earth-quakes.

Foure or fiue millions ſlaine space, from the yeere 24. vnto the yeere 40. and yet at this houre they slay and destroy those that remayne.

This Tyrant had a custome, when as he went to make warre vpon any Citie or Prouince: to carrie thither of the Indians already vnder-yoaked, as many as hee could, to make warre vpon the other Indians: and as he gaue vnto a ten or twentie thousand men which hee led along no sustenance, he allowed them to eate the Indians which they tooke: And so by this meanes hee had in his Campe an ordinary shambles of mans flesh, where in his presence they killed and rosted children. They killed men onely to haue off from them their hands and their feete, which parts they held to be the daintiest morsels.

Shambles of mans flesh.

He was the death of an infinite sort of the Indians in making of ships, the which hee transported after this rate great store of Artilerie, which hee loded vpon the shoulders of these poore folke going naked: whereby I haue seeue very many fall downe in the high way, by reason of their great burdens. He vndid whole households, by taking from the men their wiues and daughters: the which afterwards he dispersed in gifts to his Mariners and Souldiers to please them withall, who led them along with them in their Nauies. Hee stuffed all the ships with Indians, where they died for thirst and hunger. He made two Nauies, either of a great number of ships, with the which he consumed as with fire and lightning flashing from Heauen all those peoples.

Of new Spaine, and Panuco, and Xalisco.

AFter the exceeding cruelties and slaughters aforesaid, and the others which I haue omitted, which haue beene executed in the Prouinces of New Spaine and Panuco: there came to Panuco another Tyrant, cruell and vnbrideled, in the yeere 1525. Who in committing very many cruelties, and in branding many for slaues, after the manner aforesaid, which were all free, and in sending very many ships laden to Cuba, and Hispaniola, where they might best make merchandise of them, he atchieued the desolation of this Prouince.

800. Indians giuen for a Mare.

And it hath come to passe in his time, that there hath beene giuen for one Mare, eight hundred Indians soules partakers of reason. And this man from this roome was promoted to be President of Mexico, and of all the Prouince of New Spaine, and there were promoted with him other Tyrants, to the offices of Auditorships: in the which dignities they set forward also this Countrie into so extreme a desolation, that if God had not kept them by meanes of the resistance of the religious men of Saint Francis Order, and if that there had not beene prouided with all speed a Court of Audience, and the Kings Counsell in those parts friend to all vertue, they had layd waste all New Spaine, as they haue done the Ile of Nispaniola. There was a man, amongst those of the companie of this Captaine, who to the end to enclose a Garden of his, with a wall: kept in his workes eight thousand Indians, without paying them ought, nor giuing them to eate, in manner that they died, falling downe suddenly, and hee neuer tooke the more thought for the matter.

After that the chiefe Captaine which I spake of, had finished the laying waste of Panuco, and that hee vnderstood the newes of the comming of the Kings Court of Audience: hee aduised with himselfe to proceed farther into the innermost parts of the Realme, to search where hee might tyrannize at his ease, and drew by force out of the Prouince of Mexico, fifteene or twentie thousand men, to the end, that they should carrie the loades and carriages of the Spaniards, which went with him, of whom there neuer returned againe two hundred, the others being dead on the high-wayes.

He came at the Prouince of Mechuacham, which is distant from Mexico fortie leagues, a Region as blissefull and full of Inhabitants, as is that of Mexico. The King and Lord of the Countrey went to receiue him with an infinite companie of people, which did vnto them a thousand seruices and curtesies. He apprehended him by and by, for that he had the bruit to be very rich of Gold and siluer: and to the end, that he should giue him great treasures, he beganne to giue him the torments, and put him in a paire of stockes by the feet, his body stretched out, and his hands bound to a stake, he maketh a flashing fire against his feet, and there a boy with a basting sprinkle soked in Oyle in his hand, stood and basted them a little and a little; to the end to well rost the skinne. There was in one side of him a cruell man, the which with a Cros-bow bent, aymed right at his heart, on the other side another which held a Dog snarling, and leaping vp as to runne vpon him, which in lesse then the time of a Credo, had beene able to haue torne him in pieces: and thus they tormented him, to the end hee should discouer the treasures which they desired, vntill such time as a religious man of Saint Francis Order tooke him away from them, notwithstanding that hee died of the same torments. They tormented and slue of this fashion very many of the Lords and Cacikes in these Prouinces: to the end that they should giue them Gold and Siluer

At the same time a certaine tyrant found, that certaine Indians had hid their Idols, as those which had neuer beene better instructed by the Spaniards of any better God, hee apprehended and detayned prisoners the Lords, vntill such time as that they would giue them their Idols, suppo-

Digitized by Google

supposing all this while they had beene of Gold or of Siluer: howbeit they were not so, wherefore he chastised them cruelly and vniustly. But to the end he would not remayne frustrate of his intent, which was to spoyle, he constrayned the Cacikes to redeeme their said Idols, and they redeemed them for such Gold and Siluer as they could finde, to the end, to worship them for Gods, as they had beene wont to doe aforetime.

This great Captaine passed farther from Mechuacham to the Prouince of Xalisco, the which was all whole most full of people, and most happie. For it is one of the most fertilest and most admirable Countrie of the Indies, which had Burrowes contayning in a manner seuen leagues. As he entred this Countrey, the Lord with the Inhabitants, according as all the Indians are accustomed to doe, went to receiue him with presents and ioyfulnesse. Hee began to commit his cruelties and mischieuousnesse, which hee had learned, and all the rest had beene accustomed to practise, which is to heape vp Gold, which is their God. Hee burned Townes, hee tooke the Cacikes prisoners, and gaue them torments. Hee made slaues all that hee tooke. Whereof there died an infinite number tyed in chaines. The women new deliuered of child-birth, going laden with the stuffe of euill Christians, and being not able to beare their owne children because of trauell and hunger, were faine to cast them from them in the wayes, whereof there died an infinite. Xalisco.

An euill Christian taking by force a young Damsell to abuse her, the mother withstood him: and as shee would haue taken her away, the Spaniard drawing his Dagger or Rapier, cut off her hand, and slue the young girle with slashes of his weapon: because shee would not consent to his appetite.

Amongst many other things, he caused vniustly to be marked for slaues, foure thousand and fiue hundred soules as free as they, men, women, and sucking babes, from of a yeere and a halfe old, vnto three or foure yeeres old: which notwithstanding had gone before them in peace, to receiue them with an infinite number of other things that haue not beene set downe in writing.

His Stewards slue very many of the Indians, hanging them and burning them aliue, and casting some vnto the Dogs, cutting off their feet, hands, head and tongue, they being in peace, onely to bring them into a feare, to the end they should serue him

It is said of him, that he hath destroyed and burned in this Realme of Xalisco, eight hundred Burrowes, which was the cause that the Indians being fallen desperate, and seeing those which remayned, how they perished thus cruelly: they lift vp themselues, and went into the Mountaines, slaying certaine Spaniards: howbeit by good right. And afterwards because of the wickednesses and outrages of other tyrants now being, which passed by that way to destroy other Prouinces (that which they call discouering) many of the Indians assembled, fortifying themselues vpon certaine Rockes. Vpon the which Rockes the Spanish haue made, and yet at this present, and afresh doe make so many cruelties, that they almost made an end of laying desolate all this great Countrey, slaying an infinite number of people. 800. Townes destroyed.

Of the Realme of Yucatan.

THe yeare one thousand fiue hundred twenty and six, was deputed ouer the Realme of Yucatan another caitiffe Gouernour, and that through the lies and false reports which himselfe had made vnto the King: in like manner as the other tyrants vnto this present, to the end there might be committed vnto them offices and charges, by meanes whereof they might rob at their pleasures. This Realme of Yucatan was full of inhabitants; for that it was a Countrie in euery respect wholesome, and abounding in plentie of victuals, and of fruites more then Mexico; and singularly exceeded for the abundance of Honie and Waxe there to be found, more then in any quarter of the Indies, which hath beene seene vnto this present. It containeth about three hundred leagues compasse. The people of that Countrie were the most notable of all the Indies, as well in consideration of their policie and prudencie, as for the vprightnesse of their life, verily worthy the training of the knowledge of God: amongst whom there might haue beene builded great Cities by the Spanish, in which they might haue liued as in an earthly Paradise, if so be they had not made themselues vnworthy, because of their exceeding couetousnesse, hard hartednesse, and heinous offences: as also vnworthy they were of other moe blessings a great many, which God had set open in these Indies. This tyrant began with three hundred men to make warre vpon these poore innocent people, which were in their houses without hurting any body: where he slew and ransacked infinite numbers. And for because the Countrey yeeldeth no Gold, for if it had yeelded any, he would haue consumed those same Indians, in making them to toyle in the Mines; to the end he might make Gold of the bodies and soules of those for whom Iesus Christ suffered death, he generally made slaues of all those whom he slew not, and returned the Ships that were come thither, vpon the blowing abroad and noyse of the selling of slaues, full of people bartered for Wine, Oyle, Vinegar, powdred Bacons flesh, Garments, Horses, and that that euery man had neede of, according to the Captains estimate and iudgement. He would let choose amongst an hundred or fiftie yong Damosels, bartering some one of the faireſt, and of the best complexion, for a Caske of Wine, Oyle, Vineger, or for Porke powdred. And in like manner he would let choose out a young handsome Stripling amongst two or three hundred for the foresaid Merchandize. And it hath beene seene, that a youth seeming to bee the Sonne of some Prince, hath beene bartered for a Cheese, and an hundred persons for an Horse. Hee continued in these doings from the yeere twentie sixe, vntill the yeere thirtie three.

the

As these Spaniards, went with their mad Dogges a foraging by the tracke, and hunting out the Indian men and women: An Indian woman being sicke, and seeing she could not escape their Dogges, that they should not rent her as they did others: shee tooke a coard and hanged her selfe at a beame, hauing fastened at her foot a child she had of a yeere old, and she had no sooner done: behold these Curres, which come and dispatch this infant, howbeit that before it died, a Religious man a Frier baptized it.

When the Spanish parted out of this Realme, one amongst others said, to a Sonne of a Lord of some Citie or Prouince, that he should goe with him: the Boy answered, and said, he would not forsake his Countrie, The Spaniard replied: Goe with me, or else I will cut off thine eares. The young Indian persisted in his first saying, that he would not forsake his Countrie. The Spaniard drawing out his Dagger, cut off first one, and then his other eare. The youngman abiding by it still that he would not leaue his Countrie: he mangled off also his Nose, with the vppermost of his lips: making no more scrupulositie of the mater, then if he had giuen him but a philip. This damnable wretch magnified himselfe, and vaunted him of his doings villanously vnto a reuerend Religious person, saying: that hee tooke as much paines as hee could, to beget the Indian women in great numbers with child, to the end, he might receiue the more money for them in selling them great with childe for slaues.

In this Realme, or in one of the Prouinces of New Spaine, a certaine Spaniard went one day with his Dogges on hunting of Venison, or else Conies, and not finding game, hee minded his Dogges that they should bee hungrie, and tooke a little sweet Babie which hee bereaued the mother of, and cutting off from him the armes and the legges, chopped them in small gobbets, giuing to euery Dogge his Liuerie or part thereof, by and by after these morsels thus dispatched, he cast also the rest of the bodie or the carkasse to all the kenell together.

Being now departed the Realme all the Deuillish Tyrants, blinded with the couetousnesse of the riches of Peru, that reuerend Father, Frier Iames, with foure other Religious of Saint Francis, was moued in spirit to goe into this Realme to pacifie them, and for to preach to them, and to winne vnto Iesus Christ those which might bee remayning of the Butcheries and Tyrannous Murders, which the Spanish had beene perpetrating seuen continuall yeeres. And I beleeue that these same were those Religious persons, the which in the yeere thirtie foure, certaine Indians of the Prouince of Mexico, sending before them Messengers in their behalfe, requested them that they would come into their Countrie, to giue them knowledge of that one only God, who is God, and very Lord of all the world: according in the end to admit them with condition, that they should enter themselues alone, and not the Spaniards with them, that which the Religious promised them. For it was permitted them, yea commanded them so to doe, by the Vice-roy of New Spaine, and that there should bee no kind of displeasure bee done vnto them by the Spaniards. The Religious men preached vnto them the Gospell of Christ, as they are accustomed to doe, and as had beene the holy intention of the Kings of Castile, that should haue beene done. Howbeit, that the Spaniards in all the seuen yeeres space past, had neuer giuen them any such notice of the truth of the Gospell, or so much as that there was any other King sauing himselfe, that so tyrannized ouer them, and destroyed them. By these meanes of the Religious, after the end of fortie dayes that they had preached vnto them, the Lords of the Countrie brought vnto them, and put into their hands their Idols, to the end that they should burne them. After also they brought vnto them their young children, that they should catechise them, whom they loue as the Apple of their eye. They made for them also Churches, and Temples, and houses. Moreouer, some other Prouinces sent, and inuited them, to the end that they might come to them also, to preach, and giue them the vnderstanding of God, and of him whom they said to bee the great King of Castile. And being perswaded and induced by the Religious, and did a thing which neuer yet before hath beene done in the Indies. Twelue or fifteene Lords, which had very many subiects and great dominion, assembling euery one for his owne part his people, and taking their aduise and consent, of their owne voluntarie motion, yeelded themselues to the subiection, and to be vnder the domination of the Kings of Castile: admitting the Emperour as King of Spaine, for their Liege Souereigne. Whereof also they made certaine Instruments, by them consigned, which I keepe in my charge, together with the Testimonies thereunto of the said Religious.

The Indians being thus onward in the way of the faith, with the great ioy, and good hope of the Religious Brethren, that they should be able to winne vnto Iesus Christ all the people of the Realme that were the residue, being but a small number of the slaughters, and wicked wars passed: There entred at a certaine Coast, eighteene Spaniards Tyrants on horseback, and twelue on foot, driuing with them great loades of Idols, which they had taken in the other Prouinces

of

Digitized by Google

of the Indians. The Captaine of those thirtie Spaniards called vnto him a Lord of the Countrie therabouts as they were entred, and commandeth him to take those Idols, and to disperse them throughout all his Countrie, selling euery Idoll for an Indian man, or an Indian woman, to make slaues of them, with threatning them, that if he did not doe it, he would bid them battaile. That said Lord being forced by feare, distributed those Idols throughout all the Countrie, and commanded all his subiects, that they should take them to adore them, and that they should returne in exchange of that ware Indies and Indisses to make slaues of. The Indians being affraid, those which had two children, gaue him one, and hee that had three gaue him two. This was the end of this Sacrilegious Trafficke: and thus was this Lord or Cacique, faine to content these Spaniards: I say not Christians.

One of these abominable Chafferers, named Iohn Garcia, being sicke, and neere his death, had vnder his bed to packs of Idols, and commanded his Indisse Maid that serued him, to looke to it that she made not away his Idols, that there were for Marlmens, for they were good stuffe: and that making vent of them, shee should not take lesse then a slaue a piece for one of them with another: and in fine, with this his Testament and last Will thus deuised, the Catiffe died.

The Indians perceiuing that, that which the Religious had promised them, was as good as nothing: namely, that the Spaniards should not enter those Prouinces: and seeing the Spaniards which had laded thither Idols from other places, there to make vent of them, they hauing put all their Idols afore into the hands of the Friars, to the end they should bee burned, and to the end the true God should be by them adored, all the Country was in a mutinie, and a rage against the Religious Friars, and the Indians comming vnto them, say: Why haue you lied vnto vs, in promising vs by deceits that there should not enter any Spaniards into these Countries? And why haue you burnt our gods, seeing the Spaniards doe bring vs other Gods from other Nations? Were not our Gods as good, as the Gods of other Prouinces? The Friars pacified them in the best manner that they could, not knowing what to answere them: and went to seeke out those thirty Spaniards, to whom they declared the euill which they had done, praying them to get them thence: which the Spaniards would not doe, but said to the Indians, that those Religious men had caused them to come thither themselues of their owne accord, which was rightly an extreme maliciousnesse. In the end the Indians deliberated to kill the Religious men: By occasion whereof, the Friers fled away in a night, hauing aduertisement of the case by some of the Indians.

Of the Prouince of Saint Martha.

THe Prouince of Saint Martha, was a Countrie where the Spaniards gathered Gold in all plentie: the Land being with the Regions adiacent very rich, and the people industrious to draw out the Gold. Wherefore also infinite Tyrants haue made thither continually with their ships, ouer-running, and ranging along the Country, killing and spoyling those the Inhabitants, and ramping from them that gold that they had, with speedie returne euer to their ships, which went and came oftentimes. And so wrought they in those Prouinces great wasts and slaughters, and cruelties horrible, and that most commonly on the Sea-coast, and certaine leagues within the Country. At what time there went Spanish Tyrants to inhabite there. And for as much as the Country was exceeding rich as hath beene said, there euer succeeded Captaines one in anothers roome, euery one more cruell then other: in such sort that it seemed that euery one inforced himselfe, for the masterie in doing of euils. The yeere 1529. there went a great Tyrant, very resolute, with great troupes: but without any feare of God, or compassion of the nature of man, who wrought such wastes and slaughters so great, that he exceeded all others that had gone before him, himselfe robbing for the space of sixe or seuen yeeres that he liued, great Treasures: after being deceassed without confession, and fled from the place of his residence: there succeeded him other murdering Tyrants and Theeues, which made an end of the rest of the people: that from the yeere 1529. vnto this day, they haue reduced into a Wildernesse in those same quarters more then 400. leagues of Land, which was no lesse peopled then the other Countries which we haue spoken of.

Verily if I had to make a bed-roll of the Vngraciousnesses, of the Slaughters, of the Desolations, of the Iniquities, of the Violencies, of the Massacres, and other great Insolencies which the Spaniards haue done, and committed in those Prouinces of Saint Martha, against God, the King, and against those innocent Nations: I should write an Historie very ample. But that may be done if God spare me life, hereafter in his good time: onely I will set downe a few words of that which was written in a Letter by a Bishop of this Prouince, to the King our Soueraigne: and the Letter beareth date the twentieth of May, 1541. The which Bishop amongst other words speaketh thus: I say, sacred Maiestie, that the way to redresse this Countrie, is that his Maiestie deliuer her out of the power of Stepfathers, and giue vnto her an husband which may intreate her as is reason, and according as shee deserueth: otherwise, I am sure hereafter as the Tyrants which now haue the gouernment, doe torment and tormoyle her, she will soone take an end, &c. And a little below he saith: Whereby, your Maiestie shall know clearely, how those which gouerne in those quarters doe de- Bishop of S. Marthas Letter to Charles the fifth.

ſerue to be dismounted, and depoſed from their gouernment, to the end, that the Common-weales may be relieued. That if that be not done, in mine aduiſe, they can neuer be cured of their diſeaſes. His Maieſtie ſhall vnderſtand moreouer, that in thoſe Regions, there are not any Chriſtians but Deuils, that there are no Seruants of God and the King, but Traitors to the ſtate, and their King. And in truth the greateſt incumbrance that I find in reducing the Indians, that are in warre, and to ſet them at peace, and to lead thoſe which are at peace to the knowledge of our faith, is vnnaturall and cruell entreatie, which they that are in peace receiue of the Spaniſh, being ſo deeply altered, and auanced, that they haue nothing in more hatred and horror, then the name of Chriſtians, the which in all theſe Countries they call in their Language, Yares, that is to ſay, Deuils. For the acts which they committed here, are neither of Chriſtians, nor of men which haue the vſe of reaſon: but of Deuils. Whereof it commeth to paſſe, that the Indies which doe ſee theſe behauiours to be generally ſo farre eſtranged from all humanitie, and without any mercie, aſwell in the heads as in the members: they eſteeme, that the Chriſtians do hold theſe things for a Law, and that their God, and their King are the Authors thereof. And to endeuour to perſwade them otherwiſe, were to endeuour in vaine, and to miniſter vnto them the more ample matter, to deride and ſcorne Ieſus Chriſt and his Law. The Indians that are in warre, ſeeing the intreatie vſed toward the Indians that are in peace: would chooſe rather to die once for all, then to endure ſundrie deaths, being vnder the command of the Spaniſh. I know this by experience, moſt victorious Cæſar, &c.

He calleth the Indians in warre, thoſe which ſaued themſelues by flying into the Mountaines from the ſlaughters of the miſchieuous Spaniards. And hee calleth the Indians in peace, thoſe which after hauing loſt an infinite of their people, by the Maſſacres, haue beene thralled into the Tyrannicall and horrible ſeruitude aforeſaid, and whereof in the end they haue beene fined out, deſolated, and ſlaine, as appeareth by that which hath beene ſaid by the Biſhoppe, which notwithſtanding ſpeaketh but little, in compariſon of that which they haue ſuffered.

The Indians in that Countrie haue accuſtomed to ſay, if when they are trauelled and driuen vp the Mountaines loden, they happen to fall downe, and to faint for feebleneſſe, and for paine: for at that time they lay on vpon them blowes with their feet and with their ſtaues, and they breake their teeth with the pummels of their Swords, to make them riſe, and march on without taking of breath, with theſe words, Out vpon thee, what a Villaine art thou? they (I ſay) the Indians, for their parts are wont to ſay, I can no more: kill me here right. I doe deſire to die heere: and this they ſay with great ſighes, and being ſcarce able to ſpeake, for hauing their heart drawne together, declaring a great anguiſh and dolour.

Of the Prouince of Carthagene.

THis Prouince of Carthagene, is ſituate vnder, and a fiftie leagues diſtant from the ſame of Saint Martha, towards the Weſt, confining with the Prouince of Cen, vnto the Gulph of Arabe: which are a hundred leagues all along the Sea-ſide, and is a great Countrie within Land towards the South. Theſe Prouinces ſince the yeere 1498. or ninetie nine, vntill now haue beene euill entreated, martyred, maſſacred, deſolated like vnto that of Saint Martha.

Of the Coaſt of Pearles, and of Paria, and of the Ile of the Trinitie.

FRom the Coaſt of Paria, vnto the Gulfe of Veneſuela, without forth, which are two hundred leagues: the Spaniſh haue wrought great and ſtrange deſtructions, rioting vpon that people, and taking aliue as many as they could, to the end they might ſell them for ſlaues: and oftentimes making them priſoners againſt the aſſurance and the promiſe of friendſhip made vnto them. It cannot bee well told, nor particularly expreſt, the ſundrie kindes and greiuous vexations, wrongs, hurts, and ſpoiles, which thoſe people, indured at the Spaniards hands, from the yeere 1510. vntill this preſent. I will onely rehearſe two or three acts, by the which it may be iudged of the reſt, innumerable and exceſſiue, and worthy all torments and fire.

In the Ile of the Trinitie, which is farre greater and more fertile then the Ile of Sicile, and ioyneth with the firme Land of the Coaſt of Paria, and where the people are the beſt diſpoſed, and moſt enclined to vertue in their kind, of all the Indians, as they went, there a Captaine Rouer in the yeere, 1510. accompanied with ſixtie or ſeuentie other petie Theeues well appointed: they publiſhed among the Indians by Proclamations, and other publike Summons, that they ſhould come and dwell and liue with them in that Ile. The Indians receiued them as their owne bowels and babes: and as well the Lords as Subiects ſerued them with exceeding readineſſe, bringing them to eate from day to day, as much as might ſuffice to feed, as many moe people. For this is the liberalitie of all theſe Indians of the new World, to beſtow on the Spaniards of all that they haue in great abundance.

The Spaniſh build a great houſe of Timber in the which the Indians ſhould dwell altogether:

for

Digitized by Google

for the Spaniſh would haue it ſo, that there ſhould bee one only houſe for all, and no more, to compaſſe that, which they had alreadie premeditate to doe, and did it. When they laid the Thatch vpon the binding ſtaues or ſparres, and had alreadie couered to the height of two mens length, to the end that thoſe that were within might not ſee thoſe that were without, vnder colour to haſten forward the worke, that it might bee the ſooner diſpatched, they ſet a great number of people within, the Spaniards deuiding themſelues, the one part of them being beſtowed without, compaſſing the houſe round about with their weapons, becauſe of thoſe that might get forth, the other part of them preſſe into the houſe: Thus laying hands on their Swords, they beganne to threaten the Indians naked as they were, to kill them if they did ſtirre, and then bound them. And thoſe which fled they hewed them in pieces: Howbeit ſome of the Indians which fled, both of the hurt and not hurt, with others that had not come within the houſe, tooke their Bowes and Arrowes and aſſembled themſelues in another houſe, about an hundred or two hundred perſons: And as they kept the gate, the Spaniards ſet fire on the houſe, and burned them aliue. After with their purchaſe, which might bee of an hundred or foureſcore perſons of them which they had bound: they get them to the Ile of Saint Iohn, where they ſold the one moitie, and thence to the Ile of Hiſpaniola: where they ſold the other moitie. As I reprehended the Captaine for this notable Treaſon, at the ſame time, and at the ſame Ile of Saint Iohn, he made an anſwere: Sir, quiet your ſelfe for that matter. So haue they commanded me to doe, and giuen me inſtruction which ſent me: that if I could not take them by warre, I ſhould take them vnder countenance and colour of peace. And in truth the Captaine told mee that in all his life, he neuer had found Father nor Mother, but in this Ile of Trinitie, in reſpect of the friendly courteſies the Indians had ſhewed him.

At another time, the Religious Friars of Saint Dominickes Order, beeing determined to goe preach, they receiued them as Angels comne from Heauen: and heard with great affection, attention, and willingneſſe ſuch words as the Religious at that time were able to giue them to vnderſtand, more by ſignes then otherwiſe, for they knew not the tongue. It came to paſſe that there arriued there another ſhip, after that the ſhip in which the Religious men came was departed thence, and the Spaniſh in this Veſſell, keeping their Deuilliſh cuſtome, by ſuttletie without the knowlede of the Religious, carried away the Lord of the Countrie called Alfonſo: were it that Friars had giuen him this name, or elſe others. For the Indians loue and deſire to beare the name of the Chriſtians, deſiring incontinent that it may be giuen them euen before they know any thing, that they may be baptized. They induced fraudulently this Don Alfonſo to come aboord their ſhip with the Ladie his wife, and other perſons, making ſemblance to goe about to feaſt them. In the end there entred ſeuenteene perſons, together with the Lord and his Ladie: the Lord truſting that the Religious perſons being entred into his Countrie, would keepe the Spaniards from doing any wrong: for otherwiſe hee would neuer haue put himſelfe in the hands of the Spaniſh. The Indians therefore thus being in the ſhip, the traiterous Spaniards hoiſed ſailes, and away they went to Hiſpaniola with them, there ſelling them for ſlaues. All the Countrie ſeeing that their Lord and Ladie were carried away, they runne to the Religious men, purpoſing to kill them. The poore men appeaſed the Indians in the beſt manner they could, ſaying that they would write to them at Hiſpaniola by the firſt ſhip that went, and would take ſuch care and order in the matter, that their Souereigne ſhould bee reſtored them againe with thoſe that were in his company. God ſent immediately a ſhip thither, and they wrote to the Spaniſh Religious men that were in the Ile of Hiſpaniola. They cry out, and call Heauen and Earth witneſſe againſt them, both firſt, and ſundrie times after: But the Iudges of the audience, would neuer giue them audience to doe them Iuſtice, for becauſe themſelues had part in the bootie of the Indians, which the Tyrants had ſo againſt all right and reaſon taken. The two Religious men, which had promiſed the Indians of the Countrie, that their Lord Don Alfonſo, with others ſhould come home with the reſt within foure moneths, ſeeing that they came not neither in foure nor eight made themſelues readie to the death, and to giue their life, which they had gaged before they came out of Spaine, if neede ſhould bee, and in that ſort the Indians tooke vengeance on them in killing them iuſtly, notwithſtanding that they were innocent: for becauſe that they thought, that the Religious men had beene the occaſion of this Treaſon.

Spaniſh Friers killed for others faults.

Another time, by reaſon of the great Tyrannies and execrable acts of the curſed ones, bearing the name of Chriſtians, the Indians ſlue other two Religious men of Saint Dominickes Order, and one of Saint Francis. Whereof I can be a good witneſſe for that I eſcaped at the time miraculouſly from the ſame death, of the which it ſhould be a hard matter to intreat, and would be to amaze men, by reaſon of the grieuouſneſſe and horribleneſſe of the caſe. Wherefore I will not lay it abroad (for being too tedious) vntill his time, and at the day of iudgement it ſhall bee more euident, when God ſhall take vengeance of the Theeueries ſo horrible and ſo abominable as are done by thoſe which beare the name of Chriſtians againſt the Indians.

Another time in thoſe Prouinces at the Cape of the Codera, (as they call it) there was a Towne, the Lord whereof was named Higueroto a name either proper to the perſon, or it may be common to the Lords of the place. This Lord was so bounteous, and his people so vertuous and seruiceable, that as many Spaniards as came thither by ship, they found there good entertainment, meate, lodging, all cheering, and refreshing. This said Lord had also deliuered many from death of those which were fled thither out of other Prouinces, where they had rioted and tyrannized, and come thither sicke, and halfe dead for hunger, whom they refreshed, and afterward sent them away safe, to the Ile of Pearles, where there were Spaniards, and might haue slaine them if he had would, without that euer any should haue knowne it. And shortly to say the Spanish did call the Subiects of Higuereto, the House and Harbour of euery body. A Catiffe Tyrant aduised himselfe to out-rage that people also, when as they thought themselues sure enough: and getting him to a ship, he had there inuited a great number of people to come aboord her as they were accustomed to doe, and to trust the Spaniards. A great number of people being entred into her, men, women, and children, hee hoysed sailes, and went to the Ile of Saint Iohn, where he sold them all for slaues. I came at the same instant to the Ile of Saint Iohn, and I saw the Tyrant, and vnderstood what he had done. He had destroyed all that Townshipe: whereby he did great harme to all other his fellow Tyrants, wonted to rob, and roue all along those Coasts, insomuch as they had in abomination this act so hideous, being bereft thereby of their Harbour, and house of retire, as ordinary and familiar vnto them as it had beene their owne home and house.

Digitized by Google

Two Millions of soule Indians.

They haue singled out at times from all this Coast, the which was very well peopled, vnto the Iles of Saint Iohn and Hispaniola, aboue two Millions of soules, seised vpon by their purchases in theeuing and robbing: which also euery one of them they haue slaine not long after, by thrusting them into the Minerals and other tormoiles, besides the great numbers there were there alreadie before time, as we haue aboue said.

It is a tried case, that they neuer conuey away their shippings of Indians so robbed and purchased, as I haue said, but that they cast the third part into the Sea, besides those which they slay, when they will sort them to themselues for their chaffer. The cause is, that when as they will by all meanes attaine to the end which they haue proposed to themselues: they haue need of a great number of people, for to draw a great deale of money, according to the quantitie of the Manner of vsage at Sea.

slaues: and they prepare but a very small deale of sustenance and water, to serue but a few persons: to the end that those Tyrants whom they cal Purueyours of the ships should not spend them much. And there is but euen scarse enough, saue to serue the Spaniards turne which goe a rouing and robbing: and there is alwaies wanting for the poore Indians. Wherefore also they die for hunger and thirst: and then there is none other remedie but to cast them ouer the boord into the Sea. And verily a man among them did tell me, that from the Ile of Lucayos, where had beene wrought great slaughters in this manner, vnto the Isle of Hispaniola, which are sixtie or seuentie leagues, there trended a ship all alongst, without that it had either Compasse or Mariners Card, being guided onely by the tracke of dead Indians carkasses floating vpon the Seas, of them which had bin cast in. And after they be landed in the Ile, whither they bring them to make sale of them

Manner of landing and sharing.

it is to make a heart to yearne of whosoeuer, haue he neuer so little compassion, to behold them naked and famished, fall downe and faint for hunger and thirst, women, and aged men, and children.

Afterwards they soone after separate them, as it were Lambes, the fathers from the children, and the wiues from the husbands, in making troupes of them of ten or twentie persons, and so cast lots on them, to the end, those Purueyours should take their share, which are those who doe rigge and furnish two or three ships for the Nauie of those Tyrants, seasing vpon all they come by, and pulling the poore men out of their owne housen. And looke when the lot falleth vpon the flocke where there were among them any old or sicke person, the Tyrant to whom the same escheated would say: The Deuill take the old Graybeard, why doest thou giue him mee, to the end I should goe burie him? And this sicke Rascall, what haue I to doe that hee should fall out to my lot: to the end, I should be his Physicion to cure him?

Manner of Pearle-fishing.

The tyrannie which the Spanish exercise ouer the Indians, to fish for Pearles, is one of the cruellest things that is in the World. There is no hell in this life, nor other desperate state in this World, that may be compared vnto it: although that the Trade of Gold finding, be in his kind, very grieuous, and very miserable. They let them into the Sea, three, foure, or fiue fathome forth downe right vnder water, from the morning vntill Sun-set, where they are continually flitting without stint, to plucke Oysters, in the which are engendred the Pearles. They surge vp aboue the waters, with a Net full of Oysters to take breath: where standeth readie a Spanish Tormentor, in a little Cocke Boate, or a Brigantine, and if the poore wretches stay neuer so little while to rest themselues: they all to be buffet them with their fists, and draw them by the haire into the water to returne to their fishing. Their sustenance is fish, and the same very fish which containeth the Pearles, and the bread Caçabi, or some Maiz, which are the kinds of bread of that Countrie: the one of very slender nourishment, the other is not easie to bee made into bread, of the which also, they neuer giue them their belly full. The beds that they lodge them in a nights, is to set them by the heeles, their bodies recoyling on the cold ground; in a paire of stockes stockes for feare of running away. Sometimes they are drowned in the Sea, and at their fishing and trauell picking of Pearles, and neuer rise vp againe aboue the water: because the * Bunches and whirlepooles doe kill them and eate them. * Sharkes.

It is impossible, that men should be able to liue any long season vnder the water without taking breath, the continuall cold piercing them, and so they die commonly, parbraking of bloud at the mouth, and of the bloudy fluxe, caused by the cold. Their haires, which by nature are cole blacke, alter and become after a branded russet, like to the haires of the Sea-wolues. The Saltpeter breaketh out of their shoulders, in such sort, that they seeme to bee a kinde of monsters in the shape of men, or else some other kinde of men. They dispatched in ridding about this insupportable trauell, or rather to speake rightly, this deuilish torment, all the Lucayan Indians which were in the Iles, hauing fauoured this gaines, and euery Indian was worth vnto them a fiftie, or an hundred Castillans. They made an open Mart of them, notwithstanding it were inhibited them, by the Magistrate otherwise vnmercifull: for the Lucayens were good swimmers. They also, about these things haue slaine a number of the people of other Prouinces.

Of the Riuer Yuia pari.

THere runneth through the Prouince of Paria, a Riuer named Yuia Pari, more then two hundred leagues within land from the head. There entred the same Riuer, an vnlucky tyrant, a great many leagues vpward, in the yeere 1529. with foure hundred men, or more: which there wrought great slaughters, burning aliue, and putting to the edge of the sword, an infinite sort of Indians, which were in their lands and houses, doing hurt to no creature, and therefore secure, and mistrusting nothing.

In the end hee died an euill death, and his Name was disparaged: albeit that other tyrants there were which succeeded him in his mischieuousnesses and tyrannies: and yet at this day thither they goe, destroying, and slaying, and plunging into Hell the soules for whom the Sonne of God shed his bloud.

Of the Realme of Venesuela.

THe yeere 1526. the King our Soueraigne, being induced by sinister informations and perswasions damageable to the State, as the Spaniards haue alwaies pained themselues to conceale from his Maiestie the damages and dishonours which God and the soules of men, and his State doeth receiue in the Indies: granted and committed a great Realme, greater then all Spaine (Venesuela, with the gouernment and entire iurisdiction) vnto certaine Dutch Merchants, with certaine capitulations and conuentions accorded betweene them.

These same entring the Countrey with three hundred men: they found the people very amiable, and meeke as Lambes, as they are all in those parts of the Indies, vntill the Spanish doe outrage them. These set vpon them without comparison a great deale more cruelly, then any of the other tyrants, of the which wee haue spoken before: shewing themselues more vnnaturall and fierce, then raging Tigres, or Wolues, or ramping Lions. These haue layd desolate and destroyed more then foure hundred leagues of most fertile land, and therein of Prouinces exceeding and wonderfull, faire Valleyes to the breadth of forty leagues, and Bournes very great, full of people and of Gold. They haue slaine, and wholly discomfited great and diuers Nations, so farre forth as to abolish the Languages wonted to bee spoken, not leauing aliue that could skill of them: vnlesse some one or other, who had hid themselues in the caues and bowels of the earth, fleeing the dint of the sword, so raging and plaguing. They haue slaine destroyed, and sent to Hell by diuers and strange manners of cruelties and vngodlinesse, more (I suppose) then foure or fiue millions of soules: and yet at this present they cease not to doe the same by infinite outrages, spoyles and slaughters, which they haue committed, and doe commit daily vnto this present. Foure or fiue millions slaine in Venesuela.

They tooke the Lord Soueraigne of all the Prouince, without all cause, onely to bereaue him of his Gold, giuing him also the torture: which Lord vnbound himselfe, and escaped from them into the Mountaines, wherefore also the Subiects rose, and were in a mutinie, hiding themselues vpon the Mountaines, amongst the hedges and bushes. The Spaniards make after to chase them, and hauing found them, commit cruell massacres, and as many as they take aliue, they sell them in port sale for slaues. In diuers Prouinces, yea in all where they became before that they tooke the Soueraigne Lord, the Indians went to receiue them with songs, and dances, and with presents of Gold in great quantitie. The payment made them, was, to bee put to the edge of the sword, and hewen in pieces. One time, as they went to receiue the Spanish in the fashion aboue said: the Dutch Captaine tyrant caused to bee put in a thatched house a great number of people, and hakled in pieces. And being on high, neere the top of the house, certaine beames, which diuers had got vpon, auoyding the bloudy hands and swords of those people (O mercilesse beasts) the deuilish man, sent to put to fire, whereby as many as there were, were burned aliue. By this meanes the Countrie remayned very desart, the people fleeing into the Mountaines, where they hoped to saue themselues.

They came into another great Prouince, in the confines of the Prouince and Realme of Saint Martha, where they found the Indians peaceable in their Burroughs, and in their houses, doing their businesse: they continued a long time with them, eating their store, and the Indians serued them, as if they had to receiue of them their life and safeguard, supporting their continuall oppressions, and vsuall outragiousnesses, which are intolerable: besides that one Spanish glutton, eateth more in one day, then would suffice an whole household of more then ten Indians. They gaue them at that time, a great quantitie of Gold, of their owne good-will, ouer and besides, other seruices innumerable, which they did vnto them. At the end as these tyrants would depart the place, they aduised to pay them for their lodging, in this manner.

The Almaine tyrant Gouernour, commanded to take such Indians as they could, with their wiues and children, and that they should shut them vp within an inclosure, letting them know, that who so would come forth, and be let goe free, that he should redeeme himselfe at the pleasure of the vniust Gouernour: in giuing so much Gold for himselfe, so much for his wife, and so much for euery poll of his children. And yet to presse them the more, he commanded to giue them nothing to eate, vntill such time as they had performed the quantitie of Gold inflicted them for their ransome. Many sent to their houses for Gold, and bought out themselues as they were able, and those same were deliuered, and went abroad about their businesse to get their liuing. The tyrant sent certaine Spanish thieues and robbers, to goe take them againe the second time, after they had beene redeemed. They are carried to the perclose, and there wrung with hunger and thirst, to the end, that they should yet once againe pay for their freedome. And there were many amongst them, which were taken and ransomed two or three sundry times. Others which had not to giue, for because they had all they had, hee let them within the toyle die for hunger. And in this manner hath beene destroyed a Prouince very rich of people and gold, the which hath a Vale or Bourne of fourtie leagues, where hath beene brent a Burrough of the receit of a thousand households.

This Tyrant resolued with himselfe to pierce farther into the Countrey, with a great desire to discouer on that side, that Hill of Peru. By occasion of which accursed Voyage both hee and others carried forth with them, Indians infinite, loden with two or three quintals weight, and being enchained. If any were weake and weary, fainting for hunger, or trauelling, they cut incontinent his head off euen with the collar of the chaine that yoked them: because they should not need to vnhamper the others that went with the same collars about their neckes, and so tumbled the head on the one side, and the body on the other. And the lode of him that had so fayled was distributed and bestowed vpon others. To tell of the Prouinces, which hee hath layed desart, and the Townes and places which hee hath brent, for all the houses are thatched, and to number the Nations which hee hath slaine, and the cruelties, and murders particular, which hee had committed by the way, it would bee a thing scarse credible: howbeit very true and wonderfull. In this same very course and steppes marched hithence the other tyrants, who came from the said Venesuela, and others of the Prouince of Saint Martha, with the selfe same holy intention to discouer the same sacred golden Palace of Peru: and found the whole Countrie in length more then two hundred leagues so burned, dispeopled, and spoyled, hauing beene before most notably peopled, and most fertile, as hath beene said, that themselues as very tyrants and sauage beasts as they were, wondered and stood astonished to see the trackes of the destructions so lamentable, whersoeuer he had passed.

All these things haue beene giuen in euidence with the depositions of many witnesses by the Attorney of the Councell of the Indies, and the euidences are kept amongst the Records of the same Councell: and yet haue they neuer burnt aliue, any of those execrable tyrants. Those Prouinces of Venesuela with the others which they haue laid waste, and dispeopled more then foure hundred leagues forthright, as hath beene said, is a region the most blissefull, and the richest of Gold, and was the best peopled of any in the world: in such sort, that they haue disturned from the Kings Coffers, and occasioned the losse in this Realme of aboue two millions of rent, within seuenteene yeeres sithence by past, that these enemies of God and the King haue begunne to destroy it: neither is there any hope that euer those losses will be repaired.

These seuenteene yeeres they haue sent by Sea a great number of ships loden and stuffed with Indians, to make sale of them as slaues at Saint Martha, at the Iles of Hispaniola, and of Iamayca, and at Saint Iohns Ile, moe then one million: and doe send daily, as now this yeere 1542. the Court of the Audience Royall notwithstanding established, for, and at Hispaniola, right well seeing all this, and dissimuling to see it, yea, fauouring and supporting all the matter: as likewise they haue had their eyes blinded at all the other tyrannies and ransackings infinite, which haue beene done in all this coast of the Firme land which are about foure hundred leagues, the which haue beene and now are vnder their iurisdiction, like vnto Venesuela, and Saint Martha: all which the said Court might very well haue empeached and remedied.

A million of slaues.

Of

Of the Prouinces of the firme land, or quarter that is called Florida.

INto these Prouinces went three tyrants at three diuers times since the yeere 1510. or 1511. there to put in vre the acts which others, and two of them from among themselues haue committed in other quarters of the Indians: to the end to aspire to high degrees, in no respect conueniente to their persons, higher then their merits in the Common-wealth could conceiue, with the bloud and destruction of their neighbours: and they are dead all three of an euill death, and their houses likewise haue beene destroyed with them, the which they had builded in times past, with the bloud of mankind, as I can be, a sufficient witnesse of all three, and their memory is now abolished from of the face of the earth, as if they had neuer beene in this world.

The fourth tyrant, that came last in the yeere 1538. cunningly aduised, and being fully furnished: it is three yeeres since there is no tidings concerning him. Sure he is one of the notoriousest and best experimented amongst them that haue done the most hurts, mischieues, and destructions in my Realmes with their consorts: wherefore I beleeue that God hath giuen him like end vnto the others.

Iuan Ponce de Leon with 80. men were all lost there. After him Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon with 220. Pamphilo de Naruaez with 400. and fourthly Ferdinando de Soto with 1000. as some say, and they which say least, 600. entred Florida, whose stories you haue before. Of Soto was no newes An. 1542. when this was written. See before in Schmidel.

Of the Riuer of La Plata, that is to say, Of Siluer.

SIthence the yeere, one thousand fiue hundred, and two or three and twenty: certaine Captaines made three or foure Voyages vp the Riuer of Plata, where there are great Prouinces and Realmes, and Nations well ordered and endued with vnderstanding. In generall wee vnderstood, that they haue made there great butcheries and inuasions: but like as this Countey is farre discoasted from the Indies most famous, so we are not able, to quote the notablest points in particular.

Of the mighty Realmes, and large Prouinces of Peru.

IN the yeere 1531. went another great tyrant with certaine other consorts, to the Realmes of Peru, where entring with the same title and intention, and with the same proceedings as all the rest before gone, forasmuch as he was one of them, which had of long time beene exercised in all kindes of cruelties and murders, which had beene wrought in the firme land, sithence the yeere 1510. hee tooke encouragement to accrue in cruelties, murders, and robberies; being a man without loyaltie and truth, laying waste Cities and Countries, bringing them to nought, and vtterly vndoing them by slaying the Inhabitants, and being the cause of all the euils, which ensued in that Countrie.

He slue and laid waste at his first arriuall with a mischiefe certaine boroughes, from whom he pillaged a great quantitie of Gold. In an Iland neere to the same Prouinces, named Puna, well peopled and pleasant, the Lord thereof with his people receiued them as it had beene Angels from heauen: and six moneths after, when as the Spanish had eaten vp all their prouision: They discouered also vnto them the corne which they kept vnder ground, for themselues, their wiues, and their children, against a dry time and barren: making them offer of all, with trees plentifull to spend and eate at their pleasure. The recompence in the end which they made them, was to put to the edge of the Sword and Lance, a great quantitie of those people. And those whom they could take aliue, they made slaues: with other cruelties great and notable which they committed, dispeopled as it were all that Ile.

From thence they make to the Prouince of Tumbala, which is in the firme land, where they slay and destroy as many as they could come by. And because all the people were fled as affrighted by their horrible acts, they said that they made an insurrection, and rebelled against the King of Spaine. This tyrant had this policie, and kept this order of proceeding, that vnto all those whom he tooke, or vnto others which presented him with Gold and Siluer, or other things which they had: he commanded them to bring more, vntill such time as he perceiued that either they had no more, or that they brought him no more. And then he would say, that he accepted them for the vassals and lieges of the King of Spaine, and made much of them: and would cause it to be proclaimed at sound of two Trumpets, that from thenceforth they would take them no more, and that they would doe them no manner harme at all: setting it downe for good and lawfull, all whatsoeuer he had robbed from them.

A few dayes after the King and Emperour of those Realmes, named Atabaliba, came accompanied with a number of naked people, bearing their ridiculous armour, not knowing neither how Swords did carue, nor Speares did pierce, nor Horses did run, nor who or what were the Spaniards. Hee commeth to the place where they were, saying: Where are these Spaniards? Let them come, I will not stirre a foote, till they satisfie me for my Subiects whom they haue slaine, and my boroughs which they haue dispeopled, and for my wealth, which they haue bereaued me.

The

Fifteene Millions paid for Atabalipas ransome.

The Spaniards set against him, and slew an infinite sort of his people: they tooke him also in person, who came carried in a Litter borne vpon mens shoulders. They treate with him, to the end that he should ransome himselfe. The King offereth to performe foure millions of Castillans, and performeth fifteene, they promise to releale him: notwithstanding in the end, keeping nor faith nor truth (as they neuer kept any in the Indies, vnto the Indians) they laid to his charge altogether vntruely, that by his commandement the people assembled. The King answered, that in all the Countrie there moued not a leafe of a tree, without his good will: that if there assembled any people, they were to beleeue that it was by his commandement, and as touching himselfe that he was prisoner, and they might slay him.

All this notwithstanding, they condemned him to be burnt aliue: but at the request of some certaine, the Captaine caused him to be strangled: and being strangled, hee was burned. This King vnderstanding his sentence, said: Wherefore will you burne me? What trespasse haue I done yee? Did not you promise me to set me at libertie, if I gaue you the Gold? And haue I not performed more then I promised? Seeing you needes will haue it so, send me to your King of Spaine: speaking other things, to the great confusion and detestation of the great wrongfulnesse that the Spaniards vsed, whom in the end they burned. Here let be considered the right and title of this warfare, the imprisonment of this Prince, the sentence, and the execution of his death, and the conscience, whereby they possesse great treasures, as indeede they haue robbed in those Realmes from this King and other seuerall Lords infinite.

As touching the innumerable cruelties, and notable, for the mischiefes and enormities withall committed in the rooting out of those peoples by them, who call themselues Christians: I will here rehearse some certaine, the which a Frier of Saint Francis order saw at the beginning, and the same certified vnder his name and signe: sending them into all those quarters, and amongst others into this Realme of Castile, whereof I retaine a Copie in my keeping, in the which it is thus written:

Testimony of Frier Marke touching Pizarro and the Spaniards which first entred Peru.

I Frier Marke, of the order of Saint Francis, commissarie ouer the other Friors of the same Order in the Prouinces of Peru, and who was one of the first religious men, which entred into the said Prouinces with the Spaniards: doe say, bearing true testimonie of certaine things, the which I haue seene with mine eyes in that Countrie, namely, concerning the entreatie and conquests made ouer the naturall inhabitants of the Countrie: first of all I am an eye witnesse, and haue certaine knowledge, that those Indians of Peru, are a people the most kinde hearted that hath beene seene among all the Indians, being courteous in conuersation, and friendly vnto the Spaniards. And I saw them giue to the Spanish in abundance, Gold, Siluer, pretious stones, and all that was asked them, and that they had, doing them all kinde of seruice lawfull. And the Indians neuer yeelded forth to warre, but kept them in peace so long time, as they gaue them not occasion, by their euill entreating of them and their cruelties, but contrariwise receiued them with all amitie and honour in their boroughes, in giuing them to eate, and as many slaues mankinde and womenkinde, as they demanded for their seruice.

Item, I am witnesse, that without that the Indians gaue occasion: the Spanish as soone as they were entred the land, after that the great Cacique Atabalipa, had giuen to the Spanish more then two millions of Gold, and had put into their power the whole Countrie without resistance, incontinent they burned the said Atabalipa, which was Lord of the whole Countrie. And after him they burnt his captaine generall Cochilimaca, who had come to the Gouernour in peace with other Lords. In the like manner also a few dayes after they burned a great Lord named Chamba, of the Prouince of Quito, without any fault at all, and without hauing giuen the least occasion that might be. In like manner they burned vniustly Schappera Lord of the Canaries . Also they burnt the feete of Aluis a great Lord amongst all those which were in Quito; and caused him to endure sundry other torments, to make him tell where was the Gold of Atabalipa: of the which treasure, as it appeared, he knew nothing.

* A people of those parts, good warriors, not of the Canary Ilands.

Also they burnt in Quito Cofopanga, who was Gouernour of all the Prouinces of Quito, which vpon the request to him first made by Sebastian of Bernalcasar, Captaine vnder the Gouernour, was come to them in peace: and onely because he gaue them not Gold so much as he demanded of him, they burned him with very many other Caciques and principall Lords. And for ought that I can vnderstand, the intent of the Spaniards was, that there should not be left aliue one Lord in the whole Countrey.

Item, I certifie, that the Spaniards caused to assemble a great number of Indians, and locked them vp in three great houses, as many as could be pored in, and setting to fire, they burned them all, without that they had done the least thing that might be, or had giuen to the Spanish the least occasion thereof whatsoeuer. And it came to passe, that a Priest, who is named Ocanna, drew a yong Boy out of the fire, in the which he burned, which perceiuing, another Spaniard tooke from out of his hands the Boy, and flung him into the middest of the flames, where he was reselued into ashes together with others. The which Spaniard returning the same day to the Campe, fell downe dead suddenly, and mine aduice was, he should not be buried.

Item, I affirme, to haue seene with mine owne eyes, that the Spanish haue cut the hands, the noses, and the eares of the Indians, and of their women, without any other cause or purpose, saue onely that so it came into their fantasie, and that in so many places and quarters, that it should be too tedious to rehearse. And I haue seene, that the Spanish haue made their Mastines runne vpon the Indians to rent them.

Digitized by Google

them in pieces. And moreouer, I haue ſeene by them burnt ſo many houſes, and whole boroughes, or townſhips, that I am not able to tell the number. Alſo it is true, that they violently plucked the little infants from the Mothers dugges, and taking them by the armes, did throw them from them as farre as they could: Together with other enormities and cruelties without any cauſe, which gaue me aſtoniſhment to behold them, and would be to long to rehearſe them.

Item, I ſaw when they ſent for the Caciques and other principall Indians, to come ſee them in peace, and aſſurance to them made, promiſing them ſafe conduct: and incontinent as they were arriued, they burned them. They burned two whiles I was preſent, the one in Andon, and the other in Tumbala: and I could neuer preuaile with them to haue them deliuered from burning, preached I vnto them neuer ſo much. And in God and my conſcience, for ought that euer I could perceiue, the Indians of Peru, neuer lift themſelues vp, nor neuer rebelled for any other cauſe, but for the euill entreating of the other ſide, as is manifeſt vnto euery one, and for iuſt cauſe: the Spaniards deſtroying them tyrannouſly againſt all reaſon and iuſtice, with all their Countrie, working vpon them ſo many outrages, that they were determined to die, rather then to ſuffer much another time. Item, I ſay, that by the report of the Indians themſelues, there is yet more Gold hidden then is come to light, the which becauſe of the vniuſtices and cruelties of the Spaniards, they would not diſcouer, neither euer will diſcouer, ſo long as they ſhall be ſo euill entreated, but will chooſe rather to dye with their fellowes. Wherein God our Lord hath beene highly treſpaſſed againſt, and the Kings Maieſtie euill ſerued, hauing beene defrauded in that, that his highneſſe hath loſt ſuch a Countrie, as hath beene able to yeelde ſuſtenance to all Caſtile: for the recouerie of which Countrie, it will be a matter of great difficultie, diſpence, and charges.

All theſe hitherto are the formall words of the ſaid religious perſon: the which are alſo ratified by the Biſhop of Mexico, which witneſſeth that the reuerend Father hath to his knowledge affirmed all the aboue ſaid. It is here to be conſidered, that the good Father ſaith, that he ſaw thoſe things. For that, that he hath beene fiftie or an hundred leagues vp into the Countrie, for the ſpace of nine or ten yeares, and at the very beginning, when there were not as yet but very few of the Spaniards: but at the ringing of the Gold, there were quickely gathered and flocked thither foure or fiue thouſand, which ſhed themſelues forth ouer many great Realmes and Prouinces, more then fiue hundred or ſixe hundred leagues, the which Countrey hath beene throughly deſtroyed, they executing ſtill the ſelfe ſame practiſes, and others more barbarous and cruell. Biſhop of Mexicos teſtimony.

Of a veritie, from that day vnto this preſent, there hath beene deſtroyed and brought to deſolation moe ſoules then he hath counted: and they haue with leſſe reuerence of God or the King, and with leſſe pittie then before, aboliſhed a great part of the linage of mankinde. They haue ſlaine vnto this day in theſe ſame Realmes (and yet daily they doe ſlay them) moe then foure Millions of ſoules. Certaine dayes paſſed, they pricked in ſhooting with darts of reedes to death a mightie Queene, wife of Eling, who is yet King of that Realme, whom the Spaniards by laying hands vpon him compelled to rebell, and in rebellion he perſiſteth. They tooke the Queene his wife, and ſo as hath beene ſaid, ſlue her againſt all reaſon and iuſtice, being great with childe as ſhe was, as it was ſaid onely to vexe her husband withall. Foure Millions ſlaine in Peru, &c.

Of the new Realme of Granado.

WIthin the yeare 1539: there tooke their flight together ſundry tyrants, flocking from Veneſuela, from Saint Martha, and from Carthagene, to ſearch for the Perous: and there were alſo others which came downe from Peru it ſelfe to aſſay, to make a glade farther into the Countrie: And they found from beyond Saint Martha and Carthagene three hundred leagues vp into the Countrie, fertile lands, and admirable Prouinces, full of infinite people, kinde hearted like the reſt, and very rich, as well of Gold as of precious ſtones, which they call Emeralds. Vnto the which Prouinces they gaue the name of New Granado: for becauſe that the tyrant which came firſt into this Countrey, was a Granadan, borne in our Countrey. A Gouernour, for as much as he which robbed and ſlew in the new Realme of Granado, would not admit him for conſort with him to rob and ſlay as did he: he procured an enquirie, and thereby euidence came in againſt him with ſundry witneſſes vpon the fact of his ſlaughters, diſorders, and murders which he had done, and doth as yet vnto this day, the proceſſe of which enquirie, together with the euidences was read, and is kept in the Records of the Counſell of the Indies.

The witneſſes doe depoſe in the ſame enquirie, that the ſaid whole Realme was in peace, the Indians ſeruing the Spaniards, giuing them to eate of their labour, and labouring continually, and manuring the ground, and bringing them much Gold and precious ſtones, ſuch as are Emeralds, and all that which they could or had: the Townes, and the Lordſhips, and the people being diſtributed amongſt the Spaniards euery one his ſhare: which is all that they ſtudie for, for that, that it is their meane way to attaine to their laſt end and ſcope, to wit, Gold. And all being ſubdued to their tyrannie and accuſtomed bondage, the tyrant the principall Captaine which commanded ouer that Countrey, tooke the Lord and King of the Countrey, and detained him priſoner soner six or seuen moneths, exacting of him Gold and Emeralds without cause or reason at all. The said King, who was named Bogata, for feare which they put him in, said that hee would giue them an house full of Gold: hoping that he should escape out of the hands of him which tormented him. And he sent Indians which should bring him Gold, and by times one after another, they brought in a great quantitie of Gold and precious stones. But because the King did not giue an whole house full of Gold, the Spaniards bid kill him: sithence that he did not accomplish that which he had promised.

Digitized by Google

King Bogata sentenced, executed.

The tyrant commanding that this King should be arraigned before himselfe: They sommon and accuse in this order the greatest King of all that Countrie, and the tyrant giueth sentence, condemning him to be racked and tormented, if he doe not furnish forth the house full of Gold. They giue him the torture and the strapado with cords; they fling burning sewet vpon his naked belly; they lay on bolts vpon his feete, which were fastened to one stake, and gird his necke fast vnto another stake, two men holding both his hands, and so they set fire vnto his feete: and the tyrant comming vp and downe now and then, willeth him to haue his death giuen him by little and little, if he made not ready the Gold. Thus they dispatched and did to death that Noble Lord in those torments, during the execution whereof, God manifested by a signe, that those cruelties displeased him, in consuming with fire all the towne where they were committed. All the Spaniards to the end to follow their good Captaine, and hauing none other thing to doe, but to hackle in peeces those poore innocents doe the like, tormenting with diuers and sauage torments euery Indian, both Cacique or Lord of euery people or peoples, with all their flockes, that were committed to their charges: those said Lords with all their subiects seruing them, and giuing them Gold and Emeraulds as many as they could, and as much as they had: Tormenting them onely to the end they should giue them more Gold, and rich Minerals: thus they broyled and dispatched all the Lords of that Countrie.

For the great feare of the notorious cruelties that one of the pettie tyrants did vnto the Indians, there transported himselfe vnto the Mountaines, in flying so great crueltie, a great Lord named Daytama, with many of his people. For this they hold for their last remedy and refuge, if it might haue preuailed them ought: and this the Spaniards call insurrection and rebellion. Which the Captaine head tyrant hauing knowledge of, he sendeth supplie of Souldiers vnto the said cruell man (for whose cruelties sake, the Indians that were peaceable, and had endured great tyrannies and mischiefes, were now gone into the Mountaines) to the end he should pursue them. Who, because it sufficeth not to hide them in the entrals of the earth, finding there a great multitude of people, slue and dispatched them, aboue fiue hundred soules, what men, what women, for they receiued none to mercy. Also the witnesses depose, that the said Lord Daytama, before that the Spaniards put him to death, came to the cruell man, and brought him foure or fiue thousand Castillans, the which notwithstanding he was murdered as abouesaid.

Another time many Indians being come to serue the Spaniards, and seruing them with humilitie and simplicitie, as they are accustomed to doe, reputing themselues assured: behold the Captaine of the towne where they serued, who commeth by night, commanding that those Indians should be put to the edge of the sword, when they had supped, and whiles that they were a sleepe, taking their rest after the toyle which they sustained the day time. And this he did, for that it seemed him necessary to doe this massacre, to the end to engraue an awe of himselfe in the hearts of all the peoples of that Countrie.

Another time the Captaine commanded to take an oathe of the Spaniards, to wit, how many euery one had in his seruice of the Caciques, and principall Lords, and Indians of the meaner sort; that incontinent they should be brought to the most open place of the Citie, where he commanded that they should be beheaded: thus were there at that time put to death foure or fiue hundred soules.

Moreouer these witnesses depose concerning another of the pettie tyrants, that he had exercised great cruelties in slaying, and chopping off the hands and noses of many persons, aswell men as women, and destroying very much people. Another time the Captaine sent the selfe same cruell man with certaine Spaniards into the Prouince of Bogata, to be informed by the inhabitants what Lord it was, that was successour vnto the chiefe Lord, whom hee had made to die that cruell death in those torments spoken of before: Who running along the Countrie throughout many places, tooke as many Indians as he could come by, And for that he could not learne of them, what he was that succeeded that Lord, he mangled off some hands, he bid cast others, men and women vnto hungrie Mastiues, who rend them in peeces. And in this manner haue beene destroyed very many Indians, and Indesses. One time, at the fourth watch of the night, he went to ouerrun Caciques or Gouernours of the land, with many of the Indians, which were in peace, and held themselues assured (for he had giuen them his faith, and assurance that they should receiue no harme nor damage) vpon credit whereof, they were come forth of their holes in the Mountaines, where they had beene hid, to people Plaine, in the which stood their Citie: thus being common without suspition, and trusting the assurance made, he tooke a great number, as well well men as women, and commanded to hold out their hands ſtretched againſt the ground, and himſelfe with a woodknife cut off their hands, telling them that he did on them this chaſtiſement, for that they would not confeſſe where their new Lord was, which had ſucceeded in the charge of gouernment of the Realme.

Digitized by Google

Another time for that the Indians gaue him not a coffer full of Gold, that this cruell Captaine required them: he ſent men to warre vpon them: who cut off the hands and noſes of men and women without number. They caſt others before their dogs being hunger bitten, and vſed to the feare of feeding on fleſh, the which diſpatched and deuoured:

Another time the Indians of that Realme perceiuing that the Spaniards had burnt three or foure of their principall Lords, they fled for feare vp into a Mountaine, from whence they might defend themſelues againſt their enemies ſo eſtranged from all humanitie. There were of them by the teſtimonie of the witneſſes foure or fiue Indians. This aboue ſaid Captaine ſent a great and notable tyrant, which exceeded farre moſt of thoſe to whom he had giuen the charge to ranſacke and waſte, together with a certaine number of Spaniards, to the end that they ſhould chaſtiſe the Indian rebels: as they would ſeeme to make them for that they were fled from a peſtilence and ſlaughter ſo intollerable. Well, ſo it is that the Spaniſh by force preuailed to get vp to the Mountaine: for the Indians were naked without weapons. And the Spaniards cryed peace vnto the Indians; aſſuring them, that they would doe them no harme: and that they of their parts ſhould not warre any longer. Streight way as the Indians ſtinted from their owne defence, the vile cruell man ſent to the Spaniards to take the forts of the Mountaine, and when they ſhould get them to encloſe within them the Indians. They ſet then like vnto Tygers and Lyons, vpon theſe lambes ſo meeke, and put them to the edge of the ſword, ſo long that they were faine to breath and reſt themſelues. And after hauing reſted a certaine ſeaſon, the Captaine commanded that they ſhould kill and caſt downe from the Mountaine, which was very high, the reſidue that were aliue: which was done. And theſe witneſſes ſay, that they ſaw as it were a could of Indians caſt downe from the Mountaine, to the number by eſtimation of ſeuen hundred men together, where they fell battered to peeces.

And to atchieue all his great crueltie, they ſearched all the Indians that were hid amongſt the buſhes: and he commanded to cut off their heads, at blockes ends; and ſo they ſlue them and caſt them downe the Mountaines: yet could not he content himſelfe with thoſe ſaid things ſo cruell, but that he would make himſelfe a little better knowne, augmenting his horrible ſinnes, when as he commanded that all the Indians men and women, which ſome priuate perſons had taken aliue (for euery one in thoſe maſſacres is accuſtomed to cull out ſome one or other mankinde and womankinde, to the end to become his ſeruants) ſhould be put into a ſtrawen houſe, ſaying and reſeruing thoſe, which ſeemed neceſſary to be employed in their ſeruice, and that there ſhould be put to fire: thus were there burned fortie or fiftie. Hee cauſed the reſt to be flong to the carrion dogs, which rend them in peeces, and deuoured them.

Another time the ſelfe ſame tyrant went to a Citie called Cotta, and tooke there a number of Indians, and cauſed to be diſmembred by his dogges, a fifteene or twenty Lords of the principall, and cut the hands of a great multitude of men and women: which ſaid hands he hanged one by another on a pole, to the end the other Indians might ſee that which hee had done vnto them. There were ſo hanged one by another threeſcore and ten paire of hands. Hee ſhiſed off beſides from many women and children their noſes.

No creature liuing and reaſonable, is able to decipher the miſchiefes and cruell dealing of this fellow, enemy of God. For they are without number, neuer otherwiſe heard of, nor ſeene: thoſe, I meane, which hee hath done in the land of Guatimala, and all about where he hath become.

The witneſſes ſay for a ſurcharge, that the cruell dealings and ſlaughters which haue beene committed, and are yet in the ſaid Realme of new Grenado, by the Captaines themſelues in perſon, and by their conſents giuen vnto all the other tyrants, waſters, and weeders of the nature of man, which were in his company, and the which hath laid all the Countrie wilde and waſte, are ſuch and ſo exceſſiue, that if his Maieſtie doe not take ſome order therein in ſome time (albeit that the ſlaughter and diſcomfiture of the Indians is done onely to bereaue them of their Gold, the which they haue none of, for they haue ſurrendred all that which they had) they will in a ſhort time make an end of them ſo in ſuch ſort, that there will be no more Indians to inhabit the land, but that it will remaine in a wilderneſſe without being manured.

There are other great Prouinces, which bound vpon the ſaid Realme of new Grenado, which they call Popayin and Cali, and three or foure others, which containe more then fiue hundred leagues of ground, which they haue deſtroyed and deſolated in the ſame manner, as they haue done others, robbing and ſlaying with torments, and the enormities afore ſpoken of. For the land is very fertile, and thoſe that come from thence now daily, doe report, that it is a ruefull thing to ſee ſo many goodly Townes burned and laid deſolate, as they might behold paſſing vp and downe that way: ſo as there, where there was wont to be in one towne a thouſand or two thouſand houſeholds, they haue not found fiftie, and the reſt vtterly ranſacked and diſpeopled.

And

And in some quarters they haue found two or three hundred leagues of Land dispeopled and burned, and great Cities destroyed. And finally, by that, that sithence into the Realmes of Peru, of the Prouince side of Quito, are entred farre into the Countrey sore and fell tyrants, as farre as to the said Realme of Grenado, and of Popayan, and of Cali, by the coast of Carthagene, and Araba, and other accursed tyrants of Carthagene haue gone to assault Quito, and moreouer, afterwards of the Riuers side of Saint Iohn, which is on the South side, all the which haue met to ioyne hands together in this exploit: they haue rooted out and dispeopled aboue sixe hundred leagues of land, with the losse of an infinite of soules, doing still the selfe same to the poore wretches that remaine behinde, howsoeuer innocent they appeare to be.

After the ends of the slaughters and massacres of the warres, they bring the people into the horrible bondage aboue said, and giue them to the commandement of Deuils, to one an hundred Indians, to another three hundred. The commander Deuill commandeth, that there come before him an hundred Indians, which incontinent present themselues like Lambes. He causing forty or fifty amongst them to haue their heads cut off: sayth vnto the other there present, I will serue you of the same sauce, if you doe not me good seruice, or if so be, that you goe out of my sight without my leaue. That for the honour of God, all they that haue read this piece of worke, or shall giue it a reading, consider now, whether this act, so hideous, fell and vnnaturall, doe not exceed all cruelty and iniquitie, that may bee imagined, and whether the Spaniards haue any wrong offered them when a man calleth them Diuels, and whether were better, to giue the Indians to keepe to the Deuils in Hell, or the Spaniards which are at the Indies.

After this I will rehearse another deuilish part, the which I cannot tell whether it bee lesse cruell and voide of manhood, then are those of sauage beasts: that is, that the Spanish which are in the Indies, doe keepe certaine Dogs most raging, taught and trained wholly to the purpose, to kill and rend in pieces the Indians. That let all those that are true Christians, yea, and also those which are not so, behold, if euer there were the like thing in the whole world: that is, to feed those Dogs, they leade about with them whersoeuer they goe a great number of Indians in chaines, as if they were Hogs, and kill them, making a shambles of mans flesh. And the one of them will say to another, Lend mee a quarter of a villaine, to giue my Dogs some meate, vntill I kill one next, altogether as if one should borrowe a quarter of an Hogge or Mutton. There be others which goe forth a hunting in the morning with their curres, the which being returned to eate, if another aske him: How haue yee sped to day? they answere, Very well: for I haue killed with my Dogs to day, fifteene or twenty Villaines. All these diabolicall doings, with others like haue beene wrought in the suits of Law, that the tyrants haue had one of them against another. Is there any case more ougly or vnnaturall?

I will here now deport me of this discourse, vntill such time, that there come other newes of things, in vngraciousnesse more notorious and remarkable (if it so bee, that there can bee any more grieuous) or vntill such time as we may returne thither to behold them our selues anew, as we behold them for the space of two and forty yeeres continually with mine owne eyes: protesting in a good conscience before God, that I doe beleeue, and I hold it for certaine, that the damages and losses are so great, with the destructions and ouerthrowes of Cities, massacres and murders, with the cruelties horrible and ougly, with the ruins, iniquities and robberies, all the which things haue beene executed amongst those people, and are yet daily committed in those quarters: that in all the things, which I haue spoken and deciphered, as I was able the neerest to the truth: I haue not said one of a thousand, of that which hath beene done, and is daily a doing at this present, bee it that you consider the qualitie, or bee it, that yee consider the quantitie.

And to the end that all Christians haue the greater compassion of those poore innocents, and that they complaine with me the more their perdition and destruction, and that they detest the greedinesse, loftinesse, and felnesse of the Spanish; that all doe hold it for a most vndoubted veritie, with all that hath beene aboue said, that sithence the first Discouerie of the Indies vntill now, the Indians neuer did harme vnto the Spanish in any place whersoeuer, vntill such time, that they first receiued wrongs and iniuries, being robbed and betrayed: but indeed did repute them to be immortall, supposing them to be descended from Heauen, and they receiued them for such, vntill such time as that they gaue it forth manifestly to be knowne by their doings, what they were, and whereto they tended.

What conuersions & knowledge of God are in the Indies.

I will adioyne hereunto this, that from the beginning vnto this houre, the Spaniards haue had no more care to procure that vnto those people should be preached the Faith of Iesus Christ, then as if they had beene Curre dogs, or other beasts: but in lieu thereof, which is much worse, they haue forbidden by expresse meanes the religious men to doe it, for because that that seemed vnto them an hinderance likely to be, to the getting of their Gold, and these riches which their auarice foreglutted in. And at this day there is no more knowledge of God throughout the Indies, to wit, whether he be of timber, of the aire, or the earth, then there was an hundred yeeres agoe, excepting New Spaine, whither the religious men haue gone, which is but a little corner of the Indies: and so are they perished, and doe perish all with Faith, and without Sacraments.

I bro-

Digitized by Google

I brother Bartholomew de las Casas or Casaus, religious of the Order of Saint Dominicke, which by the mercy of God am come into this Court of Spaine, to sue that the Hell might bee withdrawen from the Indies, and that these innumerable soules, redeemed by the bloud of Iesus Christ, should not perish for euermore without remedie, but they might know their Creator and be saued: also for the care and compassion that I haue of my Countrey, which is Castile, to the end that God destroy it not for the great sinnes thereof, committed against the Faith and his honour, and against our neighbours: for certaine mens sakes notably zealous of the glory of God, touched with compassion of the afflictions and calamities of others, followers of this Court: howbeit, that I was purposed to doe it, but I could not so soone haue done it, because of my continuall occupations, I atchieued this Treatise and Summarie at Valencia, the eight of December, 1542. the force being mounted to the highest type of extremitie, and all the violences, tyrannies, desolations, anguishes, and calamities abouesaid, spred ouer all the Indies, where there are Spaniards, although they be more cruell in one part then they be in another, and more sauage and more abhominable.

Mexico and her confines are lesse euill intreated. In truth, there they cannot execute their outrages openly, for that there and not elsewhere, there is some forme of iustice, as slender as it is. For because that there also they kill them with deuilish tributes: I am in good hope, that the Emperour and King of Spaine, our liege Soueraigne Lord, Don Charles the fift of that name, who beginneth to haue vnderstanding of the mischiefes and treasons that there haue beene, and are committed against those poore people, against the will of God, and his owne, (for they haue alwaies cunningly concealed the truth from him) will roote out those euils, and take some order for this new world that God hath giuen him, as vnto one that loueth and doeth iustice: whose honour and prosperous estate Imperiall, God almightie vouchsafe to blesse with long life, for the benefit of his whole vniuersall Church, and to the saluation of his owne Royall soule. Amen.

After hauing couched in writing the premisses, I vnderstood of certaine Lawes and Ordinances, which his Maiestie hath made about this time at Barcellone, Anno 1542. in the moneth of Nouember, and the yeere following at Madrill: by the which Ordinances, there is order set downe, as the case them seemeth to require: to the end, to cut off the mischiefes and sins which are committed against God and our neighbours, tending to the vtter ruine and perdition of this new world. His Maiestie hath made these Lawes, after hauing holden many assemblies of persons of authoritie, of learning and conscience, and after hauing had disputations & conferences in Valladolid: and finally with the assent and aduise of all those others which haue giuen their aduise in writing, and haue beene found neerest approching vnto the Law of Iesus Christ, and withall free from the corruption and soyle of the treasures robbed from the Indians: the which treasures haue soyled the hands, and much more the soules of many, ouer whom those treasures and auarice haue got the masterie, and where hence hath proceeded the blinding, which hath caused so to marre all without remorse. These Lawes being published, the creatures of those tyrants, who then were at the Court, drew out sundry copies thereof (for it grieued them at the hearts: for that it seemed them that thereby there was a doore shut vp vnto them against their ruine and extortion afore rehearsed) and dispersed them into diuers quarters of the Indies. Those which had the charge to robbe, root out, and consume by their tyrannies, (euen as they had neuer kept any good order but rather disorder, such as Lucifer himselfe might haue held) as they read those copies before the new Iudges might come to execute their charge, knowing it (as it is said, and that very credible) by those who vntill this time haue suported and maintayned their crimes and outrages, to be likely that such execution should be vsed of those Lawes: they ranne into a mutinie in such wise, as that when the good Iudges were come to doe their duties, they aduised with themselues (as those which had lost the feare and loue of God) to cast off also all shame, and obedience which they owe to the King, and so tooke vnto them the name of name of open and arrant traitors, behauing themselues as most cruell and graceless tyrants: and principally in the Realme of Peru, where presently this yeere 1442. are committed acts so horrible and frightfull, as neuer were the like, neither in the Indies, nor in all the world besides, not onely against the Indians, the which all or in a manner all are slaine, all those Regions being dispeopled: but also betwixt themselues by a iust iudgement of God, who hath permitted that they should be the Butchers one of an other of them. By meanes of the support of this rebellion, none of all the other parts of this new World would obey those Lawes: But vnder colour of making supplication to his Maiesty to the contrary, they haue made an insurrection as well as the others. For that it irketh them to leaue their estates and goods which they haue vsurped, and to vnbinde the hands of the Indians, whom they detaine in a perpetuall captiuitie. And there where they cease to kill with the sword, readily and at the instant, they kill them a little and a little, by personall slaueries, and vniust charges and intolerable. That which the King could not hitherunto let: for because that they all, great and lierle, roue and robbe, some more, some lesse: some openly, and some couertly, and vnder the pretence of seruing the King, dishonour God, and robbe the King.

Ciuill warres in Peru betwixt the Spaniards.

Part of a Letter written by one which saw things mentioned.

HEe gaue licence to put them to the Chaine, and in bondage: That which they did: and the Captaine led after him three or foure droues of these persons enchained: and in this doing, he procured not that the Countrey should bee inhabited and peopled (as had beene conuenient should haue done) but robbing from the Indians all their victuals they had, the inbornes of the Countrey were reduced to such an extremitie, that there were found great numbers dead of famine in the high-wayes. And the Indians comming and going to and fro the coast, laden with the carriage of the Spaniards, hee was the death by these meanes of about ten thousand. For not one that arriued at the very coast escaped death: by reason of the excessiue heate of the Countrey.

Ten thousand perish.

After this, following the same tract and way, by the which Iohn of Ampudia was gone, hee sent the Indians which he had purchased in Quito, a day before him, to the end they should discouer the bourges of the Indians, and should pillage them, that when he came with his mayne he might finde his booty ready. And those Indians were his owne mates: of the which such a one had two hundred, such a one three hundred, and such a one a hundred; according to the baggage that euery one of them had: which Indians came to yeeld themselues to their Masters with all that they had robbed.

After that the said Captaine was returned from the coast, hee determined to depart from Quito, and to goe seeke the Captaine Iohn de Ampudia, leauing thereto moe then two hundred of Footmen and Horsemen, amongst whom were a great many Inhabitants of the Citie of Quito. Vnto those Inhabitants the Captaine gaue licence to carrie with them the Caciks, that were escheated them in sharing, with as many Indians as they would. That which they did: and Alfonso Sanches Nuita carried forth with him his Cacike, with moe then an hundred Indians besides: and in like manner Peter Cibo, and his Cousin: and they led out more then an hundred and fifty with their wiues: and sundry also sped out their children, because that in a manner euery one died for hunger. Also Moran Inhabitant of Popayan, carried out moe then two hundred persons. And the like did all the rest, Citizens and Souldiers, euery one after his abilitie: the Souldiers craning that they might haue licence giuen them to captiue those Indians men and women, which they carried forth: the which was granted them vntill the death of the said captiues, and those deceased, to take as many more.

When they departed out of the Prouince of Quito, they carried out moe then sixe thousand Indians, men and women, and of all those there, neuer returned home into their Countrie twenty persons. For they died all through the great and excessiue trauell, which they made them indure in those broyling Countries contrary to their nature. It happened at that time, that one Alfonso Sanches, whom the said Captaine sent for Chiefetaine ouer a certaine number of men into a Prouince there, met with a good company of women, and young boyes laden with victuals: who stayed waiting for them without moning from the place to giue them of that which they had, and hauing so done, the Captaine commanded that they should be put to the sharpe of the sword.

It came to passe also, that at the time, that the said Captaine came into the Prouince of Lili, to a Towne called Palo, neere vnto the great Riuer, where hee found the Captaine Iohn de Ampudia, which was gone before to discouer, and pacifie the Countrie: the said Ampudia kept a Citie by him prouided of a Garrison, in the name of his Maiestie, and of the Marques Francis of Pizarro: and had set ouer them for Gouernours ordinary, one Petre Solano of Quenaoues, and eight Counsellours, and all the rest of the Countrie was in peace, and shared out amongst them. And as hee knew that the said Captaine was in the said Riuer, hee came to see him, with a great number of the Inhabitants of the Countrie, and peacefull Indians, laden with victuals and fruits. Shortly after also all the neighbour Indians came to see him, bringing him food. There were the Indians of Xamundi, and of Palo, and of Soliman, and of Bolo.

Now because that they brought no Mahis which he would haue, he sent a great number of Spaniards with their Indians, to goe search for Mahis: commanding them to bring some wheresoeuer they found any. So went they to Bolo, and to Palo, and found the Indians men and women in their houses in peace: and the said Spaniards with those that were with them, tooke them, and robbed their Mahis, their Gold, and Couerings, and all that they had, and bound many.

Wherefore, they seeing that the Captaine kept no Faith with them: all the Countrie arose and reuolted from the Spanish, whereof ensued great damage, and God and the Kings Maiestie offended: and by this meanes the Countrey remayned dispeopled: for that the Olomas and the Manipos their enemies, which are Mountaine people, and warlike, descended daily to take and robbe them, when they perceiued the Citie and places of their abode left destitute. And amongst them hee who was the stronger, did eate vp his fellow, for all died for famine. This done, the Captaine came to the Citie of Ampudia, where he was receiued for Generall. From this place they goe to a Citie called Tukiricui, from whence the Cacike of the place yeelded forth incontinent in peace, a number of Indians going before him. The Captaine demanded Gold of him and of his Indians. The Cacike told him that hee had but a small deale, and that which he had should be giuen him: and immediatly all beganne to giue him all that they had. Whereupon the said Captaine gaue vnto euery of them a ticket, with the name of the said Indian, for a testia testimoniall that he had giuen him Gold: affirming that hee which should haue neuer a ticket, should be cast to the Dogges to bee deuoured, because he gaue him no Gold. Whereupon the Indians for feare that they were put in, gaue him all the Gold that they were able: and those which had none fled into the Mountaines and other Townes, for feare to bee slaine. By reason whereof perished a great number of the native Inhabitants of the Countrie. And shortly after, the said Captaine commanded the Cacike to send two Indians to another Citie named Dagna, to will them that they should come in peace, and bring him Gold in abundance. And comming to another Citie, hee sent that night many Spaniards to take the Indians, and namely of Tulilicui. So as they brought the next morrow aboue an hundred persons: and all those which could beare burdens, they tooke them for themselues, and for their Souldiers, and put them to the chaine, whereof they died all. And the said Captaine gaue the little children vnto the said Cacike Tulilicui, that hee should eate them: and in truth, the skinnes of those children are kept in the house of the said Cacike Tulilicui full of ashes: and so departed hee from thence without an Interpreter, and went towards the Prouinces of Castile, where hee ioyned himselfe vnto the Captaine Iohn de Ampudia, who had sent him to discouer another way, doing both of them great outrages, and much mischiefe vnto the Inhabitants of the Countrie where they became. And the said Iohn de Ampudia came to a Citie, the Cacike and Lord whereof called Bitacur, had caused to make certaine Ditches to defend himselfe, and there fell into the same two Horses, the one of Antonie Rodondos, the other of Marc Marqueiis. That of Marcos Marquis died, the other not. For which cause the said Ampudia commanded to take all the Indians men and women that might be: and thereupon tooke and layed together more then an hundred persons, whom they cast aliue into those Ditches and slue them, and brent withall more then an hundred houses in the said Citie. And in that manner met in a great Citie, where without summoning (the Indians being at peace, and without any spokesman to goe betweene them) they slue with their Speares a great number of them, making on them mortall warre. And as it is said, soone after they were met, the said Ampudia told the Captaine what he had done in Bitaco, and how he cast so many into the Ditches: and the said Captaine answered, that it was well done, and that he for his part had done as much at the Riuer Bamba, when hee entred the same, which is in the Prouince of Quito, and that he had flung into the Ditches moe then two hundred persons; and there they stayed warring on all the Countrie. Soone after he entred into the Prouince of Bitu, or Anzerma: in making cruell warre with fire and blood till they came as farre as vnto the Salt-houses. And from thence he sent Francis Garcia before him to pillage, who made cruell warre on the naturall Inhabitants of the Countrie as he had done before him. The Indians came vnto him two and two, making signes, that they demanded peace on the behalfe of the whole Countrie; alledging that they would afford him, all that he could reasonably demand, were it Gold, or Women, or Victuals, onely that they would not kill them, as indeed it was a truth. For themselues afterwards confessed it to bee so. But the said Francis Garcia bid them get them packing: telling them moreouer, that they were a sort of drunkards, and that hee vnderstood them not, and so returned hee to the place where the said Captaine was, and they made a complot, to ouerrunne all the Prouince, making cruell warre on all the Countrie, in spoyling, robbing and slaying all: and with the Souldiers, which hee brought with him, drew thence moe then two thousand soules, and all those died in the chaine. Before departing the place which hee had peopled, they slue more than fiue hundred persons. And so returned to the Prouince of Calili. And by the way if any Inde or Indesse, were weary, in such sort, that they could not passe any further, they did incontinently head them, paring it off from the shoulders euen with the chaine, to the end not to take the paines to open the locke thereof: and to the end that others which went the same way should not make wise to bee sicke, and by this meanes died they all: and in the high-wayes were left all those people which hee made his purchase of out of Quito, and of Pasto, and of Quilla Cangua, and of Paxa, and of Popayan, and of Lili, and of Cali, and of Anzerma, and a great number of people died. Also immediatly vpon their returne to the great Citie, they entred into it, slaying all that they could: taking in that day moe then three hundred persons, &c.

Cruell famine.

AMong diuers the remedies by Friar De las Casas Bishop of the Royal Towne called Chiapa, propounded in the assemblie of sundry Prelates named Parsons, by his Maiesties commandement gathered together in the Towne of Valladolid, the yeere of our Lord 1542. for order and reformation to be obserued in the Indies: the eighth in order was this ensuing, which consisteth vpon twentie reasons and motions.

The eight Remedie, is among all other principall and most in force, as without which all the rest are to no purpose, for that they all haue relation thereunto, as euery motion to his proper end, in whatsoeuer toucheth or is of any importance vnto your Maiestie, which no man can expresse: in as much as thereupon dependeth at the least the whole losse or preseruation of the Indies. And the remedie that I speake of is this, that your Maiestie doe determine, decree, command, and solemnely in your soueraigne Courts ordaine by pragmaticall Sanctions and Royall Statutes, that all the Indies as well already subdued, as hereafter to be subdued, may be inserted, reduced, and incorporate into the Royall Crowne of Castile and Leon, to be holden in chiefe of your Maiestie as free subiects and vassals, as they are. Likewise that they be not giuen in commendam vnto the Spaniards: but that it stand as an inuiolable constitution, determination and Royall Law, that they neuer, neither at this time, neither hereafter in time to come, may bee alienated or taken from the said Royall Crowne, neither that they be giuen, commanded, demised in fee farme, by depoſt, commandement or alienation, either vnder any other title or manner whatſoeuer, and be diſmembred from the Royall Crowne, for any whatſoeuer the ſeruice or deſert of any, either vpon any neceſſitie that may happen, or for any cauſe or colour whatſoeuer that may be pretended. For the inuiolable obſeruation, or eſtabliſhment of which Law, your Maieſtie ſhall formally ſweare by your Faith and on your Word and Royall Crowne, and by all other ſacred things, whereby Chriſtian Princes doe vſually ſweare, that at no time neither your ſelfe, neither your ſucceſſours in theſe ten Dominions, or in the Indies, ſo farre as in you ſhall lie, ſhall reuoke the ſame: and you ſhall further ſet downe in expreſſe words in your Royall Will and Teſtament, that this decree be euer kept, maintayned, and vpholden: alſo that ſo farre as in your ſelfe or in them ſhall lie, they ſhall confirme and continue the ſame. And for proofe of the neceſſitie hereof, there bee twenty reaſons to be alledged: out of which twenty we haue drawne and put in writing ſo many as may ſeeme to ſerue to our purpoſe.

Extract out of the ſecond reaſon.

The Spaniards through their great auarice and couetouſneſſe to get, doe not permit any religious perſons to enter into their Townes and Holds which they poſſeſſe, alledging that they receiue double loſſe by them. One and the principall is, that religious perſons doe keepe the Indies occupied when they gather them together to their Sermons, ſo as in the meane time their worke is omitted, while the Indians being idle, labour not: yea, it hath ſo fallen out, that the Indians being in the Church at the Sermon, the Spaniard comming in, in the face of al the people, hath taken fifty, or an hundred, or ſo many as he hath needed to carrie his baggage and ſtuffe, and ſuch as would not goe, he hath loden with ſtripes, ſpurning them forth with his feet, thereby, to the great griefe both of the Indians, and of the religious perſons troubling and moleſting all that were preſent, &c.

Out of the third reaſon.

The Spaniards are charged to inſtruct the Indians in our holy Catholike Faith: whereupon on a time when we examined Iohn Colmenere of Saint Martha, a fantaſticall, ignorant, and fooliſh man, who had gotten a great Towne in commendam, and had a charge of ſoules, he could not tell how to bleſſe himſelfe: and asking him what doctrine he taught the Indians committed to his charge, he ſaid, he gaue them to the Deuill: alſo that it was enough for him to ſay, Per ſignum ſanctæ Cruces. How can the Spaniards that trauell to the Indies, how noble or valiant ſoeuer they be, haue any care of the ſoules, when the moſt of them are ignorant of their Creede and ten Commandements, and knowe not the matters pertayning to their owne ſaluation, neither doe trauell to the Indies for any other purpoſe but to ſatisfie their owne deſires and couetous affections, being for the moſt part vicious, corrupt, vnhoneſt, and diſordinate perſons: ſo as hee that would weigh them in an equall ballance, and compare them with the Indians, ſhould finde the Indians without compariſon, more vertuous and holy then them. For the Indians what Infidels ſoeuer they be, doe neuertheleſſe keepe them to one and their owne wife, as nature and neceſſitie teacheth, and yet we ſee ſome Spaniard haue fourteene or more, which Gods Commandements doe forbid. The Indians deuoure no mans goods, they doe no man wrong: they doe not vexe, trouble, or ſlay any, where themſelues doe ſee the Spaniards commit all ſinnes, iniquities, and treacheries, that man can commit againſt all equitie and iuſtice. To be briefe, the Indians doe not beleeue any thing, but doe mocke at all that is ſhewed them of God, being in truth fully rooted in this opinion of our God, that he is the worſt, and moſt vniuſt, and the moſt wicked of all Gods, becauſe he hath ſuch ſeruants: alſo concerning your Maieſtie, they thinke you the moſt vniuſt and cruell of all Kings, becauſe you doe both ſend thither and keepe here ſuch euill Subiects, ſuppoſing that your Maieſtie doth feed vpon humane fleſh and bloud.

Out of the fourth reaſon.

The Spaniards hauing authoritie to command, or particular intereſt in the Indies, cannot by reaſon of their great couetouſneſſe abſtaine from afflicting, troubling, diſquieting, vexing, or oppreſſing the Indians, taking away their goods, lands, wiues, or children, and vſing among them many other kindes of iniquitie, for the which they can haue no redreſſe, ſanction, or warrant at your Maieſties chiefe Iuſtice, becauſe the Spaniards doe make them afraide: yea ſometimes doe kill them, leſt they ſhould complaine. They doe night and day mourne after their Gods, thinking them to be better then ours at whom they ſuſtaine ſuch harmes, while contrariwiſe of their owne they reape there ſo many commodities: and there is nothing that troubleth them ſo much as the Chriſtians.

Out of the fifth reaſon.

Wee can ſhew to your Maieſtie, that the Spaniards haue within eight and thirty or forty yeeres ſlaine of iuſt accompt, aboue twelue millions of your Subiects: I will not ſay how mightily this world of people might haue multiplied. This Countrey being the fertileſt, whether for cattell, or mankinde, that is in the world: the ſoyle being for the moſt part, more temperate and fauourable to humane generation. All theſe innumerable perſons, and all theſe people haue the Spaniards ſlaine, to the end to beare ſway, gouerne, and command ouer the reſt: and when in vniuſt warres they haue ſlaine them, then doe they vſe the reſt, who iuſtly haue withſtood them, in drawing Gold and Siluer, yoking them together like beaſts, to make them carrie their burdens.

What

Digitized by Google

What plague of pestilence, or mortalitie could there haue fallen from heauen that had beene able to consume or make waste aboue 2500. leagues of flat Country, repleniſhed with people, and would not haue left either trauailer or inhabitant?

The Spaniards onely for their temporall commoditie, haue blemiſhed the Indies with the greateſt infamie, that any man euen among the moſt horrible and villanous perſons in the world, could be charged withall, and whereby they haue ſought to take them out of the degree of mankinde: namely that they were all polluted with the abominable ſinne againſt nature: which is a wretched and falſe ſlander. For in all the great Iles, Hiſpaniola, Saint Iohn, Cuba, and Lamaica: Alſo in the ſixtie Iles of Lucayos, which were inhabited with an infinite number of people, the ſame was neuer thought vpon; in ſome other part there is a voice of a few: for whoſe ſakes neuertheleſſe all that world is not to be condemned. We may ſay as much of the eating of mans fleſh, which likewiſe thoſe places that I haue named are free of; although that in other places they doe it indeede. They be alſo charged with their Idolatrie. The Spaniards haue purpoſely and effectually hindered the teaching of the Law of God and Ieſus Chriſt: with all other vertues among the Indians, and driuen away the Religious perſons out of Townes and Fortreſſes, leaſt they ſhould ſee and diſcloſe their tyrannies: yea, they haue by their euill example, infected and corrupted the Indies, teaching them many odious behauiours and vices, which before they knew not, as blaſpheming the name of Ieſus Chriſt, practiſing of vſurie, lying, and many other abhominations wholly repugnant to their nature. Out of the ſixth reaſon.

The Spaniards doe ſucke from the Indians the whole ſubſtance of their bodies, becauſe they haue nothing elſe in their houſes. They make them ſpit bloud: They exhibite them to all dangers: They lay vpon them ſundry and intollerable trauailes: and more then all this, They loade them with torments, beatings, and ſorrowings: To be briefe, they ſpoile and conſume a thouſand manner of wayes. Out of the ſeuenth reaſon.

Beſides all that the Indians doe indure in ſeruing and pleaſing the Spaniards, there is yet a butcher or cruell hangman, to keepe them in awe appointed in euery Towne and place, and is tearmed Eſtanciero or Calpiſque: who hath authoritie to lay his clawes vpon them, and to make them labour, and doe what the Lord Commander or chiefe thiefe will. So as if in hell there were no other torment, yet were this incomparable. This hangman whippeth them, he ladeth them with ſtripes, he baſteth them with ſcalding greaſe, he afflicteth them with continuall torments and trauels, hee forceth and deflloureth their daughters and wiues, diſhonouring and abuſing them: he deuoureth their Hens, which are their greateſt treaſure, not becauſe themſelues doe eate them, but that of them they offer preſents and ſeruice to their greateſt Lord and chiefe tyrant: he vexeth them with innumerable other torments and griefes: and leaſt they ſhould complaine of ſo many iniuries and miſeries, this tyrant putteth them in feare, ſaying; that hee will accuſe them, and ſay that he ſee them commit Idolatry. To be briefe, they muſt pleaſe and content aboue twenty diſordinate and vnreaſonable perſons; ſo as they haue foure Lords and Maſters. Your Maieſtie, their Cacique, him that hath them in commendam, and the Eſtanciero of whom I laſt ſpake, which Eſtanciero is to them more grieuous to beare then a quintall of lead, among which we may alſo in truth adde all the Mochachos and Moores, that doe ſerue the Commander and Maſter, for they all doe moleſt, oppreſſe, and rob theſe poore people. Out of the eight reaſon.

It is greatly to be feared, leaſt God will lay Spaine deſolate, euen for thoſe horrible ſinnes that this Nation hath committed in the Indies, whereof we doe euidently behold the ſcourge, and all the world doth ſee and confeſſe that already it hangeth ouer our heads, wherewith God doth afflict and ſhew that he is highly offended in thoſe parts through the great deſtruction and waſte of thoſe Nations, in that of ſo great treaſures haue bin tranſported out of the Indies into Spaine (the like quantitie of Gold and Siluer, neither King Salomon, neither any other worldly Prince euer had, ſaw, or heard of) there is none left, beſides that of that that was here before the Indies were diſcouered, there is now none to be found, no neuer a whit. Hereof it commeth that things are thriſe dearer then they were, the poore that haue want doe ſuffer great miſeries: and your Maieſtie cannot diſpatch matters of great importance. Note.

So long as Lares bare ſway and ruled, that was nine yeares, there was no more care of teaching or bringing the Indians to ſaluation, neither was there any more labor employed, or once thought of to that purpoſe, then if they had beene Trees, Stones, Dogs, or Cats. He waſted great townes and fortreſſes, he gaue to one Spaniard a hundred Indians, to another fiftie, to another more or leſſe, as euery man was in liking or fauour, and as it pleaſed him to grant. He gaue children, and old men, women with childe, and in childebed, men of countenance and commons, the naturall Lords of the Townes and Countries, he parted them among thoſe to whom hee wiſhed moſt wealth and commoditie, vſing in his Letters of command this ſpeech following: To you ſuch a man, are giuen ſo many Indians with their Cacique, them to ſerue in their Mines and affaires. So as all, great and ſmall, yong and old, that could ſtand on their feete, men, women with childe, or in childebed, one or other, trauailed and wrought ſo long as they had any breath in their bodies. He gaue leaue to take away married men, and to make them draw Gold, tenne, twenty, thirtie, fortie, or eightie leagues, or farther. The women remained in farme houſes and granges, in Out of the eleuenth reaſon.

Digitized by Google

great labours. So that the man and wife should not see one another in eight or ten moneths or a whole yeare. And at their meeting they were so worne with labour and hunger, that they had no minde of cohabitation, whereby their generation ceased, and their poore children perished, because the mothers through hunger and trauaile had no milke wherewith to nourish them: This was a cause that in the Ile of Cuba, one of vs being there, there perished in the space of three moneths for hunger 7000. children, some desperate women strangled and killed their owne children, others finding themselues with childe, did eate certaine hearbes thereby to loose their fruit, so that the men died in the Mines, the women perished in the farme houses, their whole generation in a short space decayed, and all the Countrey lay desolate. The said Gouernour, to the end without release to keepe them in continuall labour, still gaue them away, and yet besides their great labors he suffered them rigorously, and very austerely to be misused. For the Spaniards that had them in command, appointed certaine hangmen ouer them, some in the Mines, whom they tearmed Miniero, others in the Farmes, that were called Estanciero: vnnaturall and pittileſſe persons that beate them with staues and cords, boxing them, pricking them with needles, and still calling them dogges: neither did they euer shew any signe of humanity or clemencie, but all their dealings did consist of extreame seueritie, riot, and bitternesse.

The Gouernour had also in the Spanish Townes and Forts, certaine of the most honorable and principall persons about him, whom he called Visitors, vnto whom also besides their other ordinary portions that he had giuen them, he gaue in respect of their offices one hundred Indians to serue them. These in the Townes were the greatest executioners, as being more cruell then the rest. before whom Athuaziles del cazique brought all such as had bin taken in this chase. The accuser, he that had them in command, was present, and accused them, saying; This Indian, or those Indians are dogs, and will doe no seruice, but doe daily run to the Mountaines, there to become loyterers and vagabonds: and therefore required that they might be punished. Then the Visitor with his owne hands bound them to a Pale, and taking a pitched cord, in the Gallies called an Eele, which is as it were an iron rod, gaue them so many stripes, and beate them so cruelly, that the bloud running downe diuers parts of their bodies, they were left for dead. God is witnesse of the cruelties committed among those lambs.

Throughout the yeare they neuer knew holiday, neither might be suffered from labour little or much. Besides that during all this toyle, they neuer had sufficient food, no not of Caçabi. Some there were that through niggardlinesse wanting meate to giue them, would send them two or three dayes abroad into the fields and Mountaines, to feede where they might satisfie themselues with such fruite as hang on the trees, and then vpon the force of that which they brought in their guts, would force them to labour two or three dayes more without giuing them any one morsell to eate. The Gouernour commanded they should be paid their day wages and expences for any labour or seruice that they should doe to the Spaniard, and their wages was three blankes euery two dayes, which in the yeare amounted to halfe a Castelin. This grew they into sicknesse through long and grieuous trauailes, and that was soone caught among them. When the Spaniards perceiued the sickenesse increase, so as there was no profit or seruice to be looked for at their hands, then would they send them home to their houses, giuing them to spend in some thirty, forty, or eightie leagues trauaile, some halfe dozen of Radish or Reforres, that is a kinde of nauet roote, and a little Caçabi, wherewith the poore men trauailed not farre before they should desperately dye, some went two or three leagues, some ten or twenty, so desirous to get to their owne home, there to finish their hellish life that they suffered, that they euen fell downe dead by the wayes; so as many times we found some dead, others at deaths doore, others groning and pittifully to their powers pronouncing this word, hunger, hunger. Then the Gouernour seeing that the Spaniard had in this wise slaine halfe or two third parts of these Indians, whom hee had giuen them in command, he came a fresh to draw new lots, and make a new distribution of Indians: still supplying the number of his first gift, and this did hee almost euery yeare.

Pedrarias entred into the firme land, as a Wolfe that had long beene starued doth into a flocke of quiet and innocent Sheepe and Lambs: and as Gods wrath and scourge, committing infinite slaughters, robberies, oppressions and cruelties, together with those Spaniards whom he had leuied, and laid waste so many Townes and Villages, which before had bin repleniſhed with people, as it were Ant hils, as the like was neuer seene, heard of, or written by any that in our daies haue dealt in Histories. He robbed his Maiestie & Subiects with those whom he tooke with him, and the harme that he did amounted to aboue foure, yea six Millions of Gold: hee laid aboue fortie leagues of land desart, namely from Darien, where he first arriued, vnto the Prouince of Nicaragua, one of the fruitfullest, richest and best inhabited lands in the world. From this cursed wretch sprang first the pestilence of giuing the Indians in command, which afterward hath infected all those Indies where any Spaniards doe inhabit, and by whom all these Nations are consumed; so that from him & his commands haue proceeded the certaine waste and desolation that your Maiestie haue sustained in these so great lands and dominions, since the yeare 1504.

When we shall say that the Spaniards haue wasted your Maiesties, and laid you desolate seuen Kingdomes

Kingdomes bigger then Spaine, you must conceiue that we haue seene them wonderfully peopled, and now there is no body left, because the Spaniards haue slaine all the naturall inhabitants by meanes aforesaid, and that of the Townes and Houses there remaineth onely the bare wals: euen as if Spaine were all dispeopled, and that all the people being dead, there remained onely the wals of Cities, Townes and Castels.

Your Maiestie haue not out of all the Indies one maruedy of certaine perpetuall and set rent, but the whole reuenewes are as leaues and straw gathered vpon the earth, which being once gathered vp doe grow no more: euen so is all the rent that your Maiestie hath in the Indies, vaine and of as small continuance as a blast of winde, and that proceedeth onely of that the Spaniards haue had the Indians in their power; and as they doe daily slay and rost the inhabitants, so must it necessarily ensue that your Maiesties rights and rents doe wast and diminish. Out of the 13. reason.

The Kingdome of Spaine is in great danger to be lost, robbed, oppressed and made desolate by forraigne Nations, namely by the Turkes and Moores, because that God who is the most iust, true, and soueraigne King ouer all the world, is wroth for the great sinnes and offences that the Spaniards haue committed throughout the Indies. But had chosen Spaine as his minister and instrument, to illuminate and bring them to his knowledge, and as it had bin for a worldly recompence, besides the eternall reward, had granted her so great naturall riches, and discouered for her such and so great fruitfull and pleasant lands, &c.

In as much as our life is short, I doe take God to witnesse with all the Hierarchies and thrones of Angels, all the Saints of the heauenly court, and all the men in the world; yea, euen those that shall hereafter be borne, of the certificate that here I doe exhibite: also of this the discharge of my conscience, namely that if his Maiestie granteth to the Spaniards the aforesaid diuellish and tyrannous partition, notwithstanding whatsoeuer lawes or statutes shall be deuised, yet will the Indies in short space be laid desart and dispeopled, euen as the Ile of Hispaniola is at this present, which otherwise would be most fruitfull and fertile; together with other the Iles & lands aboue 3000. leagues about, besides Hispaniola it selfe and other lands both farre and neere. And for those sinnes, as the holy Scripture doth very well informe, God will horribly chastize, and peraduenture wholly subuert and roote out all Spaine. Anno 1542.

The summe of the disputation betweene Fryer BARTHOLOMEVV de las CASAS or CASAVS, and Doctor SEPVLVEDA.

DOctor Sepulueda, the Emperours chronographer, hauing information, and being perswaded by certaine of those Spaniards, who were most guiltie in the slaughters and wastes committed among the Indian people, wrote a Booke in Latine, in forme of a Dialogue very eloquently, and furnished with all flowers, and precepts of Rhetoricke, as indeede the man is very learned and excellent in the said tongue: which Booke consisted vpon two principall conclusions; the one, That the Spaniards warres against the Indians, were as concerning the cause and equitie that moued them thereto, very iust: also, that generally the like warre may and ought to be continued. His other conclusion, that the Indians are bound to submit themselues to the Spaniards, gouernment, as the foolish to the wise: if they will not yeelde, then that the Spaniards may (as he affirmeth) warre vpon them. These are the two causes of the losse and destruction of so infinite numbers of people: also that aboue 2000. leagues of the maine land, are by sundry new kindes of Spanish cruelties and inhumaine dealings bin left desolate in the Ilands: namely by Conquests and Commands as hee now nameth those which were wont to be called Partitions.

The said Doctor Sepulueda coloureth his Treatise, vnder the pretence of publishing the title which the Kings of Castile and Leon doe challenge in the gouernment and vniuersall soueraigntie of this Indian world; so seeking to cloake that doctrine which he endeuoureth to disperse and scatter as well in these lands, as also through the Kingdomes of the Indians. This Booke he exhibited to the royall Councell of the Indies, very earnestly and importunately lying vpon them for licence to print it, which they sundry times denied him in respect of the offence, dangers, and manifest detriment, that it seemed to bring to the Common-wealth.

The Doctor seeing that here he could not publish his Booke, for that the Counsell of the Indies would not suffer it, he dealt so farre with his friends that followed the Emperours Court, that they got him a Patent, whereby his Maiestie directed him to the royall Counsell of Castile, who knew nothing of the Indian affaires: vpon the comming of these Letters the Court and Counsell being at Aranda in Duero, the yeare 1547. Fryer Bartholomew de las Casas or Casaus, Bishop of the royall towne of Chiapa, by hap arriued there, comming from the Indians, and hauing intelligence of Doctor Sepulueda his drifts and deuises, had notice also of the Contents of his whole Booke: but vnderstanding the Authors pernicious blindenesse, as also the irrecouerable losses that might ensue vpon the printing of this Booke, with might and maine withstood it, discouering discouering and reuealing the poyson wherewith it abounded, and whereto it pretended.

The Lords of the Royall Counsaile of Castile, as wise and iust Iudges, determined therefore to send the said Booke to the Vniuersities of Salamanca and Alcala, the matter being for the most part therein Theologically handled, with commandement to examine it, and if it might bee printed, to signe it: which Vniuersities after many exact and diligent disputations, concluded, that it might not be printed, as contayning corrupt doctrine.

The Doctor not so satisfied, but complaining of the Vniuersities aforesaid, determined, notwithstanding so many denials and repulses at both the Royall Counsailes, to send his Treatise to his friends at Rome, to the end there to print it, hauing first transformed it into a certaine Apologie written to the Bishop of Segouia, because the same Bishop hauing perused the Treatie and Booke aforesaid, had brotherly and charitably as his friend by Letters reproued and counsailed him. The Emperour vnderstanding of the Impression of the said Booke and Apologie, did immediately dispatch his Letters Patents, for the calling in and suppression of the same, commanding likewise to gather in againe all Copies thereof throughout Castile. For the said Doctour had published also in the Castilian Language a certaine abstract of the said Booke, thereby to make it more common to all the Land: and to the end also that the Commons, and such as vnderstood no Latine, might haue some vse thereof, as being a matter agreeable and toothsome to such as coueted great riches, and sought wayes to clime to other estates, then either themselues, or their Predecessors could neuer attaine vnto without great cost, labour, and cares, and oftentimes with the losse and destruction of diuers.

Which when the Bishop of Chiapa vnderstood, hee determined also to write an Apologie in the vulgar tongue, against the said Doctors summarie in defence of the Indies, therein impugning and vndermining his foundations, and answering all reasons, or whatsoeuer the Doctor could alleage for himselfe, therein displaying and setting before the peoples face the dangers, inconueniences and harmes in the said doctrine contained.

Thus as many things passed on both sides, his Maiestie in the yeere 1550. called to Valadolid, an Assembly of learned men, as well Diuines as Lawyers, who beeing ioyned with the Royall counsaile of the Indies should argue, and among them conclude, whether it were lawfull without breach of Iustice, to leuie warres, commonly tearmed conquests, against the Inhabitants of those Countries, without any new offence by them committed, their infidelity excepted.

Doctor Sepulueda was summoned to come and say what he could, and being entred the Counsaile Chamber, did at the first Session vtter his whole minde. Then was the said Bishop likewise called, who for the space of fiue dayes, continually did reade his Apologie: but being somewhat long, the Diuines and Lawyers there assembled, besought the Learned and Reuerend Father Dominicke Soto his Maiesties Confessor, and a Dominican Friar, who was there present, to reduce it into a Summary, and to make so many Copies as there were Lords, that is fourteene, to the end they all hauing studied vpon the matter, might afterward in the feare of God say their mindes.

The said Reuerend Father and Master Soto, set downe in the said Summary, the Doctors reasons, with the Bishops answeres to the same. Then had the Doctour at his request a Copie deliuered him to answere: out of which Summarie he gathered twelue against himselfe, whereto he made twelue answeres, against which answeres the Bishop framed twelue Replyes.

Doctor Sepulueda his Prologue to the Lords of the Assembly; beganne thus. Most worthy and Noble Lords, sith your Lordships and Graces haue as Iudges for the space of fiue or sixe dayes heard the Lord Bishop of Chiapa reade that Booke, whereinto he hath many yeeres laboured to gather all the reasons that either himselfe, or others could inuent to proue the conquest of the Indies to be vniust, as seeking first to subdue barbarous Nations before we preach the Gospell vnto them, which haue beene the vsuall course correspondent to the grant made by Pope Alexander the sixt, which all Kings and Nations haue hitherto taken and obserued: it is meete, and I doe so desire you, that I who take vpon me to defend the grant and authority of the Apostolike Sea, together with the equitie and honour of our Kings and Nation, &c.

Note, the Popes Bull is pretended: which, and our answere to it, see To. 1. li. 2. c. 18.

Out of which Replies, here followeth the Abstract of two that stand vs insteed. The report is vntrue that the Indians did yeerely sacrifice in New Spaine twenty thousand persons: either one hundred or fiftie. For had that beene so, we could not now haue found there so much people: and therefore the Tyrants haue inuented it, thereby to excuse and iustifie their Tyrannies: also to detaine so many of the Indians as escaped the oppression and desolation of the first Vintage, in bondage and tyrannie. But we may more truely say, that the Spaniards during their abode in the Indies, haue yeerely sacrificed to their so deerely beloued and reuerend Goddesse Couetousnesse more people, then the Indians haue done in a hundred yeeres. This doe the Heauens, the Earth, the Elements, and the Starres both testifie and bewaile: the Tyrants, yea, the very Ministers of these mischiefes cannot deny it. For it is euident how greatly these Countries at our first entrie swarmed with people, as also how wee haue now laid it waste, and dispeopled the same: wee might euen blush for shame, that hauing giuen ouer all feare of God, wee will yet neuertheless seeke to colour and excuse these our so execrable demeanours: considering that only for getting wealth wealth and riches, we haue in fortie fiue or fortie eight yeeres, wasted and consumed more Land then all Europe, yea and part of Asia, doe in length and breath containe, robbing and vsurping vpon that with all crueltie, wrong, and tyrannie, which we haue seene well inhabited with humane people, among whom there haue beene slaine and destroyed twentie * Millions of soules.

Twenty Millions destroied before he saith 12. or 15. Millions, which is to be vnderstood of some greater part, not of all the Indies. Yea, only in New Spaine, Honduras, Guatimala, Venesuela, Peru, and the Coast of Pasia, he reckoneth aboue 20. Millons: besides three Millions in Hispaniola, halfe a Million in the Lucayos, 600000. or rather a Million in Iamaica, and Saint Iohns Ilands: 800000 in Terra Firma, in Nicaragua, 550000. that I mention not the innumerable multitudes in Cuba, Panuco, Florida, Xalisco, Yucatan, Saint Martha, Carthagena, New Granado, Riuer of Plata, &c.

In the twelfth and last Reply as followeth, The Spaniards haue not entred into India for any desire to exalt Gods honour, or for zeale to Christian Religion, either to fauour, and procure the saluation of their Neighbours, no, neither for their Princes seruice, whereof they doe so vainely bragge: but Couetousnesse hath brought them, and Ambition hath allured them to the perpetuall dominion ouer the Indies, which they as Tyrants and Deuils, doe couet to bee parted among them: and to speake plainly and flatly, doe seeke no other but to expell and driue the Kings of Castile out of all that World, and themselues seizing thereupon, by Trannie to vsurpe and take vpon them all Royall Souereigntie.

CHAP. V.

Notes of Voyages and Plantations of the French in the Northerne America: both in Florida and Canada.

OF the French Plantation in that part of Brasil by Villagaynon, which therefore Frier Theuet called France Antarctike, you haue seene alreadie in Lerius. Besides the French haue almost from the first beginnings of the Spanish Plantation, with men of warre haunted those Coasts, and taken many Spanish prises. The French haue also made other Discoueries, and setled some habitation for a time in the Northerne parts of the New World.

As out of Oviedo, Benzo, &c. is before obserued.

Iohn Verrazanes Florentine was sent Anno 1524. by King Francis the first, and Madame Regent his Mother, who is said to haue discouered from the eight and twentieth to the fiftieth degree; all which and much more had long before beene discouerd by Sir Sebastian Cabot for the King of England, who was the first that set foote on the American Continent in behalfe of any Christian Prince Anno 1496. or as others 1497. and therefore the French reckoning falleth short, some of which Nation vpon Verazanos Discouery challenge I know not what right to all that Coast, and make their New France netre as great as all Europe. To leaue that, we are to do them Historicall right in relating their actions in those parts. The Rites and Customes of Florida are reflated at large by Rene Laudonniere, by Master Hakluyt translated, and in his Workes published. Laudonniere was sent by that famous Admirall Chastillon with Iohn Ribalt, Anno 1562. who arrited at Cape François in Florida in thirtie degrees, and there erected a Pillar with the French Armes. The Riuer they called the Riuer of May, hauing entred it on May day. In the Woods they found great store of red and white Mulberie Trees, and on their tops an infinite number of Silk-wormes. Eight other Riuers they discouered to which they gaue the names of Seine, Somme, Loyre, Charente, Garonne, Gironde, Belle, Grande, and after that Belle a Voire, and Port Royal. In this last they anchored; the Riuer at the mouth is three French leagues broad: hee sayled vp many leagues, and erected another like Pillar of stone. Ribalt hauing built a Fort and furnished it with prouisions, called it Charles Fort, and left a Colonie there vnder Captaine Albert. These found great kindnesse with their Indian Neighbours, till dissention happened amongst themselues, the Captaine for a small fault hanging a Souldier and exercising seueritie ouer the rest, which thereupon in a mutinie slue him, and hauing chosen a new Captaine, they built a Pinnasse and furnished it as well as they could to returne for France, but surprized in the way with calmes, and expence of their prouision, they first did eate their shoes and Buffe-Ierkins, and yet continuing famished, they killed one of their fellowes called La Chere, and made cheere of him, and after met with an English Barke which releeued them, and setting some on Land, brought the rest to Queene Elizabeth.

Cap. Ribalt.

Silke-wormes store in Florida. Port Royall in 32. degrees.

Mutinie. Cap. Albert slaine.

The cause of their not releeuing according to promise was the Ciuill warres, which being compounded, the Admirall procured the King to send three ships to Florida vnder the command of the Author Rene Laudonniere, which set saile in Aprill 1564. He went on shoare at Dominica, in which Iland his men killed two Serpents nine foote long, and as bigge as a mans legge. The two and twentieth of Iune, they landed in Florida ten leagues aboue Cape François, and after in the Riuer of May, where the Indians very ioyfully welcommed them, and the stone Piller erected by Ribalt was crowned with bayes and baskets of Mill or Maiz set at the foot, and they kissed the same with great reuerence. One of Paracousse (or the King) his Sonnes presented the Captain with a wedge of siluer. With another Parcousse they saw one old Father blind with age, but

The second Colonie.

Stone Pillar worshipped.

Digitized by Google

but liuing, and of his loines sixe generations descended, all present, so that the Sonne of the eldest was supposed two hundred and fiftie yeeres old. They planted themselues on this Riuer of May, and there built a Fort which they called Carolina of their King Charles. Landonniere sent Outigni his Lieutenant to search out the people called Thimogoa, whence that siluer wedge had comne, and there heard of a great King Olata Onae Vtina, to whom fortie Kings were vassals. Saturiona was said to haue thirtie, and to be enemie to Vtina.

Men nigh 300. yeeres old.

The Vassals are petty Weroances, or Lords of Villages.

A fearefull lightning happened which burned fiue hundred acres of ground, and all the fowles, after which followed such a heat, that as many fish were dead therewith at the mouth of the Riuer, as would haue laden fiftie Carts, and of their putrifaction grieuous diseases. The Sauages had thought the French had done it with their Ordnance. He got some prisoners of Vtinas subiects which Saturiona had taken and sent them to him, some of his men assisting Vtina in his warres against Potanou one of his enemies, and returning with some quantitie of Siluer and Gold.

Whiles things continued in good termes with the Sauages Mutinies and Conspiracies fell out amongst the French, some conspiring to kill the Captaine, others running away with the Barks, one of which robbed by Sea, and after was driuen by famine to seeke to the Spaniards at Hauana: and when two other Barkes were a building, a third Conspiracie seized on the Captaine, detained him Prisoner, and forced him to subscribe their passe with these two Barkes. Away they went and the next diuision was amongst themselues, one Barke departing from the others. One of them after diuers Piracies came backe, and the chiefe mutinies were executed. Francis Iean one of the other Barke was he which after brought the Spaniards thither to destroy them. The Indians vse to keepe in the Woods Ianuarie, Februarie, and March, and liue on what they take in hunting; so that the French neither receiuing their expected reliefe from France, nor from the Sauages which had no Corne, hauing before sold them what they had, suffered grieuous famine; they resolued to build a vessell able to carrie them into France, the Sauages making aduantages of their necessities (according to the wonted perfidiousnesse of those wilde people) whereupon they tooke King Vtina Prisoner with his Sonne to get food for his ransome. The famine was so sharpe that it made the bones to grow thorow the skinne, and when the Maiz by the end of May came to some ripenesse, food it selfe ouercame their weake stomacks. Some reliefe they had by Sir Iohn Hawkins who came thither with foure ships, guided by a man of Deepe which had been there in Ribalts Voyage, who also offered to transport him, and set them all on land in France. This he refused, but made good aduantage hereof with the Sauages, telling them that this was his brother which brought him great reliefe and plentie, whereupon all sought his friendship. His men at last generally fearing to continue in that misery, wanting both apparell and victuall, and meanes to returne, so wrought with him, that not daring to giue the Siluer, and such things as he had gotten in the Countrie (which might bring an English Plantation into those parts) he bought a ship of Sir Iohn Hawkins, who partly sold and partly gaue them prouisions also of apparell and victuall for their returne; and as Landonniere acknowledgeth like a charitable man, saued their liues.

Mutinies.

The Virginians also haue such a custome.

Cruell famine.

Sir Iohn Hawkins his great kindnesse.

Whiles thus they were preparing to set saile, Captaine Ribalt came into the Riuer with seuen saile foure greater and three lesse (whom the Admirall had sent, hearing that Landonniere lorded and domineered in tyrannicall and insolent manner) and was solemnely welcommed in the end of August 1565. A while after, when as the Indians had filled Captaine Ribalt with golden hopes of the Mynes at Apalatci, some proofes whereof were found to be perfect gold, sixe great ships of Spaniards came into the Riuer on the fourth of September, and made faire shew to the French, which trusted them neuer the more, but let slip their Anchors and fled, being no way matchable but in swiftnesse of saile, whereby they escaped the pursuite of the Spaniards, and obserued their course sending word thereof to Captaine Ribalt. The High Admirall Chastillon also had in his last Letters written to Ribalt, that he had intelligence out of Spaine, of Don Pedro Melendes his Expedition to Florida, iust before his comming from France, Captaine Ribalt embarkes himselfe the eight of September, pretending to goe seeke the Spaniards, which soone after came to seeke the French at their Fort, guided by Francis Iean, before a Mutiner, now also a Traytour, who shewed the Captaine to the Spaniards. Notwithstanding their assault, Landonniere made an escape with some others ouer the Marishes into the ships, and so returned first into England, and after into France. Captaine Ribalt was surprized with a Tempest which wracked him vpon the Coast, and all his ships were cast away, himselfe hardly escaping drowning, but not escaping the more then Rockie Spaniards which massacred him and all his companie.

Third Floridan Voyage by C. Ribalt.

Gold Mynes of Apalatci.

Spaniards kill the French and plant in Florida.

Massacre.

This butcherie was reuenged in a fourth Floridan Voyage made from France, by Captaine Gourgues, Anno 1567. who borrowed and sold to set forth three ships, and entring the Riuer Tacatacourou (which the French called Seine) he made league with eight Sauage Kings, which had beene much dispighted by the Spaniards, and were growne as dispightfull to them. The Spaniards were accounted foure hundred strong, and had diuided themselues into three Forts vpon the Riuer of May, the greatest begun by the French; two smaller neerer the Riuers mouth to fortifie each thereof with twelue hundred Souldiers in them well prouided for Munition.

Reuenge by Capt. Dominique Gourguet.

Three Forts Spanish.

Digitized by Google

In Aprill 1568. he tooke theſe two Forts and ſlue all the Spaniards, the vindicatiue Sauages giuing him vehement and eager aſſiſtance, eſpecially Olotocara, Nephew to Saturiona. As they went to the Fort, he ſaid, that he ſhould die there, and therefore deſired Gourgues to giue that to his wife which he would haue giuen himſelfe, that it might bee buried with him for his better welcome to the Village of the Soules departed. This Fort was taken, the Spaniards ſome ſlaine, others taken, and hanged on the ſame trees on which the French hung; fiue of which on of theſe Spaniards confeſſed he had hanged, and now acknowledged the Diuine Iuſtice. In ſteed of the Writings which Melandez had hanged ouer them, I doe not this as to Frenchmen but as to Lutherans; Gourgues ſet vp another, I doe not this as to Spaniards or Mariners, but as to Traitors, Robbers and Murtherers. The Forts he razed, not hauing men to keepe them, and in Iune following arriued in Rochel. Comming to the King with expectation of reward, the Spaniſh King had ſo poſſeſſed him, that he was faine to hide himſelfe. This Dominicke de Gourgues had beene an old Souldier, once impriſoned, and of a Captaine made a Gally-ſlaue by the Spaniards, and grew for his ſeruice in reputation with the Queene of England: he died Anno 1582. And thus much of the French Voyages in Florida, for Virginias ſake worthy to be knowne of the Engliſh. Now for their more Northerne Voyages and Plantations.

Why the Sauages haue their goods interred with them.

Iuſt requitall.

Maſter Hakluyt hath publiſhed the Voyages of Iaques Cartier, who in Aprill 1534. departed from Saint Malo with two ſhips, and in May arriued at Newfoundland. On the one and twentieth of May they came to the Iland of Birds a league about, ſo full of Birds as if they were ſowed there, and a hundred times as many houering about it, ſome as bigge as Iayes, blacke and white with beakes like Crowes, lying alway on the Sea; their wings not bigger then halfe ones hand, which makes that they cannot flie high. In leſſe then halfe an houre they filled two Boats with them. Theſe they named Apperatz; another leſſe Fort, which put themſelues vnder the wings of others greater, they called Godetz, a third, bigger and white, byting like Dogges they called Margaulx. Though the Iland be fourteene leagues from the Continent, Beares come thither to feed on thoſe Birds. One white one as bigge as a Kow they killed in her ſwimming, and found her good meate. Three ſuch Bird Ilands they alſo diſcouered the fiue and twentieth of Iune, which they called the Ilands of Margaulx. There alſo they found Morſes, Beares and Wolues. But theſe Northerne Coaſts are better knowne to our Countrymen: then that I ſhould mention his French names, which from Cabots time almoſt forty yeeres before had beene knowne to the Engliſh.

Iaques Cartier his three Voyages, Iland of Birds in 49. degrees 40. minutes.

Margaulx ſeeme to be Penguins.

The next yeere Cartier ſet forth with three ſhips to Saint Lawrence his Bay, and ſo to the Riuer of Hochelaga. They went to Canada, and to the Towne of Hochelaga. They ſaw the great and ſwift fall of the Riuer, and were told of three more therein. The Scorbute that Winter killed fiue and twentie of their men in their Fort: the reſt recouered by the vſe the ſap and leaues of a tree called Hameda, which was thought to be Saſſafras. Theſe reports of Canada, Saguenay, and Hochelaga, cauſed King Francis to ſend him againe, Anno 1540. purpoſing alſo to ſend Iohn Francis de la Roche, Lord of Robeual to be his Lieutenant in the Countries of Canada, Saguenay, and Hochelaga. Hee went Anno 1542. his chiefe Pilot was Iohn Alphonſo of Xantoigne, whoſe Notes, as alſo the Relation of that Voyage with three ſhippes, and two hundred perſons, men, women and children, Maſter Hakluyt hath recorded. He built a Fort and wintered there: and then returned.

L. of Robeual.

These were the French beginnings, who haue continued their Trading in thoſe parts by yeerly Voyages to that Coaſt to theſe times, for fiſhing, and ſometimes for Beauers skinnes and other Commodities. One Saulet is ſaid to haue made two and forty Voyages to thoſe parts. Marke Leſcarbot hath publiſhed a large Booke called Noua Francia, and additions thereto, part of which we haue here for better intelligence of thoſe parts, added with Champlains Diſcoueries.

Saulets 42. Voyages to Newfoundland.

CHAP. VI.

The Voyage of SAMVEL CHAMPLAINE of Brouage, made vnto Canada in the yeere 1603. dedicated to CHARLES de Montmorencie, &c. High Admirall of France.

WE departed from Honfleur, the fifteenth day of March 1603. This day we put into the Roade of New Haven, becauſe the winde was contrary. The Sunday following being the ſixteenth of the ſaid moneth, we ſet ſaile to proceed on our Voyage. The ſeuenteenth day following, we had ſight of Ierſey and Garnſey, which are Iles betweene the Coaſt of Normandie and England. The eighteenth of the ſaid moneth, wee diſcryed the Coaſt of Britaine. The nineteenth, at ſeuen of the clocke at night, we made account that we were thwart of Vſhent. The one and twentieth, at ſeuen of clocke in the morning, we met with ſeuen ſhips of Hollanders, which to our iudgement came from the Indies.

Their Voyage to Tadouſac. Chap. 1.

Digitized by Google

Indies. On Easter day, the thirtieth of the said moneth, wee were encountred with a great storme, which seemed rather to be thunder then winde, which lasted the space of seuenteene dayes, but not so great as it was the two first dayes; and during the said time we rather lost way then gained.

The sixteenth day of Aprill the storme began to cease, and the Sea became more calme then before, to the contentment of all the Company; in such sort as continuing our said course vntill the eighteenth of the said moneth, we met with a very high Mountaine of Ice. The morrow after we discried a banke of Ice, which continued aboue eight leagues in length, with an infinite number of other smaller peeces of Ice, which hindred our passage. And by the iudgement of our Pilot, the said flakes or Ice were one hundred, or one hundred & twenty leagues from the Country of Canada; and we were in 45. degrees and two third parts; & we found passage in 44. deg. The second of May, at eleuen of clocke of the day, we came vpon The Banke in 44. degrees one third part. The sixt of the said moneth, we came so neere the land that we heard the Sea beate against the shore, but we could not descrie the same through the thicknesse of the fogge, whereunto these coasts are subiect; which was the cause that we put farther certaine leagues into the Sea, vntill the next day in the morning, when we descried land, the weather being very cleere, which was the Cape of Saint Marie. The twelfth day following we were ouertaken with a great flaw of winde, which lasted two dayes. The fifteenth of the said moneth, wee descried the Isles of Saint Peter. The seuenteenth following we met with a banke of Ice neere Cape de Raie, sixe leagues in length, which caused vs to strike saile all the night, to auoide the danger we might incurre. The next day we set saile, and descried Cape de Raie, and the Isles of Saint Paul, and Cape de Saint Laurence, which is on the South side. And from the said Cape of Saint Laurence vnto Cape de Raie, is eighteene leagues, which is the breadth of the entrance of the great Gulfe of Canada.

A banke of Ice aboue 8. leagus long, in 45. degrees and two third parts.
The Banke in 44. degr. one third part.
These coasts subiect to fogs.
The Cape of S. Marie.
The Isles of S. Peter.
A banke of Ice 6. leagues long
Cape de Raie.
Cape de S. Laurence.

The same day, about ten of the clocke in the morning, we met with another Iland of Ice, which was aboue eight leagues long. The twentieth of the said moneth, we discried an Isle, which containeth some fiue and twenty or thirty leagues in length, which is called the Isle of Assumption, which is the entrance of the Riuer of Canada. The next day we descried Gachepe, which is a very high land, and began to enter into the said Riuer of Canada, ranging the South coast vnto the Riuer of Mantanne, which is from the said Gachepe sixtie fiue leagues; from the said Riuer of Mantanne we sailed as farre as the Pike, which is twenty leagues, which is on the South side also: from the said Pike we sailed ouer the Riuer vnto the port of Tadoussac, which is fifteene leagues. All these Countries are very high, and barren, yeelding no commoditie. The foure and twentieth of the said moneth we cast anker before Tadoussac, and the six and twentieth we entred into the said Port, which is made like to a creeke in the entrance of the Riuer of Saguenay, where there is a very strange currant and tide, for the swiftnesse and depth thereof, where sometimes strong windes do blow, because of the cold which they bring with them; it is thought that the said Riuer is fiue and forty or fiftie leagues vnto the first fall, and it commeth from the North North-west. The said Port of Tadoussac is little, wherein there cannot ride aboue ten or twelue Ships: but there is water enough toward the East, toward the opening of the said Riuer of Sagenay along by a little hill, which is almost cut off from the maine by the Sea; The rest of the Countrie are very high Mountaines, whereon there is little mould, but rockes and sands full of woods of Pines, Cypresses, Fir-trees, Burch, and some other sorts of trees of small price. There is a little Poole neere vnto the said Port, enclosed with Mountaines couered with woods. At the entrance of the said Port there are two points, the one on the West side running a league into the Sea, which is called Saint Matthewes point; and the other on the South-east side, containing a quarter of a league, which is called the point of all the Diuels. The South and South South-east, and South South-west windes doe strike into the said hauen. But from Saint Matthewes Point, to the said Point of all the Diuels, is very neere a league: Both these Points are dry at a low water.

An Iland of Ice aboue eight leagues long.
The Ile of Assumption.
Gachepe.
The Riuer Mantanne.
The Pike.
Tadoussac, from Gachepe 100. leg
The description of the hauen of Tadoussac
The Riuer of Sagenay falleth into Canada.
That of Sagenay is in Lescarbots Map expressed to enter on the North side of Canada, about 51. or 40. from thence to the Sea shoare of Canada is aboue fixtie miles, which entring into the Sea, hath 100. miles, and vp to the fals (which Voyage followeth) continueth a marueilous breadth, so that it may be for greatnesse reputed greater then any other Riuer in our world, or in the Northerne parts of the New: full also of Lakes and Ilands for greater magnificence.

THe seuen and twentieth day we sought the Sauages at the Point of Saint Matthew, which is a league from Tadoussac, with the two Sauages whom Monsieur du Pont brought with him, to make report of that which they had seene in France, and of the good entertainement which the King had giuen them. As soone as we were landed we went to the Cabin of their great Sagamo, which is called Anadabijou, where we found him with some eighte of a hundred of his companions, which were making Tabagie, that is to say, a Feast. Hee receiued vs very well, according to the custome of the Countrey, and made vs sit downe by him, and all the Sauages sat along one by another on both sides of the said Cabine. One of the Sauages which we had brought with vs began to make his Oration, of the good entertainement which the King had giuen them, and of the good vsage that they had receiued in France, and that they might assure them-

The great Sagamo, their feasts & wars.
The Irocois.
Cap. 2.
Two Sauages brought out of France.
Anadabijou.
The Oration of one of the Sauages which we brought with vs.

Digitized by Google

themselues that his said Maiestie wished them well, and desired to people their Countrey, and to make peace with their enemies (which are the Irocois) or to send them forces to vanquish them. He also reckoned vp the faire Castels, Palaces, Houses, and people which they had seene, and our manner of liuing. He was heard with so great silence, as more cannot be vttered. Now when he had ended his Oration, the said grand Sagamo Anadabijon, hauing heard him attentiuely began to take Tobacco, and gaue to the said Monsieur du Pont Grane of Saint Malo, and to mee, and to certaine other Sagamos which were by him: after he had taken store of Tobacco, he began to make his Oration to all, speaking distinctly, resting sometimes a little, and then speaking againe, saying, that doubtlesse they ought to be very glad to haue his Maiestie for their great friend: they answered all with one voyce, ho, ho, ho, which is to say, yea, yea, yea. He proceeding forward in his speech, said, That he was very well content that his said Maiestie should people their Countrey, and make warre against their enemies, and that there was no Nation in the world to which they wished more good, then to the French. In fine, hee gaue them all to vnderstand what good and profit they might receiue of his said Maiestie. When hee had ended his speech, we went out of his Cabine, and they began to make their Tabagie or Feast, which they make with the flesh of Orignac, which is like an Oxe, of Beares, of Seales, and Beuers, which are the most ordinary victuals which they haue, & with great store of wilde Fowle. They had eight or ten Kettels full of meate in the middest of the said Cabine, and they were set one from another some six paces, and each one vpon a seuerall fire. The men sat on both sides the house (as I said before) with his dish made of the barke of a tree: and when the meate is sodden, there is one which deuideth to euery man his part in the same dishes, wherein they feede very filthily, for when their hands be fattie, they rub them on their haire, or else on the haire of their dogs, whereof they haue store to hunt with. Before their meate was sodden, one of them rose vp, and took a dog, & danced about the said Kettels from the one end of the Cabin to the other: when he came before the great Sagamo, he cast his dog perforce vpon the ground, and then all of them with one voice, cried, ho, ho, ho, which being done, he went and sat him downe in his place; then immediately another rose vp and did the like, and so they continued vntill the meate was sodden. When they had ended their Feast, they began to dance, taking the heads of their enemies in their hands, which hanged vpon the wall behinde them; and in signe of ioy there is one or two which sing, moderating their voice by the measure of their hands, which they beate vpon their knees, then they rest sometimes, and cry, ho, ho, ho; and begin againe to dance, & blow like a man that is out of breath. They made this triumph for a victory which they had gotten of the Irocois, of whom they had slaine some hundred, whose heads they cut off, which they had with them for the ceremony. They were three Nations when they went to war, the Estechemins, Algonmequins, and Mountainers, to the number of a thousand, when they went to war against the Irocois, whom they encountred at the mouth of the Riuer of the said Irocois, and slew an hundred of them. The war which they make is altogether by surprises, for otherwise they would be out of hart; & they feare the said Irocois very much, which are in greater number then the said Mountainers, Estechemins and Algonmequins. The twenty eight day of the said moneth, they encamped themselues in the foresaid hauen of Tadoussac, where our Ship was; at the break of day their said great Sagamo came out of his Cabine, going round about all the other Cabins, and cried with a loud voice that they should dislodge to goe to Tadoussac, where their good friends were. Immediately euery man in a trice tooke down his cabin, and the said grand Captain, first began to take his canoe, & carried it to the Sea, where he embarked his wife and children, & store of furs; and in like manner did well neere two hundred canowes, which goe strangely; for though our Shallop was well manned, yet they went more swift then we. There are but two that row, the man and the wife. Their Canowes are some eight or nine pases long, and a pace, or a pace & a halfe broad in the middest, and grow sharper & sharper toward both the ends. They are very subiect to ouerturning, if one know not how to guide them; for they are made of the barke of a Birch tree, strengthned within with little circles of wood well & handsomely framed, and are so light, that one man will carry one of them easily; and euery Canowe is able to carry the weight of a Pipe: when they would passe ouer any land to goe to some Riuer where they haue busines, they carry them with them. Their Cabins are low, made like Tents, couered with the said barke of a tree, and they leaue in the roofe about a foot space vncouered, wherby the light commeth in; and they make many fires right in the midst of their Cabin, where they are sometimes ten housholds together. They lie vpon skins one by another, and their dogs with them. They were about a thousand persons, men, women and children. The place of the point of S. Matthew, where they were first lodged, is very pleasant; they were at the bottome of a little hill, which was ful of Fir & Cypresse trees: vpon this point there is a little leuel plot, which discouereth far off, & vpon the top of the said hill, there is a Plain, a league long, and halfe a league broad, couered with trees; the soile is very sandy, and is good pasture; all the rest is nothing but Mountains of very bad rocks: the Sea beateth round about the said hil, which is dry for a large halfe league at a low water.

The Irocois enemies to Anadabijon.

The Oration of Anadabijon.

A feast of the Sauages.

Orignac a Beast like an Oxe.

A victorie gotten of the Irocois.

Estechemins, Algonmequins, and Mountainers.

The Riuer of the Irocois.

The Irocois are in great number.

Two hundred Canowes.

The fashion of their Canowes

Their Cabins made like tents and couered with the barks of trees.

Cypresse trees

THe ninth day of Iune the Sauages began to make merrie together, and to make their feast, as I haue said before, and to dance for the aforesaid victory which they had obtained against their their enemies. After they had made good cheere, the Algonmequins, one of the three Nations, went out of their Cabins, and retired themselues apart into a publike place, and caused all their women and girles to sit downe in rankes one by the other, and stood themselues behinde, then singing all in one time, as I haue said before. And suddenly all the women and maidens began to cast off their Mantles of skins, and stripped themselues starke naked, shewing their priuities, neuertheless odorned with Matachia, which are paternosters and chaines enterlaced made of the haire of the Porkespicke, which they dye of diuers colours. After they had made an end of their songs, they cried all with one voyce, ho, ho, ho; at the same instant all the women and maidens couered themselues with their Mantels, for they lye at their feete, and rest a short while; and then eftsoones beginning againe to sing, they let fall their Mantels as they did before. They goe not out of one place when they dance, and make certaine gestures and motions of the body, first lifting vp one foote and then another, stamping vpon the ground. While they were dancing of this dance, the Sagamo of the Algonmequins, whose name was Besouat, sat before the said women and virgins, betweene two staues, whereon the heads of their enemies did hang. Sometimes he rose and made a speech, and said to the Mountainers and Estechemins; ye see how we reioyce for the victory which we haue obtained of our enemies, ye must doe the like, that we may be contented: then they all together cried, ho, ho, ho. Assoone as hee was returned to his place, the great Sagamo, and all his companions cast off their Mantels, being starke naked saue their priuities, which were couered with a little skin, and tooke each of them what they thought good, as Matachias, Hatchets, Swords, Kettels, Fat, Flesh of the Orignac, Seales, in briefe, euery one had a present, which they gaue the Algonmequins. After all these ceremonies the dance ceased, and the said Algonmequins both men and women carried away their presents to their lodgings. They chose out also two men of each Nation of the best disposition, which they caused to run, and he which was the swiftest in running had a present.

Their triumphs humors, famin superstitions & rites. Chap. 3.

Matachia, or cordons of the haire of the Porke-pike.

Their manner of dancing.

Besouat the Sagamo of the Algonmequins.

All these people are of a very cheerefull complexion, they laugh for the most part, neuertheless they are somewhat melancholly. They speake very distinctly, as though they would make themselues well vnderstood, and they stay quickely bethinking themselues a great while, and then they begin their speech againe: they often vse this fashion in the middest of their Orations in counsaile, where there are none but the principals, which are the ancients: the women and children are not present. All these people sometimes endure so great extremity, that they are almost constrained to eate one another, through the great colds and snowes; for the Beasts and Fowles whereof they liue, retire themselues into more hot climates. I thinke if any would teach them how to liue, and to learne to till the ground, and other things, they would learne very well; for I assure you that many of them are of good iudgement, and answere very well to the purpose to any thing that a man shall demand of them. They haue one naughty qualitie in them, which is, that they are giuen to reuenge, and great lyars, a people to whom you must not giue too much credit, but with reason, and standing on your owne guard. They promise much and performe little. They are for the most part a people that haue no Law, as farre as I could see and enforme my selfe of the said great Sagamo, who told me, that they constantly beleeue, that there is one God, which hath made all things: And then I said vnto him, since they beleeue in one God onely, How is it that he sent them into this world, and from whence came they? he answered me, that after God had made all things, he tooke a number of Arrowes, and stucke them in the ground, from whence men and women grew, which haue multiplied in the world vntill this present, and had their originall on this fashion. I replied vnto him, that this which hee said was false; but that indeede there was one God onely, which had created all things in the earth, and in the heauens: seeing all these things so perfect, without any body to gouerne this world beneath, he tooke of the slime of the earth, & thereof made Adam, our first Father: As Adam slept, God tooke a rib of the side of Adam, & thereof made Eue, whom he gaue him for his companion; and that this was the truth that they and we had our originall after this manner, and not of Arrowes as they beleeued. He said nothing vnto me, saue, that he beleeued rather that which I said, then that which he told me. I asked him also, whether he beleeued not that there was any other but one God onely? He told me, that their beliefe was, That there was one God, one Sonne, one Mother, and the Sunne, which were foure; yet that God was aboue them all: but that the Son was good, and the Sunne in the firmament, because of the good that they receiued of them; but that the Mother was naught, and did eate them, and that the Father was not very good. I shewed him his errour according to our faith, wherein he gaue mee some small credit. I demanded of him, whether they had not seene, nor heard say of their ancestors, that God came into the world. He told me, that he had neuer seene him; but that in old time there were fiue men which went toward the Sunne setting, which met with God, who asked them, Whither goe ye? They said, we goe to seeke our liuing: God answered them, you shall finde it here. They went farther, without regarding what God had said vnto them: which tooke a stone, and touched two of them with it, which were turned into a stone: And hee said againe vnto the other three, Whither goe yee? and they answered as at the first: and God said to them againe, Goe no further, you shall finde it here. And seeing that nothing came vnto them, they went farther:

These Sauages endure great famine.

Their bad qualities.

The beliefe of the Sauages.

They beleeue one God, one Son, one Mother, and the Sunne.

ther: and God tooke two staues, and touched the two first therewith, which were turned into staues; and the fift staied and would goe no further: And God asked him againe, whither goest thou? I goe to seeke my liuing: stay and thou shalt finde it. He stayed without going any further, and God gaue him meate, and he did eate thereof; after he had well fed, hee returned with other Sauages, and told them all the former storie. He told them also, That another time there was a man which had store of Tobacco (which is a kinde of herbe, whereof they take the smoake.) And that God came to this man, and asked him where his Tobacco pipe was? The man tooke his Tobacco pipe and gaue it to God, which tooke Tobacco a great while: after hee had taken store of Tobacco, God broke the said pipe into many peeces: and the man asked him, why hast thou broken my pipe, and seest that I haue no more? And God tooke one which hee had, and gaue it him, and said vnto him; loe here I giue thee one, carry it to thy great Sagamo, and charge him to keepe it, and if he keepe it well he shall neuer want any thing, nor none of his companions. The said man tooke the Tobacco pipe, and gaue it to his great Sagamo, which as long as he kept, the Sauages wnnted nothing in the world. But after that the said Sagamo lost this Tobacco pipe, which was the occasion of great famine, which sometimes they haue among them. I asked him whither he beleeued all this? he said yea, and that it was true. This I beleeue is the cause wherefore they say that God is not very good. But I replied and told him, that God was wholly good; and that without doubt this was the Diuell that appeared to these men, and that if they would beleeue in God as we doe, they should not want any thing needefull. That the Sunne which they beheld, the Moone and the Starres were created by this great God, which hath made heauen and earth, and they haue no power but that which God hath giuen them. That we beleeue in this great God, who by his goodnesse hath sent vs his deare Sonne, which being conceiued by the holy Ghost, tooke humaine flesh in the Virginall wombe of the Virgin Marie, hauing bin thirty three yeares on the earth, working infinite miracles, raising vp the dead, healing the sicke, casting out Diuels, giuing sight to the blinde, teaching men the will of God his Father, to serue, honour, and worship him, did shed his bloud, and suffred death and passion for vs, and for our sinnes, and redeemed mankinde, and being buried, he rose againe, he descended into hell, and ascended into heauen, where he sitteth at the right hand of God his Father. That this the beleefe of all the Christians, which beleeue in the Father, the Sonne, and he holy Ghost, which neuertheless are not three Gods, but one onely, and one onely God, and one Trinitie, in the which none is before or after the other, none greater or lesse then another. That the Virgin Mary the Mother of the Sonne of God, and all men and women which haue liued in this world, doing the commandements of God, and suffring martyrdome for his name sake, and by the permission of God haue wrought miracles, and are Saints in heauen in his Paradise, doe all pray this great diuine Maiestie for vs, to pardon vs our faults and our sinnes which we doe against his Law and his Commandements: and so by the prayers of the Saints in heauen, and by our prayers which we make to his diuine Maiestie, he giueth that which we haue neede of, and the Diuell hath no power ouer vs, and can doe vs no harme: That if they had this beliefe, they should be as we are, and that the Diuell should be able to doe them no hurt, and should neuer want any thing necessary. Then the said Sagamo told me, that he approued that which I said. I asked him what ceremony they vsed in praying to their God? He told me, that they vsed none other ceremonies, but that euery one praied in his heart as he thought good: This is the cause why I beleeue they haue no law among them, neither doe they know how to worship or pray to God, and liue for the most part like brute beasts, and I thinke in short space they would be brought to be good Christians, if their Countrie were planted, which they desire for the most part.

Great famine sometimes among the Sauages.

Sauages which speake with the Diuell.

They haue among them certaine Sauages which they call Pilotoua, which speak visibly with the Diuell, which telleth them what they must doe, as well for the warre as for other things; and if he should command them to put any enterprise in execution, either to kill a French man, or any other of their Nation, they would immediately obey his commandement. Also they beleeue that all the dreames which they dreame are true: and indeede there are many of them, which say that they haue seene and dreamed things which doe happen or shall happen. But to speake truely of these things, they are visions of the Diuell, which doth deceiue and seduce them. Loe this is all their beliefe that I could learne of them, which is brutish and bestiall. All these people are well proportioned of their bodies, without any deformitie, they are well set, and the women are well shapen, fat and full, of a tawnie colour by abundance of a certaine painting wherewith they rubbe themselues, which maketh them to be of an Oliue colour. They are apparelled with skins, one part of their bodies is couered, and the other part vncouered; but in the winter they couer all, for they are clad with good Furres, namely with the skins of Orignac, Otters, Beuers, Lea-boores, Stagges, and Deere, whereof they haue store. In the winter when the Snowes are great, they make a kinde of racket which is twice or thrice as bigge as one of ours in France, which they fasten to their feete, and so goe on the Snow without sinking; for otherwise they could not hunt nor trauaile in many places. They haue also a kinde of Marriage, which is, that when a Maide is foureteene or fifteene yeares old, shee shall haue many seruants and friends, and she may haue carnall company with all those which she liketh, then after fiue

They paint themselues with an Oliue colour.

Their apparell of skins.

A deuice to go on the snow with a Racket.

The marriage of the Sauages.

Digitized by Google

or six yeares, she may take which of them she will for her husband, and so they shall liue together all their life time, except that after they haue liued a certaine time together and haue no children, the man may forsake her and take another wife, saying that his old wife is nothing worth, so that the Maides are more free then the married Women. After they be married they be chaste, and their husbands for the most part are iealous, which giue presents to the Father or Parents of the Maide, which they haue married: loe this is the ceremonie and fashion which they vse in their marriages.

Their burials after the Tartars manner.

Touching their burials, when a man or woman dieth, they make a pit, wherein they put all the goods which they haue, as Kettels, Furres, Hatchets, Bowes and Arrowes, Apparell, and other things, and then they put the corps into the graue, and couer it with earth, and set store of great peeces of wood ouer it, and one stake they set vp on end, which they paint with red on the top. They beleeue the immortality of the Soule, and say that when they be dead they goe into other Countries to reioyce with their parents and friends.

They beleeue the immortality of the soule.

The Riuer of Saguenay, & his originall. Chap 4.

THe eleuenth day of Iune, I went some twelue or fifteene leagues vp Saguenay, which is a faire Riuer, and of incredible depth; for I beleeue, as farre as I could learne by conference whence it should come, that it is from a very high place, from whence there descendeth a fall of water with great impetuositie: but the water that proceedeth thereof is not able to make such a Riuer as this; which neuertheless holdeth not but from the said course of water (where the first fall is) vnto the Port of Tadoussac, which is the mouth of the said Riuer of Saguenay, in which space are fortie fiue or fiftie leagues, and it is a good league and a halfe broad at the most, and a quarter of a league where it is narrowest, which causeth a great currant of water. All the Countrie which I saw, was nothing but Mountaines, the most part of rockes couered with woods of Fir-trees, Cypresses, and Birch-trees, the soyle very vnpleasant, where I found not a league of plaine Countrey, neither on the one side nor on the other. There are certaine hils of Sand and Isles in the said Riuer, which are very high aboue the water. In fine, they are very Desarts voide of Beasts and Birds; for I assure you, as I went on hunting through places which seemed most pleasant vnto mee, I found nothing at all, but small Birds which are like Nightingales, and Swallowes, which come thither in the Summer; for at other times I thinke there are none, because of the excessiue cold which is there; this Riuer commeth from the North-west. They reported vnto me, that hauing passed the first fall, from whence the currant of water commeth, they passe eight other sants or fals, and then they trauaile one dayes iourney without finding any, then they passe ten other sants, and come into a Lake, which they passe in two dayes (euery day they trauaile at their ease, some twelue or fifteene leagues:) at the end of the Lake there are people lodged: then they enter into three other Riuers, three or foure dayes in each of them; at the end of which Riuers there are two or three kinde of Lakes, where the head of Saguenay beginneth: from the which head or spring, vnto the said Port of Tadoussac, is ten * dayes iournee with their Canowes. On the side of the said Riuers are many lodgings, whither other Nacions come from the North, to trucke with the said Mountainers, for skins of Beuers and Marterns, for other Merchandises, which the French Ships bring to the said Mountainers. The said Sauages of the North say, that they see a Sea, which is salt. I hold, if this be so, that it is some gulfe of this our Sea, which disgorgeth it selfe by the North part betwen the lands; and in very deede it can be nothing else. This is that which I haue learned of the Riuer of Saguenay.

A violent fall of water.

A Mountainous Country.

The report of the beginning of the Riuer of Saguenay.

A Lake two daies iournie long.

Three other Riuers.

Two or three Lakes, where in the head of Saguenay beginneth.

* That is, 120. leagues.

People of the North.

A salt sea.

ON Wednesday the eighteenth day of Iune, we departed from Tadoussac, to go to the Sault: we passed by an Ile, which is called the Ile du lieure, or the Ile of the Hare, which may be some two leagues from the Land on the North side, and some seuen leagues from the said Tadoussac, and fiue leagues from the South Coast. From the Ile of the Hare we ranged the North Coast about halfe a league, vnto a point that runneth into the Sea, where a man must keepe farther off.

Iourney to the fall and to certaine Ilands, arriual at Quebec. Chap. 5.

The Ile of the Hare.

The said point is within a league of the Ile, which is called the Ile du Coudre, or the Ile of Filberds, which may be some two leagues in length: And from the said Ile to the Land on the North side is a league. The said Ile is somewhat euen, and groweth sharpe toward both the ends; on the West end there are Medowes and Points of Rockes which stretch somewhat into the Riuer. The said Ile is somewhat pleasant, by reason of the Woods which enuiron the same. There is store of Slate, and the soyle is somewhat grauelly: at the end whereof there is a Rocke which stretcheth into the Sea about halfe a league. We passed to the North of the said Ile, which is distant from the Ile of the Hare twelue leagues.

The Ile of Filberds.

12. leagues.

The Thursday following we departed from thence, and anchored at a dangerous nooke on the North side, where there be certaine Medowes, and a little Riuer, where the Sauages lodge sometimes. The said day wee still ranged the Coast on the North, vnto a place where wee put backe by reasons of the winds which were contrary vnto vs, where there were many Rockes and places very dangeous: here we stayed three dayes waiting for faire weather. All this Coast is nothing but Mountaynes as well on the South side as on the North, the most part like the Coast of

Digitized by Google

of the Riuer of Saguenay. On Sunday the two and twentieth of the said moneth wee departed to goe to the Ile of Orleans, in the way there are many Iles on the South shoare, which are low and couered with trees, shewing to be very pleasant, containing (as I was able to iudge) some two leagues, and one league, and another halfe a league. About these Iles are nothing but Rocks and Flats, very dangerous to passe, and they are distant some two leagues from the mayne Land on the South.

And from thence wee ranged the Ile of Orleans on the Southside: It is a league from the North shoare, very pleasant and leuell, containing eight leagues in length. The Coast on the South shoare is low land, some two leagues into the Countrey: the said lands begin to be low ouer against the said Ile, which beginneth two leagues from the South Coast: to passe by the North side is very dangerous for the bankes of Sand and Rockes, which are betweene the said Ile and the mayne Land, which is almost all dry at a low water. At the end of the said Ile I saw a fall of water, which fell from a great Mountaine, of the said Riuer of Canada, and on the top of the said Mountaine the ground is leuell and pleasant to behold, although within the said Countries a man may see high Mountaynes which may bee some twenty, or fiue and twenty leagues within the Lands, which are neere the first Sault of Saguenay. We anchored at Quebec, which is a Strait of the said Riuer of Canada, which is some three hundred paces broad: there is at this Strait on the North side a very high Mountayne, which falleth downe on both sides: all the rest is a leuell and goodly Countrey, where there are good grounds full of Trees, as Okes, Cypresses, Birches, Firre-trees and Aspes, and other Trees bearing fruit, and wild Vines: So that in mine opinion, if they were dressed, they would be as good as ours. There are along the Coast of the said Quebec Diamants in the Rockes of Slate, which are better then those of Alonson. From the said Quebec to the Ile of Condre, or Filberds, are nine and twenty leagues.

The Ile of Orleance.

Quebec.

Diamants.

29. leagues.

ON Munday the three and twentieth of the said moneth, we departed from Quebec, where the Riuer beginneth to grow broad sometimes one league, then a league and an halfe or two leagues at most. The Countrey groweth still fairer and fairer, and are all low grounds, without Rockes, or very few. The North Coast is full of Rockes and bankes of Sand: you must take the South side, about some halfe league from the shore. There are certaine small Riuers which are not nauigable, but only for the Canowes of the Sauages, wherein there be many fals. Wee anchored as high as Saint Croix, which is distant from Quebec fifteene leagues. This is a low point, which riseth vp on both sides. The Countrey is faire and leuell, and the soyles better then in any place that I haue seene, with plenty of wood, but very few Firre-trees and Cypresses. There are in these parts great store of Vines, Peares, small Nuts, Cheries, Goose-berries, red and greene, and certaine small Roots of the bignesse of a little Nut, resembling Musherooms in taste, which are very good roasted and sod. All this soyle is blacke, without any Rockes, saue that there is great store of Slate: The soyle is very soft, and if it were well manured it would yeeld great increase. On the Northside there is a Riuer which is called Batiscan, which goeth farre into the Countrey, whereby sometimes the Algonmequins come downe: and another on the same side three leagues from the said Saint Croix, in the way from Quebec, which is, that where Iacques Quartier was in the beginning of the Discouery which he made hereof, and hee passed no farther. The said Riuer pleasant, and goeth farre vp into the Countries. All this North Coast is very leuell and delectable.

Of the point of S. Croix, of the Riuer of Batiscan, of the Riuers, Rocks, Iles, Lands, Trees, Fruits, Vines, & faire Countries, which are from Quebec vnto The 3. Riuers. Chap. 6.

Saint Croix, 15. leagues.

Ground Nuts.

The Riuer Batiscan.

Another Riuer

On Tuesday the foure and twentieth of the said moneth, wee departed from the said Saint Croix, where we stayed a tyde and an halfe, that we might passe the next day following by day light, because of the great number of Rockes which are thwart the Riuer (a strange thing to behold) which is in a manner dry at a low water: But at halfe flood, a man may beginne to passe safely; yet you must take good heed, with the Lead alwayes in hand. The tyde floweth heere almost three fathomes and an halfe: the farther we went, the fairer was the Countrey. We went some fiue leagues and an halfe, and anchored on the North side. The Wednesday following wee departed from the said place, which is a flatter Countrey then that which we passed before, full of great store of Trees as that of Saint Croix. We passed hard by a little Ile, which was full of Vines, and came to an Anchor on the South side neere a little Hill: but beeing on the top thereof all is euen ground.

A goodly Countrie.

An Ile full of Vines.

There is another little Ile three leagues from Saint Croix, ioyning neere the South shore. Wee departed from the said Hill the Thursday following, and passed by a little Ile, which is neere the North shoare, where I saw sixe small Riuers, whereof two are able to beare Boats farre vp, and another is three hundred paces broad: there are certaine Ilands in the mouth of it; it goeth farre vp into the Countrey; it is the deepest of all the rest which are very pleasant to behold, the soyle being full of Trees which are like to Walnut-trees, and haue the same smell: but I saw no Fruit, which maketh me doubt: the Sauages told me that they beare Fruit like ours.

Sixe small Riuers.

The Ile S. Eloy.

In passing further we met an Ile, which is called Saint Eloy, and another little Ile, which is hard by the North shoare: we passed betweene the said Ile and the North shore, where betweene the one and the other are some hundred and fiftie paces. From the said Ile we passed a league and an halfe, on the South ſide neere vnto a Riuer, whereon Canowes might goe. All this Coaſt on the North ſide is very good, one may paſſe freely there, yet with the Lead in the hand, to auoid certaine points. All this Coaſt which we ranged is mouing Sand; but after you be entred a little into the Woods, the ſoile is good. The Friday following we departed from this Ile, coaſting ſtill the North ſide hard by the ſhoare, which is low and full of good Trees, and in great number as farre as the three Riuers, where it beginneth to haue another temperature of the ſeaſon, ſomewhat differing from that of Saint Croix: becauſe the Trees are there more forward then in any place that hitherto I had ſeene. From the three Riuers to Saint Croix are fifteene leagues. In this Riuer are ſixe Ilands, three of which are very ſmall, and the others ſome fiue or ſixe hundred paces long, very pleaſant and fertile, for the little quantitie of ground that they containe. There is one Iland in the middeſt of the ſaid Riuer, which looketh directly vpon the paſſage of the Riuer of Canada, and commandeth the other Ilands which lye further from the ſhoare, aſwell on the one ſide as on the other, of foure or fiue hundred paces: it riſeth on the South ſide, and falleth ſomewhat on the North ſide. This in my iudgement would be a very fit place to inhabit; and it might bee quickly fortified: for the ſituation is ſtrong of it ſelfe, and neere vnto a great Lake, which is aboue foure leagues diſtant, which is almoſt ioyned to the Riuer of Saguenay, by the report of the Sauages, which trauell almoſt an hundred leagues Northward, and paſſe many Saults, and then goe by Land ſome fiue or ſixe leagues, and enter into a Lake, whence the ſaid Riuer of Saguenay receiueth the beſt part of his Spring, and the ſaid Sauages come from the ſaid Lake to Tadouſac.

Digitized by Google

Another ſmall Riuer.

A better temperature, 15. leagues.

An Iland fit to be planted.

A great Lake. The head of Saguenay 106. leagues off.

Moreouer, the planting of The three Riuers would be a benefit for the liberty of certaine Nations, which dare not come that way for feare of the ſaid Irocois their enemies, which border vpon all the ſaid Riuer of Canada. But this place being inhabited, we might make the Irocois and the other Sauages friends, or at leaſt wiſe vnder the fauour of the ſaid Plantation, the ſaid Sauages might paſſe freely without feare or danger: becauſe the ſaid place of The three Riuers is a paſſage. All the ſoyle which I ſaw on the North ſhoare is ſandy. Wee went vp aboue a league into the ſaid Riuer, and could paſſe no further, by reaſon of the great current of water. We tooke a Boate to ſearch vp further, but we went not paſt a league, but we met a very Straite full of water, of ſome twelue paces, which cauſed vs that we could not paſſe no further. All the ground which I ſaw on the bankes of the ſaid Riuer riſeth more and more, and is full of Firre-trees and Cypreſſe Trees, and hath very few other Trees.

A great courſe of water.

ON the Saturday following, we departed from The three Riuers, and anchored at a Lake, which is foure leagues diſtant. All this Countrey from The three Riuers to the entrance of the ſaid Lake is low ground, euen with the water on the North ſide; and on the South ſide it is ſomewhat higher. The ſaid Countrey is exceeding good, and the moſt pleaſant that hitherto we had ſeene: the Woods are very thinne, ſo that a man may trauell eaſily through them. The next day being the nine and twentieth of Iune, we entred into the Lake, which is ſome fifteene leagues in length, and ſome ſeuen or eight leagues broad: At the entrance thereof on the South-ſide within a league there is a Riuer which is very great, and entreth into the Countrey ſome ſixtie or eightie leagues, and continuing along the ſame Coaſt, there is another little Riuer, which pierceth about two leagues into the Land, and commeth out of another ſmall Lake, which may containe ſome three or foure leagues. On the North ſide where the Land ſheweth very high, a man may ſee ſome twentie leagues off; but by little and little the Mountaynes begiane to fall toward the Weſt, as it were into a flat Countrey.

Great Lake deſcribed and Riuer of the Irocois. Chap. 7. The Lake of Argoleſme. 15. leagues.

A great Riuer. Another ſmall Riuer.

The Sauages ſay, that the greateſt part of theſe Mountaynes are bad ſoyle. The ſaid Lake hath ſome three fathoms water whereas we paſſed, which was almoſt in the middeſt: the length lieth Eaſt and Weſt, and the breadth from North to the South. I thinke it hath good fiſh in it, of ſuch kinds as we haue in our owne Countrey. Wee paſſed it the very ſame day, and anchored about two leagues within the great Riuer which goeth vp to the Sault: In the mouth whereof are thirtie ſmall Ilands, as farre as I could diſcerne; ſome of them are of two leagues, others a league and an halfe, & ſome leſſe, which are full of Walnut-trees, which are not much different from ours; and I thinke their Walnuts are good when they bee ripe: I ſaw many of them vnder the Trees, which were of two ſorts, the one ſmall, and the others as long as a mans Thumbe, but they were rotten. There are alſo ſtore of Vines vpon the bankes of the ſaid Ilands. But when the waters be great, the moſt part of them is couered with water. And this Countrey is yet better then any other which I had ſeene before.

Two leagues. 30. ſmall Ilands.

Wal-nuts of two ſorts. Store of Vines. Good Countries.

The Riuer of the Irocois. Their manner of fortification with ſtakes.

The laſt day of Iune wee departed from thence, and paſſed by the mouth of the Riuer of the Irocois; where the Sauages which came to make warre againſt them, were lodged and fortified. Their Fortreſſe was made with a number of poſts ſet very cloſe one to another, which ioyned on the one ſide on the banke of the great Riuer of Canada, and the other on the banke of the Riuer of the Irocois: and their Boates were ranged the one by the other neere the ſhoare, that they might flie away with ſpeed, if by chance they ſhould bee ſurpriſed by the Irocois. For their Fort is couered with the barke of Okes, and ſerueth them for nothing thing elſe, but to haue time to embarke themſelues. We went vp the Riuer of the Irocois ſome fiue or ſixe leagues, and could paſſe no farther with our Pinnaſſe, by reaſon of the great courſe of water which deſcendeth, and alſo becauſe we cannot goe on Land, and draw the Pinnaſſe for the multitude of Trees which are vpon the bankes.

Digitized by Google

Seeing we could not paſſe any further, we tooke our Skiffe, to ſee whether the current were more gentle, but going vp ſome two leagues, it was yet ſtronger, and wee could goe no higher. Being able to doe no more we returned to our Pinnaſſe. All this Riuer is ſome three hundred or foure hundred paces broad, and very wholſome. Wee ſaw fiue Ilands in it, diſtant one from the other a quarter or halfe a league, or a league at the moſt: one of which is a league long, which is the neereſt to the mouth, and the others are very ſmall. All theſe Countries are couered with Trees and low Lands, like thoſe which I had ſeene before; but here are more Firres and Cypreſſes then in other places. Neuertheleſſe, the ſoile is good, although it bee ſomewhat ſandy. This Riuer runneth in a manner South-weſt. The Sauages ſay, that ſome fifteene leagues from the place where we were vp the Riuer, there is a Sault which falleth downe from a very ſteepe place, where they carry their Canowes to paſſe the ſame ſome quarter of a league, and come into a Lake; at the mouth whereof, are three Ilands, and being within the ſame they meete with more Iles: This Lake may containe ſome fortie or fiftie leagues in length, and ſome fiue and twentie leagues in breadth, into which many Riuers fall, to the number of ten, which carrie Canowes very far vp. When they are come to the end of this Lake, there is another fall, and they enter againe into another Lake, which is as great as the former, at the head whereof the Irocois are lodged. They ſay moreouer, that there is a Riuer, which runneth vnto the Coaſt of Florida, whether it is from the ſaid laſt Lake ſome hundred, or an hundred and fortie leagues. All the Countrey of the Irocois is ſomewhat Mountaynous, yet notwithſtanding exceeding good, temperate, without much Winter, which is very ſhort there.

Fiue Ilands.

This Riuer runneth almoſt South-weſt.

A Lake ſome fortie or fiftie leagues long in the Countrey of the Irocois.

The goodneſſe and ſhort winter of the Countrey of the Irocois.

AFter our departure from the Riuer of the Irocois, wee anchored three leagues beyond the ſame, on the North ſide. All this Countrie is a lowe Land, repleniſhed with all ſorts of trees, which I haue ſpoken of before. The firſt day of Iuly we coaſted the North ſide, where the wood is very thinne, and more thinne then wee had ſeene in any place before, and all good land for tillage. I went in a Canoa to the South ſhoare, where I ſaw a number of Iles, which haue many fruitfull trees, as Vines, Wal-nuts, Haſel-nuts, and a kinde of fruit like Cheſt-nuts, Cheries, Oakes, Aſpe, Hoppes, Aſhe, Beech, Cypreſſes, very few Pines and Firre-trees. There are alſo other trees which I knew not, which are very pleaſant. Wee found there ſtore of Strawberries, Raſp-berries Gooſ-berries red, greene, and blue, with many ſmall fruits, which growe there among great abundance of graſſe. There are alſo many wilde beaſts, as Origmas, Stagges, Does, Buckes, Boares, Porkepickes, Conies, Foxes, Beuers, Otters, Muſke-rats, and certaine other kindes of beaſts which I doe not knowe, which are good to eate, and whereof the Sauages liue. Wee paſſed by an Ile, which is very pleaſant, and containeth ſome foure leagues in length, and halfe a league in breadth. I ſaw toward the South two high Mountaines, which ſhewed ſome twentie leagues within the Land. The Sauages told mee, that here beganne the firſt fall of the foreſaid Riuer of the Irocois. The Wedneſday following wee departed from this place, and ſayled ſome fiue or ſixe leagues. Wee ſaw many Ilands: the Land is there very lowe, and theſe Iles are couered with trees, as thoſe of the Riuer of the Irocois were.

Their arriual at the Sault or Fall of the Riuer of Canada, the deſcription thereof. Cha. 8.

Fruitfull Trees of many ſorts.

Origmas are before ſaid to bee like oxen, perhaps Buffes. Leſcarbot, that Origmas are Ellans.

Wild beaſts.

A pleaſant Ile.

Many Ilands.

The day following, being the third of Iuly, we ranne certaine leagues, and paſſed likewiſe by many other Ilands, which are excellent good and pleaſant, through the great ſtore of Medowes which are thereabout, as well on the ſhoare of the maine Land, as of the other Ilands: and all the Woods are of very ſmall growth, in compariſon of thoſe which wee had paſſed. At length we came this very day to the entrance of the Sault or Fall of the great Riuer of Canada, with fauourable wind; and wee met with an Ile, which is almoſt in the middeſt of the ſaid entrance, which is a quarter of a league long, and paſſed on the South ſide of the ſaid Ile, where there was not paſt three, foure or fiue foot water, and ſometimes a fathome or two, and ſtraight on the ſudden wee found againe not paſt three or foure foot. There are many Rockes, and ſmall Ilands, whereon there is no wood, and they are euen with the water. From the beginning of the foreſaid Ile, which is in the middeſt of the ſaid entrance, the water beginneth to runne with a great force. Although we had the wind very good, yet wee could not with all our might make any great way: neuertheleſſe wee paſſed the ſaid Ile which is at the entrance of the Sault or Fall. When wee perceiued that wee could goe no further, wee came to an anchor on the North ſhoare ouer againſt a ſmall Iland, which aboundeth for the moſt part with thoſe kinde of fruits which I haue ſpoken of before. Without all delay wee made ready our skiffe, which wee had made of purpoſe to paſſe the ſaid Sault: whereinto the ſaid Monſieur de Pont and my ſelfe entred, with certaine Sauages, which we had brought with vs to ſhew vs the way. Departing from our Pinnace, we were ſcarſe gone three hundred paces, but we were forced to come out, and cauſe certain Mariners to goe into the water to free our Skiffe. The Canoa of the Sauages paſſed eaſily. Wee met with an infinite number of ſmall Rockes, which were euen with the water, on which wee touched oftentimes.

Iuly 3.

Many more Ilands.

The entrance of the Sault or Fall.

An Ile.

A great current of water.

Monſieur du Pont and Monſieur du Champlaine ſearch the Sault.

There

Two great Ilands.

There be two great Ilands, one on the North side, which containeth some fifteene leagues in length, and almost as much in breadth, beginning some twelue leagues vp within the Riuer of Canada, going toward the Riuer of the Irocois, and endeth beyond the Sault. The Iland which is on the South side is some foure leagues long, and some halfe league broad. There is also another Iland, which is neere to that on the North side, which may bee some halfe league long, and some quarter broad: and another small Iland which is betweene that on the North side, and another neerer to the South shoare, whereby wee passed the entrance of the Sault. This entrance being passed, there is a kinde of Lake, wherein all these Ilands are, some fiue leagues long and almost as broad, whereun are many small Ilands which are Rockes. There is a Mountaine neere the said Sault, which discouereth farre into the Countrie, and a little Riuer which falleth from the said Mountaine into the Lake. On the South side are some three or foure Mountaines, which seeme to be about fifteene or sixteene leagues within the Land. There are also two Riuers; one, which goeth to the first Lake of the Riuer of the Irocois, by which sometimes the Algoumequins inuade them: and another which is neere vnto the Sault, which runneth not farre into the Countrey.

A kind of Lake some 5. leagues long.

3. or 4. Mountaines on the South side.

Two Riuers.

The furie of the fall of waters.

The Sault a league broad.

At our comming neere to the said Sault with our Skiffe and Canoa, I assure you, I neuer saw any streame of water to fall downe with such force as this doth; although it bee not very high, being not in some places past one or two fathoms, and at the most three: it falleth as it were steppe by steppe: and in euery place where it hath some small heigth, it maketh a strong boyling with the force and strength of the running of the water. In the breadth of the said Sault, which may containe some league, there are many broad Rockes, and almost in the middest, there are very narrow and long Ilands, where there is a Fall as well on the side of the said Iles which are toward the South, as on the North side: where it is so dangerous, that it is not possible for any man to passe with any Boat, how small soeuer it be. We went on land through the Woods, to see the end of this Sault: where, after wee had trauelled a league, wee saw no more Rockes nor Falls: but the water runneth there so swiftly as it is possible: and this current lasteth for three or foure leagues: so that it is in vaine to imagine, that a man is able to passe the said Saults with any Boats. But he that would passe them, must fit himselfe with the Canoas of the Sauages, which one man may easily carrie. For to carrie Boats is a thing which cannot be done in so short time as it should bee, to bee able to returne into France, vnlesse a man would winter there. And beside this first Sault, there are ten Saults more, the most part hard to passe. So that it would be a matter of great paines and trauell to bee able to see and doe that by Boat which a man might promise himselfe, without great cost and charge, and also to bee in danger to trauell in vaine. But with the Canoas of the Sauages a man may trauell freely and readily into all Countries, as well in the small as in the great Riuers: So that directing himselfe by the meanes of the said Sauages and their Canoas, a man may see all that is to be seene, good and bad, within the space of a yeere or two. That little way which wee trauelled by Land on the side of the said Sault, is a very thinne Wood, through which men with their Armes may march easily, without any trouble; the aire is there more gentle and temperate, and the soyle better then in any place that I had seene, where is store of such wood and fruits, as are in all other places before mentioned: and it is in the latitude of 45. degrees and certaine minutes.

The swift current of the water aboue the Fall.

Ten Saults more.

Temperate aire, and good soyle.

The Sault is in 45. degrees and certaine minutes.

When we saw that we could doe no more, we returned to our Pinnace; where we examined the Sauages which we had with vs, of the end of the Riuer, which I caused them to draw with their hand, and from what part the Head thereof came. They told vs, that beyond the first Sault that we had seene, they trauelled some ten or fifteene leagues with their Canoas in the Riuer, where there is a Riuer which runneth to the dwelling of the Algoumequins, which are some sixty leagues distant from the great Riuer; and then they passed fiue Saults, which may containe from the first to the last eight leagues, whereof there are two where they carrie their Canoas to passe them: euery Sault may containe halfe a quarter or a quarter of a league at the most. And then they come into a Lake, which may be fifteene or sixteene leagues long. From thence they enter againe into a Riuer which may be a league broad, and trauell some two leagues in the same; and then they enter into another Lake some foure or fiue leagues long: comming to the end thereof, they passe fiue other Saults, distant from the first to the last some fiue and twenty or thirty leagues; whereof there are three where they carrie their Canoas to passe them, and thorow the other two they doe but draw them in the water, because the current is not there so strong, nor so bad, as in the others. None of all these Saults is so hard to passe, as that which we saw. Then they come into a Lake, which may containe some eighty leagues in length, in which are many Ilands, and at the end of the same the water is brackish, and the Winter gentle. At the end of the said Lake they passe a Sault which is somewhat high, where little water descendeth: there they carrie their Canoas by land about a quarter of a league to passe this Sault. From thence they enter into another Lake, which may be some sixty leagues long, and that the water thereof is very brackish: at the end thereof they come vnto a Strait which is two leagues broad, and it goeth farre into the Countrie. They told vs, that they themselues had passed no farther; and that they had not seene the end of a Lake, which is within fifteene or sixteene leagues

A Riuer running 60. leags into the Countri of the Algoumequins.

A draught of the Sauages.

The first report of the Sauages touching the Head of the Riuer.

A Lake of 15. leagues.

Another Lake of 4. leagues.

Fiue other Saults.

A Lake of 80. leagues long.

Brackish water

* It seemeth hereby to trend southward.

The last Sault.

Another Lake 60. leagues long, very brackish.

A Strait of 2. leagues broad.

Another mightie Lake.

Digitized by Google

leagues of the farthest place where themselues had beene, nor that they which told them of it, had knowne any man that had seene the end thereof, because it is so great that they would not hazard themselues to sayle farre into the same, for feare lest some storme or gust of winde should surprise them. They say that in the Summer the Sunne doth set to the North of the said Lake, and in the Winter it setteth as it were in the middest thereof: That the water is there exceeding salt, to wit, as salt as the Sea water. I asked them whether from the last Lake which they had seene, the water descended alwaies downe the Riuer comming to Gaschepay? They told me, no: but said, that from the third Lake onely it descended to Gaschepay: But that from the last Sault, which is somewhat high, as I haue said, the water was almost still; and that the said Lake might take his course by other Riuers, which passe within the Lands, either to the South, or to the North, whereof there are many that runne there, the end whereof they see not. Now, in my iudgement, if so many Riuers fall into this Lake, hauing so small a course at the said Sault, it must needs of necessitie fall out, that it must haue his issue forth by some exceeding great Riuer. But that which maketh me beleeue that there is no Riuer by which this Lake doth issue forth (considering the number of so many Riuers as fall into it) is this, that the Sauages haue not seene any Riuer, that runneth through the Countries, saue in the place where they were. Which maketh me beleeue that this is the South Sea, being salt as they say: Neuertheless we may not giue so much credit thereunto, but that it must bee done with apparent reasons, although there be some small shew thereof. And this assuredly is all that hitherto I haue seene and heard of the Sauages, touching that which we demanded of them.

The southerne situation of a great Lake.
The water as salt as sea water.
Many Riuers running south and north.
Hudsons Riuer may be one of these.
An exceeding great Riuer.
The south Sea.

WEe departed from the said Sault on Friday the fourth day of Iuly, and returned the same day to the Riuer of the Irocois. On Sunday the sixth of Iuly wee departed from thence, and anchored in the Lake. The Monday following wee anchored at the three Riuers. This day wee sayled some foure leagues beyond the said three Riuers. The Tuesday following we came to Quebec; and the next day wee were at the end of this Ile of Orleans, where the Sauages came to vs, which were lodged in the maine Land on the North side. Wee examined two or three Algoumequins, to see whether they would agree with those that wee had examined touching the end and the beginning of the said Riuer of Canada. They said, as they had drawne out the shape thereof, that hauing passed the Sault, which wee had seene, some two or three leagues, there goeth a Riuer into their dwelling, which is on the North side. So going on forward in the said great Riuer, they passe a Sault, where they carrie their Canoas, and they come to passe fiue other Saults, which may containe from the first to the last some nine or ten leagues, and that the said Saults are not hard to passe, and they doe but draw their Canoas in the most part of the said Saults or Falls, sauing at two, where they carrie them: from thence they enter into a Riuer, which is as it were a kinde of Lake, which may containe some sixe or seuen leagues: and then they passe fiue other Falls, where they draw their Canoas as in the first mentioned, sauing in two, where they carrie them as in the former: and that from the first to the last there are some twenty or fiue and twenty leagues. Then they come into a Lake containing some hundred and fifty leagues in length: and foure or fiue leagues within the entrance of that Lake there is a Riuer which goeth to the Algoumequins toward the North; and another Riuer which goeth to the Irocois, whereby the said Algoumequins and Irocois make warre the one against the other. Then comming to the end of the said Lake, they meete with another Fall, where they carrie their Canoas. From thence they enter into another exceeding great Lake, which may containe as much as the former: They haue beene but a very little way in this last Lake, and haue heard say, that at the end of the said Lake there is a Sea, the end whereof they haue not seene, neither haue heard that any haue seene it. But that where they haue beene, the water is not salt, because they haue not entred farre into it; and that the course of the water commeth from the Sun-setting toward the East; and they knowe not, whether beyond the Lake that they haue seene, there be any other course of water that goeth Westward. That the Sunne setteth on the right hand of this Lake: which is, according to my iudgement, at the North-west, little more or lesse; and that in the first great Lake the water freezeth not (which maketh mee iudge that the climate is there temperate) and that all the Territories of the Algoumequins are lowe grounds, furnished with small store of wood: And that the coast of the Irocois is Mountainous, neuertheless they are excellent good and fertile soyles, and better then they haue seene any where else: That the said Irocois reside some fifty or sixty leagues from the said great Lake. And this assuredly is all which they haue told mee that they haue seene: which differeth very little from the report of the first Sauages. This day wee came within some three leagues of the Ile of Coudres or Filberds.

Of Canada, and of the number of the Fals and Lakes which it passeth by. Chap. 9.
Iuly 4.
The Riuer of the Irocois.
Another report of the Algoumequin Sauages.
A Riuer or Lake 6. or 7. leagues long.
A Lake 150. leagues long.
A Riuer on the North side, going toward the Algoumequins.
A Riuer on the south side.
Another exceeding great Lake.
A Sea, the end whereof the Sauages neuer saw.
It seemeth to lie southward.
The Ile Coudres

On Thursday the tenth of the said moneth, wee came within a league and an halfe of the Ile Du Lieure, or Of the Hare, on the North side, where other Sauages came into our Pinnace, among whom there was a young man, an Algoumequin, which had trauelled much in the said great Lake. Wee examined him very particularly, as wee had done the other Sauages. Hee told vs, that hauing passed the said Fall which wee had seene, within two or three leagues there is a Riuer,

The Ile Du Lieure, or Of the Hare.
The third report, made by a great Trauceller.

Riuer, which goeth to the said Algoumequins, where they be lodged: and that passing vp the great Riuer of Canada, there are fiue Falls, which may containe from the first to the last some eight or nine leagues, whereof there bee three where they carrie their Canoas, and two others wherein they draw them: that each of the said Falls may be a quarter of a league long: then they come into a Lake, which may containe some fifteene leagues. Then they passe fiue other Falls, which may containe from the the first to the last some twenty or fiue and twenty leagues; where there are not past two of the said Falls which they passe with their Canoas, in the other three they doe but draw them. From thence they enter into an exceeding great Lake, which may containe some three hundred leagues in length: when they are passed some hundred leagues into the said Lake, they meet with an Iland, which is very great; and beyond the said Iland the water is brackish: But when they haue passed some hundred leagues farther, the water is yet salter: and comming to the end of the said Lake, the water is wholly salt. Farther he said, that there is a Fall that is a league broad, from whence an exceeding current of water descendeth into the said Lake. That after a man is passed this Fall, no more land can be seene neither on the one side nor on the other, but so great a Sea, that they neuer haue seene the end thereof, nor haue heard tell, that any other haue seene the same. That the Sunne setteth on the right hand of the said Lakes and that at the entrance thereof there is a Riuer which goeth to the Algoumequins, and another Riuer to the Irocois, whereby they warre the one against the other. That the Countrie of the Irocois is somewhat mountainous, yet very fertile, where there is store of Indian Wheat, and other fruits, which they haue not in their Countrie: That the Countrie of the Algoumequins is lowe and fruitfull. I enquired of them, whether they had any knowledge of any Mines? They told vs, that there is a Nation which are called, the good Irocois, which come to exchange for merchandises, which the French ships doe giue to the Algoumequins, which say, that there is toward the North a Mine of fine Copper, whereof they shewed vs certaine Bracelets, which they had receiued of the said Good Irocois: and that if any of vs would goe thither, they would bring them to the place, which should bee appointed for that businesse. And this is all which I could learne of the one and the other, differing but very little; saue that the second which were examined, said, that they had not tasted of the salt water: for they had not beene so farre within the said Lake, as the others: and they differ some small deale in the length of the way, the one sort making it more short, and the other more long. So that, according to their report, from the Sault or Fall where wee were, is the space of some foure hundred leagues vnto the Salt Sea, which may be the South Sea, the Sunne setting where they say it doth. On Friday the tenth of the said moneth we returned to Tadoussac, where our ship lay.

A Lake 15. leagues long.

An exceeding great Lake 300 leagues long.

A very great Iland.

Brackishwater.

More brackish water.

Whole salt water.

A great and maine Sea.

A Riuer which goeth to the Algoumequins.

A Mine of fine Copper.

Some 400. leagues from the first Sault to the South-sea.

Their Voyage from Tadoussac to the Ile Percee: of many Riuers, Lakes and Countries, wherein are found sundry sorts of Mines. Chap. 10.

AS soone as wee were come to Tadoussac, wee embarqued our selues againe to goe to Gachepay, which is distant from the said Tadoussac about some hundred leagues. The thirteenth day of the said moneth we met with a companie of Sauages, which were lodged on the South side, almost in the mid-way betweene Tadoussac and Gachepay. Their Sagamo or Captaine which led them is called Armouchides, which is held to be one of the wisest and most hardy among all the Sauages: Hee was going to Tadoussac to exchange Arrowes, and the flesh of Orignars, which they haue for Beauers and Marterns of the other Sauages, the Mountainers, Estechemains, and Algoumequins.

100. leagues from Gachepay to Tadoussac.

Armouchides Sagamo.

The description of the Port of Gachepay.

The Bay of Cods.

The Ile Percee.

The Ile de Bonaduenture.

The fifteenth day of the said moneth we came to Gachepay, which is in a Bay, about a league and a halfe on the North side. The said Bay containeth some seuen or eight leagues in length, and at the mouth thereof foure leagues in breadth. There is a Riuer which runneth some thirty leagues vp into the Countrie: Then we saw another Bay, which is called the Bay des Molues, or the Bay of Cods, which may be some three leagues long, and as much in bredth at the mouth. From thence we come to the Ile Percee, which is like a Rocke, very steepe, rising on both sides, wherein there is a hole, through which Shalops and Boats may passe at an high water: and at a lowe water one may goe from the maine Land to the said Ile, which is not past foure or fiue hundred paces off. Moreouer, there is another Iland in a manner South-east from the Ile Percee about a league, which is called the Ile de Bonne-aduenture, and it may bee some halfe a league long. All these places of Gachepay, the Bay of Cods, and the Ile Percee, are places where they make dry and greene Fish. When you are passed the Ile Percee, there is a Bay which is called they Bay of Heate, which runneth as it were West South-west, some foure and twenty leagues into the land, containing some fifteene leagues in breadth at the mouth thereof. The Sauages of Canada say, that vp the great Riuer of Canada, about some sixtie leagues, ranging the South coast, there is a small Riuer called Mantanne, which runneth some eighteene leagues vp into the Countreys and being at the head thereof, they carrie their Canowes about a league by land, and they come into the said Bay of Heate, by which they goe sometimes to the Isle Percee. Also they goe from the said Bay to Tregate and Misamichy. Running along the said coast we passe by many Riuers, and come to a place where there is a Riuer which is called Souricona, where Monsieur Prouert was to discouer a Mine of Copper. They goe with their Canowes vp this Riuer three or foure dayes, then they passe three or foure leagues by land, to the said Mine, which is

The Bay of Heate.

The Riuer of Mantanne. Tregate and Misamichy.

The Riuer Souricona.

A Mine of Copper.

hard

hard vpon the Sea ſhoare on the South ſide. At the mouth of the ſaid Riuer, there is an Iland lying a league into the Sea; from the ſaid Iſland vnto the Iſle Perçee, is ſome ſixtie or ſeuentie leagues. Still following the ſaid coaſt, which trendeth toward the Eaſt, you meete with a Strait, which is two leagues broad, and fiue and twenty leagues long. On the Eaſt ſide is an Iſle, which is called the Iſle of Saint Lawrence, where Cape Breton is; and in this place a Nation of Sauages, called the Souricois, doe winter.

An Iland.
A Strait betweene the Iles of Cape Breton and the maine Land.
Souricois.

Paſſing the Strait of the Iles of Saint Lawrence, and ranging the South-weſt Coaſt, you come to a Bay which ioyneth hard vpon the Myne of Copper. Paſſing farther there is a Riuer, which runneth threeſcore or foureſcore leagues into the Countrey, which reacheth neere to the Lake of the Iroçois, whereby the ſaid Sauages of the South-weſt Coaſt make warre vpon them. It would be an exceeding great benefit, if there might be found a paſſage on the Coaſt of Florida neere to the ſaid great Lake, where the water is ſalt; aſwell for the Nauigation of ſhips, which ſhould not bee ſubiect to ſo many perils as they are in Canada, as for the ſhortning of the way aboue three hundred leagues. And it is moſt certaine, that there are Riuers on the Coaſt of Florida, which are not yet diſcouered, which pierce vp into the Countries, where the ſoile is exceeding good and fertile, and very good Hauens. The Countrey and Coaſt of Florida may haue another temperature of the ſeaſon, and may bee more fertile in abundance of fruites and other things, then that which I haue ſeene: But it cannot haue more euen nor better ſayles, then thoſe which we haue ſeene.

A Riuer which runneth vp into the Land.
Great Riuers and good Hauens on the coaſt of Florida or Virginia.

The Sauages ſay, that in the foreſaid great Bay of Hete there is a Riuer, which runneth vp vp ſome twentie leagues into the Countrey, at the head whereof there is a Lake, which may be about twentie leagues in compaſſe, wherein is little ſtore of water, and the Summer it is dried vp, wherein they find, about a foot or a foot and an halfe vnder the ground a kind of Metall like to ſiluer, which I ſhewed them; and that in another place neere the ſaid Lake there is a Myne of Copper. And this is that which I learned of the foreſaid Sauages.

A Riuer.
A Lake twenty leagues in compaſſe.
A metall like Siluer.
A Mine of Copper.

WE departed from the Ile Perçee the nineteenth day of the ſaid moneth to returne to Tadouſac. When we were within three leagues of Cape le Veſque, or the Biſhops Cape, we were encountred with a ſtorme which laſted two dayes, which forced vs to put roomer with a great creeke, and to ſtay for faire weather. The day following we departed, and were encountred with another ſtorme: Being loth to put roome, and thinking to gaine way wee touched on the North ſhore the eight and twentieth day of Iuly in a creeke which is very bad, becauſe of the edges of Rockes which lie there. This creeke is in 51. degrees and certaine minutes. The next day we anchored neere a Riuer, which is called Saint Margarites Riuer, where at a full Sea is ſome three fathomes water, and a fathome and an halfe at a low water: this Riuer goeth farre vp into the Land. As farre as I could ſee within the Land on the Eaſt ſhoare, there is a fall of water which entreth into the ſaid Riuer, and falleth ſome fiftie or ſixtie fathomes downe, from whence commeth the greateſt part of the water which deſcendeth downe. At the mouth thereof there is a banke of Sand, whereon at the ebbe is but halfe a fathome water. All the Coaſt toward the Eaſt is mouing Sand: there is a point ſome halfe league from the ſaid Riuer, which ſtretcheth halfe a league into the Sea: and toward the Weſt there is a ſmall Iland: this place is in fiftie degrees. All theſe Countries are exceeding bad, full of Firre-trees. The Land here is ſomewhat high, but not ſo high as that on the South ſide. Some three leagues beyond we paſſed neere vnto another Riuer, which ſeemed to be very great, yet barred for the moſt part with Rockes: ſome eight leagues farther there is a Point which runneth a league and an halfe into the Sea, where there is not paſt a fathome and an halfe of water. When you are paſſed this Point, there is another about foure leagues off, where is water enough. All this Coaſt is low and ſandie. Foure leagues beyond this there is a creeke where a Riuer entreth: many ſhips may paſſe heere on the Weſt ſide: this is a low point, which runneth about a league into the Sea; you muſt runne along the Eaſterne ſhoare ſome three hundred paces to enter into the ſame. This is the beſt Hauen which is all along the North ſhoare; but it is very dangerous in going thither, becauſe of the flats and ſholds of ſand, which lye for the moſt part all along the ſhoare, almoſt two leagues into the Sea. About ſix leagues from thence, there is a Bay where there is an Iſle of ſand; all this Bay is very ſhallow, except on the Eaſt ſide, where it hath about foure fathoms water: within the channell which entreth into the ſaid Bay, ſome foure leagues vp, there is a faire creeke where a Riuer entreth. All this coaſt is low and ſandie, there deſcendeth a fall of water which is great. About fiue leagues farther is a Point which ſtretcheth about halfe a league into the Sea, where there is a creeke, and from the one point to the other are three leagues, but all are ſhoald, where is little water. About two leagues off, there is a ſtrand where there is a good hauen, and a ſmall Riuer, wherein are three Iſlands, and where Ships may harbour themſelues from the weather. Three leagues beyond this, is a ſandie point which runneth out about a league, at the end whereof there is a ſmall Iſlet. Going forward to Leſquenim, you meete with two little low Iſlands, and a little rocke neere the ſhoare: theſe ſaid Ilands are about halfe a league from Leſquenim, which is a very bad Port, compaſſed with rockes, and dry at a low water, and you muſt fetch about a little

Our returne from the Ile Percee to Tadouſac, with the deſcription of the Ile
Chap 11.
Creeks, Ports, Riuers, Iles, Rockes, Falls, Bayes, and Shoalds which are along the North coaſt.
The North ſhoare.
The Riuer of Saint Margaret
A ſandy coaſt.
Very bad Countries.
A point that runneth into the ſea.
A good Creeke, where many ſhips may ride.
A Bay.
A Creeke.
Two little low Ilands.
Leſquenim a very bad Port.

poins

Digitized by Google

The Riuer where the Baſks kill the whales. Our arriuall at Tadouſac the 31 of Auguſt.

point of a rocke to enter in, where one Ship onely can paſſe at a time. A little higher there is a Riuer, which runneth a little way into the land. This is the place where the Basks kill the Whales; to ſay the truth, the hauen is ſtarke naught. Wee came from thence to the foreſaid hauen of Tadouſac, the third day of Auguſt. All theſe Countries before mentioned are low toward the ſhoare, and within the land very high. They are neither ſo pleaſant nor fruitfull as thoſe on the South, although they be lower. And this for a certaintie is all which I haue ſeene of this Northerne coaſt.

Of the Armouchicois Sauages and of their monſtrous ſhape. The diſcourſe of Monſieur de Preuert of Saint Malo, touching the diſcouerie of the South-weſt Coaſt. Ch. 12. The Ceremonies which they vſe before they go to the warres.

AT our comming to Tadouſac, we found the Sauages which wee met in the Riuer of the Iroquois, who met with three Canowes of the Iroquois in the firſt Lake, which fought againſt tenne others of the Mountayners; and they brought the heads of the Iroquois to Tadouſac, and there was but one Mountayner wounded in the arme with the ſhot of an Arrow, who dreaming of ſomething, all the other tenne muſt ſeeke to content him, thinking alſo that his wound thereby would mend if this Sauage die, his Parents will reuenge his death, either vpon their Nation or vpon others, or at leaſt wiſe the Captaines muſt giue Preſents to the Parents of the dead, to content them; otherwiſe as I haue ſaid, they would be reuenged: which is a great fault among them. Before the ſaid Mountayners ſet forth to the Warre, they aſſembled all, with their richeſt apparell of Furres, Beauers, and other Skinnes adorned with Pater-noſters and Chaines of diuers colours, and aſſembled in a great publike place, where there was before them a Sagamo whoſe name was Begourat, which led them to the Warre, and they marched one behind another, with their Bowes and Arrowes, Maſes and Targets, wherewith they furniſh themſelues to fight: and they went leaping one after another, in making many geſtures of their bodies, they made many turnings like a Snaile: afterward they began to dance after their accuſtomed manner, as I haue ſaid before: then they made their Feaſt, and after they had ended it, the women ſtripped themſelues ſtarke naked, being decked with their faireſt Cordons, and went into their Canowes thus naked and there danced, and then they went into the water, and ſtrooke at one another with their Oares, and beate water one vpon another: yet they did no hurt, for they warded the blowes which they ſtrooke one at the other. After they had ended all theſe Ceremonies, they retired themſelues into their Cabines, and the Sauages went to warre againſt the Iroquois.

Their departure from Tadouſac Armouchicois deformed Sauages.

The ſixt day of Auguſt we departed from Tadouſac, and the eighteenth of the ſaid moneth we arriued at the Ile Perçee, where wee found Monſieur Preuert of Saint Malo, which came from the Myne, where he had beene with much trouble, for the feare which the Sauages had to meet with their enemies, which are the Armouchicois, which are Sauages very monſtrous, for the ſhape that they haue. For their head is little, and their body ſhort, their armes ſmall like a bone, and their thigh like; their legges great and long, which are all of one proportion, and when they ſit vpon their heeles, their knees are higher by halfe a foot then their head, which is a ſtrange thing, and they ſeeme to be out of the courſe of Nature. Neuertheleſſe, they be very valiant and reſolute, and are planted in the beſt Countries of all the South Coaſt: And the Souricois do greatly feare them. But by the incouragement which the ſaid Monſieur de Preuert gaue them, hee brought them to the ſaid Myne, to which the Sauages guided him. It is a very high Mountaine, riſing ſomewhat ouer the Sea, which gliſtereth very much againſt the Sunne, and there is great ſtore of Verde-greaſe iſſuing out of the ſaid Myne of Copper. He ſaith, that at the foot of the ſaid Mountayne, at a low water there were many morſels of Copper, as was otherwiſe declared vnto vs, which fall downe from the top of the Mountaine. Paſſing three or foure leagues further toward the South, there is another Myne, and a ſmall Riuer which runneth a little way vp into the Land, running toward the South, where there is a Mountaine, which is of a blacke painting, wherewith the Sauages paint themſelues: Some ſixe leagues beyond the ſecond Myne, toward the Sea, about a league from the South Coaſt, there is an Ile, wherein is found another kind of Metall, which is like a darke browne: if you cut it, it is white, which they vſed in old time for their Arrowes and Kniues, and did beate it with ſtones. Which maketh me beleeue that it is not Tinne, nor Lead, being ſo hard as it is; and hauing ſhewed them ſiluer, they ſaid that the Myne of that Ile was like vnto it, which they found in the earth, about a foot or two deepe. The ſaid Monſieur Preuert gaue the Sauages Wedges and Cizers, and other things neceſſarie to draw out the ſaid Myne; which they haue promiſed to doe, and to bring the ſame the next yeere, and giue it the ſaid Monſieur Preuert. They ſay alſo that within ſome hundred or one hundred and twentie leagues there are other Mynes, but that they dare not goe thither vnleſſe they haue Frenchmen with them to make warre vpon their enemies, which haue the ſaid Mynes in their poſſeſſion. The ſaid place where the Myne is, ſtandeth in 44. degrees and ſome few minutes, neere the South Coaſt within fiue or ſixe leagues: it is a kind of Bay, which is certaine leagues broad at the mouth thereof, and ſomewhat more in length, where are three Riuers, which fall into the great Bay neere vnto the Ile of Saint Iohn, which is thirtie or fiue and thirtie leagues long, and is ſixe leagues diſtant from the South ſhoare. There is alſo another little Riuer, which falleth almoſt in the mid way of that whereby Monſieur Preuert returned, and there are as it were two kind of Lakes in the ſaid Riuer. Furthermore, there is yet another ſmall Riuer which goeth

The Relation of the Copper Myne on the South Coaſt.

Another Mine

Blacke painting.

An Ile wherein another kind of Metall is found, which is white being cut.

Other Mynes. The deſcription of the place where the ſaid Myne is.

Digitized by Google

goeth toward the Mountaine of the painting. All these Riuers fall into the said Bay on the South-east part, neere about the said Ile which the Sauages say there is of this white Metall. On the North side of the said Bay are the Mynes of Copper, where there is a good Hauen for ships, and a small Hand at the mouth of the Hauen; the ground is Oze and Sand, where a man may run his ship on shoare. From the said Myne to the beginning of the mouth of the said Riuers is some sixtie or eightie leagues by Land. But by the Sea Coast, according to my iudgement, from the passage of the Ile of Saint Lawrence and the Firme Land, it cannot be past fiftie or sixtie leagues to the said Myne. All this Countrey is exceeding faire and flat, wherein are all sorts of trees, which wee saw as wee went to the first Sault vp the great Riuer of Canada, very small store of Firre-trees and Cypresses. And this of a truth is as much as I learned and heard of the said Monsieur Preuert.

A good Hauen at the Copper Mynes.

BEfore we departed from Tadoussac, to returne into France, one of the Sagamos of the Mountayners named Bechouras, gaue his Sonne to Monsieur du Pont to carrie him into France, and he was much recommended vnto him by the Great Sagamo Anadabijou, praying him to vse him well, and to let him see that, which the other two Sauages had seene which we had brought backe againe. We prayed them to giue vs a woman of the Irocois, whom they would haue eaten: whom they gaue vnto vs, and we brought her home with the foresaid Sauage. Monsieur de Preuert in like manner brought home foure Sauages, one man which is of the South Coast, one woman and two children of the Canadians.

Their returne. Chap.13.

The foure and twentieth of August, we departed from Gachepay, the ship of the said Monsieur Preuert and ours. The second of September, we counted that wee were as farre as Cape Rase. The fift day of the said moneth we entred vpon the Banke, whereon they vse to fish. The sixteenth, we were come into the Sounding, which may be some fiftie leagues distant from the Vshant. The twentieth of the said moneth we arriued in New Hauen by the grace of God to all our contentments, with a continuall fauourable wind.

Cape Rase. The Banke. The soundings Vshant.

CHAP. VII.

The Patent of the French King to Monsieur de MONTS for the inhabiting of the Countries of La Cadia Canada, and other places in New France.

HEnry by the grace of God King of France and Nauarre. To our deare and well beloued the Lord of Monts, one of the ordinarie Gentlemen of our Chamber, greeting. As our greatest care and labour is, and hath alwayes beene, since our comming to this Crowne, maintaine and conserue it in the ancient dignitie, greatnesse and splendour thereof, to extend and amplifie, as much as lawfully may bee done, the bounds and limits of the same. We being, of a long time, informed of the situation and condition of the Lands and Territories of La Cadia, moued aboue all things, with a singular zeale, and deuout and constant resolution, which we haue taken, with the helpe and assistance of God, Author, Distributour, and Protectour of all Kingdomes and Estates, to cause the people, which doe inhabit the Countrey, men (at this present time) Barbarous, Atheists, without Faith, or Religion, to be conuerted to Christianitie, and to the Beliefe and Profession of our Faith and Religion: and to draw them from the ignorance and vnbeliefe wherein they are. Hauing also of a long time knowne by the Relation of the Sea Captaines, Pilots, Merchants and others, who of long time haue haunted, frequented and trafficked with the people that are found in the said places, how fruitfull, commodious and profitable may be vnto vs, to our Estates and Subiects, the Dwelling, Possession, and Habitation of these Countries, for the great and apparent profit which may be drawne by the greater frequentation and habitude which may bee had with the people that are found there, and the Trafficke and Commerce which may be, by that meanes safely treated and negotiated. We then for these causes fully trusting on your great wisdome, and in the knowledge and experience that you haue of the qualitie, condition and situation of the said Countrie of La Cadia: for diuers and sundry Nauigations, Voyages and Frequentations that you haue made into these parts, and others neere and bordering vpon it: Assuring our selues that this our resolution and intention, being committed vnto you, you will attentiuely, diligently, and no lesse courageously and valorously execute and bring to such perfection as we desire: Haue expresly appointed and established you, and by these Presents, signed with our owne hands, doe commit, ordaine, make, constitute and establish you, our Lieutenant Generall, for to represent our person, in the Countries, Territories, Coasts and Confines of La Cadia. To begin from the 40. degree vnto the 46. And in the same distance, or part of it, as farre as may bee done, to establish, extend and make to be knowne our Name, Might and Authoritie. And vnder the same to subiect, submit and bring to obedience all the people of the said Land and the Borderers thereof: And by the meanes thereof, and all lawfull wayes, to call, make, instruct, prouoke and incite them to the knowledge of God, and to the light of the Faith and Christian Religion, to establish it there: And in the exercise and profession of the same, keepe and conserue the said people, and all other Inhabitants in the said places, and there to command in peace, rest and tranquillitie, as well by Sea as by Land: to ordaine, decide, and cause to bee executed all that which you shall iudge fit and necessarie to be done, for to maintaine, keepe and conserue the said places vnder our Power and Authoritie, by the formes, wayes and meanes prescribed by our Lawes. And for to haue there a care of the same with you, to appoint, establish, and constitute all Officers, as well in the affaires of Warre, as for Iustice and Policie, for the first time, and from thence forward to name and present them vnto vs: for to be disposed by vs, and to giue Letters, Titles, and such Prouisoes as shall be necessarie, &c.

Digitized by Google

Giuen at Fountain-Bleau the eight day of November: in the yeere our Lord 1603. And of our Reigne the fifteenth. Signed Henry: and vnderneath by the King, Potier; And sealed vpon single label with yellow Waxe.

The Voyage of Monsieur de MONTS into New France, written by MARKE LESCARBOT.

The rest of this Patent is here for breuitie omitted: with the Prouisoes, &c. And let not Englishmen feare want of roome for French Plantations or Sauage habitations; these being very thin, the other scarse worthy the name of being, or plantation, hauing so many interruptions, and more frequented by the French in way of Trade with Sauages then otherwise. I haue omitted many digressions and discourses of the Authour; only for knowledge of those parts, presenting the briefe summe of his most ample Worke. His Map but for cost, I would haue here added. I haue diuers by me which I take more exact, I am sure with many many particulers wanting in his. And both his Mappe and Discourse shew that the French discouered not so neere Virginia, as Hudsons Riuer; and that the French Plantations haue beene more Northerly farre, then our Northerne Virginia, and to the Southerne, not a shadow in comparison of costs and numbers.

Monsieur de Monts hauing made the Commissions and Prohibitions before said, to bee proclaimed thorow the Realme of France, and especially thorow the Ports and maritime Townes thereof, caused two shippes to bee rigged and furnished, the one vnder the conduct of Captaine Timothy of New-hauen, the other of Captaine Morell of Honfleur. In the first, hee shipped himselfe, with good number of men of account, as well Gentlemen as others. And for as much as Monsieur de Poutrincourt was, and had beene of a long time, desirous to see those Countries of New France, and there to finde out and choose some fit place to retire himselfe into, with his Family, Wife and Children, not meaning to be the last that should follow and participate in the glorie of so faire and generous an enterprize, would needs goe thither, and shipped himselfe with the said Monsieur de Monts, carrying with him some quantitie of Armours and Munitions of Warre; and so weighed Anchors from New-hauen the seuenth day of March 1604. But being departed somewhat too soone, before the Winter had yet left off her frozen Weed, they found store of Icie bankes, against the which they were in danger to strike, and so to be cast away.

The Voyage was long by reason of contrarie winds, which seldome hapneth to them that set out in March for the New-found-lands, which are ordinarily carried with an East or Northerne winde, fit to goe to those Lands. And hauing taken their course to the South of the Ile of Sand or Sablon, or Sand, for to shunne the said Ices, they almost fell from Caribdis into Scylla, going to strike towards the said Ile, during the thicke mists that are frequent in that Sea. In the end, the sixt of May they came to a certaine Port, where they found Captaine Rossignol of New-hauen, who did trucke for skinnes with the Sauages, contrary to the Kings Inhibitions, which was the cause that his ship was confiscated. This Port was called Le Port du Rossignol, hauing (in this his hard fortune) this onely good, that a good and fit Harborough or Port, in those Coasts beareth his name.

From thence coasting and discouering the Lands, they arriued at another Port, very faire, which they named Le Port de Moutton, by reason that a Mutton or Weather hauing leaped ouer-board and drowned himselfe came aboard againe, and was taken and eaten as good prize. Neere the said Moutton Port there is a place so repleniſhed with Rabbets and Conies, that they almost did eate nothing else. During that time Monsieur Champlein was sent with a shallop to seeke farther off a fitter place to retire themselues, at which Exploit he tarried so long, that deliberating vpon the returne, they thought to leaue him behind: for there was no more victuals: and they serued themselues with that, that was found in the said Rossignols ship, without which they had beene forced to returne into France, and so to breake a faire enterprize at the very birth and beginning thereof; or to starue, hauing ended the hunting of Conies, which could not still continue.

All New France in the end being contained in two ships, they weighed Anchors from Port du Moutton, for to imploy their time, and to discouer Lands as much as might before Winter. Wee came to Cape de Sable, or the Sandie Cape; and from thence we sailed to the Bay of Saint Marie, where our men lay at Anchor fifteene dayes, whilest the Lands and passages as well by Sea as by Riuer might be descried and knowne. This Bay is a very faire place to inhabit, because that one is readily carried thither without doubling. There are Mynes of Iron and Siluer; but in no great abundance, according to the triall made thereof in France. A Priest losing his way in the Woods was missing sixteene dayes. Whereupon a Protestant was charged to haue killed him because they quarrelled sometimes for matters of Religion. Finally, they sounded a Trumpet thorow the Forrest, they shot off the Canon diuers times, but in vaine: for the roaring of the Sea, stronger then all that, did expell backe the sound of the said Canons and Trumpets. Two, three and foure dayes passed he appeareth not. In the meane while the time hastens to depart, so hauing tarried so long that hee was then held for dead, they weighed Anchors to goe further, and to see the depth of a Bay that hath some fortie leagues length, and fourteene (yea eighteene) of breadth, which was named La Baye Francoise, or the French Bay. Lay Baye Francoise.

cause

In this Bay is the passage to come into a Port, whereinto our men entred, and made some abode, during the which they had the pleasure to hunt an Ellan, or Stagge, that crossed a great Lake of the Sea, which maketh this Port, and did swimme but easily. This Port is enuironed with Mountaines on the North side: Towards the South bee small Hills, which (with the said Mountaines) doe powre out a thousand Brookes, which make that place pleasanter then any other place in the World: there are very faire falles of waters, fit to make Milles of all sorts. At the East is a Riuer betweene the said Mountaines and Hilles, in the shippes may saile fifteene leagues and more, and in all this distance is nothing of both sides the Riuer but faire Medowes, which Riuer was named L'Equille, because that the first fish taken therein was an Equille. But the said Port, for the beautie thereof was called Port Royall. Monsieur de Pontrincourt hauing found this place to bee to his liking demanded it, with the Lands thereunto adioyning, of Monsieur de Mons: to whom the King had by Commission, before inserted, granted the distribution of the Lands of New France from the fortieth degree to the sixe and fortieth. Which place was granted to the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt, who since hath had Letters of confirmation for the same of his Maiestie, intending to retire himselfe thither with his Family, and there to establish the Christian and French Name, as much as his power shall stretch, and God grant him the meanes to accomplish it. The Port contayneth eight leagues of circuit, besides the Riuer of L'Equille. There is within it two Iles very faire and pleasant: the one at the mouth of the said Riuer, which I deeme to bee of the greatnesse of the Citie of Beauuais: The other at the side of the mouth of another Riuer, as broad as the Riuer of Oise, or Marne, entring within the said Port: The said Ile being almost of the greatnesse of the other: and they both are wooddie. In this Port, and right ouer against the former Ile, wee dwelt three yeeres after this Voyage. We will speake thereof more at large hereafter. The Riuer of L'Equille. Port Royall.

From Port Royall they sailed to the Copper Myne, whereof wee haue spoken before elsewhere. It is a high Rocke betweene two Bayes of the Sea, wherein the Copper is conioyned with the stone, very faire and very pure, such as is that which is called Rosette Copper. Many Gold-smithes haue seene of it in France, which doe say that vnder the Copper Myne there might bee a Golden Myne: which is very probable. For if those excrements that Nature expelleth forth be so pure, namely, small pieces that are found vpon the grauell at the foote of the Rocke, when it is low water, there is no doubt that the Metall which is in the bowels of the earth is much more perfect, but this is a Worke that requireth time. The first myning and working is to haue Bread, Wine and Cattle, as we haue said elsewhere. Our felicitie consisteth not in Mynes, specially of Gold and Siluer, the which serue for nothing in the tillage of the ground, nor to Handicrafts vse. Contrariwise, the abundance of them is but a charge and burthen, that keepeth man in perpetuall vnquiet, and the more he hath thereof, the lesse rest enioyeth he, and his life lesser assured vnto him. A Copper Myne. In the 28. and 29. Chap. of the second Booke of the whole Volume vntranslated. Things first to be prouided in new plantation.

Before the Voyages of Perou great riches might haue beene set vp in a small place, in stead that in this our age by the abundance of Gold and siluer the same is come at no value nor esteeme. One hath need of huge Chests and Coffers to put in that, which a small Budget might haue contained. One might haue trauelled with a Purse in ones sleeue, and now a Cloke-bagge and a Horse must expressly be had for that purpose. Wee may iustly curse the houre that greedie Auarice did carrie the Spaniard into the West, for the wofull euents that haue ensued thereof. For when I consider that by his greedinesse he hath kindled and maintayned the Warre thorow all Christendome, and his onely studie hath beene how to destroy his Neighbours (and not the Turke) I cannot thinke that any other but the Deuill hath beene the Authour of their Voyages. And let not the pretence of Religion be alleaged vnto mee: for (as wee haue said elsewhere) they haue killed all the of-spring of the Countrey with the most inhumane torments that the Deuill hath beene able to excogitate. And by their cruelties haue rendred the Name of God odious, and a name of offence to those poore people, and haue continually and daily blasphemed him in the midst of the Gentiles as the Prophet reprocheth to the people of Israel. Witnesse him that had rather bee damned, then goe to the Paradise of the Spaniards, &c. Note. This French Author was a Romish Catholike, which yet speakes thus freely of the Spaniards. Esay 52. vers. 5. Hathuey. see sup. Casas.

Among these Copper Rockes there is found sometimes small Rockes couered with Diamonds fixed to them. I will not assure them for fine, but that is very pleasing to the sight. There are also certaine shining blue stones, which are of no lesse value or worth than Turkie Stones. Diamonds. Turkie stones.

Digitized by Google

Monsieur de Champdore our guide for the Nauigations in those Countries, hauing cut within a Rocke one of those stones, at his returne from New France hee brake it in two, and gaue one part of it to Monsieur de Monts, the other to Monsieur de Poutrincourt, which they made to be put in Gold, and were found worthy to be presented the one to the King by the said Poutrincourt, the other to the Queene by the said de Monts, and were very well accepted. I remember that a Goldsmith did offer fifteene Crownes to Monsieur de Poutrincourt for that hee presented to his Maiestie.

S. Iohns Riuer. 1608. This Riuer is one of the faireſt that may be ſeene, hauing ſtore of Ilands, and ſwarming with fiſhes. This laſt yeere 1608. thy ſaid Monſieur de Champdore, with one of the ſaid Monſieur de Monts his men, hath beene ſome fiftie leagues vp the ſaid Riuer: and doe witneſſe that there is great quantitie of Vines along the ſhoare, but the Grapes are not ſo bigge as they be in the Countrie of the Armouchiquois: There are alſo Onions, and many other ſorts of good hearbs. As for the Trees they are the faireſt that may be ſeene. When wee were there wee ſaw great number of Cedar Trees. Concerning fiſhes the ſaid Champdore hath related vnto vs, that putting the Kettle ouer fire, they had taken fiſh ſufficient for their Dinner before that the water was hot. Moreouer this Riuer, ſtretching it ſelfe farre within the Lands of the Sauages doth marueilouſly ſhorten the long trauels by meanes thereof. For in fixe dayes they goe to Geſhepe, confining to the Bay or Gulfe of Chaleur, or heate, when they are at the end of it, in carrying their Canowes ſome few leagues. And by the ſame Riuer in eight dayes they go to Tadouſſac by a branch of the ſame which commeth from the North-weſt. In ſuch ſort that in Port Royall one may haue within fifteene or eighteene dayes newes from the Frenchmen, dwelling in the great Riuer of Canada, by theſe wayes; which could not be done in one moneth by Sea, nor without danger.

Vines.

Great Grapes among the Armouchiquois.

Abundance of fiſhes.

The commoditie of Voyaging by the Riuer.

The Ile of S. Croix twentie leagues from S. Iohns Riuer.

Leauing Saint Iohns Riuer, they came following the Coaſt twentie leagues from that place, to a great Riuer (which is properly Sea) where they fortified themſelues in a little Iland ſeated in the middeſt of this Riuer, which the ſaid Champleine had beene to diſcouer and view. And ſeeing it ſtrong by nature, and of eaſie defence and keeping, beſides that the ſeaſon beganne to ſlide away, and therefore it was behouefull to prouide of lodging, without running any farther, they reſolued to make their abode there.

Returne to the Bay of S. Mary, where the loſt man was found againe.

The Long Ile.

Cheries.

As they began to viſit and ſearch the Iland, Monſieur de Champdore (of whom we ſhall henceforth make mention, by reaſon he dwelt foure yeere in thoſe parts, conducting the Voyages made there) was ſent backe to the Bay of Saint Mary, with a Mine-finder, that had beene carried thither for to get ſome Mynes of ſiluer and Iron, which they did. And as they had croſſed the French Bay, they entred into the ſaid Bay of Saint Marie, by a narrow Straite or paſſage, which is betweene the Land of Port Royall, and an Iland called the Long Ile: where after ſome abode they going a fiſhing, Monſieur Aubri (the Prieſt before loſt) perceiued them, and beganne with a feeble voice to call as loud as he could; and put his Handkercher, and his Hat on a ſtaues end, which made him better to be knowne. During theſe ſixteene daies hee fed himſelfe but by (I know not what) ſmall fruits, like vnto Cheries, without kernell (yet not ſo delicate) which are ſcarſly found in thoſe Woods. They gaue him food by meaſure, and brought him backe againe to the company at the Iland of Saint Croix, whereof euery one receiued an incredible ioy and conſolation.

The deſcription of the Ile of Saint Croix.

Before we ſpeake of the ſhips returne into France, it is meete to tell you how hard the Ile of Saint Croix is to bee found out, to them that were neuer there. For there are ſo many Iles and great Bayes to goe by, before one be at it, that I wonder how euer one might pierce ſo farre for to finde it. There are three or foure Mountaines, imminent aboue the others, on the ſides: But on the North ſide, from whence the Riuer runneth downe, there is but a ſharpe pointed one, aboue two leagues diſtant. The Woods of the maine Land are faire and admirable high and well growne, as in like manner is the graſſe. There is right ouer againſt the Iland freſh water brooks, very pleaſant and agreeable, where diuers of Monſieur de Monts, his men did their buſineſſe, and builded there certaine Cabanes. As for the nature of the ground it is moſt excellent and moſt abundantly fruitfull. For the ſaid Monſieur de Monts, hauing cauſed there ſome piece of ground to bee tilled, and the ſame ſowed with Rie (for I haue ſeene there no Wheate) hee was not able to tarrie for the maturitie thereof to reape it; and notwithſtanding, the graine, fallen, hath growne and increaſed ſo wonderfully that two yeeres after we reaped and did gather of it as faire, bigge and weightie, as in France, which the ſoile had brought forth without any tillage: and yet at this preſent it doth continue ſtill to multiply euery yeere. The ſaid Iland containeth ſome halfe a league of circuit, and at the end of it on the Sea ſide, there is a Mount or ſmall Hill, which is (as it were) a little Ile ſeuered from the other, where Monſieur de Monts his Canon was placed: There is alſo a little Chappell built after the Sauage faſhion. At the foot of which Chappell there is ſuch ſtore of Muſcles as is wonderfull, which may bee gathered at low water, but they are ſmall.

The fruitfulneſſe of the ſoyle.

The Iland halfe a league in compaſſe.

Store of Muſcles.

Now let vs prepare and hoiſe vp ſailes. Monſieur de Poutrincourt made the Voyage into theſe parts with ſome men of good ſort, not to winter there, but as it were to ſeeke out his ſeate, and find out a Land that might like him. Which he hauing done, had no need to ſoiourne there any longer, longer. So then the ſhips being ready for the returne, he ſhipped himſelfe, and thoſe of his companie, in one of them. The returne of Monſieur du Pontrincourt into France.

Digitized by Google

During the foreſaid Nauigation, Monſieur du Monts his people did worke about the Fort; which he ſeated at the end of the Iland, oppoſite to the place where he had lodged his Cannon. Which was wiſely conſidered, to the end to command the Riuer vp and downe. But there was an inconuenience, the ſaid Fort did lie towards the North, and without any ſhelter, but of the trees that were on the Ile ſhoare, which all about he commanded to be kept, and not cut downe. The building at the Ile of S. Croix.

The moſt vrgent things being done, and hoary ſnowy Father being come, that is to ſay, Winter, then they were forced to keepe within doores, and to liue euery one at his owne home: during which time, our men had three ſpeciall diſcommodities in this Iland, videlicet, want of wood, (for that which was in the ſaid Ile was ſpent in buildings) lacke of freſh water, and the continuall watch made by night, fearing ſome ſurpriſe from the Sauages, that had lodged themſelues at the foot of the ſaid Iland, or ſome other enemie. For the malediction and rage of many Chriſtians is ſuch, that one muſt take heed of them much more than of Infidels. A thing which grieueth me to ſpeake: would to God I were a lyar in this reſpect, and that I had no cauſe to ſpeake it! When they had need of water or wood, they were conſtrained to croſſe ouer the Riuer, which is thrice as broad of euery ſide, as the Riuer of Seine. It was a thing painfull and tedious, in ſuch ſort, that it was needfull to keepe the Boat the whole day, before one might get thoſe neceſſaries. In the meane while the cold and ſnowes came vpon them, and the Ice ſo ſtrong, that the Sider was frozen in the veſſels, and euery one his meaſure was giuen him out by weight. As for Wine it was diſtributed but at certaine dayes of the weeke. Many idle ſluggiſh companions dranke ſnow-water, not willing to take the paines to croſſe the Riuer. Briefly, the vnknowne ſickneſſes like to thoſe deſcribed vnto vs by Iames Quartier, in his Relation, aſſailed vs. For remedies there was none to bee found. In the meane while the poore ſicke creatures did languiſh, pining away by little and little, for want of ſweet meates, as Milke or ſpoon-meate for to ſuſtaine their ſtomackes which could not receiue the hard meates, by reaſon of let, proceeding from a rotten fleſh which grew and ouer-abounded within their mouthes: and when one thought to root it out, it did growe againe in one nights ſpace more abundantly than before. As for the tree called Annedda, mentioned by the ſaid Quartier, the Sauages of theſe Lands knowe it not. So that it was moſt pitifull to behold euery one, very few excepted, in this miſerie, and the miſerable ſicke folkes to die, as it were full of life, without any poſſibilitie to be ſuccoured. There died of this ſickneſſe thirty ſixe, and thirty ſixe or forty more that were ſtricken with it, recouered themſelues by the helpe of the Spring, as ſoone as the comfortable ſeaſon appeared. But the deadly ſeaſon for that ſickneſſe is in the end of Ianuary, the moneths of February and March, wherein moſt commonly the ſicke doe die, euery one at his turne, according to the time they haue begunne to be ſicke: in ſuch ſort, that he which beganne to be ill in February and March, may eſcape, but he that ſhall ouer-haſte himſelfe, and betake him to his bed in December and Ianuary, he is in danger to die in February, March, or the beginning of Aprill.

Monſieur de Pontrincourt made a Negro to be opened, that died of that ſickneſſe in our Voyage, who was found to haue the inward parts very ſound, except the ſtomacke, that had wrinkles, as though they were vlcered.

As for the food, this ſickneſſe is cauſed by cold meates, without iuyce, groſſe and corrupted. One muſt then take heed of ſalt meates, ſmoaky, muſty, raw, and of an euill ſent, likewiſe of dried fiſhes, as New-found-Land fiſh, and ſtinking Rayes: Briefly, from all melancholy meates, which are of hard digeſting, are eaſily corrupted, and breed a groſſe and melancholy bloud. I would not (for all that) bee ſo ſcrupulous as the Phyſicians, which doe put in number of groſſe and melancholy meates, Beeues fleſh, Beares, wilde Boares and Hogs fleſh (they might as well adde vnto them Beauers fleſh, which notwithſtanding wee haue found very good) as they doe amongſt fiſhes the Tons, Dolphins, and all thoſe that carrie Lard: among the birds, the Hernes, Duckes, and all other water birds: for in being an ouer-curious obſeruator of theſe things, one might fal into the danger of ſtaruing, and to die for hunger. They place yet among the meats that are to be ſhunned Bisket, Beanes and Pulſe, the often vſing of Milke, Cheeſe: the groſſe and harſh Wine, and that which is too ſmall, white Wine, and the vſe of Vinegar: Beere which is not well ſodden, nor well ſcummed, and that hath not Hoppes enough. Alſo waters that runne thorow rotten wood, and thoſe of Lakes and Bogges, ſtill and corrupted waters, ſuch as is much in Holland and Frizeland, where is obſerued that they of Amſterdam are more ſubiect to Palſies and ſtifning of ſinews, then they of Roterdam, for the aboueſaid cauſe of ſtill and ſleepy waters: which beſides doe ingender Droplies, Dyſenteries, Fluxes, quartaine Agues, and burning Feuers, ſwellings, vlcers of the Lights, ſhortneſſe of breath, ruptures of children, ſwelling in the veines, ſores in the legges: finally, they wholly belong to the diſeaſe whereof we ſpeake, being drawne by the Spleene, where they leaue all their corruption.

Sometimes this ſickneſſe doth alſo come by a vice which is euen in waters of running Fountaines, as if they be among, or neere Bogges, or if they iſſue from a muddy ground, or from a Three diſcommodities in wintering at S. Croix.

Wickedneſſe of many Chriſtians.

The Riuer of Roan.

Vnknown ſickneſſes, viz. the Scorbute or Scuruie, the greateſt plague of Nauigations and new Plantations, Fortifications and Garriſons beſieged, where want of freſh diet and of bodily labour, or too much labour and watching, with groſſe aires in the Countries ouergrowne with wood, or with mariſhes, bogs and vnwholſome waters are chiefe breeders thereof. The Author hath made a long diſcourſe of this diſeaſe, the chiefe points whereof are here expreſſed for the benefit of our Engliſh Colonies in America in which I doubt not many hundreds haue hereby periſhed.

The number of the dead and ſicke.

Dangerous moneths.

The opening of a dead body.

What food cauſeth the land diſeaſe.

Bad waters.

Digitized by Google

Plin. li. 25. c. 3. place that hath not the Sunnes aſpect. So Plinie reciteth that in the Voyage which the Prince Caſar Germanicus made into Germanie, hauing giuen order to his Armie to paſſe the Riuer of Rhine, to the end to get ſtill forward in the Countrie, he did ſet his campe on the Sea ſhoare, vpon the coaſt of Frizeland, in a place where was but one onely Fountaine of freſh water to bee found, which notwithſtanding was ſo pernicious, that all they that dranke of it loſt their teeth in leſſe than two yeeres ſpace, and had their knees ſo weake and diſioynted, that they could not beare themſelues. Which is verily the ſickneſſe whereof wee ſpeake, which the Phyſicians doe call Stomaccacè, that is to ſay, Mouthes ſore; and Scelotyrbè, which is as much to ſay, as the ſhaking of thighs and legges. And it was not poſſible to finde any remedie, but by the meanes of an herbe called Britannica, or Scuruy-graſſe, which beſides is very good for the ſinewes, againſt the ſores and accidents in the mouth: againſt the Squinancie, and againſt the biting of Serpents. It hath long leaues, drawing in colour a darke greene, and produceth a blacke roote, from which liquor is drawne, as well as from the leafe. Strabo ſayth, that the like caſe happened to the Armie that Ælius Gallus brought into Arabia, by the commiſſion of Auguſtus the Emperour. And the like alſo chanced to King Saint Lewes his Armie in Egypt, as the Lord de Ioinuille reporteth. Other effects of bad waters are ſeene neere vnto vs, to wit, in Sauoy, where the women (more than men, becauſe they are of a colder conſtitution) haue commonly ſwellings in their throats, as bigge as Bottles.

Stomaccacè. Scelotyrbè.

Britannica, or Scuruy-graſſe, an herbe.

Strabo.

Monſieur de Ioinuille.

The Gouitres of Sauoye.

What aire is againſt health.

Next to waters, the aire is alſo one of the Fathers and Ingenderers of this ſickneſſe, in boggy and watriſh places, and oppoſite to the South, which is moſt often rainy. But there is yet in New France another bad qualitie of the aire, by reaſon of Lakes that be thicke there, and of the great rottenneſſe in the Woods, whoſe odour the bodies hauing drawne vp, during the raines of Autumne and Winter, eaſily are ingendred the corruptions of the mouth, and ſwelling in the legges before ſpoken, and a cold entreth vnſenſibly into it, which benummeth the limbes, ſtifneth the ſinewes, conſtraineth to creepe with crutches, and in the end, to keepe the bed. And for as much as the windes doe participate with the aire, yea are an aire running with a more vehement force than ordinary, and in this qualitie haue great power ouer the health and ſickneſſes of men. This noiſome qualitie of winde proceedeth (in my iudgement) from the nature of the Countrie thorow which it paſſeth, which (as wee haue ſaid) is full of Lakes, and thoſe very great, which bee (as it were) ſtanding and ſtill waters. Whereto I adde the exhalation of the rottenneſſe of woods, that this winde bringeth, and that in ſo much greater quantitie, as the North-weſt part is great, large and ſpacious.

Windes.

Seaſons.

The ſeaſons are alſo to be marked in this diſeaſe, which I haue not ſeene nor heard of, that it begins to worke, neither in the Spring time, Summer nor Autumne, vnleſſe it be at the end of it, but it Winter. And the cauſe thereof is, that as the growing heate of the Spring maketh the humours cloſed vp in the Winter to diſperſe themſelues to the extremities of the body, and ſo cleareth it from melancholy, and from the noiſome humors that haue beene gathered in Winter: ſo the Autumne, as the Winter approacheth, draweth them inward, and doth nouriſh this melancholy and blacke humour, which doth abound ſpecially in this ſeaſon, and the Winter being come ſheweth forth his effects at the coſts and griefe of the poore patients.

Bad food and diſcommodities of the Sea.

Aduice for the ſickneſſes of New France.

I would adde willingly to all the aforeſaid cauſes the bad food of the Sea, which in a long Voiage brings much corruption in mans body. This ſickneſſe proceeding from an indigeſtion of rude, groſſe, cold and melancholy meates, which offend the ſtomacke, I thinke it good (ſubmitting my ſelfe to better iudgement and aduice) to accompany them with good ſawces, be it of Butter, Oyle, or Fat, all well ſpiced, to correct as well the qualitie of the meate, as of the bodie inwardly waxen cold. Let this be ſaid for rude and groſſe meates, as Beanes, Peaſe, and fiſh: for he that ſhall eate good Capons, good Partridges, good Ducks, and good Rabets, may be aſſured of his health, or elſe his body is of a bad conſtitution. We haue had ſome ſick, that haue (as it were) raiſed vp from death to life: for hauing eaten twice or thrice of a coolice made of a Cocke, good Wine taken according to the neceſſitie of nature, is a ſoueraigne preſeruatiue for all ſickneſſes, and particularly for this. The young buds of herbs in the Spring time be alſo very ſoueraigne.

Good Wine.

Herbes in the Spring time.

And as for that which concerneth the exteriour parts of the body, we haue found great good in wearing woodden Pantaphles, or Patins with our ſhooes, for to auoide the moiſtneſſe. The houſes neede no opening nor windowes on the North-weſt ſide, being a winde very dangerous; but rather on the Eaſt ſide, or the South. It is very good to haue good bedding (and it was good for mee to haue carried things neceſſary to this purpoſe) and aboue all to keepe himſelfe neate. I would like well the vſe of Stoues, ſuch as they haue in Germanie, by meanes whereof they feele no Winter, being at home, but as much as they pleaſe. Yea, they haue of them in many places, in their Gardens, which doe ſo temper the coldneſſe of Winter, that in this rough and ſharpe ſeaſon there one may ſee Orange-trees, Lymmon-trees, Fig-trees, Pomgranat-trees, and all ſuch ſorts of trees, bring forth fruit as good as in Prouence.

Stoues.

Stoues in Gardens. Such I haue ſeene at Beddington in Surrie. at Sir Nicolas Carews.

The Sauages vſe ſweatings often, as it were euery moneth, and by this meanes they preſerue themſelues, driuing out by ſweate all the cold and euill humours they might haue gathered. But one ſingular preſeruatiue againſt this perfidious ſickneſſe, which commeth ſo ſtealingly, and which hauing once lodged it ſelfe within vs, will not bee put out, is to follow the counſell of him that is wiſe amonſt the wiſe, who hauing conſidered all the afflictions that man giue to himſelfe during his life, hath found nothing better then to reioyce himſelfe, and doe good, and to take pleaſure in his owne workes. They that haue done ſo, in our companie, haue found themſelues well by it: contrariwiſe ſome alwaies grudging, repining, neuer content, idle, haue beene found out by the ſame diſeaſe. True it is, that for to enioy mirth it is good to haue the ſweetneſſe of freſh meates, Fleſhes, Fiſhes, Milke, Butter, Oyles, Fruits, and ſuch like, which wee had not at will (I meane the common ſort: for alwaies ſome one, or other of the companie did furniſh Monſieur de Pontrincourt, his Table with Wilde-fowle, Veniſon or freſh Fiſh) And if wee had halfe a dozen Kine, I beleeue that no body had died there.

The ſweatings of the Sauages

which

A merry heart a principall preſeruatiue againſt the Scruie. Eccleſ. 30. 22, 22. Meanes of mirth.

It reſteth a preſeruatiue, neceſſary for the accompliſhment of mirth, and to the end one may take pleaſure on the worke of his hands, is euery one to haue the honeſt companie of his lawfull wife: for without that, the cheere is neuer perfect; ones minde is alwaies vpon that which one loues and deſireth; there is ſtill ſome ſorrow, the body becomes full of ill humours, and ſo the ſickneſſe doth breed. And for the laſt and ſoueraigne remedie, I ſend backe the Patient to the tree of life (for ſo one may well qualifie it) which Iames Quartier doth call Anneda, yet vnknowne in the coaſt of Port Royall, vnleſſe it bee, peraduenture the Saſafras, whereof there is quantitie in certaine places. And it is an aſſured thing, that the ſaid tree is very excellent. But Monſieur Champlain, who is now in the great Riuer of Canada, paſſing his Winter, in the ſame part, where the ſaid Quartier did winter, hath charge to finde it out, and to make prouiſion thereof.

Neceſſitie of hauing women into the Country.

Tree of life. Saſafras. Monſieur Champlain is now this preſent yeere 1609. in Canada.

THe rough ſeaſon being paſſed, Monſieur de Monts, wearied with his bad dwelling at Saint Croix, determined to ſeeke out another Port in a warmer Countrie, and more to the South: And to that end made a Pinnace to bee armed and furniſhed with victuals, to follow the coaſt, and diſcouering new Countries, to ſeeke out ſome happier Port in a more temperate aire. Hee made in this Voyage but about an hundred and twenty leagues, as wee will tell you now. From Saint Croix to ſixty leagues forward, the coaſt lieth Eaſt and Weſt: at the end of which ſixty leagues is a Riuer, called by the Sauages Kinibeki. From which place to Malebarre it lieth North and South, and there is yet from one to the other ſixty leagues, in right line, not following the Bayes. So farre ſtretcheth Monſieur de Monts his Voyage, wherein hee had for Pilot in his Veſſell, Monſieur de Champdore. In all this Coaſt ſo farre as Kinibeki, there are many places where ſhippes may bee harboured amongſt the Ilands, but the people there is not ſo frequent as is beyond that: And there is no remarkable thing (at leaſt that may bee ſeene in the out ſide of the Lands) but a Riuer, whereof many haue written fables one after another.

The diſcouerie of new Lands by Monſieur de Monts: fabulous tales and reports of the Riuer and ſained Towne of Norombega. Kinibeki ſixty leagues from S. Croix.

I will recite that which is in the laſt Booke, intituled, The vniuerſall Hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, Printed at Douay the laſt yeere 1607. in the place where hee ſpeaketh of Norombega: For in reporting this, I ſhall haue alſo ſaid that which the firſt haue written, from whom they haue had it.

Moreouer, towards the North (ſayth the Author, after hee had ſpoken of Virginia*) is* Norombega, which is knowne well enough, by reaſon of a faire Towne, and a great Riuer, though it is not found from whence it hath his name: for the Barbarians doe call it Aguncia: At the mouth of this Riuer there is an Iland very fit for fiſhing. The Region that goeth along the Sea, doth abound in fiſh, and towards New France there is great number of wilde beaſts, and is very commodious for hunting; the Inhabitants doe liue in the ſame manner as they of New France.

Fabulous tales of the Riuer Norombega.

If this beautifull Towne hath euer beene in nature, I would faine knowe who hath pulled it downe: For there is but Cabins heere and there made with pearkes, and couered with barkes of trees, or with skinnes, and both the Riuer and the place inhabited is called Pemptegoet, and not Agguncia. The Riuer (ſauing the tide) is ſcarce as the Riuer on that coaſt, becauſe there are not Lands ſufficient to produce them, by reaſon of the great Riuer of Canada, which runneth like this coaſt, and is not foureſcore leagues diſtant from that place in croſſing the Lands, which from elſe-where receiued many Riuers falling from thoſe parts which are towards Norombega: At the entrie whereof, it is ſo farre from hauing but one Iland, that rather the number thereof is almoſt infinite, for as much as this Riuer enlarging it ſelfe like the Greeke Lambda Λ, the mouth whereof is all full of Iles, whereof there is one of them lying very farre off (and the formoſt) in the Sea, which is high and markable aboue the others.

Pemptegoet.

But ſome will ſay that I equiuocate in the ſituation of Norombega, and that it is not placed where I take it. To this I anſwer, that the Author, whoſe words I haue a little before alleaged, is in this my ſufficient warrant, who in his Geographicall Mappe, hath placed in the mouth of this Riuer in the 44. degree, and his ſuppoſed Towne in the 45. wherein we differ but in one degree, which is a ſmall matter. For the Riuer that I meane is in the 45. degree, and as for any Towne, there is none. Now of neceſſity it muſt be this riuer, becauſe that the ſame being paſſed, and that of Kinibeki, (which is in the ſame higth) there is no other Riuer forward, whereof account ſhould be made, till one come to Virginia. I say further more, that seeing the Barbarians of Norombega doe liue as they of new France, and haue abundance of hunting, it must be, that their Prouince be seated in our new France; for fiftie leagues farther to the South-west there is no great game, because the woods are thinner there, and the Inhabitants setled, and in greater number then in Norombega.

Obiection. Anſwer.

made

Kinibeki. The Riuer of Norombega being passed, Monsieur de Monts went still coasting, vntill he came to Kinibeki, where a Riuer is that may shorten the way to goe to the great Riuer of Canada. There is a number of Sauages Cabined there, and the land beginneth there to be better peopled. From Kinibeki going farther, one findeth the Bay of Marchin, named by the Captaine his name that commandeth therein. This Marchin was killed the yeare that we parted from New France 1607. Farther is another Bay called Chouakoet, where (in regard of the former Countries) is a great number of people: for there they till the ground, and the region beginneth to be more temperate, and for proofe of this, there is in this land store of Vines. Yea, euen there be Ilands full of it (which be more subiect to the iniuries of the winde and cold) as we shall say hereafter. There is betweene Chouakoet and Malebarre many Bayes and Iles, and the Coast is sandy, with shallow ground, drawing neere to the said Malebarre, so that scarce one may land there with Barkes.

The Bay of Marchin. 1607. Chouakoet. The ground manured. Vines. Malebarre.

Etechemins. The people that be from Saint Iohns Riuer to Kinibeki (wherein are compriſed the Riuers of Saint Croix and Norombega) are called Etechemins. And from Kinibeki as farre as Malebarre, and farther, they are called Armouchiquois. They be traitors and theeues, and one had neede to take heede of them. One of them from a man of Saint Malos tooke a Kettell, and ran away speedily with his bootie. The Malouin running after, was killed by this wicked people: and although the same had not hapned, it was in vaine to pursue after this theefe; for all these Armouchiquois are as swift in running as Grayhounds; as we will yet further say in speaking of the voiage that Monsieur de Pontrincourt made in the same Country, in the yeare 1606.

The Armouchiquois traitours and theeues. The swiftnesse of the Armouchiquois.

The arriuall of Monsieur du Pont. 1605. The Spring season being passed in the Voyage of the Armouchiquois, Mounsieur du Pont, surnamed Graue, dwelling at Honfleur, did arriue with a company of some forty men, for to ease the said Monsieur de Monts and his troope, which was to the great ioy of all, as one may well imagine: and Canon shots were free and plentifull at the comming, according to custome, and the sound of Trumpets. The said Monsieur du Pont, not knowing yet the state of our French men, did thinke to finde there an assured dwelling, and his lodgings ready: but considering the accidents of the strange sickneſſe, whereof we haue spoken, he tooke aduice to change place. Monsieur de Monts was very desirous that the new habitation had beene about 40. degrees, that is to say 4. degrees farther then Saint Croix: but hauing viewed the Coast as farre as Malebarre, and with much paine, not finding what he desired, it was deliberated to goe and make their dwelling in Port Royall, vntill meanes were had to make an ampler discouery. So euery one began to packe vp his things: That which was built with infinite labour was pulled downe, except the Storehouse, which was too great and painefull to be transported, and in executing of this, many voyages are made. All being come to Port Royal they found out new labours: the abiding place is chosen right ouer against the Iland, that is at the comming in of the Riuer L'Esquille, in a place where all is couered ouer, and full of woods as thicke as possibly may be. The Moneth of September did already begin to come, and care was to be taken for the vnlading of Monsieur du Pont his Ship, to make roome for them that should returne backe into France. Finally, there is worke enough for all. When the Ship was in a readinesse to put to sailes, Monsieur de Monts hauing seene the beginning of the new habitation, shipped himselfe for his returne with them that would follow him. Notwithstanding many of good courage (forgetting the griefes and labours passed) did tarry behinde, amongst whom were Monsieur Champlaine and Monsieur Champdoré, the one for Geographie, and the other for the conducting and guiding of the voiages that should be necessary to be made by Sea.

Transmigration from S. Croix to Port Royal. New buildings

Trafficke with the Sauages. Beuers, Otters, and Stags. Tabaguia is a sauage tearme, signifying banket. The Winter being come, the Sauages of the Countrey did assemble themselues, from farre to Port Royall, for to trucke with the Frenchmen, for such things as they had, some bringing Beauers skins, and Otters (which are those whereof most account may be made in that place) and also Ellans or Stagges, whereof good buffe be made: Others bringing flesh newly killed, wherewith they made many good Tabagies, or feasts, liuing merrily as long as they had wherewithall. They neuer wanted any Bread, but Wine did not continue with them till the season was ended. For when we came thither the yeare following, they had beene aboue three Moneths without any Wine, and were very glad of our comming, for that made them to take againe the taste of it.

Hand Mils. The greatest paine they had, was to grinde the Corne to haue Bread, which is very painfull with hand-mils, where all the strength of the body is requisite. This labour is so great, that the Sauages (although they be very poore) cannot beare it, and had rather to be without bread, then to take so much paines, as hath beene tried, offering them halfe of the grinding they should doe, but they choosed rather to haue no corne. And I might well beleeue that the same, with other things, hath beene great meanes to breede the sickneſſe spoken of, in some of Monsieur du

Digitized by Google

du Pont his men; for there died some halfe a dozen of them that winter. True it is, that I finde a defect in the buildings of our Frenchmen, which is, they had no ditches about them, whereby the waters of the ground next to them did run vnder their lower-most roomes, which was a great hindrance to their health. I adde besides the bad waters which they vsed, that did not run from a quicke spring, but from the neerest brooke.

The number of the dead. Fault in their buildings.

The furniture of Mousieur du Pont to goe to the discouery of new lands.

The wracke of their Barke.

Causes of delay in establishing the dwelling place of the Frenchmen.

The winter being passed, and the Sea nauigable, Monsieur du Pont would needes atchieue the enterprise begun the yeare before by Monsieur de Monts, and to goe seeke out a Port more Southerly, where the ayre might be more temperate, according as he had in charge of the said Monsieur de Monts. He furnished then the Barke which remained with him to that effect. But being set out of the Port, and full ready, hoisted vp sailes for Malebarre, he was forced by contrary winde twice to put backe againe, and at the third time the said Barke strake against the rocks at the entry of the said Port. In this disgrace of Neptune, the men were saued with the better part of prouision and merchandise, but as for the Barke it was rent in peeces. And by this mishap the Voyage was broken, and that which was so desired intermitted. For the habitation of Port Royall was not iudged good. And notwithstanding it is, on the North and North-west sides, well sheltered with Mountaines, distant some one league, some halfe a league from the Port and the Riuer L'Esquelle. So we see how that enterprises take not effect according to the desires of men, and are accompanied with many perils. So that one must not wonder if the time be long in establishing of Colonies, specially in lands so remote, whose nature, and temperature of aire is not knowne, and where one must fell and cut downe Forrests, and be constrained to take heed, not from the people we call Sauages, but from them that tearme themselues Christians, and yet haue but the name of it, cursed and abhominable people, worse then Wolues, enemies to God and humane nature.

This attempt then being broken, Monsieur du Pont knew not what to doe, but to attend the succour and supply that Monsieur de Monts promised parting from Port Royall, at his return into France, to send him the yeare following. Yet for all euents he built another Barke and a Shallop for to seeke French Ships in the places where they vse to dry fish, such as Campseau Port, English Port, Misamichis Port: the Bay of Chaleur (or Heat) the Bay of Mortes or Coddes, and others in great number, according as Monsieur de Monts had done the former yeare, to the end to Ship himselfe in them, and to returne into France, in case that no Shippe should come to succour him.

The third voyage made by Monsieur de Poutrincourt.

ABout the time of the before mentioned Shipwracke, Monsieur de Monts being in France, knowing Monsieur de Pontrincourt his desire, he wrote vnto him, and sent a man of purpose to giue him notice of the Voyage that was in hand. Which the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt accepted of. He was no sooner come to Paris, but that he was forced to depart, not hauing scarse time to prouide for things necessary. And I hauing had that good hap to be acquainted with him some yeares before, he asked me if I would take part in that businesse?

Being come to Rochell, we found there Monsieur de Monts, and Monsieur de Pontrincourt, that were come in Poste, and our Ship called the Ionas, of the burthen of one hundred and fiftie tuns, ready to passe out of the chaines of the Towne, to tarry for winde and tide. The tyde I say, because that a great Ship laden, cannot come to sea from Rochell, but in spring tydes, vpon the new and full Moone, by reason that in the Towne roade there is no sufficient depth. I beleeue, that after so many trials, none would haue ventured to goe plant Colonies in those parts, that Countrey being so ill spoken of, that euery one did pittie vs, considering the accidents happened to them that had beene there before. Notwithstanding Monsieur de Monts and his associates, did beare manfully this losse.

Rochel.

The courage of Monsieur de Monts and his associates.

The Saturday, Whitson eue, the thirteenth of May, we weied our anckers, and sailed in open Sea, so that by little and little we lost the sight of the great Towers and Towne of Rochell, then of the Iles of Rez and Oleron, bidding France fare-well. It was a thing fearefull for them that were not vsed to such a dance, to see them carried vpon so moueable an element, and to be at euery monent (as it were) within two fingers breadth to death. We had not long sailed, but that many did their endeuour to yeelde vp the tribute to Neptune. In the meane while we went still forward, for there was no more going backe, the planke being once taken vp. The sixteenth of May we met with thirteene Holanders, going for Spaine, which did inquire of our voiage, and so held their course.

13. of May 1606.

Meetings of Ships.

About the eighteenth day of Iune, we found the Sea-water, during three dayes space, very warme, and by the same warmth, our Wine also was warme in the bottome of our Ship, yet the ayre was not hotter then before. And the one and twentieth of the said Moneth, quite contrary, we were two or three dayes so much compassed with Mistes and Coldes, that wee thought our selues to be in the moneth of Ianuary, and the water of the Sea was extreame cold. Which continued with vs vntill we came vpon the said Banke, by reason of the said Mists, which outwardly did procure this cold vnto vs. When I seeke out the cause of this Antiperistase, I attribute it to the Ices of the North, which come floting downe vpon the Coast and Sea adioyning to Great cold.

The reason of this Antiperistase, and the cause of the Ices of Newfound land.

New-

New-found-land, and Labrador, which we haue ſaid elſewhere, is brought thither with the Sea, by her naturall motion, which is greater there, then elſewhere, becauſe of the great ſpace it hath to run, as in a gulfe, in the depth of America, where the natuee and ſituation of the vniuerſall earth doth beare it eaſily. Now theſe Ices (which ſometimes are ſeene in bankes of ten leagues length, and as high as Mountaines and hils, and thrice as deepe in the waters) holding, as it were, an Empire in this Sea, driue out farre from them, that which is contrary to their coldneſſe, and conſequently doe binde and cloſe on this ſide, that ſmall quantity of milde temperature that the Summer may bring to that part, where they come to ſeate and place themſelues.

Warnings neere the great Banke.

Birds called by Frenchmen, Godes, Fouquets, Hapſoies

Before we come to the Banke, which is the great Banke where the fiſhing of greene Cod-fiſhes is made (ſo are they called when they are not dry, for one muſt goe aland for the drying of them) the Sea-faring-men, beſides the computation they make of their courſe, haue warnings when they come neere to it, by Birds, which are knowne: euen as one doth them of theſe our parts, returning backe into France, when one is within one hundred or one hundred and twenty leagues neere it. The moſt frequent of theſe Birds, towards the ſaid Bankes, be Godes, Fouquets, and other called Happe-foyes.

The Banke whereof we ſpeake, are Mountaines grounded in the depth of the waters, which are raiſed vp to thirty, ſix and thirty, and forty fathams, neere to the vpper face of the Sea. This Banke is holden to be of two hundred leagues in length, and is eighteene, twenty, and twenty foure leagues broad, which being paſſed, there is no more bottome found out, then in theſe parts, vntill one come to the land. The Ships being there arriued, the ſailes are rowled vp, and there fiſhing is made for the greene-fiſh. There is farther off, other Bankes, as I haue marked in the ſaid Map, vpon the which good fiſhing may be made: and many goe thither that know the places. When that we parted from Rochel, there was (as it were) a Forreſt of Ships lying at Chef de Bois (whereof that place hath taken his name) which went all in a company to that Country, preuenting vs (in their going) but onely of two daies.

The fiſhing of Cod.

Hauing ſeene and noted the Banke, we hoiſted vp ſailes and bare all night, keeping ſtill our Coaſt to the Weſt. But the dawne of day being come, which was Saint Iohn Baptiſts Eue', in Gods name we pulled downe the ſailes, paſſing that day a fiſhing of Cod-fiſh, with a thouſand mirths and contentments, by reaſon of freſh meates, whereof we had as much as we would, hauing long before wiſhed for them. Monſieur de Poutrincourt, and a yong man of Retel named Le Fleure, who by reaſon of the Sea-ſickneſſe were not come out from their beds nor Cabines, Map-foyes, why ſo called.

from the beginning of the Nauigation, came vpon the hatches that day, and had the pleaſure not onely of fiſhing of Cod, but alſo of thoſe Birds, that be called by the French Marriners Hapfoyes, that is to ſay, Liuer-catchers, becauſe of their greedineſſe to deuoure to liuers of the Cod-fiſhes that are caſt into the Sea, after their bellies be opened, whereof they are ſo couetous, that though they ſee a great Powle ouer their heads, ready to ſtrike them downe, yet they aduenture themſelues to come neere to the Ship, to catch ſome of them, at what price ſoeuer. And they which were not occupied in fiſhing, did paſſe their time in that ſport. And ſo did they, by their diligence, that we tooke ſome thirty of them.

Sea-dogs skins

In this fiſhing, we ſometimes did take Sea-dogs, whoſe skins our Ioyners did keepe carefully to ſmooth their worke withall. Item, fiſhes called by Frenchmen Merlus, which be better then Cod, and ſometimes another kinde of fiſh, called Bars: which diuerſity did augment our delight. They which were not buſie in taking neither Fiſhes nor Birds, did paſſe their time in gathering the hearts, guts, and other inward parts (moſt delicate) of the Cod-fiſh, which they did mince with lard and ſpices, and with thoſe things did make as good Bolonia Sauſiges, as any can be made in Paris, and we did eate of them with a very good ſtomacke.

Excellent ſawſiges made with the inwards of Cod.

The weather in thoſe Seas contrary then in ours.

From the eighteenth of Iune vntill we did arriue at Port Royal, we haue found the weather quite otherwiſe to that we had before. For (as we haue already ſaid) we had cold miſts or fogs, before our comming to the Banke (where we came in faire ſunſhine) but the next day, we fell to the fogs againe, which (a farre off) we might perceiue to come and wrap vs about, holding vs continually priſoners three whole dayes, for two dayes of faire weather that they permitted vs: which was alwayes accompanied with cold, by reaſon of the Summers abſence. Yea euen diuers we haue ſeene our ſelues a whole ſennight, continually in thicke fogges, twice without any ſhew of Sunne, but very little, as I will recite hereafter. And I will bring forth a reaſon for ſuch effects which ſeemeth vnto me probable. As wee ſee the fire to draw the moiſtneſſe of a wet cloth, oppoſite vnto it; likewiſe the Sunne draweth moiſtneſſe and vapours both from the Sea and from the land. But for the diſſoluing of them, there is here one vertue, and beyond thoſe parts another, according to the accidents and circumſtances that are found. In theſe our Countries it raiſeth vp vapours onely from the ground, and from our Riuers: which earthly vapours, groſſe and waighty, and participating leſſe of the moiſt ellement, doe cauſe vs a hot aire, and the earth diſcharged of thoſe vapours, becomes thereby more hot and parching. From thence it commeth, that the ſaid vapours, hauing the earth on the one part, and the Sunne on the other, which heateth them, they are eaſily diſſolued, not remaining long in the ayre, vnleſſe it be in winter, when the earth is waxen cold, and the Sunne beyond the Equinoctiall line, farre off from vs.

The cauſes of Miſts on the Weſt Seas.

From

From the same reason proceedeth the cause why Mists and Fogs be not so frequent, nor so long in the French Seas, as the New-found-land, because that the Sunne, passing from his rising, aboue the grounds, this Sea, at the comming thereof, receiueth almost but earthly vapours, and by a long space retaineth this vertue to dissolue very soone the exhalation it draweth to it selfe. But when it commeth to the middest of the Ocean, and to the said New-found-land, hauing eleuated and assumed in so long a course a great abundance of vapours, from this moist wide Ocean, it doth not so easily dissolue them, as well because those vapours be cold of themselues, and of their nature, as because the element which is neerest vnder them, doth sympathize with them, and preserueth them, and the Sunne beames being not holpen in the dissoluing of them, as they are vpon the earth. Which is euen seene in the land of that Countrie, which (although it hath but small heate, by reason of the abundance of woods) notwithstanding it helpeth to disperse the Mists and Fogges, which be ordinarily there, in the morning, during Summer, but not as at Sea, for about eight a clocke in the morning they begin to vanish away, and serue as a dew to the ground.

The eight and twentieth day of Iune, we found our selues vpon a small banke (other then the great Banke whereof we haue spoken) at forty fathams. From that time forward, we began to descry land-markes (it was New-found-land) by hearbes, mosses, flowers, and peeces of wood, that we alwaies met, abounding the more, by so much wee drew neere to it. The fourth day of Iuly, our sailers, which were appointed for the last quarter watch, descried in the morning, very early, euery one being yet in bed, the Iles of Saint Peter. And the Friday the seuenth of the said Moneth, we discouered, on the Larboord, a Coast of land, high raised vp. Euen our Dogs did thrust their noses out of the Ship, better to draw and smell the sweet ayre of the land, not being able to containe themselues from witnessing, by their gestures, the ioy they had of it. We drew within a league neere vnto it, and (the sailes being let downe) we fell a fishing of Cod, the fishing of the Banke beginning to faile, They which had before vs made voyages in those parts, did iudge vs to be at Cape Breton. The night drawing on, we stood off to the Sea-ward: the next day following, being the eight of the said moneth of Iuly, as we drew neere to the Bay of Campsean, came, about the euening, mists, which did continue eight whole dayes, during the which we kept vs at Sea, hulling still, not being able to goe forward, being resisted by West and South-west windes. During these eight dayes, which were from one Saturday to another, God (who hath alwayes guided these voyages, in the which not one man hath been lost by Sea) shewed vs his speciall fauour, in sending vnto vs, among the thicke fogges, a clearing of the Sunne, which continued but halfe an houre: And then had we sight of the firme land, and knew that we were ready to be cast away vpon the rockes, if wee had not speedily stood off to Sea-ward. Finally, vpon Saturday, the fifteenth of Iuly, about two a clocke in the afterdoone, the skie began to salute vs, as it were, with Cannon shots, shedding teares, as being sorry to haue kept vs so long in paine. So that faire weather being come againe, we saw comming straight to vs (we being foure leagues off from the land) two Shallops with open sailes, in a Sea yet wrathed. This thing gaue vs much concent. But whilst we followed on our course, there came from the land odors vncomparable for sweetnesse, brought with a warme winde, so abundantly, that all the Orient parts could not procure greater abundance. We did stretch out our hands, as it were to take them, so palpable were they, which I haue admired a thousand times since. Then the two Shallops did approach, the one manned with Sauages, who had a Stagge painted at their sailes, the other with Frenchmen of Saint Maloes, which made their fishing at the Port of Camsean, but the Sauages were more diligent, for they arriued first. Hauing neuer seene any before, I did admire, at the first sight, their faire shape, and forme of visage. One of them did excuse himselfe, for that he had not brought his faire beuer gowne, because the weather had beene foule. He had but one red peece of Frize vpon his backe, and Matachiaz about his necke, at his wrists, aboue the elbow, and at his girdle. We made them to eate and drinke. During that time they told vs all that had passed, a yeare before, at Port Royal whither we were bound. In the meane while they of Saint Maloe came, and told vs as much as the Sauages had. Adding that the wednesday, when that we did shun the rockes, they had seene vs, and would haue come to vs with the said Sauages, but that they left off, by reason we put to the Sea: and moreouer that it had beene alwayes faire weather on the land: which made vs much to maruell: but the cause thereof hath beene shewed before. These Frenchmen of Saint Maloe were men that did deale for the associates of Monsieur de Monts, and did complaine that the Baskes, or men of Saint Iohn de Luz (against the King his Inhibitions) had trucked with the Sauages, and carried away aboue six thousand Beauers skins. They gaue vs sundry sorts of their fishes, as Bars, Marlus, and great Fletans.

At the parting, some number of ours went aland at the Port of Campsean, as well to fetch vs some wood and fresh water, whereof we had neede, as for to follow the Coast from that place to Port Royall in a Shallop, for we did feare least Monsieur de Pont should be at our comming thither already gone from thence. The Sauages made offer to goe to him thorow the woods, with promise to be there within six dayes, to aduertise him of our comming, to the end to cause his stay, for as much as word was left with him to depart, vnlesse hee were succoured within the sixteenth Land makes.

The discouery of S. Peters Ilands.
Plaine discouery of the Land.
Cap. Breton.
The Bay of Campsean.
Eight dayes.
Gods fauour in danger.
Calm weather.
Mouueilous odours comming from the land.
The boording of two Shallops
The Sauages goodly men.
Matachiaz be carkanets, necklaces bracelets and wrought girdles.
During the mists at Sea, it is faire weather on land.
The departing of some of our company, going aland.
The Sauages do traueli much way in small time.

Digitized by Google

sixteenth day of that moneth, which he failed not to doe: notwithstanding our men desirous to see the Land neerer, did hinder the same which promised vs to bring vnto vs the next day the said wood and water, if wee would approch neere the Land, which wee did not, but followed on our course.

Mists. Calmes.

Tuesday the seuenteenth of Iuly, wee were according to our accustomed manner, surprized with mists and contrarie wind. But the Thursday wee had calme weather, so that whether it were mist or faire weather wee went nothing forward. After this calme wee had two dayes of fogges. The Sunday the three and twentieth of the said moneth, wee had knowledge of the Port Du Rossignoll, and the same day in the afternoone, the Sunne shining faire, we cast Anchor at the mouth of Port du Mouton, and we were in danger to fall vpon a shoald, being come to two fathomes and a halfe depth. We went aland seuenteene of vs in number, to fetch the wood and water, whereof we had need. There we found the Cabins and Lodgings, yet whole and vnbroken, that Monsieur de Monts made two yeeres before, who had soiourned there by the space of one moneth, as we haue said in his place. We saw there, being a sandy Land, store of Okes, bearing Acornes, Cypresse-trees, Firre-trees, Bay-trees, Muske-roses, Gooseberries, Purslen, Raspies, Fernes, Lysimachia, (a kind of Sammonee) Calamus odoratus, Angelica, and other Simples, in the space of two houres that wee tarried there. Wee brought backe in our ship wilde Peaze, which we found good. We had not the leisure to hunt after Rabets that be there in great number, not farre from the Port, but we returned aboord as soone as we had laden our selues with water and wood: and so hoised vp sailes.

Port au Rossignoll. Port au Mouton. What growes in the Land at Port au Mouton.

Tuesday the fiue and twentieth day we were about the Cap de Sable, in faire weather, and made a good iourney, for about the euening we came to sight of Long Ile, and the Bay of Saint Marie, but because of the night we put back to the Seaward. And the next day we cast Anchor at the mouth of Port Royall, where wee could not enter by reason it was ebbing water, but we gaue two Canon shot from our ship to salute the said Port, and to aduertize the Frenchmen that we were there.

Le Cap de Sable. Long Iland. The Bay S. Mary. The arriuing to Port Royall.

Thursday the seuen and twentieth of Iuly, we came in with the floud, which was not without much difficultie, for that we had the wind contrarie, and gusts of wind from the Mountains, which made vs almost to strike vpon the Rockes. And in these troubles our ship bare still contrarie, the Poope before, and sometimes turned round, not being able to do any other thing else. Finally, being in the Port, it was vnto vs a thing maruellous to see the faire distance and largenesse of it, and the Mountaines and Hils that inuironed it, and I wondred how so faire a place did remayne desert, being all filled with Woods, seeing that so many pine away in the World, which might make good of this Land, if onely they had a chiefe Gouernour to conduct them thither. We knew not yet, if Monsieur du Pont was gone or no, and therefore wee did expect that hee should send some men to meete vs; but it was in vaine: for hee was gone from thence twelue dayes before. And whilest we did hull in the middest of the Port Memberton, the greatest Sagamos of the Souriquois (so are the people called with whom we were) came to the French Fort, to them that were left there, being only two, crying as a mad man, saying in his Language; What! You stand here a dining (for it was about noone) and doe not see a great ship that commeth here; and we know not what men they are: Suddenly these two men ranne vpon the Bulwarke, and with diligence made readie the Canons, which they furnished with Pellets and touch Powder. Memberton, without delay, came in a Canow made of barkes of trees, with a Daughter of his, to view vs: And hauing found but friendship, and knowing vs to be Frenchmen, made no alarme. Notwithstanding one of the two Frenchmen left there, called La Taille, came to the shoare of the Port, his match on the cocke, to know what we were (though he knew it well enough, for we had the white Banner displayed at the top of the Mast) and on the sudden foure volley of Canons were shot off, which made innumerable echoes: And from our part, the Fort was saluted with three Canon shots, and many Musket shots, at which time our Trumpeter was not slacke of his dutie. Then we landed, viewed the house, and we passed that day in giuing God thankes, in seeing the Sauages Cabins, and walking thorow the Medowes. But I cannot but praise the gentle courage of these two men, one of them I haue alreadie named, the other is called Miquelet: which deserue well to be mentioned here, for hauing so freely exposed their liues in the conseruation of the welfare of New France. For Monsieur du Pont hauing but one Barke and a Shallop, to seeke out towards New-found-land, for French shippes, could not charge himselfe with so much furniture, Corne, Meate, and Merchandises as were there; which he had bin forced to cast into the Sea (and which had bin greatly to our preiudice, and we did feare it very much) if these two men had not aduentured themselues to tarrie there, for the preseruing of those things, which they did with a willing and ioyfull minde.

Difficulties in comming in. The beautie of the Port. Sagamos signifieth Captaine. Praises of the two Frenchmen left alone in Fort of Port Royall.

The Friday, next day after our arriuall, Monsieur de Pontrincourt affected to this Enterprize, as for himselfe, put part of his people to worke in the tillage and manuring of the ground, whilest the others were employed in making cleane of the Chambers, and euery one to make readie that which belonged to his Trade. In the meane time those people of ours that had left vs at Campseau, to come along the Coast, met (as it were miraculously) with Monsieur du Pont, among

The tilling of the ground. The meeting with Monsieur du Pont.

Digitized by Google

among Ilands, that bee in great number in those parts. The said Monsieur du Pont, at this happie and fortunate meeting, returned backe to see vs in the Port Royall, and to ship himselfe in the Ionas, to returne into France. As this chance was beneficiall vnto him, so was it vnto vs, by the meanes of his ships that hee left with vs. For without that, wee had beene in such extremitie that we had not beene able to goe nor come any where, our ship being once returned into France. Hee arriued there, on Monday the last of Iuly, and tarried yet in Port Royall, vntill the eight and twenty of August. All this moneth we made merry.

At the very beginning, we were desirous to see the Countrie vp the Riuer, where wee found Medowes, almost continuall aboue twelue leagues of ground, among which, brookes doe runne without number, which come from the Hills and Mountaines adioyning. The Woods very thicke on the water shoares, and so thicke, that sometimes, one cannot goe thorow them. In the passage to come forth from the same Port, for to goe to Sea, there is a Brooke, which falleth from the high Rockes downe, and in falling dispersteth it selfe into a small raine, which is very delightfull in Summer, because that at the foote of the Rocke there are Caues, wherein one is couered, whilest that this raine falleth so pleasantly: And in the Caue (wherein the raine of this Brooke falleth) is made, as it were, a Rain-bowe, when the Sunne shineth: which hath giuen me great cause of admiration. The forme of a Rain-bow vnder a Caue.

Within fifteene leagues of our dwelling, the Countrey, thorow which the Riuer L'Equilla passeth, is all plaine and euen. I haue seene in those parts many Countries, where the land is all euen, and the fairest of the world. But the perfection thereof is, that it is well watered. And for witnesse whereof, not onely in Port Royall, but also in all New France, the great Riuer of Canada is proofe thereof, which at the end of foure hundred leagues is as broad as the greatest Riuers of the world, repleniished with Iles and Rockes innumerable: taking her beginning from one of the Lakes which doe meete at the streame of her course (and so I thinke) so that it hath two courses, the one from the East towards France: the other from the West towards the South Sea: which is admirable; but not without the like example found in our Europe. For the Riuer which commeth downe to Trent, and to Verone proceedeth from a Lake which produceth another Riuer, whose course is bent opposite to the Riuer of Lins, which falleth into the Riuer Danube. So the Nile issueth from a Lake that bringeth forth other Riuers, which discharge themselues into the great Ocean. Greatnesse of Canada 400. leagues from the mouth. It springs from a Lake.

Let vs returne to our tillage: for to that must wee apply our selues: it is the first mine that must bee sought for, which is more worth than the treasures of Atabalipa: And hee that hath Corne, Wine, Cattell, Woollen and Linnen, Leather, Iron, and afterward Cod-fish, he needeth no other treasures, for the necessaries of life. Now all this is (or may be) in the Land by vs described: vpon which Monsieur de Pontrincourt hauing caused a second tillage to be made, in fifteene dayes after his arriuall thither, he sowed it with our French Corne, as well Wheat and Rie, as with Hempe, Flaxe, Turnep seed, Radice, Cabages, and other seeds: And the eight day following, he saw that his labour had not beene in vaine, but rather a faire hope, by the production that the ground had already made of the seedes which shee had receiued. Which being shewed to Monsieur du Pont, was vnto him a faire subiect to make his relation in France, as a thing altogether new there. The twentieth day of August was already come, when these faire shewes were made, and the time did admonish them that were to goe in the Voyage, to make ready. Whereunto they beganne to giue order, so that the fiue and twentieth day of the same moneth, after many peales of Ordnance, they weighed anchor to come to the mouth of the Port, which is commonly the first dayes iourney. Which is the first mine. Sowing of Corne. August 28.

Monsieur de Monts being desirous to reach as farre into the South as he could, and seeke out a place very fit to inhabite, beyond Malebarre, had requested Monsieur de Pontrincourt to passe farther than yet he had done, and to seeke a conuenient Port in good temperature of aire, making no greater account of Port Royall than of Saint Croix, in that which concerneth health. Whereunto the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt being willing to condescend, would not tarrie for the Spring time, knowing he should haue other employments to exercise himselfe withall. But seeing his sowings ended, and his field greene, resolued himselfe to make this Voyage and Discouerie before Winter. So then hee disposed all things to that end, and with his Barke anchored neere to the Ionas, to the end to get out in companie. Cause of the Voyage made into the country of the Armouchiquois.

The eight and twentieth day of the said moneth each of vs tooke his course, one one way, and the other another, diuersly to Gods keeping. As for Monsieur du Pont he purposed by the way to set vpon a Merchant of Roan, named Boyer, who (contrary to the Kings inhibitions) was in those parts to trucke with the Sauages, notwithstanding hee had beene deliuered out of prison in Rochell, by the consent of Monsieur de Pontrincourt, vnder promise hee should not goe thither; but the said Boyer was already gone. And as for Monsieur de Pontrincourt, hee tooke his course for the Ile of Saint Croix, the Frenchmens first abode, hauing Monsieur de Champdore for Master and Guide of his Barque: but beeing hindered by the winde, and because his Barque did leake, hee was forced twice to put backe againe. In the end hee quite passed the Bay Françoise, and viewed the said Ile, where hee found ripe Corne, of that which two yeeres before Parting from Port Royall. Faire Rie found at S. Croix.

Digitized by Google

before was ſowed by Monſieur de Monts, which was faire, bigge, weighty, and well filled. Hee ſent vnto vs ſome of that Corne to Port Royall, where I was requeſted to ſtay, to looke to the houſe, and to keepe the reſt of the companie there, in concord. Whereunto I did agree (though it was referred to my will) for the aſſurance that wee had among our ſelues, that the yeere following wee ſhould make our habitation in a warmer Countrie beyond Malebarre, and that wee ſhonld all goe in companie with them that ſhould bee ſent to vs out of France. In the meane while I employed my ſelfe in dreſſing the ground, to make incloſures and partitions of Gardens, for to ſowe Corne and Kitchin herbes. Wee cauſed alſo a Ditch to bee made all about the Fort, which was very needfull to receiue the waters and moiſtneſſe, that before did runne vnderneath among the rootes of trees, that had beene fallen downe: which peraduenture did make the place vnhealthfull. I will not ſtand in deſcribing heere, what each of our other workmen and labourers did particularly make. It ſufficeth, that wee had ſtore of Ioyners, Carpenters, Maſons, Stone-caruers, Lock-ſmithes, Taylors, Boord-ſawyers, Mariners, &c. who did exerciſe their Trades, which (in doing their duties) were very kindly vſed, for they were at their owne libertie for three houres labour a day. The ouerplus of the time they beſtowed it, in going to gather Muſſels, which are at lowe water in great quantitie before the Fort, or Lobſters, or Crabbes, which are in Port Royall, vnder the Rockes in great abundance, or Cockles, which are in euery part in the oze, about the ſhoares of the ſaid Port: All that kinde of fiſh is taken without Net or Boat. Some there were that ſometimes tooke wilde-fowle, but not being skilfull, they ſpoyled the game. And as for vs, our Table was furniſhed by one of Monſieur de Monts men, who prouided for vs in ſuch ſort that wee wanted no fowle, bringing vnto vs, ſometimes halfe a dozen of birds, called by Frenchmen, Outards (a kinde of wilde Geeſe) ſometimes as many Mallards, or wilde Geeſe, white and gray, very often two or three dozen of Larkes, and other kindes of birds. As for Bread, no body felt want thereof, and euery one had three quarts of pure and good Wine a day. Which hath continued with vs as long as wee haue beene there, ſauing that, when they, who came to fetch vs, inſtead of bringing commodities vnto vs, helped vs to ſpend our owne. For our allowance, wee had Peaſe, Beanes, Rice, Prunes, Raiſins, drie Codde, and ſalt Fleſh, beſides Oyle and Butter. But whenſoeuer the Sauages, dwelling neere vs, had taken any quantitie of Sturgions, Salmons, or ſmall fiſhes; Item, any Beuers, * Ellans, Carabous (or fallow Deere) they brought vnto vs halfe of it: and that which remained they expoſed it ſometimes to ſale publikely, and they that would haue any thereof did trucke Bread for it.

Their meaning is to plant beyond Malebarre to the ſouthward.
A ditch profitably made.
What ſtore of workmen and labourers in New France.
Their exerciſe and manner of life.
Muſſels, Lobſters, Crabs.
Good prouiſion of wilde fowle.
What quantity of Bread and Wine.
*A kinde of Stag, or red Deere.

Wherein is to be noted a thing that now I remember. It is, that being neceſſary to cut turfes to couer the Piles of wood, heaped to make the ſaid Coales, there was found in the Medowes three foote deepe of earth, not earth, but graſſe or herbes mingled with mudde, which haue heaped themſelues yeerely one vpon another from the beginning of the world, not hauing beene mooued. Neuertheleſſe the greene thereof ſerueth for paſture to the Ellans, which wee haue many times ſeene in our Medowes of thoſe parts, in herds of three or foure, great and ſmall, ſuffering themſelues ſometimes to bee approached, then they ranne to the Woods: But I may ſay moreouer, that I haue ſeene, in croſſing two leagues of our ſaid Medowes, the ſame to bee all troden with trackes of Ellans, for I knowe not there any other clouen footed beaſts. There was killed one of thoſe beaſts, not farre off from our Fort at a place where Monſieur de Monts hauing cauſed the graſſe to bee mowed two yeeres before, it was growne againe the faireſt of the world. Some might maruell how thoſe Medowes are made, ſeeing that all the ground in thoſe places is couered with Woods. For ſatisfaction whereof, let the curious Reader knowe, that in high Spring tides, ſpecially in March and September, the floud couereth thoſe ſhoares, which hindereth the trees there to take roote. But euery where, where the water ouerfloweth not, if there bee any ground, there are Woods.

The liberall nature of the Sauages.
What earth is in the Medowes.
Ellans in the Medowes.

Poutrincourts diſcouery.
Pemptegoet the true name of the fabulous Norombega.
Kinibeki.
The Bay of Marchin.
Confederacy.

LEt vs returne to Monſieur de Poutrincourt, whom we haue left in the Ile Saint Croix. Hauing made there a reuiew, and cheriſhed the Sauages that were there, hee went in the ſpace of foure dayes to Pemptegoet, which is that place ſo famous vnder the name of Norombega. There needeth not ſo long a time in comming thither, but hee tarried on the way to mend his Barke: for to that end he had brought with him a Smith and a Carpenter, and quantitie of boords. Hee croſſed the Iles, which bee at the mouth of the Riuer, and came to Kinibeki, where his Barke was in danger, by reaſon of the great ſtreames that the nature of the place procureth there. This was the cauſe why hee made there no ſtay, but paſſed further to the Bay of Marchin, which is the name of a Captaine of the Sauages, who at the arriuall of the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt, beganne to crie out aloud He He: whereunto the like anſwere was made vnto him. Hee replied, asking in his Language, What are yee? They anſwered him, Friends: And thereupon Monſieur de Poutrincourt approaching, treated amitie with him, and preſented him with Kniues, Hatchets, and Matachiez, that is to ſay, Scarfes, Karkenets and Bracelets made of Beades, or Quills made of white and blue Glaſſe; whereof hee was very glad, as alſo for the confederacy that the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt made with him, knowing very well that the ſame would bee a great aide and ſupport vnto him. Hee diſtributed to ſome men that were about him, among a great number of people, the Preſents that the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt gaue him, to whom hee brought ſtore of Orignac, or Ellans fleſh (for the Baskes doe call a Stagge, or Ellan, Orignac) to refreſh the companie with victuals. That done, they ſet ſayles towards Chouakoet, where the Riuer of Captaine Olmechin is, and where the yeere following was made the warre of the Souriquois and Etechemins, vnder the conduct of the Sagamos Memberton, which I haue deſcribed in Verſes, which Verſes I haue inſerted among the Muſes of New France. At the entry of the Bay of the ſaid place of Chouakoet there is a great Iland, about halfe a league compaſſe, wherein our men did firſt diſcouer any Vines (for, although there bee ſome in the Lands neerer to Port Royall, notwithſtanding there was yet no knowledge had of them) which they found in great quantitie, hauing the trunke three and foure foote high, and as bigge as ones fiſt in the lower part, the Grapes faire and great, and ſome as big as Plummes, or leſſer: but as blacke, that they left a ſtaine where their liquour was ſpilled: Thoſe Grapes, I ſay, lying ouer buſhes and brambles that growe in the ſame Iland, where the trees are not ſo thicke as in other where, but are ſixe or ſeuen rods diſtant aſſunder, which cauſeth the Grapes to be ripe the ſooner; hauing beſides a ground very fit for the ſame, grauelly and ſandy. They tarried there but two houres: but they noted, that there were no Vines on the North ſide, euen as in the Ile Saint Croix are no Cedar trees, but on the Weſt ſide.

bee

Orignac or Ellan: Champlein ſaith they are like Oxen.
The Riuer of Olmechin.
Port De Chouakoet.
An Iland of Vines.

From this Iland they went to the Riuer of Olmechin, a Port of Chouakoet, where Marchin and the ſaid Olmechin brought to Monſieur de Poutrincourt a priſoner of the Souriquois (and therefore their enemy) which they gaue vnto him freely. Two houres after, there arriued two Sauages, the one an Eteſchemin, named Chkoudun, Captaine of the Riuer Saint Iohn, called by the Sauages Oigoudi: The other a Souriquois, named Meſſamoet, Captaine or Sagamos of the Riuer of the Port De la Heue, where this priſoner was taken. They had great ſtore of Merchandiſes trucked with Frenchmen, which they were comming to vtter, that is to ſay, great, meane, and ſmall Kettles, Hatchets, Kniues, Gownes, ſhort Clokes, red Waſte-coates, Bisket, and other things: whereupon there arriued twelue or fifteene Boats, full of Sauages of Olmechins ſubiection, being in very good order, all their faces painted, according to their wonted cuſtome, when they will ſeeme faire, hauing their Bow and Arrow in hand, and the quiuer, which they layed downe aboord. At that houre Meſſamoet beganne his Oration before the Sauages: ſhewing them, how that in times paſt, they often had friendſhip together: and that they might eaſily ouercome their enemies, if they would haue intelligence and ſerue themſelues with the amitie of the Frenchmen, whom they ſaw there preſent to knowe their Countrey, to the end to bring commodities vnto them hereafter, and to ſuccour them with their forces, which forces he knew, and hee was the better able to make a demonſtration thereof vnto them, by ſo much that hee which ſpake, had before time beene in France, and dwelt there with Monſieur de Grandmont, Gouernour of Bayonne. Finally, his ſpeech continued almoſt an houre with much vehemency and affection, with a geſture of body and armes, as is requiſite in a good Oratour. And in the end he did caſt all his merchandiſes (which were worth aboue three hundred crownes, brought into that Countrie) into Olmechins his Boat, as making him a preſent of that, in aſſurance of the loue hee would witneſſe vnto him. That done the night haſted on, and euery one retired himſelfe. But Meſſamoet was not pleaſed, for that Olmechin made not the like Oration vnto him, nor requited his preſent: For the Sauages haue that noble qualitie, that they giue liberally, caſting at the feet of him whom they will honour, the Preſent that they giue him: But it is in hope to receiue ſome reciprocall kindneſſe, which is a kinde of contract, which wee call, without name, I giue thee, to the end thou ſhouldeſt giue mee. And that is done thorow all the world. Therefore Meſſamoet from that day had in minde to make warre to Olmechin. Notwithſtanding, the next day in the morning he and his people did returne with a Boate laden with that which they had, to wit, Corne, Tabacco, Beanes and Pumpions, which they diſtributed here and there. Thoſe two Captaines Olmechin and Marchin haue ſince beene killed in the warres. In whoſe ſtead was choſen by the Sauages, one named Beſſabes, which ſince our returne hath beene killed by Engliſhmen: and in ſtead of him they haue made a Captaine to come from within the Lands, named Aſticou, a graue man, valiant and redoubted, which, in the twinkling of an eye, will gather vp a thouſand Sauages together, which thing Olmechin and Marchin might alſo doe. For our Barkes being there, preſently the Sea was ſeene all couered ouer with their Boates, laden with nimble and luſty men, holding themſelues vp ſtraight in them: which wee cannot doe without danger, thoſe Boates being nothing elſe but trees hollowed. From thence Monſieur de Poutrincourt following on his courſe, found a certaine Port very delightfull, which had not beene ſeene by Monſieur de Monts: And during the Voyage they ſaw ſtore of ſmoke, and people on the ſheare, which inuited vs to come aland: And ſeeing that no account was made of it, they followed the Barke along the ſand, yea moſt often they did outgoe her, ſo ſwift are they, hauing their Bowes in hand, and their Quiuers vpon their backes, alwaies ſinging and dancing, not taking care with what they ſhould liue by the way.

The Riuer of Olmechin.
The galantneſſe of the Sauages.
Port De la Heue.
The Sauages doe paint their faces.
The Oration of Meſſamoet.
Meſſamoets affection to the Frenchmen.
The largeſſe and liberality of Meſſamoet.
The Sauages be liberall.
A Corn-countrie, Beanes, Pumpions, and Grapes.
Beſſabes.
Engliſhmen.
Aſticou.
Canoas.
A very good Port.
The agilitie of the Armuchiquois.

Monſieur de Poutrincourt hauing landed in this Port, behold among a multitude of Sa-

Digitized by Google

Fifes.

uages a good number of Fifes, which did play with certaine long Pipes, made as it were with Canes of Reedes, painted ouer, but not with such an harmonie as our Shepheards might doe: And to shew the excellency of their arte, they whisled with their noses in gambolling, according to their fashion.

A Sauage wounded.

And as this people did runne headlong, to come to the Barke, there was a Sauage which hurt himselfe grieuously in the heele against the edge of a Rocke, whereby hee was enforced to remayne in the place. Monsieur de Pontrincourt his Chirurgion, at that instant would apply to this hurt that which was of his Arte, but they would not permit it, vntill they had first made their mouthes and mops about the wounded man. They then layed him downe on the ground, one of them holding his head on his lappe, and made many bawlings and singings, whereunto the wounded man answered but with a Ho, with a complayning voice, which hauing done they yeelded him to the cure of the said Chirurgion, and went their way, and the Patient also after hee had beene dressed: but two houres after he came againe, the most iocund in the world, hauing put about his head, the binding cloth, wherewith his heele was wrapped, for to seeme the more gallant.

Their mouthes and mops about him that was hurt.

The Presents of a Sauage woman.

Hempe very faire.

Beanes.

Quantitie of Grapes.

The simplicity and ignorance of people.

The day following, our people entred farther into the Port, where being gone to see the Cabins of the Sauages, an old woman of an hundred or sixscore yeeres of age, came to cast at the feete of Monsieur de Poutrincourt, a loafe of bread, made with the Wheat called Mahis, then very faire Hempe of a long growth; Item, Beanes, and Grapes newly gathered, because they had seene Frenchmen eate of them at Chaoüakoet. Which the other Sauages seeing, that knew it not, they brought more of them than one would, emulating one another; and for recompence of this their kindnesse, there was set on their foreheads a Fillet or Band, of paper, wet with spittle, of which they were very proud. It was shewed them, in pressing the Grape into a Glasse, that of that we did make the Wine which wee did drinke. Wee would haue made them to eate of the Grape, but hauing taken it into their mouthes, they spitted it out, so ignorant is this people of the best thing that God hath giuen to Man, next to Bread. Yet notwithstanding they haue no want of wit, and might be brought to doe some good things, if they were ciuilized, and had the vse of Handy-crafts. But they are subtile, theeuish, traiterous, and though they bee naked, yet one cannot take heed of their fingers; for if one turne neuer so little his eyes aside, and that they spie the opportunitie to steale any Knife, Hatchet, or any thing else, they will not misse nor fayle of it; and will put the theft betweene their buttockes, or will hide it within the sand with their foot so cunningly, that one shall not perceiue it. Indeed I doe not wonder if a people poore and naked be theeuish; but when the heart is malicious, it is vnexcusable. This people is such, that they must bee handled with terrour: for if through loue and gentlenesse one giue them too free accesse, they will practise some surprize, as it hath beene knowne in diuers occasions heretofore, and will yet here-after be seene. And without deferring any longer, the second day after our comming thither, as they saw our people busie awashing Linnen, they came some fifty, one following another, with Bowes, Arrowes and Quiuers, intending to play some bad part, as it was coniectured vpon their manner of proceeding; but they were preuented, some of our men going to meet them, with their Muskets and Matches at the cocke, which made some of them runne away, and the others being compassed in, hauing put downe their weapons, came to a Peninsule, or small head of an Iland, where our men were, and making a friendly shew, demanded to trucke the Tabacco they had for our merchandises.

The bad nature of the Armouchiquois.

Note how the Armouchiquois must be dealt withall.

This the only way to ciuilize Sauages. Trust them and hang them, nay trust them and they will cut your throat, as in the Virginian massacre appeareth.

The next day the Captaine of the said place and Port, came into Monsieur de Pontrincourts Barke to see him: wee did maruell to see him accompanied with Olmechin, seeing the way was maruellous long to come thither by Land, and much shorter by Sea. That gaue cause of bad suspicion, albeit hee had promised his loue to the Frenchmen. Notwithstanding they were gently receiued. And Monsieur de Pontrincourt gaue to the said Olmechin a complete garment, wherewith being clothed, hee viewed himselfe in a Glasse, and did laugh to see himselfe in that order. But a little while after, feeling that the same hindred him, although it was in October, when hee was returned vnto his Cabins, he distributed it to sundry of his men, to the end that one alone should not be ouerpestered with it. Now during the time of the said Monsieur de Poutrincourt was there, being in doubt whether Monsieur de Monts would come to make an habitation on that Coast, as hee wished it, hee made there a piece of ground to be tilled, for to sowe Corne and to plant Vines.

Suspicion for the comming of Olmechin.

The trouble of garments.

Corne sowed, and Vines planted.

As they were a deliberating to passe farther, Olmechin came to the Barke to see Monsieur de Pontrincourt, where hauing tarried certaine houres, either in talking or eating, hee said, that the next day an hundred Boates should come, contayning euery one sixe men: but the comming of such a number of men, being but troublesome, Monsieur de Pontrincourt would not tarrie for them; but went away the same day to Malebarre, not without much difficultie, by reason of the great streames and shoalds that are there. So that the Barke hauing touched at three foot of water onely, we thought to be cast away, and wee beganne to vnlade her, and put victuals into the Shalop, which was behind, for to saue vs on Land: but being no full Sea, the Barke came aflote within an houre. All this Sea is a Land ouerflowed, as that of Mount Saint Michaels, a 100. Boats of Sauages.

Malebarre.

Peril of sholds

sandy

ſanday ground, in which, all that reſteth is a plaine flat Countrey as farre as the Mountaines, which are ſeene fifteene leagues off from that place. And I am of opinion, that as farre as Virginia, it is all alike. Moreouer, there is here great quantity of Grapes, as before, and a Country very full of people. Monſieur de Monts being come to Malebarre in an other ſeaſon of the yeare, gathered onely greene Grapes; which he made to be preſerued, and brought ſome to the King. But it was our good hap to come thither in October, for to ſee the maturity thereof. I haue here before ſhewed the difficulty that is found in entering into Malebarre. This is the cauſe why Monſieur de Pontrincourt came not in with his Barke, but went thither with a Shallop onely, which thirty or forty Sauages did helpe to draw in: and when it was full tide (but the tide doth not mount here but two fathams high, which is ſeldome ſeene) he went out, and retired himſelfe into his ſaid Barke, to paſſe further in the morning, as ſoone as he ſhould ordaine it.

Note. Great antiquity of Grapes.

Hereupon chap. 7.

Two fathames tide onely.

THe night beginning to giue place to the dawning of the day, the ſailes are hoiſed vp, but it was but a very perilous nauigation. For with this ſmall Veſſell they were forced to coaſt the land, where they found no depth: going backe to Sea it was yet worſe; in ſuch wiſe that they did ſtrike twice or thrice, being raiſed vp againe onely by the waues, and the rudder was broken, which was a dreadfull thing. In this extremity they were conſtrained to caſt anker in the Sea, at two fathams deepe, and three leagues off from the land. Which being done, Daniel Hay (a man which taketh pleaſure in ſhewing forth his vertue in the perils of the Sea) was ſent towards the Coaſt to view it, and ſee if there were any Port. And as he was neere land he ſaw a Sauage, which did dance, ſinging, yo, yo, yo, he called to him to come neerer, and by ſignes asked him if there were any place to retire Ships in, and where any freſh water was. The Sauage hauing made ſigne there was, hee tooke him into his Shallop, and brought him to the Barke, wherein was Chkoudun Captaine of the Riuer of Oigoudi, otherwiſe Saint Iohns Riuer: who being brought before this Sauage, he vnderſtood him no more than did our owne people: true it is, that by ſignes he comprehended better then they what he would ſay. This Sauage ſhewed the places where no depth was, and where was any, and did ſo well indenting and winding here and there, alway the led in hand, that in the end they came to the Port ſhewed by him, where ſmall depth is; wherein the Barke being arriued, diligence was vſed to make a forge for to mend her with her rudder, and an Ouen to bake Bread, becauſe there was no more Biſket left.

Danger.

Oigoudi, or S. Iohns Riuer.

Sauages of ſundry Nations vnderſtand not one another.

A forge and an ouen made.

Fifteene dayes were imployed in this worke, during the which Monſieur de Pontrincourt, according to the laudable cuſtome of Chriſtians, made a Croſſe to be framed and ſet vp vpon a greene Banke, as Monſieur de Monts had done two yeeres before at Kinibeki and Malebarre. Now among theſe painefull exerciſes they gaue not ouer making good cheere, with that which both the Sea and Land might furniſh in that part. For in this Port is plenty of Fowle, in taking of which many of our men applied themſelues: ſpecially the Sea Larkes are there in ſo great flights that Monſieur de Pontrincourt killed eight and twenty of them with one Caliuer ſhot. As for fiſhes, there be ſuch abundance of Porpeſes, and another kinde of fiſh, called by Frenchmen Souffleurs, that is to ſay, Blowers, that the Sea ſeemes to be all couered ouer with them. But they had not the things neceſſary for this kinde of fiſhing, they contented themſelues then with ſhel-fiſh, as of Oyſters, Skalops, Periwincles, whereof there was enough. The Sauages of the other ſide did Bring fiſh, and Grapes within baskets made of ruſhes, for exchange with ſome of our wares.

A croſſe ſet vp

Abundance of Larkes & fiſhes

Shel-fiſh.

Grapes.

Ruſh-baskets.

After certaine dayes, the ſaid Monſieur de Pontrincourt, ſeeing there great aſſembly of Sauages, came aſhoare, and to giue them ſome terrour, made to march before him one of his men, flouriſhing with two naked ſwords. Whereat they much wondred, but yet much more when they ſaw that our Muskets did pierce thicke peeces of wood, where their Arrowes could not ſo much as ſcratch. And therefore they neuer aſſailed our men, as long as they kept watch. And it had beene good to ſound the Trumpet at euery houres end, as Captaine Iames Quartier did. For (as Monſieur de Pontrincourt doth often ſay) One muſt neuer lay baite for theeues; meaning, that one muſt neuer giue cauſe to any enemy to thinke that he may ſurpriſe you: But one muſt alwayes ſhew that he is miſtruſted, and that you are not aſleepe, chiefely when one hath to doe with Sauages, which will neuer ſet vpon him that reſolutely expects them; for ſoone after they killed foure of our men which were cateleſſe. They named this Port, Port Fortune.

The triall of French weapons before the Sauages.

Good inſtruction.

Port Fortune.

Counſell being taken, it was reſolued to returne into Port Royall: Monſieur de Pontrincourt beſides all this, being yet in care for them whom he had left there, ſo they came againe for the third time into Port Fortune, where no Sauage was ſeene. Vpon the firſt winde, the ſaid Monſieur de Pontrincourt weighed anker for the returne, and being mindfull of the dangers paſſed he ſailed in open Sea: which ſhortned his courſe, but not without a great miſchiefe of the rudder, which was againe broken; in ſuch ſort, that being at the mercy of the waues, they arriued in the end, as well as they could amongſt the Ilands of Norembega, where they mended it. Monſieur de Pontrincourt arriued in Port Royall the foureteenth day of Nouember, where we receiued him ioyfully.

Reſolution for the returne.

Their returne. Perill.

The arriuall of Monſieur de Pontrincourt.

Digitized by Google

The pnblike reioycing being finiſhed, Monſieur de Poutrincourt had a care to ſee his corne, the greateſt part whereof he had ſowed two leagues off from our Port, by the Riuer L'Eſquelle; and the other part about our ſaid Port: and found that which was firſt ſowen very forward, but not the laſt, that had beene ſowed the ſixth and tenth dayes of Nouember, which notwithſtanding did grow vnder the Snow, during Winter, as I haue noted it in my ſowings. It would be a tedious thing to particulariſe all that was done amongſt vs during Winter: as to tell how the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt cauſed many times coales to be made, the forge-coale being ſpent: That he cauſed waies to be made thorow the woods: That he went thorow the Forreſts by the guide of the Compaſſe, and other things of ſuch nature. But I will relate that, for to keepe vs merry and clenly concerning victuals, there was an order eſtabliſhed at the Table of the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt, which was named L'ordre de bon temps, the order of good time (or the order of mirth) at firſt inuented by Monſieur Champlein, wherein they (who were of the ſame table) were euery one at his turne and day (which was in fifteene dayes once) Steward and Cater. Now his care was that we ſhould haue good and worſhipfull fare, which was ſo well obſerued, that (although the Belly-gods of theſe parts doe often reproach vnto vs that we had not La Rue aux Ours of Paris with vs) we haue ordinarily had there, as good cheere as we could haue at La Rue aux Ours, and at farre leſſer charges. For there was none, but (two dayes before his turne came) was carefull to goe ahunting or fiſhing, and brought ſome daintie thing, beſides that which was of our ordinary allowance. So well, that at breakfaſt we neuer wanted ſome modicom or other, of fiſh or fleſh: and at the repaſt of dinners or ſuppers, yet leſſe; for it was the great banquet, where the Gouernour of the feaſt, or Steward (whom the Sauages doe call Atoctegi) hauing made the Cooke to make all things ready, did march with his Napkin on his ſhoulder, and his ſtaffe of office in his hand, with the colour of the order about his necke, which was worth aboue foure crownes, and all of them of the order following him, bearing euery one a diſh. The like alſo was at the bringing in of the Fruit, but not with ſo great a traine. And at night after grace was ſaid, he reſigned the Collar of the Order, with a cup of wine, to his ſucceſſour in that charge, and they dranke one to another. I haue heretofore ſaid that we had abundance of Fowle, as Mallards, Outards, Geeſe gray and white, Partridges and other Birds: Item, of Ellans, or Stag-fleſh, of Caribous or Deere, Beuers, Otters, Beares, Rabbets, Wilde-cats or Leopards, Nibaches, and ſuch like, which the Sauages did take, wherewith we made as good diſhes of meate, as in the Cookes ſhops that be in La rue aux Ours, Beare ſtreete, and greater ſtore; for of all meates none is ſo tender as Ellans fleſh (whereof we made good paſties) nor ſo delicate as the Beauers-taile. Yea, we haue had ſometimes halfe a doſen Sturgions at one clap, which the Sauages did bring to vs, part whereof we did take, paying for it, and the reſt was permitted them to ſell publikely, and to trucke it for Bread, whereof our people had abundantly. And as for the ordinary meate brought out of France, that was diſtributed equally, as much to the leaſt as to the biggeſt. And the like with Wine, as we haue ſaid. In ſuch actions we had alwayes twenty or thirty Sauages, men, women, girles and Boies, who beheld vs doing our offices. Bread was giuen them gratis, as we doe here to the poore. But as for the Sagamos Memberton, and other Sagamos (when they came to vs) they ſat at table eating and drinking as we did: and wee tooke pleaſure in ſeeing them, as contrariwiſe their abſence was irkeſome vnto vs; as it came to paſſe three or foure times that all went away to the places where they knew that game and Veniſon was, and brought one of our men with them, who liued ſome ſix weekes as they did without Salt, without Bread and without Wine, lying on the ground vpon skins, and that in ſnowie weather. Moreouer they had greater care of him (as alſo of others that haue often gone with them) than of themſelues, ſaying, that if they ſhould chance to dye, it would be laid to their charges to haue killed them.

Such gouernment as we haue ſpoken of, did ſerue vs for preſeruatiues againſt the Country diſeaſe. And yet foure of ours died in February and March, of them who were of a fretfull conditon ſluggiſh. And I remember I obſerued that all had their lodgings on the Weſt ſide, and looking towards the wide open Port, which is almoſt foure leagues long, ſhaped ouale-wiſe, beſides they had all of them ill bedding.

We had faire weather almoſt during all the Winter: for neither raines nor fogges are ſo frequent there as here, whether it be at Sea or on the land: The reaſon is, becauſe the Sun-beames, by the long diſtance, haue not the force to raiſe vp vapours from the ground here, chiefely in a Countrey all wooddy. But in Summer it doth, both from the Sea and the Land, when as their force is augmented, and thoſe vapors are diſſolued ſuddenly or ſlowly, according as one approacheth to the Equinoctiall line. Raines being in thoſe parts rare, in that ſeaſon, the Sunne likewiſe ſhineth there very faire, after the fall of Snowes, which we haue had ſeuen or eight times, but it is eaſily melted in open places, and the longeſt abiding haue beene in February. Howſoeuer it be, the Snow is very profitable for the fruits of the earth, to preſerue them againſt the froſt, and to ſerue them as a fur-gowne.

And as the skie is ſeldome couered with clouds towards New-found-lands in Winter time, ſo are there morning froſts, which doe increaſe in the end of Ianuary, February, and in the beginning

The ſtate of Corne.

How they ſpēt their winter.

Coales.

The vſe of the Compaſſe in land voiages.

The inſtitution of the Order of Bon temps

La Rue aux Ours or Beare ſtreet is as Pie-corner, or ſuch a Cooke place in London.

Store of Sturgions. Before in chap. 13.

The vſage of the Sauages.

The Sauages haue care of the Frenchmen.

Preſeruatiue againſt Scurvy

Bad winde.

The ſtate of Winter weather.

Why Raines and Miſts be ſcarſe in winter

Snow is profitable.

Froſts when they are.

Digitized by Google

ning of March, for vntill the very time of Ianuary, we kept vs still in our doublets: And I remember that on a Sunday, the foureteenth day of that moneth, in the afternoone, wee sported our selues singing in Musicke vpon the Riuer L'Esquelle, and in the same moneth wee went to see Come two leagues off from our Fort, and did dine merrily in the Sun-shine: I would not for all that say that all other yeares were like vnto this. For as that winter was as milde in these parts, these last Winters of the yeares 1607. 1608. haue beene the hardest that euer was seene; it hath also beene alike in those Countries, in such sort, that many Sauages died through the rigour of the weather, as in these our parts many poore people and trauellers haue beene killed through the same hardnesse of Winter weather. But I will say, that the yeare before we were in New France, the Winter had not beene so hard, as they which dwelt there before vs haue testified vnto me. Let this suffice for that which concerneth the winter season. But I am not yet fully satisfied in searching the cause, why in one and the selfesame parallell the season is in those parts of New France more slow by a moneth than in these parts, and the leaues appeare not vpon the trees but towards the end of the moneth of May: vnlesse wee say that the thicknesse of the wood and greatnesse of Forrests doe hinder the Sunne from warming of the ground: Item, that the Country where we were is ioyning to the Sea, and thereby more subiect to cold. And besides that, this land hauing neuer beene tilled is the more dampish, the trees and plants not being able easily to draw sap from their mother the earth. In recompence wherof the Winter there is also more slow, as we haue heretofore spoken.

The state of Ianuary.

Conformity of weather in East and West France.

The great Frost 1607.

Wherefore it is the season late

The cold being passed, about the end of March the best disposed amongst vs striued who should best till the ground, and make Gardens, to sowe in them, and gather fruits thereof. Which was to very good purpose, for wee found great discommodity in the Winter for want of Garden hearbes. When euery one had done his sowing, it was a marueilous pleasure in seeing them daily grow and spring vp, and yet greater contentment to vse thereof so abundantly as wee did: so that this beginning of good hope made vs almost to forget our natiue Countrie, and especially when the fish began to haunt fresh-water, and came abundantly into our brookes, in such innumerable quantity that we knew not what to doe with it.

Dressing of Gardens.

Good crop from the ground.

Abundance of fishes.

Whilest some laboured on the ground, Monsieur de Pontrincourt made some buildings to be prepared, for to lodge them which he hoped should succeede vs. And considering how troublesome the Hand-mill was, he caused a Water-mill to be made, which caused the Sauages to admire much at it. For indeede it is an inuention which came not into the spirit of men from the first ages. After that, our workmen had much rest, for the most part of them did almost nothing. But I may say that this Mill, by the diligence of our Millers, did furnish vs with three times more Herrings then was needefull vnto vs for our sustenance. Monsieur de Pontrincourt made two Hogsheads full of them to be salted, and one hogshead of Sardines, or Pilchers to bring into France for a shew, which were left in our returne at Saint Maloes, to some Merchants.

The care of Monsieur de Pontrincourt in prouiding for the that should comeafter him

The building of a water-mil.

Abundance of Herrings.

Pilchers.

Among all these things the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt did not neglect to thinke on his returne. Which was the part of a wise man, for one must neuer put so much trust in mens promises, but one must consider that very often many disasters doe happen to them in a small moment of time. And therefore, euen in the Moneth of Aprill, he made two Barkes to be prepared, a great one and a small one, to come to seeke out French-ships towards Campseau, or Newfound-land, if it should happen that no supply should come vnto vs. But the Carpentry-worke being finished, one onely inconuenience might hinder vs, that is, we had no Pitch to calke our Vessels. This (which was the chiefest thing) was forgotten at our departure from Rochel. In this important necessitie, the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt aduised himselfe to gather in the woods quantity of the gumme issuing from Firre-trees. Which he did with much labour, going thither himselfe, most often with a Boy or two: so that in the end hee got some hundred pounds weight of it. Now after these labours, it was not yet all, for it was needefull to melt and purifie the same, which was a necessary point and vnknowne to our ship-Master Monsieur de Champ-dore, and to his Marriners, for as much as that the Pitch we haue, commeth from Norwege, Suedland, and Dantzick. Neuertheless the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt found the meanes to draw out the quintessence of these Gummes and Firre-tree barkes: and caused quantity of Brickes to be made, with the which he made an open furnace, wherein he put a limbecke made with many kettles, ioyned one in the other, which hee filled with those gummes and barkes: Then being well couered, fire was put round about it, by whose violence the gumme enclosed within the lembecke melted, and dropped downe into a bason; but it was needefull to be very watchfull at it, by reason that if the fire had taken hold of the Gumme, all had beene lost. That was admirable, especially in a man that neuer saw any made. Whereof the Sauages being astonied, did say in words borrowed from the Basques, Endia chaue Normandia, that is to say, that the Normans know many things. Now they call all Frenchmen Normands, except the Basques, because the most part of fishermen that goe a fishing there, be of that Nation. This remedie came very fitly vnto vs, for those which came to seeke vs were fallen into the same want that we were.

Preparation for the return.

Great ouersight.

Monsieur de Pontrincourt his inuention.

Bricke made in New France.

Why the Sauages call all French men Normands.

The

Newes out of France, and their returne.

THe Sunne did but beginne to cheere the earth, and to behold his Mistris with an amorous aspect, when the Sagamos Memberton (after our Prayers solemnely made to God, and the break-fast distributed to the people, according to the custome) came to giue vs aduertisement that he had seene a sayle vpon the Lake, which came towards our Fort. At this ioyfull newes euery one went out to see, but yet none was found that had so good a sight as he, though he be aboue a 100. yeeres old; neuertheless we spied very soone what it was. It was onely a small Barke vnder the charge of a young man of Saint Maloes, named Chomalier, who beeing arriued at the Fort, deliuered his Letters to Monsieur de Poutrincourt, which were read publikely. They did write vnto him, that for to helpe to saue the charges of the Voyage, the ship (being yet the Ionas) should stay at Campseau Port, there to fish for Cods, by reason that the Merchants associate with Monsieur de Monts, knew not that there was any fishing farther then that place: Notwithstanding if it were necessary he should cause the ship to come to Port Royall. Moreouer, that the societie was broken, because that contrary to the King his Edict, the Hollanders, conducted by a traiterous Frenchman, called La Ieunesse, had the yeere before taken vp the Beuers and other Furres, of the great Riuer of Canada. Notwithstanding, after that Monsieur de Poutrincourt, had a long while mused hereupon, he said, that although he should haue no bodie to come with him, but onely his family, hee would not forsake the enterprize. It was great griefe vnto vs to abandon (without hope of returne) a Land that had produced vnto vs so faire Corne, and so many faire adorned Gardens. All that could be done vntill that time, was to find out a place, fit to make a setled dwelling, and a Land of good fertilitie. And that being done, it was great want of courage to giue ouer the enterprise, for another yeare being passed, the necessitie of maintayning an habitation there, should be taken away, for the Land was sufficient to yeeld things necessarie for life. This was the cause of that griefe which pierced the hearts of them which were desirous to see the Christian Religion established in that Countrey. But on the contrary, Monsieur de Monts, and his associates, reaping no benefit, but losse, and hauing no helpe from the King, it was a thing which they could not doe, but with much difficultie to maintayne an habitation in those parts.

The contents of the Letters written to Monsieur de Poutrincourt: The societie of Monsieur de Monts broken, and why. Monsieur de Poutrincourt his resolution. The English Nation going to Virginia with a zealous intent to plant true religion & so to increase Christs blessed flock, no doubt he will bee their leader.

Monsieur de Monts is enuied.

Now this enuie for the Trade of Beauers with the Sauages, found not onely place in the Hollanders hearts, but also in French Merchants, in such sort that the priuiledge which had beene giuen to the said Monsieur de Monts for ten yeeres was reuoked. The vnsatiable auarice of men is a strange thing, which haue no regard to that which is honest, so that they may rifle and catch by what meanes soeuer. And thereupon I will say moreouer, that there haue beene some of them that came to that Countrey to fetch vs home, that wickedly haue presumed so much as to strip the dead, and steale away the Beauers, which those poore people doe put, for their last benefit, vpon them whom they bury, as we will declare more at large in the Booke following. A thing that maketh the French name to be odious, and worthy disdaine among them, which haue no such sordid qualitie at all.

Robbing from the dead.

The Sauages go to the wars.

Fifteene dayes after, the said Monsieur de Poutrincourt sent a Barke to Campseau, with part of our Workmen, for to beginne to pull downe the house. In the beginning of Iune the Sauages, about foure hundred in number, went away from the dwelling that the Sagamos Memberton had newly made, in forme of a Towne, compassed about with high pales, for to go to warres against the Armouchiquois, which was at Chouacoet some eightie leagues distant from Port Royall; from whence they returned victorious.

Voyages vpon the Coast of the French Bay.

Monsieur de Poutrincourt being not willing to depart thence, vntill hee had seene the issue of his expectation, that is to say, the ripenesse of his Corne, hee deliberated, after that the Sauages were gone to warres, to make Voyages along the Coast. And because Chamalier was desirous to gather some Beuers, he sent him in a small Barke to the Riuer of Saint Iohn, called by the Sauages, Ouigoudi, and to the Ile Saint Croix: And he, the said Monsieur de Poutrincourt, went in a shallop to the Copper Myne. I was of the said Chamalier his Voyage: we crossed the French Bay to goe to the said Riuer, where, as soone as wee arriued, halfe a doozen Salmons newly taken, were brought to vs: we soiourned there foure dayes, during which, we went into the Cabins of Sagamos Chkoudun, where we saw some eightie, or a hundred Sauages, all naked except their priuie members, which were a making Tabagy (that is to say, a banquetting) with the meale that the said Chamalier had trucked with them for their old skinnes full of Lice.

Salmons.

Assembly of Sauages a feasting. Filthy trading.

The Towne of Ouigoudi (so I call the dwelling of the said Chkoudun) was a great inclosure vpon an Hill, compassed about with high and small Trees, tied one against another, and within it many Cabins, great and small, one of which was as great as a Market Hall, wherein many households retired themselues: And as for the same where they made their Tabagie, it was somwhat lesse. A good part of the said Sauages were of Gachepe, which is the beginning of the great Riuer of Canada; and they told vs, that they came from their dwelling thither in sixe dayes, which made me much to maruell, seeing the distance that there is by Sea, but they shorten very much their wayes, and make great Voyages by the meanes of Lakes and Riuers, at the end of which being come, in carrying their Canowes three or foure leagues, they get to other Riuers that haue a contrary course. All these Sauages were come thither to goe to the warres with Memberton against the Armouchiquois.

When

When we returned to our Barke, which was at the comming in of the Port, halfe a league off from thence, sheltered by a caule that the Sea hath made there, our men, and specially Captaine Champdore, that conducted vs, were in doubt, lest some mischance should happen vnto vs, and hauing seene the Sauages in armes, thought it had beene to doe vs some mischiefe, which had beene very easie, for we were but two, and therefore they were very glad of our returne. After which, the next day came the Wizard or South-sayer of that quarter, crying as a mad man towards our Barke. Not knowing what he meant, hee was sent for in a Cock-boat, and came to parley with vs, telling vs that the Armouchiquois were within the Woods, which came to assaile them, and that they had killed some of their folkes that were a hunting: And therefore that we should come aland to assist them. Hauing heard this discourse, which according to our iudgement, tended to no good, we told him that our iournies were limited, and our victuals also, and that it was behouefull for vs to be gone. Seeing himselfe denied, he said that before two yeeres were come about, they would either kill all the Normans, or that the Normans should kill them. We mocked him and told him that we would bring our Barke before their Fort to ransack them all; but we did it not, for we went away that day: And hauing the wind contrarie, we sheltred our selues vnder a small Iland, where we were two dayes: during which, some went a shooting at Mallard for prouision; others attended on the Cookerie: And Captaine Champdore and my selfe, went along the Rockes with Hammers and Chissels, seeking if there were any Mynes. In doing whereof we found quantitie of Steele among the Rockes, which was since molten by Monsieur de Pontrincourt, who made wedges of it, and it was found very fine Steele, whereof he caused a Knife to be made, that did cut as a Razor, which at our returne he shewed to the King.

The subtiltie of an Automin or Sauage Southsayer.

A Myne of Steele.

From thence we went in three dayes to the Ile Saint Croix, being often contraried with the winds. And because we had a bad coniecture of the Sauages, which we did see in great number, at the Riuer of Saint Iohn, and that the troupe that was departed from Port Royall was yet at Menane, (an Ile betweene the said Port Royall and Saint Croix) which we would not trust, we kept good watch in the night time: At which time wee did often heare Seales voyces, which were very like to the voices of Owles: A thing contrarie to the opinion of them that haue said and written that fishes haue no voice.

Menane. Good watch. Seales voices.

Being arriued at the Ile Saint Croix, we found there the buildings, left there all whole, sauing that the Store-house was vncouered of one side. Wee found there yet Sacke in the bottome of a Pipe, whereof we dranke, and it was not much the worse. As for Gardens, wee found there Coale-worts, Sorrell, Lettuces, which we vsed for the Kitchin. Wee made there also good Pasties of Turtle-Doues, which are very plentifull in the Woods, but the grasse is there so high that one could not find them when they were killed and fallen in the ground. The Court was there, full of whole Caskes, which some ill disposed Mariners did burne for their pleasures, which thing when I saw, I did abhorre, and I did iudge, better then before, that the Sauages were (being lesse ciuilized) more humane and honester men, then many that beare the Name of Christians, hauing during three yeeres, spared that place, wherein they had not taken so much as a piece of Wood, nor Salt, which was there in great quantitie, as hard as a Rocke.

The arriuall in the Ile of Saint Croix. The state of the same. Turtles.

The Sauages of better nature then many Christians.

Going from thence, we cast Anchor among a great number of confused Iles, where wee heard some Sauages, and wee did call to make them come to vs. They answered vs with the like call. Whereunto one of ours replied, Ouen Kiran? that is to say, What are yee? they would not discouer themselues. But the next day Oagimont, the Sagamos of this Riuer, came to vs, and wee knew it was he whom we heard. Hee did prepare to follow Memberton and his troupe to the warres, where he was grieuously wounded, as I haue said in my Verses vpon this matter. This Oagimont hath a Daughter about eleuen yeeres old, who is very comely, which Monsieur de Pontrincourt desired to haue, and hath oftentimes demanded her of him to giue her to the Queene, promising him that he should neuer want Corne, nor any thing else; but he would neuer condiscend thereto.

A number of Iles.

The loue of the Sauages towards their children.

Being entred into our Barke he accompanied vs, vntill wee came to the broad Sea, where hee put himselfe in his shallop to returne backe; and for vs we bent our course for Port Royall, where we arriued before day, but we were before our Fort, iust at the very point that faire Aurora began to shew her reddie cheekes vpon the top of our wooddie Hils; euery bodie was yet asleepe, and there was but one that rose vp, by the continuall barking of Dogges; but wee made the rest soone to awake, by Peales of Musket-shots and Trumpets sound. Monsieur de Pontrincourt was but the day before, arriued from his Voyage to the Mynes, whither we haue said that hee was to goe, and the day before that, was the Barke arriued that had carried part of our Workmen to Campseau. So that all being assembled, there rested nothing more then to prepare things necessary for our shipping. And in this businesse our Water-Mill did vs very good seruice, for otherwise there had beene no meanes to prepare Meale enough for the Voyage, but in the end wee had more then wee had need of, which was giuen to the Sauages, to the end to haue vs in remembrance.

Arriuall into Port Royall.

Vse of a Water-mill.

Vpon the point that we should take our leaue of Port Royall, Monsieur de Pontrincourt sent his men, one after another, to find out the ship at Campseau, which is a Port being betweene seuen

The description of the Port de Campseau.

or

or eight Ilands where ſhips may be ſheltered from windes: and there is a Bay of aboue fifteene leagues depth, and ſixe or ſeuen leagues broad. The ſaid place being diſtant from Port Royall aboue one hundred and fiftie leagues. For victuals, wee wanted for no fiſh, for in halfe an houres fiſhing we might take Cod enough for to feed vs a fortnight, and of the faireſt and fatteſt that euer I ſaw, being of the colour of Carpes; which I haue neuer knowne nor noted, but in this part of the ſaid Cap de Sable; which after we had paſſed, the tide (which is ſwift in this place) brought vs in ſhort time as farre as to the Port De La Heue, thinking that wee were no further then the Port de Monſon. There we tarried two dayes, and in the very ſame Port wee ſaw the Cods bite at the Hooke. We found there ſtore of red Gooſeberies, and a Marcaſſite of Copper Myne: we alſo made there ſome trucking with the Sauages for skinnes.

Abundance of faire Cod.

Port de la Heue

From thence forward we had wind at will, and during that time it happened once, that being vpon the hatches, I cried out to our Pilot Monſieur de Champdore, that we were readie to ſtrike, thinking I had ſeene the bottome of the Sea; but I was deceiued by the Rain-bow which did appeare with all his colours in the water, procured by the ſhadow, that our Boare-ſpright ſayle did make ouer the ſame, being oppoſite to the Sunne, which aſſembling his beames, within the hollowneſſe of the ſame ſayle, as it doth within the Cloudes, thoſe beames were forced to make a reuerberation in the water, and to ſhew forth this wonder. In the end wee arriued within foure leagues of Campſeau, at a Port, where a good old man of Saint Iohn de Luz, called Captaine Saualet, receiued vs with all the kindneſſe in the World. And for as much as this Port (which is little, but very faire) hath no name, I haue qualified it in my Geographicall Mappe, with the name of Saualet. This good honeſt man told vs that the ſame Voyage was the two and fortieth Voyage that he had made into thoſe parts, and neuer heleſſe the New-found-land-men doe make but one in a yeere. He was maruellouſly pleaſed with his fiſhing; and told vs moreouer that hee tooke euery day fiftie Crownes worth of fiſh, and that his Voyage would bee worth one thouſand pounds. He payed wages to ſixteene men, and his veſſell was of eightie tuns, which could carrie 100000. dry fiſhes.

The Rain-bow appearing in the water.

Port Saualet.

42. Voyages made in New-found-land.

Good fiſhing.

Wee were foure dayes there, by reaſon of the contrary wind. Then came we to Campſeau, where we tarried for the other Barke, which came two dayes after vs. And as for Monſieur de Poutrincourt, as ſoone as he ſaw that the Corne might be reaped, he pulled vp ſome Rie, root and all, for to ſhew here the beautie, goodneſſe and vnmeaſurable height of the ſame. Hee alſo made gleanes of the other ſorts of Seeds, as Wheat, Barley, Oates, Hempe, and others for the ſame purpoſe. Delighting my ſelfe in this exerciſe, God hath bleſſed my poore labour, and I haue had in my Garden as faire Wheate as any can be in France, whereof the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt gaue vnto mee a gleane, when hee came to the ſaid Port de Campſeau. Hee was readie to depart from Port Royall, when Memberton and his company arriued, victorious ouer the Armouchiquois. At the inſtant requeſt of the ſaid Memberton he tarried yet one day. But it was pitious to ſee at his departing, thoſe poore people weepe, who had beene alwayes kept in hope that ſome of ours ſhould alwayes tarrie with them. In the end promiſe was made vnto them, that the yeere following, houſholds and families ſhould bee ſent thither, wholly to inhabit their Land, and teach them Trades for to make them liue as wee doe, which promiſe did ſomewhat comfort them. There was left remayning ten Hogs-heads of Meale, which were giuen to them, with the Corne that we had ſowed, and the poſſeſſion of the Manour if they would vſe it, which they haue not done. For they cannot be conſtant in one place, and liue as they doe.

Exceeding faire Corne.

Faire Wheate.

The Sauages returne from the warres.

The Sauages teares at the going away of the Frenchmen.

Meale left behinde.

The eleuenth of Auguſt the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt departed, with eight in his companie, from the ſaid Port Royall, in a ſhallop to come to Campſeau: A thing maruellouſly dangerous to croſſe ſo many Bayes and Seas in ſo ſmall a veſſell, laden with nine perſons, with victuals neceſſarie for the Voyage, and reaſonable great quantitie of other ſtuffe. Being arriued at the Port of Captaine Saualet, he receiued them all as kindly as it was poſſible for him: And from thence they came to vs, to the ſaid Port of Campſeau, where we tarried yet eight dayes. The third day of September, we weighed Anchors, and with much adoe came wee from among the Rockes, that be about the ſaid Campſeau. Which our Mariners did with two ſhallops that did carrie their Anchors very farre into the Sea, for to vphold our ſhip, to the end ſhe ſhould not ſtrike againſt the Rockes. Finally, being at Sea, one of the ſaid ſhallops was let goe, and the other was taken into the Ionas, which beſides our lading, did carrie 100000. of fiſh, as well drie as greene. Wee had reaſonable good wind vntill we came neere to the Lands of Europe: But we were not ouercloyed with good cheere, becauſe that they who came to fetch vs, preſuming we were dead did cramme themſelues with our refreſhing commodities. Our Workemen dranke no more Wine, after we had left Port Royall: And we had but ſmall portion thereof, becauſe that which did ouerabound with vs; was drunke merrily in the company of them that brought vs newes from France. The ſixe and twentieth of September wee had ſight of the Sorlingues, which bee at the Lands end of Cornewall in England, and the eight and twentieth thinking to come to Saint Maloes.

Monſieur de Poutrincourt his going away.

The departing from New France.

The ſight of the Sorlingues.

Harueſt of New France, ſhewed to the King.

Being at Paris, the ſaid Monſieur de Poutrincourt preſented to the King with the fruits of the Land from whence he came, and eſpecially the Corne, Wheate, Rie, Barley and Oates, as being the

Digitized by Google

the most precious thing that may be brought from what Countrey soeuer. The said Monsieur de Pontrincourt had bred tenne Outards, taken from the shell, which hee thought to bring all into France, but fiue of them were lost, and the other fiue he gaue to the King, who delighted much in them; and they are at Fontaine Belleau. Vpon the faire shew of the fruites of the said Countrey, the King did confirme to Monsieur de Monts the priuiledge for the Trade of Beuers with the Sauages, to the end to giue him meanes to establish his Colonies in New France. And by this occasion he sent thither in March last, Families, there to beginne Christian and French Commonwealths, which God vouchsafe to blesse and increase.

Outards, or wild Geese presented to the King.

Priuiledge of Beuers confirmed to Monsieur de Monts.

The said ships being returned, we haue had report by Monsieur de Champdore, and others, of the state of the Countrie which we had left, and of the wonderfull beautie of the Corne that the said Monsieur de Pontrincourt had sowed before his departure, together of the graines that bee fallen in the Gardens, which haue so increased that it is an incredible thing. Membertou did gather six or seuen barrels of the Corne that we had sowed: and had yet one left, which he reserued for the Frenchmen, whom he looked for, who arriuing hee saluted with three Musket shots and Bonfires. When it was laid to his charge that he had eaten our Pidgeons, which wee left there, he fell a weeping, and embracing him that told it him, said, that it was the Machoua, that is to say, the great Birds which are Eagles, which did eate many of them, while wee were there. Moreouer, all great and small, did inquire how we did, naming euery one by his owne name, which is a witnesse of great loue.

Three ships sent 1608.

Newes from New France since our comming from thence.

It is very dangerous to teach the Sauages the vse of Guns.

Eagles.

From Port Royall, the said Champdore went as farre as Chouakouet, the beginning of the Armouchiquois Land, where hee pacified that Nation with the Etechemins, which was not done without solemnitie. For as hee had begun to speake of it, the Captaine, who is now instead of Olmechin, named Astikou, a graue man and of a goodly presence, how sauage soeuer hee be, demanded that some one of the said Etechemins should be sent to him, and that he would treat with him. Oagimont, Sagamos of the Riuer Saint Croix, was appointed for that purpose, and he would not trust them, but vnder the assurance of the Frenchmen, he went thither. Some Presents were made to Astikou, who, vpon the speech of peace, began to exhort his people and to shew them the causes that ought to induce them to hearken vnto it. Whereunto they condiscended, making an exclamation at euery Article that he propounded to them. Some fiue yeeres agoe Monsieur de Monts had likewise pacified those Nations, and had declared vnto them, that he would bee enemie to the first of them that should begin the Warre, and would pursue him. But after his returne into France, they could not containe themselues in peace. And the Armouchiquois did kill a Souriquois Sauage, called Panoniac, who went to them for to trucke Merchandize, which he tooke at the Store-house of the said Monsieur de Monts. The Warre aboue mentioned happened by reason of this said murther, vnder the conduct of Sagamos Membertou: the said Warre was made in the very same place, where I now make mention, that Monsieur de Champdore did treate the peace this yeere. Monsieur Champlein is in another place, to wit, in the great Riuer of Canada, neere the place where Captaine Iames Quartier did winter, where hee hath fortified himselfe, hauing brought thither housholds, with Cattle and diuers sorts of fruit-trees. There is store of Vines, and excellent Hempe, in the same place where he is, which the earth bringeth forth of it selfe. He is not a man to be idle, and we expect shortly newes of the whole Discouerie of this great and vncomparable Riuer, and of the Countries which it washeth on both sides, by the diligence of the said Champlein.

The Sauages wisdome.

Monsieur Champlein is now in the Riuer of Canada.

Cattell.

Fruit trees.

Vines.

Hempe.

As for Monsieur de Pontrincourt, his desire is immutable, in this resolution to inhabit and adorne his Prouince, to bring thither his family, and all sorts of Trades necessary for the life of man. Which, with Gods helpe hee will continue to effect all this present yeere 1609. And, as long as hee hath vigour and strength, will prosecute the same, to liue there vnder the Kings obeysance.

Monsieur de Pontrincourt his resolution, 1609.

The Author hath written another large Booke of the Rites of the Sauages of those parts, which I haue omitted, partly because Champlein in the former Chapter hath giuen vs large instructions of the same, and because in our Virginian, and New England, and New-found-land, our men will relate the like; and because I seeke to bee short, howsoeuer my Subiect causeth mee to bee voluminous.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. VIII.

Collections out of a French Booke, called Additions to Noua Francia; containing the Accidents there, from the yeere 1607. to 1611.

Monsi. de Mont his sending of Ships.

MOnsieur de Monts hauing his priuiledge prorogued for one yeare, with some associates, sent vnto his Gouernment three Ships, furnished with men and victuals. And forasmuch as Monsieur de Pontrincourt hath taken his part on the maine Sea, and for the desire that Monsieur de Monts hath to pierce through the Land to the Westerne Sea coast, to the end he should not be an hinderance vnto him, and to be able thereby to reach one day, to China, he determined to fortifie himselfe in a place of the Riuer of Canada, which the Sauages call Kebec, some fortie leagues aboue the Riuer of Saguenay. There it is narrower, being no broader then a Canon will carry: and so, by that reason, the place is commodious to command, through all that great Riuer. Monsieur Champlein, the Kings Geographer, very skilfull in Sea matters, and who delighteth marueilously in these enterprises, tooke vpon him the charge of conducting, and gouerning this first Colonie, sent to Kebec. Where being arriued, it was needefull to make houses for him, and his company; wherein there was no toyle wanting, such as we may imagine, as was the labour of Captaide Iacques Quartier, at his arriuall in the place of the said Riuer, where he wintered: and so Monsieur de Monts, in the Ile of Saint Croix; whereby did issue vnknowne sicknesses, which tooke away many men: for there was not found any Timber ready to be put in worke, nor any buildings to lodge the workemen in: they were driuen to fell downe the wood by the roote, to cleare the ground, and to lay the first foundations of a worke, which (with the helpe of God) shall be the subiect of many wonders.

Note the intention of the French.

Kebec 40. leag. aboue Saguenay champlein.

A conspiracy.

But as our Frenchmen haue oftentimes bin found mutinous in such actions, so there were some among these, which did conspire against the said Champlein their Captaine, hauing deliberated to put him to death, first by poison, afterwards by a traine of Gunpowder: and after, hauing pilfered all, to come to Tadoussac, where Baskes and Rochell Ships were, to make their returne in them to these parts. But the Apothecary, of whom the poyson was demanded, disclosed the matter. Whereupon, Information being made, one of them was hanged, and some others condemned to the Gallies, which were brought backe into France, in the Ship, wherein Monsieur du Pont of Honfleur was Commander.

Exemplary punishment.

The people being lodged, some store of Corne was sowed, and a number of Gardens were made, where the ground did restore plentifully, the seedes receiued. This Land bringeth forth, naturally, Grapes in great quantity: the Walnut-trees are there in abundance, and Chestnut-trees also, whose fruite is in the forme of an halfe moone; but the Walnuts are with many corners or edges, which be not diuided. There is also great store of Pumpions, and very excellent Hempe, wherewith the Sauages make fishing lines. The Riuer there doth abound with as much fish, as any other Riuer in the world. It is thought, that Beuers, are not here so good, as vpon the coast of the Etechemins and Souriquois; yet notwithstanding, I may say very well, that I haue seene skins from thence of blacke Foxes, which seeme to exceede Sables, or Marterns.

The naturall fruite of the land.

Blacke Foxes.

The winter being come, many of our Frenchmen, were found greatly afflicted with the sickenesse, which is called the Scuruie, whereof I haue spoken elsewhere, Some of them died thereof, for want of present remedy. As for the tree called Annedda, so much renowned by Iacques Quartier, it is not now to be found. The said Champlein made diligent search for the same, and could haue no newes thereof: and notwithstanding his dwelling is at Kebec, neighbouring on the place, where the said Quartier did winter. Whereupon, I can thinke nothing else, but that the people of that time, haue bin exterminated by the Iroquois, or other their enemies.

Scuruie.

The Spring time being come, Champlein hauing had a long time a minde to make new discoueries, was to choose, either to make his way to the Iroquois, or to goe beyond the fall of the great Riuer, to discouer the great Lake, whereof mention hath bin made heretofore. Notwithstanding, because the Southerly Countries are more pleasant, for their milde temperature; he resolued himselfe, the first yeare, to visite the Iroquois. But the difficulty consisted in the going thither; for we are not able of our selues to make those Voyages, without the assistance of the Sauages. These Countries are not the Plaines of Champaigne, nor of Vatan, nor the ingratefull wood of Limosin. All is there couered with woods, that seeme to threaten the clouds. And at that time his company of men was but weake, as well by reason of the former mortality, as of the infirmities of sicknesses, which were yet continuing. Notwithstanding, being a man, who is astonished with nothing, and of a gentle conuersation, knowing wisely how to acquaint, and accommodate himselfe with those people, after hauing promised them, that when the land of the Iroquois, and other Countries should be discouered, the great French Sagamos (meaning

Lib. 3. cap. 22.

Champleins counsell.

our

our King) would giue them great rewards: he inuited them to goe to warre against the said Iroquois, promising (for himselfe) that he would take part with them. They (in whom the desire of reuenge dieth not, and who delight in nothing more then in warre) passe their word vnto him, and arme themselues about one hundred men, for that effect, with whom the said Champlein ventures himselfe, accompanied with one man, and one of Monsieur de Monts his footemen. So they began their voyage in the Sauages Barkes, and Canoes, alongst the great Riuer, as farre as the entring into the Riuer of the Iroquois: wherein being entred, within certaine dayes, they went vp vnto the Lake of the said Iroquois. But one may demand with what did so many people liue, in a Countrie where no Innes are? I wonder as much at that as others doe; for with them there is not any meanes of liuing, but by hunting; and in that, they doe exercise themselues through the woods in their trauailes. Champlein and his men, were forced to liue after their manner. For although they had made prouision of Bread, Wine, and Meate, out of the storehouse, the same could not haue serued them, to make accompt of. Finally, being come into the said Lake, they were many dayes a crossing of it (for it is about sixtie leagues of length) without giuing knowledge of their being there, and so the said Champlein had time to view their Tillage, and the faire Ilands, that serue for an ornament to their great extension of water. These people are much like to the Armouchiquois, in their fashion of liuing. They sowe Indian Maiz and Beanes, and haue quantity of faire Grapes, whereof they make no vse: and very good rootes. Euery Family haue their ground round about their dwellings; Forts also, yet no Townes, made with buildings of three or foure stories high, such as they haue in new Mexico (a Countrie situated much farther within the lands.)

Their Voiage to the Iroquois.

Their arriuall at the Lake, which is sixtie leagues long.

Faire Ilands in the Lake.

The Iroquois, and their exercise.

Houses of foure stories.

In the end, our men being discouered, the alarum was giuen among the Iroquois, who assembled themselues. And as the Iroquois did approach, Champlein, who was armed with a Musket, charged with two bullets, would haue set himselfe forward to aime, to make at one of the forwardest of the Iroquois, who did braue it, challenging his enemies to the combat. But the Sauages of Kebec told him in their language, no, doe not so, for if they once discouer you, not being accustomed to see such folkes, they will forthwith runne away, and make no stand; so shall we loose the glory which we expect of this charge; withdraw your selfe therefore behinde our formost ranke, and when we shall be neere, you shall aduance your selfe, and shoote at those two feathered fellowes, whom you see the formost, in the middest of the troope; which was found good, and executed by the said Champlein, who with one shot laid them both to the ground, as he hath related vnto vs. He, who assisted him, did also his duetie. But on a sodaine, all was in disorder, astonished at such a noise, and death so vnexpected. Vpon this feare, the men of Kebec loosing no occasion, followed earnestly their enemies, and killed about fiftie of them, whose heads they brought backe, to make therewith merry feasts, and dances, at their returne, according to their custome.

The alarum among the Iroquois.

The Prudence of the Sauages.

Flight.

Fiftie of the Iroquois slaine.

These things so passed, Champlein tooke againe his course towards ancient France, where he arriued in October 1609. hauing left the gouernment of New France to a good reuerent old man called Captaine Pierre. And for as much as the accidents of the former sickneſse, were feared to come; the winter following, Captaine du Pont of Honfleure (a man very well worthy to hold ranke among the Heroes of the said Prouince, for hauing bin the first that came to the Fals of the great Riuer, after Iacques Quartier, hauing also wintered in Port Royall, and almost euery yeare, made voyages to those parts, for the reliefe of them that were there) gaue aduise, that wood should be ready cut downe, for those that should tarry there all the winter, and thereby to free them from painfull toyles. That helpe hath bin of such force, that besides this, hauing their buildings made, they haue left no infirmitie nor mortality. So he returned, and with him the said Champlein, and those that would returne.

1609.

Capt. Pierre.

Capt. du Pont.

None died, nor were sicke.

In the meane while, preparations were made for another voyage, against the returne of the said Champlein, to the end to prosecute his discoueries, and consequently, to relieue the said Captaine Pierre. He tooke againe for the second time the Lieutenancy of the said Monsieur de Monts, for the gouernment of Kebec, and setting out in the beginning of March, was forced diuers times to turne backe, by reason of contrary windes; which made him to arriue late, as did also Monsieur de Poutrincourt, of his part. And neuertheleſse, in that small time, which hee had in those parts, he exploited a great peece of worke, hauing gone this yeare, as farre as a great Lake, of an hundred leagues in length, which is beyond the Fals of the great Riuer of Canada eighty leagues.

1610.

Champlein his new Voyage.

A Lake of an hundred leags in length discouered.

Hauing then reuiewed the state of all things at Kebec, and learned what occurrences had passed there, since his departure; he made an agreement with the Captaines of the said place, and with them of Tadouſſac, to goe on warfare aboue the Fall of the said Riuer, promising them to procure an hundred Frenchmen, to assist them in the extirping of all their enemies: and that they should haue as many of their owne men, of their side, which they liked very well. But the day appointed being come, and the Frenchmen not come, he excused the matter vpon the weather, which had beene boistrous for Sailers: and for want of whom, hee told them, that himselfe would goe with them, and follow their fortunes. They seeing they could doe no better, accepted

Agreement to goe to war, towards the great Lake.

Digitized by Google

of his offer, and went together with some other Frenchmen more, along the same faire Riuer: the Sauages still hunting for prouision for the kitchin. And they trauailed so farre, that after hauing passed the Fals, they crossed some Lakes, and in the space of eighty leagues, came to that other Lake, which we haue said to be of an hundred leagues in length: where (as the said Champlein hath recited vnto me) they were presently set vpon by the Sauages of the Country, and it was behouefull vnto them, to stand in good order, & well to defend themselues, after the said Champlein had receiued a blow on the chine bone, whereof he is not yet fully healed. Since, he made a confederacy with other Nations of those parts, farther distant from the mouth of the Lake, who promised him, that the next yeare following (which is this yeare 1611.) they would conduct him with all assurance, as far as the farthest end of the said Lake. He, for his part, promised them faire, and shewed them as well as he could, the greatnesse of our King, and of his Kingdome; and for to make them certaine thereof, he tooke with him a yong man, sonne of a Captaine of those parts, called Sauignon, a man of a good shape, strong, vigorous, and of great courage, whom he hath brought into France, to make report, vpon his returne, of that which he hath seene. This Country (by the report of the said Champlein) is one of the faireſt Countries of the world, much tilled, abounding with chase Deere, and Fish, Vines, Hempe, good Roots, Walnut-trees, Chestnut-trees, Plum trees, and others.

A Battell.

1611.

A faire Country.

There are store of Beuers along this Lake, but the Inhabitants doe burne them, as here wee burne Hogges: and so by that meanes, that haire and wooll, which we goe so farre of, and with so many perils to seeke for, is lost. There are Beasts great and small, differing from ours, and Horses, as the said Sauignon hath shewed vs, by the neighing. But I dare not giue for currant that which Monsieur de Monts hath recited vnto me, that these Nations haue tame Beares, which they teach, to carry them vpon trees for want of ladders. They haue Forts, such as they of Virginia haue, which are great inclosures with trees, ioyned together in forme like a Pale, and within those inclosures are houses made, two or three stories high. The lower and higher parts doe serue for the men when they must defend themselues from the assalts of their enemies. For in the lower parts there are big Bowes, for the bending of which, the strength of six men is required, and they haue Arrowes, that knocke downe men. Aboue, they haue murthering holes, or battlements, from whence to fling or cast stones, and also to shoote with Bowes, when they will hit their enemies a farre off. In the middle roomes are the women, which faile not in doing that helpe which their sexe may affoord. And in this middle story, they lay vp their Corne and other prouisions.

Beuers burnt.

Horses.

Mcruellous industry.

Forts & towns

Houses with stories.

Strong bowes.

Champlein promiseth vs neuer to giue ouer vntill he haue pierced as farre as to the Western Sea, or that of the North, to open the way of China; in vaine by so many thought for. As for the Western Sea, I beleeue that at the farther end of the greatest Lake, which is very far beyond that whereof we spake of in this Chapter, there will be found some great Riuer, which will fall into the same, or issue from it (as doth that of Canada) and neuer into the said Westerne Sea. And as for the Northerne Sea, there is hope to come neere to it by the Riuer of Saguenay, there being but small distance from the head of the said Riuer, to the said Sea.

Hope for the passage to China.

Some great Riuer running Westward into the Westerne Sea.

The Northern Sea.

It is now fit to speake of Monsieur de Poutrincourt, a Gentleman of long time resolute in these actions, who hauing made his preparation at Diepe, set saile the 25. of February 1610. with a number of honest men, and Artificers. This Nauigation hath bin very tedious and troublesome; for from the beginning they were driuen within sight of the Azores, and from thence, almost continually beaten with contrary windes, by the space of two moneths: during which time (as idle people doe commonly occupie their spirits in euill) some, by secret practises, durst conspire against their Captaine, whom notwithstanding, the said Poutrincourt, according to his accustomed clemency, did pardon.

1610.

A tedious Nauigation.

A conspiracy.

Hauing made a reuiew of that coast, he came into Port Royall, where he brought much consolation to the Sauages of that place. As for the buildings, they were found all whole, except the couering, and euery parcell of houshold stuffe, in the same place where they were left.

Their arriuall at Port Royall.

Buildings and houshold stuffe preserued.

The first care that the said Monsieur de Poutrincourt had, was for the tillage of the ground, and to dispose it to receiue the seede of corne, for the yeare following; which being finished, hee would not neglect that which belonged to the spiritualty, and whereunto the chiefest aime of his trauailes did tend, which was, to procure the saluation of those poore sauage and barbabarous people. After necessary instruction giuen, they were baptized vpon Saint Iohn Baptist his day, the foure and twentieth of Iune, 1610. to the number of one and twenty persons; to euery one of which was giuen the name of some great or notable person of these parts.

Pillage of the ground.

The first Christenings made in New France.

1. Memberton great Sagamos, being aboue an hundred yeares of age, was baptized by Sir Iesse Fleche Priest, and named by Monsieur de Poutrincourt, Henry, after the Kings name. 2. Actaudunech, third Sonne of the said Henry Memberton, was by the said Poutrincourt, named Paul, after the name of Pope Paul. 3. The wife of the said Henry, was named by the said Poutrincourt, after the Queenes name, that is to say, Marie. 4. Membertouoichis, alias Iudas, elder sonne to Memberton, being aboue sixety yeares old, was also baptized, and by Monsieur de Biencourt, named Lewes, after the name of my Lord the Daulphin, &c.

Sagamos doth signifie a Prince, Ruler, or Captaine.

The King was then slaine which they knew not.

Memberton,

Digitized by Google

Memberton, chiefe Sagamos of these Countries, moued with a religious zeale (but without knowledge) saith, that he will denounce open wars against all them that will refuse to become Christians.

Shortly after these spirituall regenerations, Monsieur de Pontrincourt his son was sent backe into France to take a new charge: In doing whereof, he certified the Queene, what had bin done in those Christenings; whereby she receiued a maruelous contentment. But this one things is to be noted, that though the Nauigation were tedious in going, yet in the returne it was very short; for being come to the fishing banke, which is fiftie leagues on this side New-found-land, he was brought in a fortnight into France, in which time they commonly make their returne. Vpon the Banke they heare the newes of our good Kings death, whose soule resteth with God, and whose posterity we pray God to blesse. A returne into France.

The Author reports another Voyage 1611. by the Lord of Sauc Iust; but I haue haste to the English Plantation, for whose sake these are published: there being no great matter of history of those parts therein. As for the Articles of a Societie concluded, and the names of those which entred therein, till we haue greater effect thereof, I shall not trouble you with the recitall thereof.

CHAP. IX.

The first plantation of English Colonies in Virginia briefely mentioned.

SIr Walter Raleigh, a man more famous then happy, had obtained of Queene Elizabeth, of glorious memory, a Patent for discouering and peopling of vnknowne parts not actually possessed by any Christian Prince, dated March 25. A. Reg. 26. The first Voyage to Virginia and possession taken. The 27. of Aprill 1584. he set forth two Barkes vnder the command of Master Phillip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow, which arriued on that part of America, which that Virgin Queene stiled Virginia, and thereof in her Maiesties name tooke possession Iuly 13. and hauing taken view and liking of the Countrey, and had conference and trade with the Sauages, obseruing aboue fouretoene seuerall sweete smelling timber trees, and many other commodities; they returned with two of the Sauages, Wancheſe and Manteo, and arriued in England in September. Virginia named so by Q. Elizabeth.

Aprill 9. 1585. Sir Richard Greeneuile was sent by Sir Walter Raleigh with a fleete of seuen saile, which landed in the Ile of Saint Iohn Port Ricco, May 12. and there fortified themselues, and built a Pinnace. The Spaniard promised to furnish them with victuals, but did not, whereupon they tooke two Frigates. In Hiſpaniola they had friendly greetings and trade. Iune 26. they anchored at Wocokon, where by the vnskilfulnesse of Fernando the Master, their Admirall strooke on ground and sunke. Second Voyage. Sir R. Greeneuile.

In the 25. of Iuly, the Generall returned for England, and tooke a Spaniſh Ship of three hundred tunne richly laden by the way, boording her with a Boate made of the boords of Chests, which as soone as hee had boorded her fell in sunder and sunke at the Ships side. In the Countrie was a Colonie, left vnder the gouernment of Master Ralph Lane, viz., Master Phillip Amadas, Master Hariot, Master Acton, Master Edward Stafford, Master Prideox, Captaine Vaughan, and aboue a hundred others. Master Lane writ from his new Fort in Virginia, that if Virginia had Kine and Horses in reasonable proportion, no Countrie in Christendome were comparable to it. They discouered from Roanoak to the Cheſepians, aboue one hundred and thirty miles, to Chawanock North-West as farre. The Sauages conspired against the English, the principall was Pemiſapan, who lost his head in the quarrell, in the beginning of Iune 1586. and Sir Francis Drake comming thither from the sacke of diuers Spaniſh Townes, to visite the Colony, on the nineteenth, tooke the Colony with him in his victorious Fleete, and brought them into England. Spaniſh Prise. First Colony. Sir F. Drake.

The same yeere had Sir Walter Raleigh prepared a ship of a hundred tun, fraught with prouision for the Colonie, which setting forth late, arriued at Hartoraske immediatly after the departure of the Colonie, which hauing sought in vaine, she returned with her prouisions for England. Third Voyage.

About a fortnight after her departure, Sir Richard Greeneuile, Generall of Virginia, accompanied with three Ships arriued there, and neither hearing of the Ship, nor of the Colonie which he had left there the yeare before; after long and vaine search, he left fifteene men to hold possession of the Countrie, in the Ile of Roanoak, furnished for two yeares, and returned, by the way making spoyle on the Townes of the Azores, and there taking diuers Spaniards. Fourth Voyage. Second Colonie.

Master Thomas Hariot writ a large History of the Men, Beasts, Fishes, Fowles, Plants, and Commodities of Virginia, subscribed also by Master Ralph Lane, extant in Master Hacklait his third Tome. Master Thomas Hariot.

In the yeare 1587. Sir Walter Raleigh, continuing his purpose of Plantation, sent another Colonie of one hundred and fiftie persons, vnder the gouernment of Master Iohn White; to him he appointed twelue Assistants, vnto whom he gaue a Charter, and incorporated them by the name Fifth Voyage and third Colonie.

Digitized by Google

of Gouernour and Assistants of the Citie of Raleigh in Virginia. These arriued on Iuly 22. at Hatoraske, where they went on shore to seeke the fifteene men left there the yeare before, with intent after to plant at the Bay of Chesepiok, according to Sir Walter Raleigh his directions, there to make their seate and Fort. By Manteo they learned how the Sauages had secretly assalted the fifteene English, and slaine some, the other being forced to flee, it was not knowne whither. Manteo was Christened, and by Sir Walter Raleighs direction, made Lord of Roanoak. Mistris Dare the Gouernours daughter was deliuered of a daughter, which was baptised by the name of Virginia.

Bay of Chesepiok.

English borne there.

The Company were very important with the Gouernour, to returne for England, to supply their defects; to which, with much vnwillingnesse he yeelded, Aug. 27. and Octob. 16. arriued in Ireland, and after in England.

Anno 1590. the said Master Iohn White put to Sea with Ships, and two Pinnaces, with purpose for Virginia, where they anchored at Hatorask in 36. 20. Aug. 15. They found some of the goods (such as the Sauages could not make vse of) and tokens as if they were at Croatoan; but the winds violence permitted no further search, and they returned to the Azores, and after to England, arriuing at Plimmouth, Octob. 24.

Sixth Voyage.

Master BARTHOLOMEVV GOSNOLDS Letter to his Father, touching his first Voyage to Virginia, 1602.

MY duetie remembred, &c. Sir, I was in good hope that my occasions would haue allowed mee so much libertie, as to haue come vnto you before this time; otherwise I would haue written more at large concerning the Countrie from whence we lately came, then I did: but not well remembring what I haue already written (though I am assured that there is nothing set downe disagreeing with the truth) I thought it fittest not to goe about to adde any thing in writing, but rather to leaue the report of the rest till I come my selfe; which now I hope shall be shortly, and so soone as with conueniency I may. In the meane time, notwithstanding whereas you seeme not to be satisfied by that which I haue already written, concerning some especiall matters. I haue here briefely (and as well as I can) added these few lines for your further satisfaction: and first as touching that place where we were most resident, it is in the Latitude of 41. degrees, and one third part; which albeit it be so much to the Southward, yet is it more cold then those parts of Europe, which are scituated vnder the same paralell: but one thing is worth the noting, that notwithstanding the place is not so much subiect to cold as England is, yet did we finde the Spring to be later there, then it is with vs here, by almost a moneth: this whether it hapned accidentally this last Spring to be so, or whether is be so of course, I am not very certaine; the latter seemes most likely, whereof also there may be giuen some sufficient reason, which now I omit: as for the Acornes we saw gathered on heapes, they were of the last yeare, but doubtlesse their Summer continues longer then ours. We cannot gather by any thing we could obserue in the people, or by any triall we had thereof our selues; but that it is as healthfull a Climate as any can be. The Inhabitants there, as I wrote before, being of tall stature, comely proportion, strong, active, and some of good yeares, and as it should seeme very healthfull, are sufficient proofe of the healthfulnesse of the place. First, for our selues (thankes be to God) we had not a man sicke two dayes together in all our Voyage; whereas others that went out with vs, or about that time on other Voyages (especially such as went vpon reprisall) were most of them infected with sickenesse, whereof they lost some of their men, and brought home a many sicke, returning notwithstanding long before vs. But Verazzano, and others (as I take it, you may reade in the Booke of Discoueries) doe more particularly intreate of the Age of the people in that coast. The Sassafras which we brought we had vpon the Ilands; where though we had little disturbance, and reasonable plenty: yet for that the greatest part of our people were imployed about the fitting of our house, and such like affaires, and a few (and those but easie labourers) vndertooke this worke, the rather because we were informed before our going forth, that a tunne was sufficient to cley England) and further, for that we had resolued vpon our returne, and taken view of our victuall, we iudged it then needefull to vse expedition; which afterward we had more certaine proofe of; for when we came to an anker before Portsmouth, which was some foure dayes after we made the land, we had not one Cake of Bread, nor any drinke, but a little Vinegar, left: for these and other reasons, we returned no otherwise laden then you haue heard. And thus much I hope shall suffice till I can my selfe come to giue you further notice, which though it be not so soone as I could haue wisht, yet I hope it shall be in conuenient time. In the meane time craning your pardon, for which the vrgent occasions of my stay will pleade, I humbly take my leaue. 7. Septemb. 1602.

Your dutifull Sonne,

BARTH. GOSNOLD.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XI.

The Relation of Captaine GOSNOLS Voyage to the North part of Virginia, begunne the sixe and twentieth of March, Anno 42. ELIZABETHÆ Reginæ 1602. and deliuered by GABRIEL ARCHER, a Gentleman in the said Voyage.

THe said Captaine did set sayle from Famouth, the day and yeere aboue written accompanied with thirtie two persons, whereof eight Mariners and Saylers, twelue purposing vpon the Discouery to returne with the ship for England, the rest remayne there for population. The fourteenth of Aprill following, wee had sight of Saint Maries an Iland of the Asseris.

The three and twentieth of the same, beeing two hundred leagues Westwards from the said Iland in the latitude of 37. degrees. The water in the mayne Ocean appeared yellow, the space of two leagues North and South, where sounding with thirtie fadome Line, wee found no ground, and taking vp some of the said water in a bucket, it altered not either in colour or taste from the Sea Azure. Ocean seeming yellow.

The seuenth of May following, we first saw many Birds in bignesse of Cliffe Pidgeons, and after diuers other as Petrels, Cootes, Hagbuts, Pengwins, Murres, Gannets, Cormorants, Guls, with many else in our English Tongue of no name. The eight of the same the water changed to a yellowish greene, where at seuentie fadome we had ground. The ninth, wee had two and twentie fadome in faire sandie ground, hauing vpon our Lead many glittering Stones, somewhat heauie, which might promise some Minerall matter in the bottome, we held our selues by computation, well neere the latitude of 43. degrees.

The tenth wee sounded in 27. 30. 37. 43. fadome, and then came to 108. some thought it to be the sounding of the Westermost end of Saint Iohns Iland, vpon this banke we saw sculs of fish in great numbers. The twelfth we hoysed out halfe of our shallop, and sounding had then eightie fadome without any current perceiued by William Strete the Master, one hundred leagues Westward from Saint Maries til we came to the foresaid soundings continually passed fleeting by vs Sea-oare, which seemed to haue their moueable course towards the North-east, a matter to set some subtle inuention on worke, for comprehending the true cause thereof. Sea-oare. The thirteenth, wee sounded in seuentie fadome, and obserued great beds of weedes, much woode and diuers things else floating by vs, when as we had smelling of the shoare, such as from the Southerne Cape and Andulazia in Spaine. Smell of the shoare.

The fourteenth, about six in the morning we descried Land that lay North, &c. the Northerly part we called the North Land, which to another Rocke vpon the same lying twelue leagues West, that wee called Sauage Rocke, because the Sauages first shewed themselues there, fiue leagues towards the said Rocke is an out Point of woodie ground, the Trees thereof very high and straight, from the Rocke East North-east. From the said Rocke, came towards vs a Biscay shallop with saile and Oares, hauing eight persons in it, whom we supposed at first to bee Christians distressed. But approching vs neere, wee perceiued them to bee Sauages. These comming within call hayled vs, and wee answered. Then after signes of peace, and a long speech by one of them made, they came boldly aboord vs being all naked, sauing about their shoulders certaine loose Deere-skinnes, and neere their wastes Seale-skinnes tyed fast like to Irish Dimmie Trouses. One that seemed to be their Commander wore a Wastecoate of blacke worke, a paire of Breeches, cloth Stockings, Shooes, Hat, and Band, one or two more had also a few things made by some Christians, these with a piece of Chalke described the Coast thereabouts, and could name Placentia of the New-found-land, they spake diuers Christian words, and seemed to vnderstand much more then we, for want of Language could comprehend. These people are in colour swart, their haire long vptyed with a knot in the part of behind the head. They paint their bodies, which are strong and well proportioned. These much desired our longer stay, but finding our selues short of our purposed place, we set saile Westwards, leauing them and their Coast. About sixteene leagues South-west from thence, wee perceiued in that course two small Ilands, the one lying Eastward from Sauage Rock, the other to the Southwards of it, the Coast we left was full of goodly Woods, faire Plaines, with little greene round Hils aboue the Cliffes appearing vnto vs, which are indifferently tailed, but all Rockie, and of shining stones, which might haue perswaded vs a longer stay there. Sauages. Sauage Rocke. Their behauiour.

The fifteenth day we had againe sight of the Land, which made a head being as wee thought an Iland, by reason of a large sound that appeared Westward betweene it and the Mayne, for comming to the West end thereof, we did perceiue a large opening, we called it Shole-hope. Neere this Cape we came to Anchor in fifteene fadome, where wee tooke great store of Cod-fish, for which we altered the name, and called it Cape Cod. Here wee saw sculs of Herrings, Mackerels and other small fish in great abundance. This is a low sandie shoare, but without danger, also wee Shole-hope. Cape Cod.

Digitized by Google

came to Anchor againe in sixteene fadome, faire by the Land in the latitude of 42. degrees. This Cape is well neere a mile broad, and lieth North-east by East. The Captaine went here ashoare and found the ground to be full of Pease, Strawberies, Hurtberies, &c. as then vnripe, the sand also by the shoare somewhat deepe, the fire-wood there by vs taken in was of Cypresse, Birch, Wich-hazell and Beech. A young Indian came here to the Captaine, armed with his Bow and Arrowes, and had certaine plates of Copper hanging at his Eares, hee shewed a willingnesse to helpe vs in our occasions.

The sixteenth, we trended the Coast Southerly, which was all champaine and full of grasse, but the Ilands somewhat wooddie. Twelue leagues from Cape Cod, we descried a point, with some breach a good distance off, and keeping our loffe to double it, wee came on the sudden into shoale water, yet well quitted our selues thereof. This breach wee called Tuckers Terror, vpon his expressed feare. The Point we named Point Care, hauing passed it wee bore vp againe with the Land, and in the night came with it anchoring in eight fadome, the ground good. The seuenteenth, appeared many breaches round about vs, so as wee continued that day without remooue.

Tuckers Terror. Point Care.

The eighteenth, being faire we sent forth the Boat, to sound ouer a Breach, that in our course lay of another Point, by vs called Gilberts Point; who returned vs foure, fiue, sixe and seuen fadome ouer. Also a Discouery of diuers Ilands which after prooued to bee Hils and Hummocks, distinct within the Land. This day there came vnto the ships side diuers Canoas; the Indians apparelled as aforesaid, with Tobacco and Pipes steeled with Copper, Skins, artificiall strings and other trifles to barter, one had hanging about his necke a plate of rich Copper in length a foot, in breadth halfe a foot for a brest-plate, the Eares of all the rest had Pendants of Copper. Also one of them had his face ouer painted, and his head stucke with feathers in manner of a Turkey Cocks traine: These are more timerous then those of the Sauage Rocke, yet very theeuish.

Gilberts Point. Diuers Ilands. Sauages.

The nineteenth, we passed ouer the breach of Gilberts Point in foure or fiue fadome, and anchored a league or somewhat more beyond it; betweene the last two Points are two leagues, the interim, along shoale water, the latitude here is 41. degrees two third parts.

The twentieth, by the ships side we there killed Pengwins, and saw many sculs of fish. The Coast from Gilberts Point to the supposed Iles lyeth East and by South. Here also we discouered two Inlets which might promise fresh water, inwardly whereof we perceiued much smoake, as though some population had there beene: This Coast is very full of people, for that as we trended the same Sauages still runne along the shoare, as men much admiring at vs.

Pengwins.

The one and twentieth, we went coasting from Gilberts Point to the supposed Iles, in tenne, nine, eight, seuen, and sixe fadome close aboord the shoare, and that depth lyeth a league off. A little from the supposed Iles appeared vnto vs an opening, with which we stood iudging it to bee the end of that which Captaine Gosnell descrieth from Cape Cod, and as hee thought to extend some thirtie or more miles in length, and finding there but three fadome a league off, we omitted to make further discouerie of the same, calling it Shole-hope.

From this opening the Mayne lyeth South-west, which coasting along we saw a disinhabited Iland which so afterwards appeared vnto vs: we bore with it, and named it Marthaes Vineyard, from Shole-hope it is eight leagues in circuit, the Iland is fiue miles, and hath 41. degrees and one quarter of latitude: the place most pleasant; for the two and twentieth, we went ashoare, and found it full of Wood, Vines, Gooseberie bushes, Hurtberies, Raspices, Eglentine, &c. Heere we had Cranes, Hearnes, Shoulers Geese, and diuers other Birds which there at that time vpon the Cliffes being sandie with some Rockie stones, did breed and had young. In this place we saw Deere, heere we rode in eight fathome neere the shoare, where wee tooke great store of Cod, as before at Cape Cod, but much better.

Marthaes Vineyard.

The three and twentieth wee weyed, and towards night came to Anchor at the Northwest part of this Iland, where the next morning offered vnto vs fast running thirteene Sauages apparelled as aforesaid, and armed with Bowes and Arrowes without any feare. They brought Tobacco, Deere skins and some sodden fish. These offered themselues vnto vs in great familiaritie, who seemed to be well conditioned. They came more rich in Copper then any before. This Iland is sound, and hath no danger about it.

The foure and twentieth, we set saile and doubled the Cape of another Iland next vnto it, which wee called Douer Cliffe, and then came into a faire Sound, where wee roade all night, the next morning wee sent off our Boate to discouer another Cape, that lay betweene vs and the Mayne, from which were a ledge of Rockes a mile into the Sea, but all aboue water, and without danger, we went about them, and came to Anchor in eight fadome, a quarter of a mile from the shoare, in one of the stateliest Sounds that euer I was in. This called wee Gosnolls Hope; the North banke whereof is the Mayne, which stretcheth East and West. This Iland Captaine Gosnoll called Elizabeths Ile, where we determined our abode: the distance betweene euery of these Ilands is, viz. from Marthaes Vineyard to Douer Cliffe, halfe a league ouer the Sound, thence to Elizabeths Ile one league distant. From Elizabeths Ile vnto the Mayne is foure leagues. On the North side neere adioyning vnto the Iland Elizabeth, is an Ilet in compasse halfe a myle full of Cedars, by me called Hills Hap, to the Northward, of which in the mouth of an opening on the Mayne appeareth another the like, that I called Haps Hill, for that I hope much hap may be expected from it. Hills Hap. Haps Hill.

Douer-cliffe-sound. Gosnolls Hope. Elizabeths Ile.

of

Digitized by Google

The fiue and twentieth, it was that we came from Goſnolls Hope. The ſix and twentieth, we trimmed and fitted vp our Shallop. The ſeuen and twentieth, there came vnto vs an Indian and two women, the one we ſuppoſed to be his Wife, the other his Daughter, both cleane and ſtraite bodied, with countenance ſweet and pleaſant. To theſe the Indian gaue heedfull attendance for that they ſhewed them in much familiaritie with our men, although they would not admit of any immodeſt touch.

The eight and twentieth we entred counſell about our abode and plantation, which was concluded to be in the Weſt part of Elizabeths Iland. The North-eaſt thereof running from out our ken. The South and North ſtandeth in an equall Parallel. This Iland in the Weſterſide admitteth ſome Increekes, or ſandie Coues, ſo girded, as the water in ſome places of each ſide meeteth, to which the Indians from the Mayne doe oftentimes reſort for fiſhing of Crabs. There is eight fadome very neere the ſhoare, and the latitude here is 41. degrees 10. minutes, the breadth from Sound to Sound in the Weſter part is not paſſing a mile at moſt, altogether vnpeopled and diſinhabited. It is ouer-growne with Wood and Rubbiſh, viz. Okes, Aſhes, Beech, Wal-nut, Weech-halſe, Saſſafrage, and Cedars, with diuers other of vnknowne names. The Rubbiſh is wild Peaze, young Saſſafrage, Cherie trees, Vines, Eglentine, Gooſe-berie buſhes, Hawthorne, Honiſuckles, with others of like qualitie. The herbs and Roots are Strawberies, Raſpis, Ground Nuts, Alexander, Surrin, Tanſie, &c. without count. Touching the fertilitie of the ſoyle by our owne experience made, we found it to be excellent for ſowing ſome Engliſh pulſe it ſprowted out in one fortnight almoſt halfe a foot. In this Iland is a ſtage or Pond of freſh water, in circuit two miles, on the one ſide not diſtant from the Sea thirtie yards, in the Centre whereof is a Rockie Iſlet, containing neere an Acre of ground full of wood, on which wee beganne our Fort and place of abode, diſpoſing it ſelfe ſo fit for the ſame. Theſe Indians call Gold Waſſador, which argueth there is thereof in the Countrey. Elizabeths Ile in 41. degrees 10. minutes deſcribed. Fort begun.

The nine and twentieth, we laboured in getting of Saſſafrage, rubbiſhing our little Fort or Iſlet, new keeling our ſhallop; and making a Punt or Flat bottome Boate to paſſe to and fro our Fort ouer the freſh water, the powder of Saſſafrage in twelue houres cured one of our Company that had taken a great Surfet by eating the bellies of Dog-fiſh, a very delicious meate.

The thirtieth, Captaine Goſnoll with diuers of his company went vpon pleaſure in the ſhallop towards Hills Hap to view it, and the Sandie Coue, and returning brought with him a Canoa that foure Indians had there left being fled away for feare of our Engliſh which we brought into England.

The one and thirtieth, Captaine Goſnoll deſirous to ſee the Maine, becauſe of the diſtance, hee ſet ſayle ouer; where comming to anchor, went aſhoare with certaine of his companie, and immediatly there preſented vnto him men women and children, who with all curteous kindneſſe entertayned him, giuing him certaine skinnes of wilde beaſts, which may be rich Furres, Tobacco, Turtles, Hempe, artificiall Strings coloured, Chaines, and ſuch like things as at the inſtant they had about them. Theſe are a faire conditioned people. On all the Sea coaſt along we found Muſſell ſhells that in colour did repreſent Mother-of-pearle, but not hauing meanes to dredge, could not apprehend further knowledge thereof. This Maine is the goodlieſt Continent that euer we ſaw, promiſing more by farre then we any way did expect: for it is repleniſhed with faire fields, and in them fragrant Flowers, alſo Medowes, and hedged in with ſtately Groues, being furniſhed alſo with pleaſant Brookes, and beautified with two maine Riuers that (as wee iudge) may haply become good Harbours, and conduct vs to the hopes men ſo greedily doe thirſt after. In the mouth of one of theſe Inlets or Riuers lieth that little Ile before mentioned, called Happes Hill, from which vnto the Weſtermoſt end of the Maine, appearing where the other Inlet is, I account ſome fiue leagues, and the Coaſt betweene bendeth like a Bow, and lyeth Eaſt and by North. Beyond theſe two Inlets we might perceiue the Mayne to beare vp South-weſt, and more Southerly. Thus with this taſte of Diſcouery, we now contented our ſelues, and the ſame day made returne vnto our Fort, time not permitting more ſparing delay. The people. Goodly Countrey.

The firſt of Iune, we employed our ſelues in getting Saſſafrage, and the building of our Fort. The ſecond, third and fourth, we wrought hard to make readie our houſe for the prouiſion to bee had aſhore to ſuſtaine vs till our ſhips returne. This day from the Mayne came to our ſhips ſide a Canoa, with their Lord or chiefe Commander, for that they made little ſtay only pointing to the Sunne, as in ſigne that the next day hee would come and viſit vs, which hee did accordingly.

The fifth, wee continued our labour, when there came vnto vs aſhoare from the Mayne fiftie Sauages, ſtout and luſtie men with their Bowes and Arrowes, amongſt them there ſeemed to be one of authoritie, becauſe the reſt made an inclining reſpect vnto him. The ſhip was at their comming a league off, and Captaine Goſnoll aboord, and ſo likewiſe Captaine Gilbert, who almoſt neuer went aſhoare, the company with me only eight perſons. Theſe Indians in haſtie manner came towards vs, so as we thought fit to make a stand at an angle betweene the Sea and a fresh water, I mooued my selfe towards him seuen or eight steps, and clapt my hands first on the sides of mine head, then on my breast, and after presented my Musket with a threatning countenance, thereby to signifie vnto them, either a choice of Peace or Warre, whereupon hee vsing mee with mine owne signes of Peace, I stept forth and imbraced him, his company then all sate downe in manner like Grey-hounds vpon their heeles, with whom my company fell a bartering. By this time Captaine Gosnell was come with twelue men more from aboord, and to shew the Sauage Seignior that he was our Captaine, we receiued him in a guard, which he passing thorow, saluted the Seignior with ceremonies of our salutations, whereat he nothing mooued or altered himselfe. Our Captaine gaue him a straw Hat and a paire of Kniues, the Hat awhiles hee wore, but the Kniues he beheld with great marueling, being very bright and sharpe, this our courtesie made them all in loue with vs.

came

The sixt being raine, we spent idlely aboord. The seuenth, the Seignior came againe with all his troupe as before, and continued with vs the most part of the day, we going to dinner about noone, they sate with vs and did eate of our Bacaleure and Mustard, dranke of our Beere, but the Mustard nipping them in their noses they could not indure: it was a sport to behold their faces made being bitten therewith. In time of Dinner the Sauages had stolne a Target wherewith acquainting the Seignior, with feare and great trembling they restored it againe, thinking perhaps we would haue beene reuenged for it, but seeing our familiaritie to continue, they fell a fresh to roasting of Crabs, Red Herrings, which were exceeding great, ground Nuts, &c. as before. Our Dinner ended, the Seignior first tooke leaue and departed, next all the rest sauing foure that stayed and went into the Wood to helpe vs digge Sassafrage, whom we desired to goe aboord vs, which they refused and so departed.

The eighth wee diuided the victuals, viz. the ships store for England, and that of the Planters, which by Captaine Gilberts allowance could be but sixe weekes for sixe moneths, whereby there fell out a controuersie, the rather, for that some seemed secretly to vnderstand of a purpose Captaine Gilbert had not to returne with supplie of the issue, those goods should make by him to be carried home. Besides, there wanted not ambitious conceits in the mindes of some wrangling and ill disposed persons that ouerthrew the stay there at that time, which vpon consultation thereof had, about fiue dayes after was fully resolued all for England againe. There came in this interim aboord vnto vs, that stayed all night, an Indian, whom wee vsed kindly, and the next day sent ashoare hee shewed himselfe the most sober of all the rest, wee held him sent as a Spie. In the morning he filched away our Pot-hookes, thinking he had not done any ill therein; being ashoare wee bid him strike fire, which with an Emerald stone (such as the Glasiers vse, to cut Glasse) he did. I take it to be the very same that in Latine is called Smiris, for striking therewith vpon Touch-wood that of purpose hee had, by meane of a mynerall stone vsed therein, sparkles proceeded and forthwith kindled with making of flame. The ninth, wee continued working on our Store-house for as yet remayned in vs a desired resolution of making stay. The tenth, Captaine Gosnell fell downe with the ship to the little Ilet of Cedars, called Hills hoppe, to take in Cedar wood, leauing mee and nine more in the Fort, onely with three meales meate, vpon promise to returne the next day.

Their purpose o: stay broken off.

The eleuenth, he came not, neither sent, whereupon I commanded foure of my companie to seeke out for Crabbes, Lobsters, Turtles, &c. for sustayning vs till the ships returne, which was gone cleane out of sight, and had the winde chopt vp at South-west, with much difficulty would shee haue beene able in short time to haue made returne. These foure Purveyers, whom I counselled to keepe together for their better safety diuided themselues, two going one wayes and two another, in search as aforesaid. One of these petie companies was assaulted by foure Indians, who with Arrowes did shoot and hurt one of the two in his side, the other a lusty and nimble fellow, leapt in and cut their Bow-strings whereupon they fled. Being late in the euening, they were driuen to lie all night in the Woods, not knowing the way home thorow the thicke rubbish, as also the weather somewhat stormie. The want of these sorrowed vs much, as not able to coniecture any thing of them vnlesse very euill.

Sauage assault

The twelfth, those two came vnto vs againe, whereat our ioy was encreased, yet the want of our Captaine, that promised to returne, as aforesaid, strooke vs in a dumpish terrour, for that hee performed not the same in the space of almost three dayes. In the meane wee sustayned our selues with Alexander and Sorrell pottage, Ground-nuts and Tobacco, which gaue nature a reasonable content. Wee heard at last, our Captaine to lewre vnto vs, which made such musike as sweeter neuer came vnto poore men.

The thirteenth, beganne some of our companie that before vowed to stay, to make reuolt; whereupon the planters diminishing, all was giuen ouer. The fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth wee spent in getting Sasafrage and fire-wood of Cedar, leauing House and little Fort by ten men in nineteene dayes sufficient made to harbour twenty persons at least with their necessary prouision.

The seuenteenth, we set sayle, doubling the Rockes of Elizabeths Iland, and passing by Dover Cliffe,

Digitized by Google

Cliffe, came to anchor at Marthaes Vineyard being fiue leagues distant from our Fort, where we went ashoare, and had young Cranes, Herneshowes, and Geese, which now were growne to pretie bignesse.

The eighteenth, we set sayle and bore for England, cutting off our Shalop, that was well able to land fiue and twenty men, or more, a Boate very necessary for the like occasions. The winds doe raigne most commonly vpon this coast in the Summer time, Westerly. In our homeward course wee obserued the foresaid fleeting weeds to continue till we came within two hundred leagues of Europe. Returne.

The three and twentieth of Iuly we came to anchor before Exmouth.

CHAP. XI.

Notes of the same Voyage taken out of a Tractate written by IAMES ROSIER to Sir WALTER RALEIGH, and of MACES Voyage to Virginia.

ELizabeths Hand is full of high timbred Oakes, their leaues thrice so broad as ours; Cedars, straight and tall; Beech, Elme, Hollie, Wal-nut trees in abundance, the fruit as bigge as ours, as appeared by those wee found vnder the trees, which had lien all the yeere vngathered; Hasle-nut trees, Cherrie trees, the leafe, barke and bigneſſe not differing from ours in England, but the stalke beareth the blossomes or fruit at the end thereof, like a cluster of Grapes, forsie or fiftie in a bunch; Sassafras trees great plentie all the Iland ouer, a tree of high price and profit; also diuers other fruit-trees, some of them with strange barkes, of an Orange colour, in feeling soft and smooth like Velvet: in the thickest parts of these Woods, you may see a furlong or more round about. Oakes. Cedars. Beech. Elme. Hollie. Walnut trees. Cherrie trees. Sassafras trees. Diuers other trees.

On the North-west side of this Hand, neere to the Sea-side, is a standing Lake of fresh water, almost three English miles in compasse, in the midst whereof stands a woody ground, an acre in quantitie, or not aboue: this Lake is full of small Tortoises, and exceedingly frequented with all sorts of fowles before rehearsed, which breed, some lowe on the bankes, and others on lowe trees about this Lake in great abundance, whose young ones of all sorts wee tooke and eate at our pleasure: but all these fowles are much bigger than ours in England. Also, in euery Iland, and almost euery part of euery Iland, are great store of Ground-nuts fortie together on a string, some of them as bigge as Hennes egges; they growe not two inches vnder ground: the which Nuts wee found to bee as good as Potatoes. Also, diuers sorts of shell-fish, as Scalops, Mussels, Cockles, Lobsters, Crabs, Oisters, and Wilkes, exceeding good and very great. But not to cloy you with particular rehearsall of such things as God and Nature hath bestowed on these places, in comparison whereof, the most fertile part of all England is (of it selfe) but barren; wee went in our Light-horseman from this Iland to the Maine, right against this Iland some two miles off, where comming ashoare, wee stood a while like men ravished at the beautie and delicacy of this sweet soyle; for besides diuers cleere Lakes of fresh water (whereof wee saw no end) Medowes very large, and full of greene grasse; euen the most wooddy places (I speake onely of such as I saw) doe growe so distinct and apart, one tree from another, vpon greene grassie ground, somewhat higher than the Plaines, as if Nature would shew her selfe aboue her power, artificiall. Hard by, wee espied seuen Indians, and comming vp to them, at first they expressed some feare; but being emboldned by our courteous vsage, and some trifles which we gaue them, they followed vs to a necke of Land, which wee imagined had beene seuered from the Mayne; but finding it otherwise, wee perceiued a broad Harbour or Riuers mouth, which came vp into the Mayne: and because the day was farre spent, we were forced to returne to the Iland from whence we came, leauing the Discouery of this Harbour, for a time of better leisure. Of the goodnesse of which Harbour, as also of many others thereabouts, there is small doubt, considering that all the Ilands, as also the Maine (where wee were) is all Rockie Grounds and broken Lands. A Lake three miles about. Smal Tortoises. Abundance of fowles, much bigger than ours in England. Ground-nuts. Shell fish. The exceeding beauty of the maine Land. Great Lakes. Large Medows. Seuen Indians. A broad Riuer. A good Harbour.

Now the next day, wee determined to fortifie our selues in a little plot of ground in the middest of the Lake aboue mentioned, where wee built an house, and couered it with sedge, which grew about this Lake in great abundance; in building whereof, wee spent three weekes and more: but the second day after our comming from the Maine, wee espied eleuen Canoas or Boats, with fifty Indians in them, comming toward vs from that part of the Maine, where wee two dayes before landed; and being loath they should discouer our fortification, wee went out into the Sea side to meete them; and comming somewhat neere them, they all sate downe vpon the stones, calling aloud to vs (as wee rightly ghessed) to doe the like, a little distance from them: hauing sate a while in this order, Captaine Gosnold willed mee to goe vnto them, to see what countenance they would make; but as soone as I came vp vnto them, one of them, to whom I had giuen a Knife two dayes before in the Maine, knew mee (whom I also very well remembred) and smiling vpon me, spake somewhat vnto their Lord or Captaine, which sate in the midst of them, who presently rose vp and tooke a large Beuer skinne from one that stood about him, and gaue The English House. 11. Canoas with 50. Indians in them. Their Captain it vnto me, which I requited for that time the best I could: but I, pointing towards captaine Gosnold, made signes vnto him, that hee was our Captaine, and desirous to bee his friend, and enter league with him, which (as I perceiued) he vnderstood, and made signes of ioy: whereupon Captaine Gosnold, with the rest of his companie, being twenty in all, came vp vnto them; and after many signes of gratulations (Captaine Gosnold presenting their Lord with certaine trifles which they wondred at, and highly esteemed) wee became very great friends, and sent for meat aboord our Shalop, and gaue them such meates as wee had then ready dressed, whereof they misliked nothing but our Mustard, whereat they made many a sowre face. While wee were thus merrie, one of them had conueighed a Target of ours into one of their Canoas, which wee suffered, onely to trie whether they were in subiection to this Lord, to whom we made signes (by shewing him another of the same likenesse, and pointing to the Canoa) what one of his com- 10

Seuerall sorts of Furres. panie had done: who suddenly expressed some feare, and speaking angerly to one about him (as wee perceiued by his countenance) caused it presently to be brought backe againe. So the rest of the day wee spent in trading with them for Furres, which are Beauers, Luzernes, Marterns, Otters, Wilde-cat skinnes, very large and deepe Furre, blacke Foxes, Conie skinnes, of the colour of our Hares, but somewhat lesse, Deere skinnes very large, Seale skinnes, and other beasts skinnes, to vs vnknowne.

Red Copper in abundance. They haue also great store of Copper; some very red, and some of a paler colour; none of them but Chaines. haue Chaines, Eare-rings, or Collars of this metall: they head some of their Arrowes herewith much Collars. like our broad Arrow heads, very workmanly made. Their Chaines are many hollow pieces cemented together, each piece of the bignesse of one of our reeds, a finger in length, ten or twelue of them together on a string, which they weare about their neckes: their Collars they weare about their bodies like 20
Drinking cups of Copper. Bandelieres a handfull broad, all hollow pieces like the other, but somewhat shorter, foure hundred pieces in a Collar, very fine and euenly set together. Besides these, they haue large drinking Cups made like Sculls, and other thinne plates of Copper, made much like our Boare-speare blades, all which they so little esteeme, as they offered their fairest Collars and Chaines for a Knife, or such like trifle, but wee seemed little to regard it; yet I was desirous to vnderstand where they had such store of this mettall, and made
Mines of Copper. signes to one of them (with whom I was very familiar) who taking a piece of copper in his hand, made a hole
Mineral stones with his finger in the ground, and withall pointed to the Maine from whence they came. They strike fire
Emerie stones. in this manner; euery one carrieth about him in a Purse of tewd Leather, a Mineral stone (which I take to be their Copper) and with a flat Emerie stone (wherewith Glaziers cut glasse, and Cutlers glase blades) tied fast to the end of a little sticke, gently hee striketh vpon the Mineral stone, and within a stroke or 30
Flaxe. two, a sparke falleth vpon a piece of Touch-wood (much like our Spunge in England) and with the least sparke he maketh a fire presently. Wee had also of their Flaxe, wherewith they make many strings and cords, but it is not so bright of colour as ours in England: I am perswaded they haue store growing vpon the Maine, as also Mines, and many other rich commodities, which we, wanting both time and meanes could not possibly discouer.

Thus they continued with vs three dayes, euery night retiring themselues to the furthermost part of our Iland two or three miles from our Fort: but the fourth day they returned to the Maine, pointing fiue or sixe times to the Sunne, and once to the Maine, which we vnderstood, that within fiue or sixe dayes they would come from the Maine to vs againe: but being in their Canoas a little from the shoare, they made huge cries and shouts of ioy vnto vs, and wee with our Trumpet and Cornet, and casting vp our 40
Indians apt for seruice. caps into the aire, made them the best farewell wee could: yet sixe or seuen of them remayned with vs behinde, bearing vs companie euery day in the Woods, and helped vs to cut and carrie our Sassafras, and some of them lay aboord our ship.

Sassafras. These people as they are exceeding curteous, gentle of disposition, and well conditioned, excelling all
A goodly people, and of good conditions. others that we haue seene; so for shape of body and louely fauour, I thinke they excell all the people of America; of stature much higher than wee; of complexion or colour, much like a darke Oliue; their eye-browes and haire blacke, which they weare long, tyed vp behinde in knots, whereon they pricke feathers of fowles, in fashion of a Crownet: some of them are blacke thinne bearded; they make beards of the haire of beasts: and one of them offered a beard of their making to one of our Saylers, for his that grew on his face, which because it was of a red colour, they iudged to be none of his owne. They are quicke 50
Their apparell. eyed, and stedfast in their lookes, feareless of others harmes, as intending none themselues; some of the meaner sort giuen to filching, which the very name of Sauages (not weighing their ignorance in good or euill) may easily excuse: their garments are of Deere skinnes, and some of them weare Furres round and close about their neckes. They pronounce our Language with great facilitie; for one of them one day sitting by mee, vpon occasion I spake smiling to him these words: How now, sirrha, are you so sawcy with my Tobacco? which words (without any further repetition) he suddenly spake so plaine and distinctly, as if hee had beene a long Scholer in the Language. Many other such trials wee had,
Their women. which are here needlesse to repeat. Their women (such as wee saw) which were but three in all, were but lowe of stature, their eye-browes, haire, apparell, and manner of wearing, like to the men, fat, and very well-fauoured, and much delighted in our companie; the men are very dutifull to- 60
The goodnesse of the Climat. wards them. And truly, the wholsomnesse and temperature of this Climate, doth not onely argue this people to be answerable to this description, but also of a perfect constitution of body, actiue strong, healthfull, and very witty, as the sundry toyes of theirs cunningly wrought, may easily witnesse.

For the agreeing of this Climate with vs (I speake of my selfe, and so I may iustly doe for the rest of our companie) that we found our health and ſtrength all the while we remayned there, ſo to renew and encreaſe, as notwithſtanding our diet and lodging was none of the beſt, yet not one of our companie (God be thanked) felt the leaſt grudging or inclination to any diſeaſe or ſickneſſe, but were much fatter, and in better health than when we went out of England: but after our Barke had taken in ſo much Saſſafras, Cedar, Furres, Skinnes, and other commodities, as were thought conuenient; ſome of our companie that had promiſed Captaine Goſnold to ſtay, hauing nothing but a ſaning voyage in their mindes, made our companie of Inhabitants (which was ſmall enough before) much ſmaller; ſo as Captaine Goſnold ſeeing his whole ſtrength to conſiſt but of twelue men, and they but meanly prouided, determined to returne for England, leauing this Iland (which he called Elizabeths Iland) with as many true ſorrowfull eyes, as were before deſirous to ſee it. So the eighteenth of Iune, being Friday, we weighed, and with indifferent faire winde and weather came to anchor the three and twentieth of Iuly, being alſo Friday (in all, bare fiue weekes) before Exmouth. Their returne.

our

Your Lordſhips to command.

IOHN BRERETON.

A briefe Note of ſuch commodities as we ſaw in the Countrie, notwithſtanding our ſmall time of ſtay.

Trees. Saſſafras trees, the roots whereof at three ſhillings the pound are three hundred thirty ſixe pound the tunne. Cedars tall and ſtraight, in great abundance; Cypres trees, Oakes, Wal-nut trees great ſtore, Elmes, Beech, Hollie, Haſle-nut trees, Cherrie trees, Cotton trees, and other fruit-trees to vs vnknowne. The finder of our Saſſafras in theſe parts, was one Maſter Robert Meriton.

Fowles. Eagles, Hernſhawes, Cranes, Bitters, Mallards, Teales, Geeſe, Pengwins, Oſpreis and Hawkes, Crowes, Rauens, Mewes, Dones, Sea-pies, Black-birds with carnation wings.

Beaſts. Deere in great ſtore, very great and large; Beares, Luzernes, blacke Foxes, Beauers, Otters, Wilde-cats very large and great, Dogs like Foxes, blacke and ſharpe noſed; Conies.

Fruits, Plants, and Herbes. Tabacco, excellent ſweet and ſtrong; Vines more plenty than in France, Ground-nuts, good meate and alſo medicinable; Strawberries, Raſp-berries, Gooſe-berries, Hurtleberries, Peaſe growing naturally, Flaxe, Iris Florentina, whereof Apothecaries make ſweet balls; Sorrell, and many other herbes wherewith they made Sallets.

Fiſhes. Whales, Tortoiſes, both on Land and Sea; Seales Cods, Mackerell, Breames, Herrings, Thornbacke, Hakes, Rock-fiſh, Dog-fiſh, Lobſters, Crabbes, Muſſels, Wilkes, Cockles, Scallops, Oyſters.

Snakes foure foot in length, and ſixe inches about, which the Indians eate for dainty meate, the skinnes whereof they vſe for girdles.

Colours to die with, red, white, and blacke.

Mettals, and Stones. Copper in great abundance, Emerie ſtones, for Glaſiers and Cutlers, Alabaſter very white, Stones glittering and ſhining like Minerall ſtones; Stones of a blue metalline colour, which we take to bee Steele oare; Stones of all ſorts for buildings; Clay, red and white, which may proue good Terra Sigillata.

A briefe Note of the ſending another Barque this preſent yeere 1602. by Sir WALTER RALEIGH, for the ſearching out of his Colonie in Virginia.

Samuel Mace of Weimouth, a very ſufficient Mariner, an honeſt ſober man, who had beene at Virginia twice before, was employed thither by Sir Walter Raleigh, to finde thoſe people which were left there in the yeere 1587. To whoſe ſuccour he hath ſent fiue ſeuerall times at his owne charges. The parties by him ſet forth, performed nothing; ſome of them following their owne profit elſewhere; others returning with friuolous allegations. At this laſt time, to auoide all excuſe, hee bought a Barke, and hired all the companie for wages by the moneth: who departing from Weimouth in March laſt, 1602. fell fortie leagues to the South-weſtward of Hataraske, in 34. degrees or thereabout; and hauing there ſpent a moneth; when they came along the coaſt to ſeeke the people, they did it not, pretending that the extremitie of weather, and loſſe of ſome principall ground-tackle, forced and feared them from ſearching the Port of Hataraske, to which they were ſent. From that place where they abode, they brought Saſſafras, Radix China, or the China Root, Beniamin, Caſſia lignea and a rind of a tree more ſtrong than any Spice as yet vnknowne, with diuers other commodities, which hereafter in a larger diſcourſe may come to light.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XII.

A Voyage set out from the Citie of Bristoll at the charge of the chiefest Merchants and Inhabitants of the said Citie with a small Ship and a Barke for the discouerie of the North part of Virginia, in the yeere 1603. vnder the command of me MARTIN PRINGE.

VPon many probable and reasonable inducements, vsed vnto sundry of the chiefest Merchants of Bristoll, by Master Richard Hakluyt Prebendary of Saint Augustines the Cathedrall Church of the said Citie, after diuers meetings and due consultation they resolued to set forth a Voyage for the farther Discouerie of the North part of Virginia. And first they sent the said Master Hakluyt accompanied with one Master Iohn Angell, and Master Robert Salterne (which had beene in the said Discouerie the yeere before with Captaine Bartholomew Gosnold) to obtaine permission of Sir Walter Raleigh (which had a most ample Patent of all those parts from Queene Elizabeth) to entermeddle and deale in that action. Leaue being obtained of him vnder his hand and Seale, they speedily prepared a small ship called the Speed-well in burthen about fiftie tunnes, manning the same with some thirtie men and Boyes, wherein went for Master and chiefe Commander in the Voyage one Martin Pring, a man very sufficient for his place, and Edmund Ienes his Mate, and Robert Salterne aboue mentioned, as their chiefe Agent, with a Barke called the Discouerer, of six and twentie tunnes or thereabout, wherein went for Master William Browne, and Samuell Kirkland his Mate, both good and skilfull Mariners, being thirteene men and a Boy in all in that Barke. The aforesaid ship and Barke were plentifully victualled for eight monethes, and furnished with slight Merchandizes thought fit to trade with the people of the Countrey, as Hats of diuers colours, greene, blue and yellow, apparell of coarse Kersie and Canuasse readie made, Stockings and Shooes, Sawes, Pick-axes, Spades and Shouels, Axes, Hatchets, Hookes, Kniues, Sizzers, Hammers, Nailes, Chissels, Fish-hookes, Bels, Beades, Bugles, Looking-glasses, Thimbles, Pinnes, Needles, Threed, and such like. They set saile from Kingrode the twentieth day of March.

M. Salterne yet liueth neither is his zeale dead to this action. He is now a Minister and hath both by word and writing to mee testified his affection to Virginia.

M. Pring whose Voyage to the East Indies are in the former Tome.

April 10. 1603. We set saile from Milford Hauen (where the winds had stayed vs a fortnight, in which space we heard of Queene Elizabeths death) the tenth of Aprill 1603. In our course we passed by the Iles of the Açores, had first sight of the Pike, and afterward of the Iland of Cuerno and Flores, and after we had runne some fiue hundred leagues, we fell with a multitude of small Ilands on the North Coast of Virginia, in the latitude of 43. degrees, the of Iune, which Ilands wee found very pleasant to behold, adorned with goodly grasse and sundry sorts of Trees, as Cedars, Spruce, Pines, and Firre-trees. Heere wee found an excellent fishing for Cods, which are better then those of New-found-land, and withall we saw good and Rockie ground fit to drie them vpon; also we see no reason to the contrary, but that Salt may bee made in these parts, a matter of no small importance. We sayled to the South-west end of these Ilands, and there rode with our ships vnder one of the greatest. One of them we named Foxe Iland, because we found those kind of beasts thereon. So passing through the rest with our Boates to the mayne Land, which lieth for a good space North-east and South-west, we found very safe riding among them, in sixe, seuen, eight, ten and twelue fathomes. At length comming to the Mayne in the latitude of 43. degrees and an halfe, we ranged the same to the South-west. In which course we found foure Inlets, the most Easterly whereof was barred at the mouth, but hauing passed ouer the barre, wee ranne vp into it fiue miles, and for a certaine space found very good depth, and comming out againe, as we sailed South-westward, wee lighted vpon two other Inlets, which vpon our search we found to pierce not farre into the Land, the fourth and most Westerly was the best, which we rowed vp ten or twelue miles.

They discouer many Ilands. Good fishing place.

Foxe Iland.

In all these places we found no people, but signes of fires where they had beene. Howbeit we beheld very goodly Groues and Woods repleniſhed with tall Okes, Beeches, Pine-trees, Firre-trees, Hasels, Wich-hasels and Maples. We saw here also sundry sorts of Beasts, as Stags, Deere, Beares, Wolues, Foxes, Lusernes, and Dogges with sharpe noses. But meeting with no Sassafras, we left these places with all the foresaid Ilands, shaping our course for Sauage Rocke, discouered the yeere before by Captaine Gosnold, where going vpon the Mayne we found people, with whom we had no long conuersation, because here also we could find no Sassafras. Departing hence we bare into that great Gulfe which Captaine Gosnold ouer-shot the yeere before, coasting and finding people on the North side thereof. Not yet satisfied in our expectation, we left them and sailed ouer, and came to an Anchor on the South side in the latitude of 41. degrees and odde minutes: where we went on Land in a certaine Bay, which we called Whitson Bay, by the name of the Worshipfull Master Iohn Whitson then Maior of the Citie of Bristoll, and one of the chiefe Aduenturers, and finding a pleasant Hill thereunto adioyning, wee called it Mount Aldworth, for Sauage Rocke. People.

Great Gulfe.

Whitson Bay. M. Aldworth.

Digitized by Google

for Maſter Robert Aldworths ſake a chiefe furtherer of the Voyage, aſwell with his Purſe as with his trauell. Here we had ſufficient quantitie of Saſſafras.

At our going on ſhore, vpon view of the people and ſight of the place, wee thought it conuenient to make a ſmall baricado to keepe diligent watch and ward in, for the aduertizement and ſuccour of our men, while they ſhould worke in the Woods. During our abode on ſhore, the people of the Countrey came to our men ſometimes ten, twentie, fortie or threeſcore, and at one time one hundred and twentie at once. We vſed them kindly, and gaue them diuers ſorts of our meaneſt Merchandize. They did eat Peaſe and Beanes with our men. Their owne victuals were moſt of fiſh. The people viſit them.

We had a youth in our company that could play vpon a Gitterne, in whoſe homely Muſicke they tooke great delight, and would giue him many things, as Tobacco, Tobacco-pipes, Snakes ſkinnes of ſixe foot long, which they vſe for Girdles, Fawnes skinnes, and ſuch like, and danced twentie in a Ring, and the Gitterne in the middeſt of them, vſing many Sauage geſtures, ſinging Io, Ia, Io, Ia, Ia, Io: him that firſt brake the ring, the reſt would knocke and cry out vpon. Some few of them had plates of Braſſe a foot long, and halfe a foote broad before their breaſts. Their weapons are Bowes of fiue or ſixe foot long of Wich-haſell, painted blacke and yellow, the ſtrings of three twiſts of ſinewes, bigger then our Bow-ſtrings. Their Arrowes are of a yard and an handfull long not made of Reeds, but of a fine light wood very ſmooth and round with three long and deepe blacke feathers of ſome Eagle, Vulture, or Kite, as cloſely faſtened with ſome binding matter, as any Fletcher of ours can glue them on. Their Quiuers are full a yard long, made of long dried Ruſhes wrought about two handfuls broad aboue, and one handfull beneath with prettie workes and compartiments, Diamant wiſe of red and other colours. The Sauages take great delight in muſicke. Dances. Weapons.

We carried with vs from Briſtoll two excellent Maſtiues, of whom the Indians were more afraid, then of twentie of our men. One of theſe Maſtiues would carrie a halfe Pike in his mouth. And one Maſter Thomas Bridges a Gentleman of our company accompanied only with one of theſe Dogs, and paſſed ſixe miles alone in the Countrey hauing loſt his fellowes, and returned ſafely. And when we would be rid of the Sauages company wee would let looſe the Maſtiues, and ſuddenly with out-cryes they would flee away. Theſe people in colour are inclined to a ſwart, tawnie, or Cheſtnut colour, not by nature but accidentally, and doe weare their haire brayded in foure parts, and truſſed vp about their heads with a ſmall knot behind: in which haire of theirs they ſticke many feathers and toyes for brauerie and pleaſure. They couer their priuities only with a piece of leather drawne betwixt their twiſts and faſtened to their Girdles behind and before: whereunto they hang their bags of Tobacco. They ſeeme to bee ſomewhat iealous of their women, for we ſaw not paſt two of them, who weare Aprons of Leather skins before them downe to the knees, and a Beares skinne like an Iriſh Mantle ouer one ſhoulder. The men are of ſtature ſomewhat taller then our ordinary people, ſtrong, ſwift, well proportioned, and giuen to treacherie, as in the end we perceiued. The great vſe of Maſtiues. Ornaments.

Their Boats, whereof we brought one to Briſtoll, were in proportion like a Wherrie of the Riuer of Thames, ſeuenteene foot long and foure foot broad, made of the Barke of a Birch-tree, farre exceeding in bigneſſe thoſe of England: it was ſowed together with ſtrong and tough Oziers or twigs, and the ſeames couered ouer with Rozen or Turpentine little inferiour in ſweetneſſe to Frankincenſe, as we made triall by burning a little thereof on the coales at ſundry times after our comming home: it was alſo open like a Wherrie, and ſharpe at both ends, ſauing that the beake was a little bending roundly vpward. And though it carried nine men ſtanding vpright, yet it weighed not at the moſt aboue ſixtie pounds in weight, a thing almoſt incredible in regard of the largeneſſe and capacitie thereof. Their Oares were flat at the end like an Ouen peele, made of Aſh or Maple very light and ſtrong, about two yards long, wherewith they row very ſwiftly: Paſſing vp a Riuer we ſaw certaine Cottages together, abandoned by the Sauages, and not farre off we beheld their Gardens and one among the reſt of an Acre of ground, and in the ſame was ſowne Tobacco, Pompions, Cowcumbers and ſuch like; and ſome of the people had Maiz or Indian Wheate among them. In the fields we found wild Peaſe, Strawberries very faire and bigge, Gooſe-berries, Raſpices, Hurts, and other wild fruits. The faſhion of their Boats. Excellent ſweet Rozen and Turpentine. Their Gardens Corne and plants.

Hauing ſpent three Weekes vpon the Coaſt before we came to this place where we meant to ſtay & take in our lading, according to our inſtructions giuen vs in charge before our ſetting forth, we pared and digged vp the Earth with ſhouels, and ſowed Wheate, Barley, Oates, Peaſe, and ſundry ſorts of Garden Seeds, which for the time of our abode there, being about ſeuen Weeks, although they were late ſowne, came vp very well, giuing certaine teſtimonie of the goodneſſe of the Climate and of the Soyle. And it ſeemeth that Oade, Hempe, Flaxe, Rape-ſeed and ſuch like which require a rich and fat ground, would proſper excellently in theſe parts. For in diuers places here we found graſſe aboue knee deepe.

As for Trees the Country yeeldeth Saſſafras a plant of ſouereigne vertue for the French Pox, and as ſome of late haue learnedly written good againſt the Plague and many other Maladies; Vines, Cedars, Okes, Aſhes, Beeches, Birch trees, Cherie trees bearing fruit whereof wee did eate, Haſels, Wich-haſels, the beſt wood of all other to make Sope-aſhes withall, Walnut-trees,

Digitized by Google

Maples, holy to make Bird-lime with, and a kinde of tree bearing a fruit like a small red Peare-plum with a crowne or knop on the top (a plant whereof carefully wrapped vp in earth, Master Robert Salterne brought to Bristoll.) We found also low trees bearing faire Cheries. There were likewise a white kind of Plums which were not growne to their perfect ripenesse. With diuers other sorts of trees to vs vnknowne.

The Beasts here are Stags, fallow Deere in abundance, Beares, Wolues, Foxes, Lusernes, and (some say) Tygres, Porcupines, and Dogges with sharpe and long noses, with many other sorts of wild beasts, whose Cases and Furres being hereafter purchased by exchange may yeeld no small gaine to vs. Since as we are certainly informed, the Frenchmen brought from Canada the value of thirtie thousand Crownes in the yeere 1604. almost in Beuers and Otters skinnes only. The most vsuall Fowles are Eagles, Vultures, Hawkes, Cranes, Herons Crowes, Gulls, and great store of other Riuer and Sea-fowles. And as the Land is full of Gods good blessings, so is the Sea replenished with great abundance of excellent fish, as Cods sufficient to lade many ships, which we found vpon the Coast in the moneth of Iune, Seales to make Oile withall, Mullets, Turbuts, Mackerels, Herrings, Crabs, Lobsters, Creuises, and Muscles with ragged Pearles in them.

Barke sent home.

By the end of Iuly we had laded our small Barke called the Discouerer, with as much Sassafras as we thought sufficient, and sent her home into England before, to giue some speedie contentment to the Aduenturers: who arriued safely in Kingrode aboue a fortnight before vs. After their departure we so bestirred our selues, that our shippe also had gotten in her lading, during which time there fell out this accident. On a day about noone tide while our men which vsed to cut downe Sassafras in the Woods were asleepe, as they vsed to doe for two houres in the heat of the day, there came downe about seuen score Sauages armed with their Bowes and Arrowes, and enuironed our House or Barricado, wherein were foure of our men alone with their Muskets to keepe Centinell, whom they sought to haue come downe vnto them, which they vtterly refused, and stood vpon their guard. Our Master likewise being very carefull and circumspect hauing not past two with him in the shippe put the same in the best defence he could, lest they should haue inuaded the same, and caused a piece of great Ordnance to bee shot off, to giue terrour to the Indians, and warning to our men which were fast asleepe in the Woods: at the noyse of which Peece they were a little awaked, and beganne a little to call for Foole and Gallant, their great and fearefull Mastiues, and full quietly laid themselues downe againe, but beeing quickned vp eftsoones againe with a second shot they rowsed vp themselues, betooke them to their weapons and with their Mastiues, great Foole with an halfe Pike in his mouth drew downe to their ship: whom when the Indians beheld afarre off, with the Mastiue which they most feared, in dissembling manner they turned all to a iest and sport, and departed away in friendly manner: yet not long after, euen the day before our departure, they set fire on the Woods where wee wrought, which wee did behold to burne for a mile space, and the very same day that wee weighed Anchor, they came downe to the shoare in greater number, to wit, very neere two hundred by our estimation, and some of them came in their Boates to our ship, and would haue had vs come in againe: but we sent them backe, and would none of their entertainment.

Danger of the Sauages.

About the eighth or ninth of August, wee left this excellent Hauen at the entrance whereof we found twentie fathomes water, and rode at our ease in seuen fathomes being Land-locked, the Hauen winding in compasse like the shell of a Snaile, and it is in latitude of one and forty degrees and fiue and twentie minutes.

This by the way is not to be forgotten, that our Captaine fell so much to the Northward because he would find high grounds, where commonly the best Hauens are: which also fell out to his expectation. We also obserued that we could find no Sassafras but in sandie ground. In our returne we brought our selues into the latitude of eight and thirtie degrees about the Açores for certaine causes, and within fiue weekes space came from our Port of Virginia, into the Soundings of England, but there being long encountred with Easterly winds, we came at length into Kingrode, the second of October 1603. The Discouerer was out fiue moneths and an halfe. The Speedwell was out sixe moneths vpon the Voyage.

A Relation of the Voyage made to Virginia, in the Elizabeth of London, a Barke of fiftie tunnes by Captaine BARTHOLOMEW GILBERT, in the yeere 1603. Written by Master THOMAS CANNER a Gentleman of Bernards Inne his companion in the same Voyage.

VPon Wednesday in Easter weeke, the seuenteenth of Aprill after, I had taken my leaue of some few of my louing and deere friends in Bernards Inne, I rode toward Southampton, there to bespeake Bisket and some other prouision for our Barke, wherein Master Bartholomew Gilbert went as Captaine, which had beene in Virginia the yeere before with Captaine Bartholomew Gosnold.

Digitized by Google

nold. After our businesse was dispatched here, wee came into Plimmouth, from whence wee put forth the tenth of May. And the six and twentieth of the same, we were in the latitude of 32. degrees, hoping to haue had sight of the Ile of Madera, whereof we missed, in which course we met with two or three English men of warre.

The first of Iune, we were in the latitude of 27. degrees, and ihaled ouer toward the Ilands of the West Indies, and the fifteenth of this moneth toward night wee saw Land. Master Gilbert and the Master Henrie Suite dwelling within the Iron Gate of the Towre of London, tooke it to be the Bermudas: being very neere the shore they sounded many times and had no ground, at the last they found good ground in fourteene or fifteene fathomes. There wee cast Anchor. In the morning we weighed, and sounded still as we trended by the shoare: but after wee were past a Cables length from our Road, we had no Land againe in forty or fifty fathomes: we kept still by the shore not yet being certaine what Iland it was. The sixteenth in the morning, wee spied the people comming from the shore, who when they came neere, cried out for barter or trade: when they came close aboord, they made signes and cried out to see our colours, which we presently put forth in the maine top, and told them we were Ingleses, Amigos, and Hermanos, that is, Englishmen, their friends and brothers. Assoone as they vnderstood we were Englishmen, they were bolder to come neere: we threw them a Rope, and one came aboord vs: wee traded with them for some Tobacco, Pine-apples, Plantanes, Pompions and such things as they had: wee gaue them Bugles, Kniues, Whistles, and such toyes. Here we kept close by the shore. When this Canoa had traded with vs, and vttered all they had and drunke of our Beere, beeing kindly vsed they departed: and then presently after diuers Canoas came, we traded and vsed them as the first. One of them told vs that Iland was Santa Lucia. We bestowed all that forenoone shaking in the wind (for we had no ground to Anchor) neere the shore to trade with them. Then we set our course for Saint Vincent, but finding a current against vs and the wind very scant, we doubted we should not fetch it, and that if we did, peraduenture we might bee put to the leeward of Dominica, and so consequently of Mevis or Nieues; for which Iland we were specially bound for to cut Lignum vitæ, in the same. Therefore Master Gilbert thought good to let Saint Vincent alone, although in it is the best Tobacco of all the Ilands, yet in the end hee put roomer for Dominica, whereof we had sight the seuenteenth of Iune, and came close to the shore; and presently one Canoa came aboord, as at Santa Lucia; being sent with two men belike to discouer vs, and to see what entertainment they should haue, we vsed them kindly and so dismissed them. There came more full of men, with diuers of their commodities.

They trade at Santa Lucia.

Dominica.

The nineteenth in the morning being Sunday, we anchored in a good Road at Mevis, and after went on shore to seeke Lignum vitæ. Master Gilbert, with the Master and diuers of the company sought farre into the Woods, but found none but one dirtie Tree, and here and there where one had bin cut: so we were in doubt to find enough heere to load our ship, a iust plague vnto vs for prophaning the Sabbath in trauelling about our worldly businesse, when there was no necessitie. This day in the Euening some went out with the Boate vnto the shore, and brought on boord a Tortoyse so big that foure men could not get her into the Boate but tied her fast by one legge vnto the Boat, and so towed her to the ship, when they had her by the ship, it was no easie matter to get her on boord.

Mevis.

Great Tortoyse.

The next day we went on shore againe to search another part of the wood for Lignum vitæ: and then God be thanked we found enough. This day at night we opened our Tortoyse, which had in her about 500. Egges, excellent sweet meate, and so is all the whole fish. Vpon Tuesday in the morning we went all on shore saiing the Carpenter and Thomas, and Master Gilberts man to fell wood, and this day we felled good store. All the rest of this moneth and three dayes more we continued here euery day labouring sore, first in sawing downe the great trees, and sawing them againe into logs, portable out of the thicke wood to the Sea-shoare, so in the Boates, and so to the ship: where M. Gilbert his paines profited double as well in example as in worke, for hee was neuer idle, but either searching out more trees, or fetching drinke for the Labourers, or doing one thing or other: so that in this iust fortnight that wee stayed here, wee had gotten on boord some twenty tuns. Within a few dayes after the Tortoyse was eaten God sent vs another. One of these fishes were sufficient meat for twentie men for three or foure dayes if it could bee preserued, but in that Climate no salting can preserue it aboue two dayes, hardly so long. Now the wood growing thinne, and hardly to be found on this Iland, he thought it best to stay no longer here, but to goe for Virginia, to search for better store. And so vpon Sunday the third of Iuly in the afternoone we weighed Anchor, and sailed North-west and by North, and that night passed by Saint Christopher, and another little Iland. Munday the fourth in the morning we had sight of the Iland, we went into the Woods to search for Lignum vitæ, but found none but one tree, which he cut and went on boord, we sought also for fresh water, but found none: At Euening went on shore into the bottome of the Bay to dray the Net; and there we gat good store of fine fresh fish, and much more, enough to haue laden our Boat we should haue gotten, if at euery draught we had not had in the Net a Tortoyse, which still brak through and so carried away the fish with them. At one draught among the rest we had two in the Net, a yong one and an old on: the Net held the young one.

Lignum vitæ.

S. Christopher.

Abundance of Tortoyses.

They dissemboke.

Wee weighed and went through betweene the two Ilands into the mayne Ocean, toward our long desired Countrey Virginia, distant three hundred and fiftie leagues from vs. Wee sayled North North-west.

The seuenth, we ran still North-west and North and by West. The eight, wee kept the same course. The ninth, we kept still the same course. The winde beganne to vere some thing to the Southward, which had beene constant still, from the Ilands of the Canaries, vnto the Ilands of the West Indies. And now began the winde to draw towards the West, and then is it as constant there. The reason I deferre to longer consideration. The current setteth out of the Gulfe of Mexico, and from the mayne shore.

The Westerne winds begin.

Sunday the tenth, we kept still the same course, and had now but a small gale almost becalmed. The eleuenth, we continued the same course with the same small gale we went North. Tuesday the twelfth we kept the same course, if any at all, for, for the most part we were becalmed.

Wednesday the thirteenth, the calme continued, the Sunne being extremely hot in the calme. Thursday the fourteenth, the calme continued as hot as before. These dayes we ayned our Newland, fish called Poore Iohn, which proued ill done. For after it was ayred, it rotted the sooner, being burnt in the same. On Friday the fifteenth, God sent vs a reasonable gale. The sixteenth and seuenteenth, the calme came againe. Munday, we had a good gale, and went North and by West, and North North-west. The nineteenth, twentieth, and one and twentieth, we had an excellent gale, and ranne North North-west. Then we cast out the Lead and looked out for land, but found no ground nor saw no land, and therefore we much doubted that the current had set vs very farre to the leeward of the place which wee were bound for, being the Chesepian Bay; but that could not be knowne till it pleased God to bring vs to land. In the afternoone about sixe of the clocke we cast out the Lead againe, and had ground in thirtie fathomes, whereof we were glad and thanked God, knowing we could not be farre from land.

Poore Iohn.

Ground in 30. fathomes.

Saturday the three and twentieth in the morning, about eight of the clocke wee saw land in the height of 40. degrees and odde minutes, very fine low land, appearing farre off to bee full of tall Trees, and a fine sandie shoare, but a great siege: we saw no Harbour, and therefore coasted along to seeke one to the Northward, the wind being at West.

Sunday the foure and twentieth, the wind being aboue the North-east we beat hard to fetch an Head-land, where we thought we saw an Harbour: but when we came vp with it, wee perceiued it was none, and all our labour lost. And therefore the wind being now more full in our teeth at the North-east, wee considered it were better to put roome, so that if the winde should stand, then we should fetch the Bay of Chesepian, which Master Gilbert so much thirsted after, to seeke out the people for Sir Walter Raleigh left neere those parts in the yeere 1587. if not, perhaps we might find some Road or Harbour in the way to take in some fresh water: for now wee had none aboord.

An Headland.

The mouth of the Chesepian Bay.

On Munday the fiue and twentieth of Iuly at night wee came neere the mouth of the Bay: but the wind blew so sore, and the Sea was so high, that the Master durst not put in that night into the Sea: and so continued next day.

On Wednesday the seuen and twentieth, at night the winde came faire againe, and wee bare againe for it all night, and the wind presently turned againe. Thursday the eight and twentieth, considering our extremitie for water and wood, victuals and beere likewise consuming very fast, we could no longer beate for it, and therefore ran roomer, determining for this time to seeke it no more.

They departed Eastward from the mouth of the Chesepioc Bay.

Friday the nine and twentieth, being not farre from the shoare, which appeared vnto vs exceeding pleasant and full of goodly Trees, and with some shew of the entrance of a Riuer, our Captaine Bartholomew Gilbert accompanied with Master Thomas Canner a Gentleman of Bernards Inne, Richard Harison the Masters Mate, Henry Kenton our Chirurgion, and one Derricke a Dutchman, went on shore in the Boate from the ship which lay aboue a mile from the land, and with their weapons marched vp into the Countrey, leauing two youths to keepe the Boate: but shortly after the Indians set vpon them, and one or two of them fell downe wounded in sight of our yong men that kept the Boat, which had much a doe to saue themselues and it. For some of the Indians roming downe to them, would haue haled it on shore, which notwithstanding they saued, and with heauie hearts gat vnto the ship with the losse of their Captain and foure of their principall men. Thus being but eleuen men and Boyes in all in the ship, though our want of water and wood were great, yet wee durst not aduenture the losse of any more of our small company in this place; Therefore our Master Henry Sute tooke his course home for England by the Iles of the Açores, and fell first with the Pike, and afterward entring into our Chanell, had first sight of Portland, and thence came vp the Riuer of Thames vnto Ratcliffe, about the end of September 1603. finding the Citie most grieuously infected with a terrible plague.

A shew of entrance of a Riuer.

Captaine Gilbert and foure more slaine by the Indians.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XIII.

Extracts of a Virginian Voyage made An. 1605. by Captaine GEORGE WAYMOVTH, in the Arch-angell. Set forth by the Right Honorable HENRY Earle of South-hampton, and the Lord THOMAS ARVNDEL, written by IAMES ROSIER.

VPon Easter day, the last of March, the winde comming at North North-east: about fiue of the clocke after noone, we weighed anchor and put to Sea from the Downes, [in the Name of God] being very well victualled, and furnished with Munition and all necessaries; our whole companie being nine and twenty persons, of whom I dare boldly say, few Voyages haue beene manned forth with better Sea-men generally, in respect of our small number. March. Easter day wee put to Sea.

Munday the thirteenth of May, about eleuen of the clocke in the fore-noone, our Captaine iudging we were not farre from Land, sounded; and we had soft oze in an hundred and sixty fathome: at foure of the clooke after noone wee sounded againe, and had the like oze in an hundred fathome. Sounding wee found ground.

From ten a clocke that night till three a clocke in the morning, our Captain tooke in all Sayles and lay at hull, being desirous to fall with the Land in the day time, because it was an vnknown Coast, which it pleased God in his mercy to grant vs, otherwise surely we had runne our Shippe vpon the hidden Rockes, and perished all: for when we set sayle, we sounded in an hundred fathom: and by eight a clocke, hauing not made aboue fiue or sixe leagues, our Captaine vpon a sudden change of water, supposing verily he saw the land: presently sounded, and had but fiue fathome: much maruelling because we saw no Land, he sent one to the top, who descried a whitish sandy Cliffe, which bare West North-west about sixe leagues off: but comming neerer within three or foure leagues, we saw many breaches still neerer the Land. At last we espied a great breach ahead vs right along the shoare, into which, before we entred, our Captaine thought best to hoise out his Ship-boat and sound it: which if hee had not done, wee had there ended our Voyage, together with our liues: for he bare vp the Ship as neere as he could after the Boate, vntill Master Cam his Mate being in the Boat, weffed and called to him to winde about and stand off, for in this breach he had very shoald water, two fathome vpon Rockes, and sometime they supposed they saw the Rocke within three or foure foot, whereon the Sea made a very high strong breach, which we might discerne (from the top) to runne along as wee sayled by it, sixe or seuen leagues to the Southward: and we saw no end thereof. Wherefore we were constrained to put backe againe from the Land; and sounding (the weather being faire) wee found our selues embayed with continuall Shoalds and Rocks, in a most vncertaine ground; as by iudgement of our Captaine and whole companie, they had neuer knowne the like; from fiue and sixe fathome, at the next cast of the Lead wee should haue fifteene and eighteene fathome all hard Rocke ouer many which (by the vnspeakable goodnesse and mercy of God towards vs) wee passed. For if we had bare in with it but the day before (which was exceeding tempestuous) or in the night, we could by no meanes haue escaped the danger. But God so blessed vs, that we had weather and winde as faire as poore men could wish, in this distresse; whereby we both perfectly discerned euery breach, and with the winde were able to turne, where wee saw most hope of safest passage. Thus we parted from the Land, which wee had not so much before desired: and at the first sight reioyced: as now wee all ioyfully praised God, that it had pleased him so miraculously to deliuer vs from so imminent danger of death before our eyes. Our Captaine found himselfe in the latitude of 41 degrees and an halfe. Here we found great store of fish, and saw many Whales, as we had done two or three dayes before. May 14. Land descried. A dangerous place of rocks and shoalds. Latitude 41. degrees and an halfe.

Wee stood off that night and all the next day, being Wednesday: but the winde still continuing for many dayes betweene the points of South South-west and West South-west, so as we could not by any possible meanes make any way to the Southward in regard of our great want of water and Wood (which was now spent) wee much desired Land, and therefore sought for it, where the winde would best suffer vs to refresh our selues.

Thursday the sixteenth day of May, we stood directly in with the Land: and we much maruelled that we descried it not: wherein wee found our Sea Charts very false laying out Land where none was, for though we bare in directly with it according to them: yet in almost fifty leagues running we found none. Sea-charts false.

Friday the seuenteenth of May, about sixe a clocke at night, wee descried Land, which bare from vs North North-east: but because it blew a great gale of winde, the Sea very high and neere night, not fit to come vpon an vnknowne coast, our Captaine stood off till two of the clocke in the morning being Saturday and Whitson Eue: then standing with it againe, wee descried it by eight a clocke in morning, bearing North-east from vs. It appeared a meane high Land, as we after found it, being but an Iland of no great compasse: but I hope the most fortunate Land descried. Saturday wee made the land.

Digitized by Google

that euer men discouered, as shall appeare by the sequell. About twelue a clocke that day, wee came to an anchor on the North side of this Iland in forty fathome water, about a league from shoare. This Iland is woody, growne ouer with Firre, Birch, and Beech, as farre as we saw along the shoare, and so likely to be within. On the Verge growe Gooseberries, Strawberries, wilde Pease, and wilde Rose bushes. The fresh water issued down the rocky Cliffes in many places; and much fowle of sundry kindes breed vpon the shoare and Rockes. While wee were at shoare, our men aboord with a few hookes got aboue thirty great Cod and Haddocke, which gaue vs a taste of the great plenty of fish which we found afterward, whereseuer we went vpon the coast.

Our Captaine named this S. Georges Iland.

Great plenty of fish.

From hence we might discerne many Ilands, and the maine Land, from the West South-west to the East North-east; and North North-east from vs a great way as it then seemed (and as we after found it) vp into the Maine, we might discerne very high Mountaines, although the Maine seemed but lowe Land, which gaue vs a hope, that it might please God, to direct vs to the Discouery of some good, although wee were driuen by windes farre from that place, whether both by our direction and desire, we euer intended to shape the course of our Voyage.

Wee descried the Maine and Mountaines.

The next day being Whitsunday, because we rode too much open to the Sea, and windes, wee wayed anchor about twelue a clocke, and came along to the other Ilands more adioyning to the Maine, and in the Road directly with the Mountaines, about three leagues from the first Iland where we anchored. When we came neere vnto them (sounding all along in a good depth) our Captaine manned his Ship-boat, and sent her before, with Thomas Cam one of his Mates, whom he knew to be of good experience, to search and sound about and between the Ilands, for a place safe for our ship to ride in. In the meane while we kept aloofe at Sea, hauing giuen order to them in the Boat, by a token to weffe in the ship if he found a conuenient Harbour, which it pleased God to send vs, farre beyond our expectation in a most safe birth, defended from all windes in an excellent depth of water for ships of any burthens in six, seuen, eight, nine and ten fathome vpon a clay oze, very tough, where is good moring, euen on the Rocks vpon the Cliffe side.

Vpon Whitsunday wee came into an excellent Harbour.

We all with great admiration praised God, who had from so apparent danger miraculously deliuered vs, and directed vs vpon this day (vpon which he sent the chiefe promised Director of all goodnesse vnto his Apostles and Disciples) into such a place, wherof here before we reade none to haue made either description or relation, and then which neither our selues could wish, or Nature affoord more secure. In remembrance whereof, our Captaine named it Pentecost Harbour.

Pentecost Harbour.

Whitsun Munday the twentieth day of May, by three a clocke in the morning, our Captaine caused the Shalop to be carried ashoare: where while some were busied about her, himselfe set others to worke in digging Wels to receiue the water, which we found issuing downe out of the Land in many places, and rising amidst the rocky Cliffes. In digging (amongst other things) we found in some places (and not deepe) clay ground, blue, red and white, to make Bricke or Tile, fit for building. This day our Pinnace was fitted together and lanched; in small time with two or three hookes were fished sufficiently for our whole companie three dayes, with great Cod, Haddocke, and some Thornbacke. Towards night we drew with a small Same of 20. fathom iust by the shoare, where we got about 30. very good Lobsters, many Rockfish, some Plaise, and other small fishes very good; and fishes called Lumpes, very pleasant to taste. And this wee generally obserued, that all the fish of what kind soeuer we tooke, were well fed, fat, and in tast very sweet.

Clay.

Our Pinnace Lanched.

Varietie of fishes.

Wednesday the two and twentieth of May, our Captaine went ashoare with our men, where wee felled and cut wood for our ships vse, cleansed and scoured our Wells. Wee likewise digged a small plot of ground, wherein among some Garden seeds (which most the birds destroyed) we set Pease and Barley, which in sixteene dayes grew eight inches, and so continued euery day growing more than halfe an inch: although this was but the crust of the ground, and farre inferiour to the mould we after found in the Maine.

All the next day we labored hard to make vp our wood, because our Captaine intended not to spare, or spend any more time in that of our Voyage. This day our Boat fished againe as before, because wee still were much refreshed with the fresh fish.

Wee fished.

Friday the foure and twentieth of May, after we had made an end of cutting wood, and carrying some water aboord our ship. Our Captaine with fourteene shot and Pike marched about, and thorow part of two of the Ilands, one of which we ghessed to be foure or fiue miles in compasse, and a mile broad.

Along the shoare, and some space within where the wood hindereth not, growe plentifully, Rashberries, Gooseberries, Strawberries, Corant trees, Rose bushes, wilde Vines, Angelica a soueraine herbe, many other fruits wee knew not. All within the Ilands, growe wood of sundry sorts, some very great, and generally all tall: Beech, Birch, Ash, Maple, Spruce, Cherrie tree, Ewe, Oake great and firme, with so fine graine and colour, as our Captaine, and men of best experience, had neuer seene the like. But the Firre trees great and small are most abundant, which I name last, as not the least of excellent profit: for from it issueth Turpentine in maruellous plenty, and so sweet as our Chirurgeon and others affirmed they neuer saw so good in England. Wee pulled off much Gumme congealed on the outside of the Barke which gaue an odour like Frankincense. This would be a very great benefit for making Tarre and Pitch.

The fruits of the Ilands.

Trees.

Turpentine plentifull, for Tarre and Pitch.

We

Digitized by Google

We ſtaied the longer in this place, not onely becauſe of our good Harbour (which is an excellent comfort) but alſo becauſe euery day we found the Iland, more and more to diſcouer vnto vs his pleaſant fruitfulneſſe, inſomuch, as many of our company wiſhed themſelues ſettled here.

Alſo our men found abundance of great Muſſels among the Rockes; and in ſome of them many ſmall Pearles. In one Muſſell (which we drew vp in our Same) was found foureteene Pearles, whereof one was of pretty bigneſſe and orient, in another aboue fifty ſmall Pearles; and if one had had a Dragge, no doubt we had found ſome of great value, ſeeing theſe did certainely ſhew that here they were bred: the ſhels within all gliſtering with mother of Pearle. Pearle.

Thurſday the thirtieth of May, the Captaine with thirteene departed in the Shallop, leauing the Ship in a good harbour.

Diuers Canoas of Sauages came to vs. The ſhape of their body is very proportionable, and well countenanced, not very tall, nor bigge, but in ſtature like to vs; they paint their bodies with blacke, their faces ſome with red, ſome with blacke, and ſome with blew. Their cloathing is Beuer skins, and Deere skins, hanging downe to their knees before and behinde, made faſt together vpon the ſhoulder with a leather ſtring; ſome of them weare ſleeues, ſome buskins of leather sewed very thin and ſoft. Some weare the haire of their skins outward, ſome inward; they haue beſides a peece of skin, which they binde about their waſte, and betweene their legges to couer their priuities. They ſuffer no haire to grow vpon their faces, but vpon their head very long and very blacke, which behinde they binde vp with a ſtring on a long round knot, ſome of them haue haire all curled naturally. They ſeemed all very ciuill and very merry, ſhewing tokens of much thankfulneſſe for thoſe things we gaue them; which they expreſſe in their language by theſe words, oh, ho, often repeated. We found them then (as after) a people of very good inuention, quicke vnderſtanding, and ready capacity. Their ſhape of body. Their cloathing. Very thankful. Of good capacity and vnderſtanding.

Their Canoas are made of the barke of Beech, ſtrengthned within with ribbes and hoopes of wood, in ſo good faſhion and with ſuch excellent ingenious art, as our men that had beene often in the Indies, ſaid they farre exceeded any that euer they had ſeene. The chiefe of them told me by ſignes, that they would goe fetch Furres and Skins, and pointed to be with vs againe by that time the Sunne ſhould come ſomewhat beyond the midſt of the firmament. Their Canoas very artificiall.

About ten a clocke this day we deſcried our Pinnace returning towards vs. Our Captaine had in this ſmall time diſcouered vp a great Riuer, trending all almoſt into the Maine. Vntill his returne our Captaine left on ſhoare where they landed, in a path (which ſeemed to be frequented) a Pipe, a Brooch, and a Knife, thereby to know if the Sauages had recourſe that way, becauſe they could at that time ſee none of them, onely a Beaſt a farre of, which they thought to be a Deere. Trifles left on ſhoare.

The next day being Saturday, and the firſt of Iune, wee traded with the Sauages all the forenoone vpon the Shoare, where were eight and twenty Sauages, and becauſe our Ship rode nigh, we were but fiue or ſixe, where for Kniues and other trifles, to the value of foure or fiue ſhillings, we had forty good Skins, Beuers, Otter, and other which we knew not what to call them. Our trade being ended, many of them came aboord vs, and eate by our fire, and would be very merry and bold, in regard of our kinde vſage of them. Our Captaine ſhewed them a ſtrange thing, which they wondered; His Sword and mine hauing beene touched with the Loadſtone, tooke vp their Knife and held it faſt when they plucked it away; and made their Knife turne being laid on a blocke: and giuing their Knife a touch with his Sword, made that take vp a Needle, which they much marueiled at. This we did to cauſe them to imagine ſome great power in vs, and for that to loue and feare vs. Wee traded with the Sauages. They wondred at the effect of the Loadſtone

When we went a Shoare to trade with them in one of their Canoas, I ſaw their Bowes and Arrowes, which in their ſight I tooke vp and drew an Arrow in one of them, which I found to be of a reaſonable ſtrength, able to carry an Arrow fiue or ſix ſcore ſtrongly; and one of them tooke it and brew as we draw our Bowes, not like the Indians. Their Bowe is made of Beech in faſhion of our Bowes, but they want nocks, onely a ſtring of leather put through a hole at one end, and made faſt with a knot at the other. Their Arrowes are of a much greater ſize then our and longer, feathered with three feathers tyed on, and nocked very artificially, headed with a long ſhanke bone of a Deere, made very ſharpe, and ſome Iron heads, with two fangs in manner of a harping Iron. They haue likewiſe Darts headed with ſharpe bone, one of which I darted among the Stones and it brake not. Theſe they vſe very cunningly to kill Fiſh, Fowle, and Beaſts. Their Bowes and Arrowes. Darts.

They gaue vs the beſt welcome they could, ſpreading Deere skins for vs to ſit on the ground by their fire, and gaue vs of their Tobacco in our Pipes, which was moſt excellent, and ſo generally commended of vs all to be as good as any we euer tooke, being the ſimple Leafe without any compoſition, very ſtrong and of a pleaſant ſweete taſte: they gaue vs ſome to carry to our Captaine, whom they called our Baſhabe, neither did they require any thing for it; but we would receiue nothing from them without remuneration. Tobacco excellent the Sauages gaue vs.

Here we ſaw their women, who ſtood behinde them, as deſirous to ſee vs, but not willing to be ſeene, for before whenſoeuer we came a Shoare, they retired into the woods; whether it were We ſaw their Women.

Digitized by Google

were it regard of their owne naturall modesty being naked, or by the commanding iealousie of their husbands, which we rather suspected; for it hath beene an inclination noted alwayes generally in Sauages, wherefore we would by no meanes seeme to take any speciall notice of them. They were very well fauoured, low of stature, and exceeding fat; they had two little children very fat, and of good countenance, which they loue tenderly, all naked, except their legges, which were couered with thin leather buskins, fastned with straps to a Girdle about their waste, which they gird very streight, and is decked round about with little round peeces of Copper. To these we gaue Chaines, Bracelets, and other trifles, which the Sauages seemed to accept with great kindnesse.

At our comming away, we would haue had those two that supped with vs to goe aboord and sleepe, as they had promised our Captaine; but it appeared their company would not suffer them, whereat we might easily perceiue they were much grieued: but not long after our departure they came with three more to our Ship, signing to vs, if one of our Company would goe lye a Shoare with them, they would stay with vs. Our Captaine would command none: but Griffin, one of them we were to leaue in the Countrey, by their agreement with my Lord the Right Honorable Count Arundell (if it should be thought needefull or conuenient) went with them in their Canoa; and three of them stayed aboord vs. Whom our Captaine and whole Company very kindely vsed, himselfe saw their lodging prouided, and them lodged in an old Saile vpon the Orlop, and because they most feared our Dogs, they were tyed vp whensoeuer any of them came aboord vs.

We brought them home againe.

Griffin which lay on Shoare, reported vnto me their manner, and (as I may tearme them) the Ceremonies of their Idolatry, which they performe thus. One among them (the eldest of the company as he iudged) riseth right vp, the rest sitting still, and sodainely cryed, Bowh, waugh; then the women fall downe, and lye vpon the ground, and the men altogether answering the same, fall a stamping round about with both feete as hard as they can, making the ground shake, with sundry loud outcries, and change of voyce and sound; many take the fire sticks and thrust them into the earth, and then rest silent a while, of a sudden beginning as before, they looke round about, as though they expected the comming of something (as hee verily supposed) and continue stamping till the yonger sort fetch from the Shoare Stones, of which euery man take one, and first beate vpon them with the fire sticks, then with the Stones beate the ground with all their strength: and in this sort (as he reported) they continued aboue two houres. In the time of their Pauose, our watch aboord were singing, and they signed to him to doe so, which he did, looking and lifting vp his hands to heauen: then they pointed to the Moone, as if they imagined hee worshipped that, which when he with signes denied, they pointed to the Sunne rising, which hee likewise disliked, lifting vp his hands againe, then they looked about, as though they would see what Starre it might be, laughing one to another. After this ended, they which haue wiues take them a part, and withdraw themselues seuerally into the wood all night.

Ceremonies of the Sauages Idolatry.

They lye with their wiues secretly.

The next morning, as soone as they saw the Sunne rise, they pointed to him to come with them to our Ship, and hauing receiued their men from vs, they came with all their Canoas and company houering about our Ship, to whom (because it was the Sabbath day, I signed they should depart, and at the next Sunne rising wee would goe along with them to their houses, which they vnderstood (as we thought) and departed: three of their Canoas coursing about the Iland, and the others towards the Maine. This day about fiue a clocke afternoone, came three other Canoas from the Maine, of which some had beene with vs before, and they came directly aboord vs, and brought vs Tobacco, which we tooke with them in their Pipe, which was made of earth very strong, but blacke and short, containing a great quantity. Some Tobacco they gaue to our Captaine, and some to me, in very ciuill kinde manner: we requited them with Bread and Pease. When we came at Shoare, they all most kindely entertained vs, taking vs by the hands, as they had obserued we did to them aboord in token of welcome, and brought vs to sit downe by their fire, where sat together thirteene of them. They filled their Tobacco Pipe, which was then the short claw of a Lobster, which will hold ten of our Pipes full, and we dranke of their excellent Tobacco as much as we would with them; but wee saw not any great quantity to trucke for, and it seemed they had not much left of old, for they spend a great quantity yearely by their continuall drinking: they would signe vnto vs that it was growne yet but a little aboue ground, but it would be high, with a leafe as broad as both their hands; and often would (by pointing to one part of the Maine Eastward) signe vnto vs that the Bashabe (whom wee take to be their King, or some great Commander) had plenty of Furres and much Tobacco.

Their Tobacco Pipe.

They gaue vs Tobacco in a Pipe of a Lobsters Claw.

At our departure they made signe, if any of vs would stay there a shoare, some of them would goe lye aboord with vs: at which motion Master Beales, seruant to the Right Honorable Count Arundell, being desirous to see the manner of the foresaid Ceremonies, staied with them, and had Griffin with him; and three of the Sauages lodged with vs, in manner as the night before.

Master Beales lay a shoare, and Griffin.

Early the next morning being Munday, the third of Iune, when they had brought our men aboord,

Digitized by Google

boord, they came about our Shippe, earneſtly by ſignes deſiring we would goe with them along to the Maine, for there they had Furres and Tobacco to traffique with vs. Wherefore our Captaine manned the Shallop, with as many men as he could well, which was but fifteene with the Rowers, and we went along with them: two of their Canoas they ſent away before, and they which were aboord vs all night kept company with vs to direct vs. This we noted as we went along, they in the Canoa with three Oares, would at their will goe a head of vs and about vs, when we rowed with eight Oares ſtrong: ſuch was the ſwiftneſſe by reaſon of the lightneſſe, and exquiſite compoſition of their Canoa and Oares.

Their Canoa out-rowed vs.

When we came neere the point, where we ſaw their fires, where they intended to land, and where they imagined ſome few of vs ſhould come on Shoare with our merchandiſe, as wee had accuſtomed before: when they had often numbred our men very diligently, they ſcoured away to their company, not doubting we would haue followed them. But when wee perceiued this, and knew not either their intents, or number of Sauages on the Shoare, our Captain after conſultation ſtood of and weffed them to vs, determining that I ſhould goe a Shoare firſt to take a view of them, and what they had to traffique, if he whom at our firſt ſight of them ſeemed to be of moſt reſpect, and being then in the Canoa, would ſtay as a pawne for me. When they came to vs (notwithſtanding all our former courteſies) he vtterly refuſed, but would leaue a yong Sauage, and for him our Captaine ſent Griffin in their Canoa, while we lay hulling a little of. He at his returne reported, they had there aſſembled together, as he numbred them, two hundred foure-ſcore and three Sauages, euery one his Bowe and Arrowes, with their Dogges, and Wolues which they keepe tame at command: and not any thing to exchange at all, but would haue drawne vs farther vp into a little narrow nooke of a Riuer, for their Furres as they pretended.

283. Sauages aſſembled in a trecherie.

We began to alter our opinion of them, and to ioyne them in the ranke of all Sauages, who haue beene by all trauailers and in all diſcoueries found very treacherous, neuer attempting miſchiefe, vntill (by ſome remiſneſſe) fit opportunity affordeth them certaine ability to execute the ſame. Wherefore we humbly gaue God thankes, who had giuen vs vnderſtanding to preuent this, and thereby warning to foreſee and prepare our ſelues againſt the like danger. And after good aduiſe taken, our Captaine determined, ſo ſoone as we could to Ship ſome of them, leaſt (being ſuſpicious we had diſcouered their plots) they ſhould abſent themſelues from vs, which ſurely they had done, if we had not laid hold of the next occaſion.

Diſpoſition of Sauages in the Virginian Maſſacre, & other their dealings found too true.

Tueſday came to the Ship, there were two Canoas, and in either of them three Sauages, of whom two were below at the fire, the other ſtaied about the Ship for victuall: and becauſe we could by no meanes entice them aboord, we gaue them a Can of Peaſe and Bread, which they carried to the ſhoare to eate, but one of them brought backe our Can againe preſently, and ſtaied aboord with the other two, for he being yong of a ready capacitie, and one wee moſt deſired to bring with vs into England, had receiued exceeding kinde vſage at our hands, and therefore was much delighted in our company: we ſhipped him, and foure others, two Canoas, with all their Bowes and Arrowes, which is the chiefe ſubſtance they poſſeſſe.

We caught fiue Sauages, two Canoas, and Bowes, Arrows

Saturday the eight of Iune, our Captaine being deſirous to finiſh all buſineſſe about this Harbour, very early in the morning with the Pinnace coaſted fiue or ſixe leagues about the Ilands adioyning, and ſounded all along whereſoeuer he went: he likewiſe diligently ſearched and ſounded along before the mouth of the Harbour, about the Rocks which ſhew themſelues at all times, and are an excellent breach of the water, ſo as no Sea can come in to offend the Harbour. This he did to inſtruct himſelfe, and thereby able to direct others that ſhall happen to come to this place: for euery where both neere the Rockes and in all ſounding about the Ilands, wee neuer fonnd leſſe water then foure or fiue fathome, which was very ſeldome, but ſeuen, eight, nine, and ten fathome, is the continuall ſounding by the ſhoare, in ſome places much deeper, vpon clay Oaze or ſoft Sand.

Our Captaine ſounded about the Ilands Rockes and mouth of the Harbour.

This day about one a clocke afternoone, came from the Eaſtward two Canoas aboord vs, wherein was he that refuſed to ſtay with vs for a Pawne, and with him ſix other Sauages, whom we had not ſeene, who had beautified themſelues after their manner very gallantly, though their cloathing was not different from the former, yet they had newly painted their faces very deepe, ſome all blacke, ſome red, with ſtripes of blew ouer their vpper lip, noſe, and chin. One of them ware a kinde of Coronet about his head, made very cunningly of a ſubſtance like ſtiffe haire, coloured red, broad, and more then a handfull in depth, which he ſo much eſteemed, as he would not for any trucke exchange the ſame: other weare the white feathered skins of ſome Fowle round about their head, Iewels in their eares, & Bracelets of little white round bone, faſtened together vpon a leather ſtring. Theſe made not any ſhew that they had notice of the other before taken, but we vnderſtood them by their ſpeech & ſignes, that they came ſent from the Baſhabe, and that his deſire was, we would bring vp our Ship (which they call a Quiden) to his houſe, being as they pointed vpon the Maine towards the Eaſt, from whence they came, and that hee would exchange with vs for Furres and Tobacco: but becauſe we had no deſire to diſcouer any further that way, and now making what ſpeede we could vp the Riuer; wee let them vnderſtand, that if

Two Canoas came aboord vs from the Baſhabe.

Their Ornaments of gallantneſſe.

if their Bashabe would come to vs, hee should be very welcome, but wee would not remoue to him.

We went vp into the Riuer with our Ship.

Tuesday, the eleuenth of Iune, we passed vp into the Riuer with our Ship about six and twenty miles; of which (were it not of necessitie I must report somewhat) I had much rather not to write, then by my relation to detract from the worthinesse thereof, not being sufficient in words to expresse the abundant vtilitie and sweete pleasantnesse it yeeldeth. For the Riuer besides that it is subiect hereafter by Shipping to bring in all traffiques of Merchandise.

The profits of the Riuer.

The first and chiefest thing required for a Plantation, is a bold Coast, and faire Land to fall with. The next, a safe Harbour for Ships to ride in.

Saint Georges Iland the Land fall.

The first is a speciall attribute to this Shoare, being most free from Sands or dangerous Rockes, in a continuall good depth, with a most excellent Landfall as can be desired; which is the first Iland, named Saint Georges Iland. For the second, by iudgement of our Captaine, who knoweth most of the Coast of England, and most of other Countries (hauing beene experienced by imployments in discoueries and trauailes from his childehood) and by opinion of others of good iudgement in our Ship. Here are more good Harbours for Ships of all burthens, then all England can afoord: And farre more secure from all windes and weathers, then any in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Spaine, or any other part hitherto discouered, whereof we haue receiued any relation: for (besides without the Riuer in the channell and Sounds about the Ilands adioyning to the Mouth thereof, no better riding can be desired for an infinite number of ships) the Riuer it selfe, as it runneth vp into the Maine very nigh fortie miles towards the great Mountaines, beareth in breadth a mile, sometimes three quarters, and halfe a mile is the narrowest, where you shall neuer haue vnder foure or fiue fathom water hard by the Shoare, but six, seuen, eight, nine, and ten fathom at a low water. And on both sides, euery halfe mile, verie gallant Coues, some able to containe almost a hundred Sayle, where the ground is excellent soft oaze with a tough clay vnder for Anker hold; and where Ships may lye without either Anker or Cable onely mored to the Shoare with a Hazur. It floweth, by their iudgement, sixteene or eighteene foote at a high water. Here are made by nature most excellent places, as Dockes to graue and Carine Ships of all burthens, secured from all windes, which is such a necessary incomparable benefit, that in few places in England, or in any other parts of Christendome, Art with great charges can make the like.

The breadth of the Riuer for almost 40. miles.

The ground is Oaze & Clay.

What it floweth.

Dockes to graue and Carine Ships.

Salmons and store of fish.

It yeeldeth plentie of Salmons, and other fishes of great bignesse, and assuredly great probabilitie of better things therein to be found, seeing about the Ilands wee had such certaine hope of Pearle and Oare. Besides all these commodities innatiue to this Riuer, the bordering Land is a most rich neighbour trending all along on both sides, in an equall Plaine, neither Mountainous nor Rockie, but verged with a greene bordure of grasse, doth make tender vnto the beholder of her pleasant fertility, if by clensing away the woods, shee were conuerted into Medow. The Wood it beareth is no shrubbish, fit onely for fewell, but good tall Firre, Spruce, Birds, Beech, and Oake, which in many places is not so thicke, but may with small labour be made feeding ground, being plentifull like the outward Ilands with fresh water, which streameth downe in many places.

The Land.

The Wood.

This Riuer preferred before Orienoque.

As we passed with a gentle winde vp with our Ship in this Riuer. Any man may conceiue with what admiration wee all consented in ioy; many who had beene trauellers in sundry Countries, and in the most famous Riuers, yet affirmed them not comparable to this they now beheld. Some that were with Sir Walter Raleigh, in his Voyage to Guiana, in the Discouery of the Riuer Orienoque, which eccoed fame to the worlds eares; gaue reasons why it was not to be compared with this, which wanteth the dangers of many Shoalds and broken grounds, wherewith that was encombred. Others preferred it farre before that notable Riuer in the West Indias, called Rio Grande: some before the Riuers of Burdwa, Orleance, and Brest in France, Nawce, and the Riuer of Rhoane: which although they be great and goodly Riuers, yet it is no detraction from them to be accounted inferiour to this, which not onely yeeldeth all the aforesaid pleasant profits, but also appeared infallibly to vs free from all imagined inconueniences. I will not preferre it before our Riuer of Thames, because it is Natale solum, Englands richest treasure, but wee all did wish those excellent Harbonrs, good Deepes, in a continuall conuenient breadth, and small tide gates, to be as well therein for our Countrie good, as wee found them here (beyond our hopes) in certaine for those to whom it shall please God to grant this Land for habitation: which if it had with the other inseperable adherent Commodities here to be found; then I would boldly affirme it to be the most rich, beautifull, large, and secure harbouring Riuer that the world affordeth; for if man should wish, or Art inuent, a Riuer subiect to all conueniencies, and free from all dangers, here they may take a view in a Plat-forme framed by Nature, who in her perfection farre exceedeth all Arts inuention.

Before the Riuer Rio Grande.

Nescio quæ Natale solum, &c.

We marched vp into the land aboue three miles.

Wednesday the twelfth of Iune, our Captaine manned his Shallop with seuenteene men, and ran vp to the Codde of the Riuer, where we landed, leauing six to keepe the Shallop till our returne. Ten of vs with our Shot, and some armed, with a Boy to carry Powder and Match, marched vp into the Countrie towards the Mountaines, which we descried at our first falling with the Land,

Digitized by Google

Land, and were continually in our view. Vnto some of them the Riuer brought vs so neere, as we iudged our selues when we landed, to haue beene within a league of them, but we found them not, hauing marched well nigh foure miles vp in the Maine, and passed three great hils; wherefore because the weather was parching hot, and our men in their Armour not able to trauell farre and returne to our Pinnasse that night, we resolued not to passe any further, being all very weary of so tedious and labourſome a trauell.

In this march we passed ouer very good ground, pleasant and fertile, fit for pasture, hauing but little wood, and that Oake, like stands left in our Pastures in England, good and great fit timber for any vse; some small Birch, Hazell and Brake, which might in small time be clensed with few men, and made good errable Land; but as it is now will feede Cattell of all kindes with Fodder enough for Summer and Winter. The soyle is good, bearing sundry Hearbes, Grasse, and Strawberries, in many places are low thickets, like our Copisses of small Wood: And it doth all resemble a stately Parke, wherein appeare some old trees with high withered tops, and other flourishing with liuing greene boughes: till we came to the Hils vpon which doe grow exceeding tall, streight, and excellent great timber of sundry kindes, mast for Ships of foure hundred tunnes, and at the bottome of euery hill, a little run of fresh water; but the furthest and last we came vnto ran with a great streame able a driue a small Mill. Wee might see in some places, where Deere and Hares had beene; and by the rooting of ground we supposed wilde Hogs had ranged there, but we could descry no Beast, because our noise still chased them from vs.

Good Pasture.

Timber trees vpon the hils.

Deere. Hares. Hogges.

We were no sooner come aboord our Pinnasse, returning towards our Ship, but wee espied a Canoa comming from the further part of the Cod of the Riuer Eastward, which hasted to vs; wherein with two others was he whom we accounted chiefe of his Company: and his comming was very earnestly importuning to haue one of our men to goe lye with their Bashabe or Captaine (as they now tearmed him) who was there ashoare (as they signed) and then the next morning he would come to our Ship with Furres and Tobacco. This we perceiued to be onely a meere deuice to get possession of any of our men, to ransome all those we had taken; which their naturall pollicy could not so shaddow, but we did easily discouer and preuent.

A Ler[illegible] Sa[illegible]

These meanes were by this Sauage practised, because we had one of his kinsmen prisoner, as we iudged by his most kinde vsage of him, being aboord vs together.

Thursday, the thirteenth of Iune, by two a clocke in the morning (because our Captain would take the helpe and aduantage of the Tide) in the Pinnace with our Company well prouided and furnished with Armour and Shot both to defend and offend: we went from our Ship vp to that part of the Riuer which trended West into the Maine, to search that, and wee carried with vs a Crosse to erect at that point; which, because it was not day-light, we left on shoare vntill our returne backe, when we set it vp in manner as the former. And this we diligently obserued, that in no place either about the Ilands, or vp in the Maine, or along the Riuer, wee could discerne any token or signe that euer any Christian had beene before; which either by cutting wood, digging for water, or setting vp Crosses (a thing neuer omitted by any Christian trauailours) wee should haue perceiued some mention left.

We [illegible] the [illegible] part of [illegible] uer.

We [illegible] other [illegible]. We saw no signe [illegible] Christian had be[illegible] before.

But to returne to our Riuer, vp into which we then rowed by estimation twenty miles. What profit or pleasure is described and truely verified in the former part of the Riuer, is wholly doubled in this; for the breadth and depth is such, that any Ship drawing seuenteene or eighteene foote water might haue passed as farre as we went with our Shallop, and by all our iudgements much further, because we left it in so good depth; which is so much the more to be esteemed of greater worth, by how much it trendeth further vp into the Maine: for from the place of our Ships riding in the Harbour, at the entrance into the Sound, to the furthest point wee were in this Riuer, by our estimation was not much lesse then threescore miles. From each Banke of this Riuer, are diuers branching streames running into the Maine, whereby is afforded an vnspeakeable profit, by the conueniency of easie transportation from place to place, which in some Countries is both very chargeable, and not so fit, by Carriages on Wane or Horsebacke. Here wee saw store of Fish, some leaping aboue water, which we iudged to be Salmon, for they were great. All along is an excellent mould of ground, the wood in most places, especially on the Easterne side, very thin, chiefely Oake and small Birch, bordering low vpon the Riuer, all fit for Meddow and pleasant Pasture ground. And in that space wee went, wee had on both sides the Riuer many plaine places of cleere Meddow, some of three or foure acres, some eight or nine, so as we iudged in the whole to be betweene thirty and forty acres of good grasse, and where the Armes runne into the Maine, there likewise went a space on both sides of the cleare grasse, how farre we knew not. In many places we might see pathes Beasts had made to come downe to watering. And we all concluded (as I verily thinke we might rightly) that we should neuer see the like Riuer in euery degree equall, vntill it pleased God we beheld the same againe: for the further we went, the more pleasing it was to euery man, alluring vs still with expectation of better; so as our men (although they had with great labour rowed long, and eate nothing) for we carried with vs no victuall but a little Cheese and Bread, yet they were so refreshed with the pleasant beholding thereof, and so loath to forsake it, as some of them affirmed, they would haue continued willingly Conueniency of transportation.

Salmon and great plenty of fish.

We were all loath to forsake this Riuer.

Digitized by Google

willingly with that onely fare and labour two dayes; but the Tide not suffering vs to make any longer stay (because we were to come backe with the ebbe) and our Captaine better knowing what was fit, then we; and better what they in labour were able to endure, being very loath to make any desperate hazard, where so little necessitie required, thought it best to make returne, because whether we had discouered, was sufficient to conceiue that the Riuer ranne very farre into the Land: for we passed sixe or seuen miles altogether fresh water (whereof we all dranke) forced vp by the flowing of the Salt, which after a great while ebbe where we left it, by bredth and depth of Channell was likely to runne by estimation of our whole companie an vnknowne way further. And as our Captaine verily thought (although hee then concealed it) might possibly make a passage into (or very nigh) the South Sea: which hee neither had commission nor time now to search, but hath left that till his next returne: if it shall so please God to dispose of him and vs.

Friday the fourteenth of Iune early, by foure a clocke in the morning with the Tide, our two Boats, and a little helpe of the winde, we warped our shippe downe to the Riuers mouth: and there came to an anchor about eleuen a clocke. Afterward our Captaine in the Pinnace, searched the sounding all about the mouth and comming into the Riuer, for his certaine instruction of a perfect description.

The Iland where we watered is named Insula Sanctæ Crucis, because there wee set our first Crosse

The next day being Saturday, we weighed anchor, and with a briefe from the Land, we sayled vp to our watering place, and there stopped, went ashoare, and filled all our empty caske with fresh water.

Our Captaine made his perfect obseruation on the Rocke.

Temperature of climate.

Our Captaine vpon the Rocke in the middest of the Harbour made his certaine obseruation by the Sunne, of the height, latitude, and variation exactly vpon all his Instruments: 1. Astrolabe. 2. Semisphere. 3. Ring-instrument. 4. Crosse staffe. 5. And an excellent Compas, made for the variation. The latitude he found to be 43. degrees 20. minutes, North. The variation, 11. degrees 15. minutes, viz. one point of the Compas Westward. And it is so much in England at Lime-house by London, Eastward. The temperature affoorded to vs no speciall alteration from our disposition in England: somewhat hotter vp into the Maine, because it lieth open to the South, but scarse yeelding a sensible difference to any of vs. The aire so wholsome, as I suppose, not any of vs found our selues at any time more healthfull, more able to labour, nor with better stomachs to such good fare, as we partly brought, and partly found.

Sunday the sixteenth of Iune, the winde being faire, and because wee had set out of England vpon a Sunday, descried the Ilands vpon a Sunday, and (as we doubted not) by Gods appointment, happily fallen into our Harbour vpon a Sunday: so now beseeching him with like prosperitie to blesse our returne into England: and from thence (with his good-will and pleasure) to hasten and fortunate our next arriuall here. Wee set sayle and quit the Land vpon a Sunday.

Tuesday the eighteenth day of Iune, being not runne aboue fiue and thirty leagues from Land, and our Captaine for his certaine knowledge how to fall with the Coast, hauing sounded euery watch, and from fifty fathom had come in good deeping to seuenty, and so to an hundred. This day, the weather being faire, after the foure a clocke watch, when he thought not to haue found ground, before sounding in aboue a hundred fathom, we had ground in foure and twenty fathom. Wherefore our Sayles being downe, one of our men presently cast out a hooke, and before hee iudged it at ground was fished and haled vp an exceeding great and well fed Cod: then there were cast out three or foure hookes more, the fish was so plentifull and so great, as when our Captaine would haue set sayle, we desired him to suffer them to take fish a while, because wee were so delighted to see them catch fish so great, so fast as the hooke came downe, some playing with the hooke they tooke by the backe. And one of the Mates, with two hookes at a Lead, at fiue draughts together haled vp ten fishes all were generally very great, some were measured. This caused our Captaine not to maruell at the shoalding: for he perceiued it was a fish-banke, which (for our farewell from the Land) it pleased God in the continuance of his blessings to giue vs knowledge of.

A fishy banke.

Sunday the fourteenth of Iuly about six a clocke at night we were come into sounding in our Channell: but for want of sight of the Sunne and Starre, to make a true obseruation: and with contrary windes we were constrained to beate vp and downe till Tuesday the sixteenth of Iuly, when by fiue a clocke in the morning wee made Sylly: from whence hindred with calmes and small windes. Vpon Thursday the eighteenth of Iuly about foure a clocke wee came to anchor safely in Dartmouth, which Hauen haply (with Gods assistance) wee made the last and first Harbour in England, as the Termini of our Voyage.

A briefe Note of what profits we found the Countrie yeeld: in the small time of our stay there.

Trees. Oake, of an excellent graine, straight, and great timber; Elme, Beech, Birch, very tall and, great of whose Barque they make their Canoas; Nut-hasle, Hasle, Alder, Cherry tree, Ash,

Digitized by Google

Ash, Maple, Ewe, Spruce, Asp, Fir in great abundance; many other fruit trees which we know not.

Fowles. Eagles, Hernshawes, Cranes, Duks great; Geese, Swans, Penguins, Shark, Crow, Rauen, Kite, Soga, Mewes, Doues, Turtles, birds of sundry colours; and many other fowles vnknown.

Beasts: Deere red and fallow, Beare, Wolfe, Beauer, Otter, Hare, Conie, Marterns, Sables, Hogs, Porkespines. Polcats, Cats, wilde great, Dogs some like Foxes, some like our other beasts the Sauages signe vnto vs with hornes and broad eares; which we take to be Olkes or Loshes.

Fishes. Whales, Porpoise, Seales, Cod, very great; Haddocke, great; Herring, Plaise, Thornbacke, Rock-fish, Lobster, great; Crabbe, Mussels, Cockles, Wilks, Cunner-fish, Lumpe-fish, Whiting: the Sauages signe vnto vs that they haue Tortoise very great.

Plants, Fruits, Herbs. Tobacco, excellent, sweet and strong; Vine, wilde; Strawberries, Raspberries, Gooseberries, Hurtleberries, Corant trees, in abundance; Rose bushes; Pease, which the Sauages signe to be very great in the Maine; Ground-nuts; Angelica, a most soueraigne herbe; and an herbe that spreadeth like Camomell, and smelleth like sweet Marjoram, great plenty. Good Dies, which appeare by their painting, which they carrie with them in bladders.

Words which I learned of the Sauages, in their Language.

Sunne or Moone, Kesus. Cod-fish, Biskeiore. A fish with hornes, Manedo. Lobster, Shoggab. Rock-fish, Shagatocke. Cockle-fish, Hesucke. Muskell, Shoorocke. Cunner-fish, Tattaucke. Crabbe, Wussorasha. Porpoise, Muscopeiuck. Plaise, Anego. Tortoise, Romcaneeke. Pease, Vshcomono. Tobacco, Temoch. A leafe, Mebeere. A weed, Cashterush. A Firre tree, Seteock. A stone, Nabscurr. A Bowe, Shoanor. An Arrow, Tobood. Barke of a tree, Masquere. Water, Shamogeon. Sand, Cheemuck. Crowe, Cagagoose. Haire, Messer or Meris. A beard, Nicowur. A Beare, Rogsoo. Beauer, Paneah. Otter, Nymemano. Rat, Sanuke. Polcat, Pocamka. Cat, Pushuck. Fallow Deere, Coribo. Hogge, Madosa. Red Deere, Moosurr. They tell vs of other beasts, which they call, Tasquus, Pisho, Narsim. Teeth, Ibider. A hand and finger, Breecke. A Naile of the hand, Cushe. A legge, Codd. A foot, Mussete. Plum-tree, Epsegan. Strawberry, Pshoa. Gooseberry, Shewanor. Cherry tree, Essegonomino. Corant tree, Asheemena. Rashberrie, Kiskeemy. A lippe, Meteau. Fire, Squida. The maine Land, Bemoquducke. Sea, Shonbbe. Father, Wado. Sonne, Vsto. Wane of the Sea, Toboogg. Pitch and Tallow, Poco. Wilde Rose, Minnsheck. Birch, Pasquar. Sword, Edagawancke. Mountaine, Machoucke. Winde, Puckchawsen. Bloud, Pagagocun. Red Paint, Woroman. Blacke Paint, Cogosho. A Dogge, Remoose. A Ship or Boat, Quiden. An Oare, Wuttoboganor. A Garnepo Fly, Chussuab. Bread, Pauue. Raine, Soogoran. A note, Peesh-ten. An Axe or Hatchet, Tomaheegon. A Knife, Quedogon. Oake, Askabesse. White Bone, whereof they haue Chaines, Girdles, Bracelets, Speesone. The Cheeke, Canoab. A Shirt or Coat, Tenoganuke. The Chinne, Queb. An Eye, Sheesuck. Eylid, Momon. Forehead, Scottoquab. An Eare, Fawwucke. A fish-hooke, Makeecon. A Rainbow, Shomogon.

The Names of their chiefe Gouernours, whom they call Sagemoh. 1. Bashabez. 2. Abatuckquishe. 3. Bdabanedo, one of them we haue. 4. Abokeesussick. 5. Shurokinit. 6. Pshabeno. 7. Mentoelmet. 8. Ageemobuck. 9. Mawermet. 10. Chanacoboun. 11. Amilquin. 12. Muasacoremoneete. These dwell vpon the Maine, and weare an ornament of white bone vpon their head; and Chaines, and Bracelets, and Girdles, and haue their skinne garments laced with them.

The Names of our Virginians. Bdabanedo, Brother to the Bashabes. Amooret, his Brother. Satacomoab. Maneduck, Scikaworrowse.

Thus haue I giuen thee the proceedings of Virginia and New Englands Discouerie: for the originall beginning of the Discouerie, Sir Sebastian Cabot was the first Discouerer both of it and the rest of the Continent of America. The first Plantation was more Southerly by the charges of Sir Walter Raleigh: as before is shewed. The next yeere New Patents were obtained of his Maiestie, for a double Plantation in these parts. I trouble not the Reader with the whole Patent, both because it hath sustained diuersified alteration, diuision and subdiuision, and because I more minde things there done, than here; for which cause I haue also omitted the Articles and instruction two dayes after dated, signed, and sealed, with the Prinie Seale for the gouernment of the said Plantation, of both which I haue the Copies by mee; I onely here giue thee the beginning of the first Patent, Aprill 10. 1606.

CHAP. XIIII.

The description of the Ilands of Açores, or the Flemish Ilands, taken out of Linschoten, with certaine occurrents, and English acts.

THE Iles of Açores, or the Flemish Ilands are seuen, that is, Tercera, Saint Mary, Saint George, Gratiosa, Pico, and Faiael. There are yet two Ilands called Flores and Corno, which are not contained vnder the name of Açores: but yet at this day are vnder the gouernment of the same Ilands, so that they are in all, accounted nine Ilands. They are called Açores, that is to say, Sparhawkes or Hawkes, because that in their first discouery, they found many Sparhawks, in them, whereof they hold the name, although at this day there is not any there to bee found. They are also called the Flemish Ilands, that is, of the Netherlanders, because the first that inhabited the same, were Netherlanders, whereof till this time there is a great number, and off-spring remayning, that in manner and behauiour are altogether like Netherlanders, and there is yet in the same Iland a running water, that issueth out of a Hill, and so runneth into the Sea, whereas yet those issues or off-springs of Netherlanders inhabite, and is called Aribera dos Framengos, that is, the Flemish Riuer.

Linscot. c. 97. nine Ilands. Why called Açores.

Digitized by Google

Tercera. The principall Iland of them all, is that of Tercera, called Insula de Iesus Christus of Tercera. It is betweene fifteene or sixteene miles in compasse, and is altogether a great Cliffe of Land, whereby in it there is little roome: for it is as it were walled round about with Cliffes: but where any strand or sand is, there standeth a Fort. It hath no Hauens nor entrance of waters, for the securitie and safety of the shippes, but onely before the chiefe Towne called Angra, where it hath an open Hauen, which in forme is like a Halfe-moone, by the Portugals called Angra, whereof the Towne hath her name. It hath on the one side in manner of an elbow sticking forth, two high Hills, called Bresyl, which stretch into the Sea, so that afarre off they seeme to bee diuided from the Iland. Those Hills are very high, so that being vpon them, a man may see at the least tenne, or twelue, and sometimes fifteene miles into the Sea, being cleare weather. Vpon these Hills there stand two small stone Pillers, where there is a Centinell placed, that continually watcheth to see what shippes are at Sea, and so to aduertise those of the Iland: for that as many shippes as he seeth comming out of the West, that is from the Spanish Indies, or Brasilia, Cabo verde, Guinea, and the Portugall Indies, and all other wayes lying South or West, for euery shippe hee setteth a Flagge vpon the Pillar in the West, and when the shippes which hee descrieth, are more than fiue, then hee setteth vp a great ancient, betokening a whole Fleete of shippes. The like hee doth vpon the other Pillar, which standeth in the East, for such shippes as come from Portugall, or other places out of the East or North parts, these Pillars may bee easily seene in all places of the Towne, by reason of the highnesse of the Hills, so that there is not one shippe or sayle that is at Sea, or maketh towards the Iland, but it is presently knowne throughout all the Towne, and ouer all the whole Iland: for the watch is not holden onely vpon those two Hills jutting into the Sea, but also vpon all corners, Hills and Cliffes throughout the Iland, and as soone as they perceiue any shippes, the Gouernour and Rulers are presently aduertised thereof, that they may take such order therein as neede requireth. Vpon the furthest corner into the Sea standeth a Fort, right against another Fort that answereth it: so that those two Forts doe shut and defend the Mouth or open Hauen of the Towne, where the shippes lie in the Road, and so no shippe can either goe in or come forth, without the licence or permission of those two Forts. This Towne of Angra is not onely the chiefe Towne of Tercera, but also of all other Townes within the Ilands thereabouts. Therein is resident, the Bishop, the Gouernour for the King, and the chiefe place of Iudgement, or tribunall Seate of all the Ilands of Açores.

Angra. Three miles from this Towne lieth another Towne towards the North, called Villa de Praya, (for Praya is as much to say, as Strand) because it lieth hard by a great strand, and for that cause there is little traffique thither, as not hauing any conuenient place for shippes to come at it: yet sometimes there commeth some one, that by reason of contrary winde cannot get before the Towne of Angra, and so by constraint discharge their goods in that Towne, which from thence are carried by Land to Angra, and yet some part thereof is spent and vsed there. It is walled and well housed, but not many people in it, and such as are in it, doe get their liuings most by husbandry: for there are very faire Corne lands. The Iland is likewise very fruitfull and pleasant, it hath much Corne and Wine, but the Wine is not very good to carry into other Countries thereabouts, because it is small and will not long continue, so that it is vsed in the Countrey by the common people: but such as are of wealth, for the most part drinke Wines of Madera, and Canaria. It aboundeth in Flesh, Fish, and all other necessaries and meates for mans bodie, wherewith in time of need they might helpe themselues. Oyle there is none, but it commeth out of Portugall. Also Salt, Pots, Pans, and all kind of earthen Vessells, Chalke, and such like are brought thither out of other places, for there they are not to bee found: for fruits they haue (besides Peaches of diuers kindes, and in so great abundance that is is strange) Cherries, Plums, Walnuts, Hasle-nuts, Chesnuts, but those not very good: of Apples, Peares, Oranges and Lemons, with all such like fruits there are sufficient. Of all sorts of Herbes and Plants, as Coleworts, Radishes, and such like they haue at their certaine times of the yeere. They haue likewise in that Iland a certaine fruit that groweth vnder the earth, like Radishes or other roots, but the Leaues or Plants are Trees like Vines, but different leaues, and groweth longwise vpon the ground: it beareth a fruit called Batatas, that is very good, and is so great that it weigheth a pound, some more, some lesse, but little esteemed: and yet it is a great sustenance and food for the common sort of people. It is of good account in Portugall, for thither they vse to bring it for a Present, and those of the Iland by reason of the great abundance doe litle esteeme it. There is also another kind of stuffe that is sowed like Corne, and is a fruit: it groweth vpon the root of the grasse or leaues, and is round and as bigge

Angra descried

Wines small.

Commodities.

Fruits.

Batatas.

Iuniffa.

as

as a great Peaſe, but not ſo round: in eating it taſteth like Earth-nuts, but harder to bite: it is likewiſe a good meate, and much eſteemed in other places: but by reaſon of the great quantitie thereof, it is moſt vſed to fatten their Hogges, and is called Iunſſa. There is alſo in the Iland a certaine Plant, which is found in all places thereof in the open fieldes: it groweth as high as a man, and beareth no fruit, onely the roote thereof is a ſubſtance, of the thickneſſe of a mans two fiſts, and in ſhew as if it were naturall golden haire, and in handling like ſoft Silke, which is vſed there to ſtuffe and fill their Beddes in ſtead of Wooll and Feathers: and I doe certainly beleeue, if any man of vnderſtanding would take it in hand, it would well be wouen. A roote fit to be wouen.

The principalleſt traffique of this Iland, is their Woade, ſuch as wee vſe for dying (where- Woade.
of much is made in that Iland, and is fetched from thence by Engliſhmen, Scots, and Frenchmen, in barter for Cloathes and other wares, who continually traffique into that Iland: and although by reaſon of the warres, the Engliſhmen are forbidden to traffique thither, yet vnder the names of Scots and Frenchmen, they haue continuall trade there. The Iland hath not any wilde beaſts or fowles, but very few, ſauing onely Canary birds, which are there by thouſands, Canary birds. where many Birders take them, and thereof make a daily liuing, by carrying them into diuers places. It hath alſo wonderfull many Quailes, which they call Codorniſen: of tame fowles, as Hennes, and Gynnie Hennes are there likewiſe great ſtore. Hunting is there little vſed, but onely for Conies, which are very great: Hares, Harts, Partridges, Veniſon, and ſuch like, are not there to be found, becauſe of the little reſpect and care the Inhabitants haue to breed any ſuch things. Fiſh is very plentifull, and of diuers kindes, and very good: in Summer there is great ſtore taken, for in Winter they can hardly brooke the Seas. The chiefe moneths of Winter Winter. weather for raine and ſtormes are, Ianuarie, Februarie, March and Aprill, and alſo the moneth of September is commonly very ſtormy: all the other moneths it is commonly good weather. The Countrey is very hilly, and in ſome places wooddy, full of buſhes and trees: it is hard to trauell, becauſe their wayes for the moſt part are ſtony, ſo that for a mile, or a mile and a halfe together, men can ſee no ground, but onely ſtones, which for ſharpneſſe and faſhion ſhew like Stones. pointed Diamants, whereby one can hardly treade vpon it, leſt it ſhould cut through both ſhooes and feet: and yet it is all planted with Vines, ſo full and thicke, that in Summer time you can hardly ſee through it, for that the rootes thereof doe growe betweene the ſtones: ſo that a man would thinke it impoſſible that any thing ſhould growe therein: and which is more, in ſome places it ſeemeth impoſſible for a man to treade vpon it, being ſo wilde and deſart as it ſheweth, and nothing but hard ſtones and Rockes. On good ground their Vines will not growe, but onely in the wilde and ſtony places: and for that cauſe they are much eſteemed.

The good groundes and plaine fieldes, which in ſome places are very many, eſpecially by Villa da Praya, are ſowed with Corne and Woade, and they haue ſo much Corne, that they neede not bring any from other places: although that beſides their Inhabitants, and naturall borne Ilanders, they haue continually with them fourteene Companies of Spaniards, which are all fedde and nouriſhed by the Corne that groweth in the Countrey, vnleſſe there chance to come a hard and vnfruitfull yeere, as oftentimes it doth, for then they are forced to helpe themſelues with forraine Corne, and that eſpecially becauſe of the Souldiers that lie in the Iland: and yet it is ſtrange, that the Corne, and all other things in the Iland continue not aboue one yeere, and that which is kept aboue a yeere is naught, and nothing worth. And therefore Corne will laſt but a yeere. to keepe their Corne longer than a yeere, they are forced to burie it in the earth for the ſpace of foure or fiue moneths together, to the which end euery Townesman hath his Pit at one end of the Towne in the common high-way, which is appointed for the purpoſe, and euery man ſetteth his marke vpon his Pit-ſtone: the Corne is but lightly buried in the earth: the holes Corne buried. within are round, and the toppes thereof ſo wide that a man may creepe in, whereunto there is a ſtone purpoſely made to couer it, which ſhutteth it vp very cloſe. Some of the Pittes are ſo great, as that they may hold two or three laſtes of Corne, ſome greater, and ſome ſmaller, as euery man hath his prouiſion: and as ſoone as the Corne is reaped, and fanned (which is in Iuly) euery man putteth his Corne into thoſe Pittes, laying ſtraw vnder and round about it, and then they fill it full, or but halfe full, according as their quantitie is, and ſo ſtop it vp with the ſtone, which they couer with earth, and ſo let it ſtand vntill Chriſtmas, when euery man that will fetch home his Corne: ſome let it lie longer, and fetch it by little and little, as they vſe it: but the Corne is as good when they take it out, as it was at the firſt houre that they put it in: and although that Carts, Horſes, and men doe commonly paſſe ouer it, and alſo that the raine raineth vpon it, yet there entreth not any drop of raine or moiſture into it: and if the Corne were not buried in that manner, it would not continue good aboue foure moneths together, but would be ſpoiled: and when it hath beene thus for a long time buried in the earth, it will continue the whole yeere through, and then they keepe it in Chiſts, or make a thing of Mats, like a Coope, to preſerue it in, not once ſtirring or mouing it, and ſo it continueth very good.

The greateſt commoditie they haue in the Land, and that ſerueth their turnes beſt, is their Oxen: and I beleeue they are the greateſt and faireſt that are to bee found in all Chriſtendome, Great Oxen.

Called by their names.

with vnmeasurable great and long hornes. Euery Oxe hath his seuerall name like men, and although there bee a thousand of them in a heard, and that one of them bee called by his name, he presently commeth forth vnto his master that calleth him. The Land is very high, and as it seemeth hollow: for that as they passe ouer a Hill of stone, the ground soundeth vnder them as if it were a Seller, so that it seemeth in diuers places to haue holes vnder the earth, whereby it is much subiect to Earthquakes, as also all the other Ilands are: for there it is a common thing, and Brimstone.

all those Ilands for the most part haue had Myne of Brimstone, for that in many places of Tercera, and Saint Michael, the smoake and sauour of Brimstone doeth still issue forth of the ground, and the Countrey round about is all sindged and burnt. Also there are places wherein there are Fountaines and Wells, the water whereof is so hot that it will boyle an egge, as well as if it hung ouer a fire.

Hot Springs.

Gualua Spring turning wood into stone.

In the Iland of Tercera, about three miles from Angra, there is a Fountaine in a place called Gualua, which hath a propertie, that all the wood which falleth into it, by length of time conuerteth into stone, as I my selfe by experience haue tried. In the same Fountaine by the roote of a tree, whereof the one halfe runneth vnder that water, and is turned into as hard stone as if it were Steele: and the other part of the roote (which the water toucheth not) is still wood and root, as it should be. The Iland hath great store and excellent kinds of wood, speCedars common.

cially Cedar trees, which growe there in so great numbers, that they make Scutes, Carts, and other grosse workes thereof, and is the commonest wood that they vse to burne in those Countries, whereby it is the wood that with them is least esteemed, by reason of the great quantity thereof. There is another kinde of wood called Sanguinbo, and is very faire of a red colour, and White and yellow woods.

Sanguinbo wood.

another sort that they call white Wood, being of it selfe as white as Chalke: other that is perfect yellow, and all naturall without any dying: and therefore there are diuers good workemen in Tercera, that are skilfull in Ioyners Occupation, and make many fine pieces of worke, as Deskes, Cupboords, Chists, and other such like things, whereof many are carried into Portugall, and much esteemed there, as well for the beauty of the wood, as for the workmanship. And specially the Spanish Fleet, which ordinarily refresh themselues in that Iland, doe carrie much of it from thence; for it is the best and finest that is made in all Spaine and Portugall, although it bee not comparable to the Deskes, and fine workmanship of Nurembergh, and those Countreyes: but for Wood it excelleth all other Countreyes, for that they haue in the Spanish Fleete, besides their owne kindes of woods, at the least a thousand sorts of wood of all colours that man can imagine or deuise, and so faire, that more fairer can not bee painted. There is a certaine kinde of wood in the Iland Pico, situate and lying twelue miles from Tercera, called Teixo, a most excellent and princely wood, and therefore it is forbidden to bee cut, but onely for the Kings owne vse, or for his Officers. The wood is as hard as Iron, and hath a colour within, as if it were wrought, like red Chamlet, with the same water, and the older it is, and the more vsed, the fairer it is of colour, so that it is worthie to bee esteemed, as in truth it is.

Teixo a kind of wood as hard as iron.

Inhabitants.

All those Ilands are inhabited by Portugals: but since the troubles in Portugall, there haue beene diuers Spanish Souldiers sent thither, and a Spanish Gouernour, that keepe all the Forts and Souldiers.

Castles in their possessions, although the Portugals are put to no charges, nor yet hardly vsed by them, but are rather kept short, so that not one Souldier dareth goe out of the Towne, with out licence: and therefore men may quietly trauell throughout the Iland, both day and night, without any trouble. Likewise they will not suffer any stranger to trauell to see the Countrey: and this order was not brought vp by the Spaniards, but by the Portugals themselues, Strangers.

before their troubles, (for they would neuer permit it:) and which is more, all strangers that came thither were vsually appointed a certaine streete, wherein they should sell their wares, and might not goe out of that streete. Now it is not so straightly looked vnto, but they may goe in all places of the Towne, and within the Iland, but not about it, to view the Coast: which notwithstanding was granted vnto vs, by the Gouernour himselfe, who lent vs his Horses to ride about, and gaue vs leaue to see all the Forts, which at this time is not permitted to the naturall borne Ilanders, neither are they so much credited. Wee rode twice about the Iland, which hee granted vs leaue to doe, by meanes of certaine particular friendship wee had with him: neither could the Portugals hinder vs therein, because wee were in the Kings seruice, as Factors for the Kings Pepper, and for that, they accounted vs as naturall borne Portugals: for the Gouernour would willingly haue had mee, to haue drawne a plot of the whole Iland, that hee might haue sent it to the King: wherein I excused my selfe: yet I made him the Towne with the Hauen, comming in, and Forts of Angra, which hee sent vnto the King, the like whereof you may in this Booke behold: for the which the Gouernour was greatly affected vnto mee, and shewed mee much friendship. Wee had in our Lodging a French Merchant and a Scot, that willingly would haue gone with vs, to see the Iland, but could not be suffered: for the Portugals thinke that they would take the proportion thereof, and so seeke to deFeate them of their right.

But

But returning to our matter, the Ilands are very good, and holesome ayre, and the diseases that are most common in those Countries, though not very plentifull, but onely here and there one, are one sickenesse called O Ar, that is, a kinde of bad ayre that taketh them, and maketh them altogether lame, or halfe lame of their limmes, or of some one limme: and another sickenesse, that is called O Sange, that is, a certaine bloud, that hastely commeth vpon a man, as a swelling in the eyes, or other places of the face, or of the body, and is as red as bloud, for (as they say) it is nothing else but meere bloud: these are two diseases like the plague, and are commonest sicknesses in those Countries, which grow by reason of the great windinesse of the Ilands, that are subiect to all stormes and foule weathers, and are vnreasonable moist, which is one of the principall causes of these diseases: for the windes are there so strong and dangerous, that they consume both the Iron and the Steele of their houses, and bring them into powder: for I haue seene Iron grates in the Kings Custome house, as thicke as a mans arme, and the windowes of hard free stone, which were so consumed by the winde, that the Iron in some places was become as thin as a straw, and the stone in like sort: and therefore in those Countries they vse to make their Rooses and Painthouses of stones, which they digge in the water, out of sands vpon the Sea coast of those Ilands, whereon the winde hath not so great a power to consume it: and yet that Customehouse had not beene made aboue six or seuen yeares before, at the most.

The ayre, a disease.

Strong windes.

In this Iland besides the two Townes, there are diuers great Villages, as Saint Sebastians, Saint Barberan, Altares, Gnahua, Villanoua, with many other Parishes and Hamlets: so that for the most part it is built and inhabited, saiuing onely the places that are wilde and full of Woods, which can hardly be trauelled, much lesse inhabited. Their most traffique is (as I said before) the wood that groweth in those Countries, I meane for such as deale in Merchandise, and the workemen that make it: but the rest waite for the fleetes that come and goe to and from the Spanish and Portugall Indies, from Brasilia, Cabo Verde and Guinea: all which Countries doe commonly come vnto Tercera to refresh themselues, as lying very fitly for that purpose: so that all the inhabitants doe thereby richly maintaine themselues, and sell all their wares, as well handy workes as victuals vnto those Ships: and all the Ilands round about doe as then come vnto Tercera with their wares, to sell it there. For the which cause the Englishmen and other strangers keepe continually about those Ilands, being assured that all Ships for want of refreshing must of force put into those Ilands, although at this time many Ships doe auoide those Ilands, to the great discommodity of the Ilands and the Ships.

From Tercera Southeast, about seuen and twenty or eight and twenty miles, lyeth the Iland of Saint Michael, which is about twenty miles long, and is likewise full of Townes and Villages inhabited by Portugals, for ayre and all other things like vnto Tercera. The chiefe Towne is called Punta del Gada, where there is great traffique of English, Scots, and Frenchmen, onely (as in Tercera) because of the woad, which is more abundant in that Iland, then in all the rest of them: for that euery yeare there is made aboue two hundreth thousand Quintals of Wood. It hath likewise great abundance of Corne, so that they helpe to victuall all the Ilands that are round about them. It hath neither Hauens nor Riuers, but onely the broad Sea, and haue lesse safegard and defence then those which are of Tercera: but there they lye not vnder the commandement of any Fort; so that many set sayle with all the windes, and put to Sea, which in the road of Tercera they may not doe: and therefore the strangers Ships had rather sayle to Saint Michaels, for there they can not be constrained to doe any thing, but what they will themselues to doe. There is also a company of Spaniards in a Castle that standeth by the Towne of Punta del Gada, which is made by the Spaniards for the defence and maintenance of the same towne.

S. Michael.

From the Iland of Saint Michaels Southwards twelue miles, lyeth the Island Santa Maria, which is about ten or twelue miles compasse, & hath no traffique but onely of pot earth, which the other Ilands fetch from thence. It hath no Woad, but is full of all victuals like Tercera, and inhabited by the Portugals. There are no Spaniards in it: because it is a stony Country, like Tercera, and hard to boord: whereby the inhabitants themselues are sufficient and able enough to defend it. While I remained in Tercera, the Earle of Cumberland came thither, to take in fresh water, and some other victuals; but the inhabitants would not suffer him to haue it, but wounded both himselfe and diuers of his men, whereby they were forced to depart without hauing any thing there.

Saint Mary.

From Tercera North Northwest about seuen or eight miles, lyeth a little Iland called Gratiosa, and is but fiue or sixe miles in compasse, a very pleasant and fine Iland, full of all fruits and all other victuals, so that it not onely feedeth it selfe, but also Tercera, and the other Ilands about it, and hath no other kinde of Merchandise; it is well built and inhabited by Portugals, and hath no Soldiers in it, because it is not able to beare the charge. The Earle of Cumberland while I lay in Tercera, came vnto that Iland, where himselfe in person, with seuen or eight in his company went on land, asking certaine Beasts, Hens, and other Victuals, with Wine and fresh water, which they willingly gaue him, and therewith he departed from thence, without doing them any hurt: for the which the inhabitants thanked him, and commended him for his curtesie, and keeping of his promise.

Gratiosa.

Earle of Cumberland. See sup. l. 6. c. 1.

Digitized by Google

Saint George.

From Tercera West North-west, eight or nine miles, lyeth the Iland of Saint George. It is about twelue miles long, but not aboue two or three miles at the furthest in breadth: it is woody and full of hils: it hath no special traffique, but onely some Woad, and yet very little of it. The inhabitants liue most by Cattell and tilling of the Land, and bring much victuals to sell in Tercera: it hath likewise many Cedar trees, and other kindes of wood, that from thence are brought vnto Tercera, and sold vnto the Joyners, which for that occasion dwell onely in Tercera.

Fayael.

From Saint George West South-west seuen miles, lyeth the Iland called Fayael, which is seuenteene or eighteene miles in compasse: it is one of the best Ilands next vnto Tercera, and Saint Michaels: it aboundeth in all sorts of victuals, both flesh and fish, so that from this Iland the most part of victuals and necessaries commeth by whole Caruels vnto Tercera: it hath likewise much Woad, so that many English Ships doe traffique thither. The principall road and place is the Towne called Vitta dorta: there the Ships likewise doe lye in the open Sea vnder the Land, as they doe before all the other Ilands: by this Towne there lyeth a Fortresse, but of small importance: and because the inhabitants of themselues doe offer to defend the Iland against all enemies, the Soldiers discharged from thence, which before that time lay in the Fort, complaining that they were not able to maintaine nor lodge them. The same time that the Earle of Cumberland was in the Iland of Gratiosa, he came likewise to Fayael, where at the first time that hee came, they began to resist him, but by reason of some controuersie among them, they let him land where he rased the Castle to the ground, and sunke all their Ordnance in the Sea, taking with him certaine Caruels and Ships that lay in the road, with prouision of all things that hee wanted: and therewith departed againe to Sea. Whereupon the King caused the principall actors therein to be punished, and sent a company of Souldiers thither againe, which went out of Tercera, with all kinde of warlike munition, and great shot, making the Fortresse vp againe, the better to defend the Iland, trusting no more in the Portugals. In that Iland are the most part of the Netherlanders off-spring, yet they vse the Portugals language, by reason they haue beene so long conuersant among them, and those that vsed the Dutch tongue are all dead: they are greatly affected to the Netherlanders and strangers.

Fayael taken taken by Earle Cumberland.

Pico.

High Hill.

From Fayael Southeast three miles, and from Saint George South-west foure miles, and from Tercera South-west and by West twelue miles, lyeth the Iland called Pico, which is more then fifteene miles in length. It is so named of a high Mountaine that standeth therein called Pico, which is so high, that some thinke it is higher then the Pico of Canaria. When it is cleare weather, it may as perfectly be seene in Tercera, as if it were not halfe a mile from thence, and yet it lyeth aboue twenty fiue miles from it: for it is at the furthest end of the Iland towards Fayael. The top of it is seene cleare and bright, but the nether part is couered with clouds, and with the Horizon, whereby the Iland is much spoken of. It is very fruitfull of all kindes of victuals, like Fayael, and hath great store of wood, as Cedars & all other kindes, and also the costly wood Teixo. There they build many Caruels and small Ships: and from thence, by reason of the abundance of wood, they serue the other Ilands with wood. It is also inhabited as the rest are, their chiefe traffique being Cattle & husbandry. It hath much Wine, & the best in all those Ilands, and it hath the sauorest & pleasantest Oranges that are throughout all Portugall: so that they are brought into Tercera for a present, as being there very much esteemed, and in my iudgement they are the best that euer I tasted in any place. Angra, in the Iland of Tercera is the chiefe Towne and Ruler ouer all the Flemish Ilands.

Pleasant Oranges.

C. 98.

Flores.

From Tercera Westward to the Iland named Flores are seuenty miles: it is about seuen miles compasse, it is also inhabited by Portugals, & hath no speciall merchandise, but onely some wood, it is full of Cattle, and other necessary prouisions, and lyeth open to all the world, & to whosoeuer will come thither, as well Englishmen as others: for that the inhabitants haue not the power to resist them. A mile from thence Northward, lyeth a little Iland of two or three miles in compasse called De Corno. The inhabitants are of the same people that dwell in Flores. Between those two Ilands and round about them, the Englishmen doe commonly stay, to watch the Ships that come out of the West: for those are the first Ilands, that the Ships looke out for and descry, when they saile vnto Tercera, wherby the inhabitants do but little prosper, because they are at the pleasure & commandment of all that will come vnto them, and take their goods from them, as often times it hapneth. Yet for all their pouerty, not to loose both lands and goods, they must content themselues, and saile with euery winde.

Corno.

The Ile of Tercera lyeth vnder thirty nine degrees, in the same height that Lisbone lyeth: and is distant from Lisbone lying right East and West two hundred and fifty Spanish miles.

Of certaine notable and memorable accidents that happened during my continuance in Tercera: in which are related many English fleetes, Sea-fights and Prizes.

C. 99.

THe second of October, Anno 1589. at the Towne of Villa dan Praya, in the Iland of Tercera, two men being in a field hard without the towne were killed with lightning. The ninth of the the same month there arriued in Tercera 14. Ships, that came from the Spanish Indies, laden with Cochenile, Hides, Gold, Siluer, Pearles, and other rich wares. They were fifty in company, when they departed out of the Iland of Hauana, whereof, in their comming out of the Channell, eleuen sunk in the same Channell by foule weather, the rest by a storme were scattered & seperated one from the other. The next day there came another Ship of the same company, that sailed close vnder the Iland, to get into the Road; where she met with an English Ship, that had not aboue three cast Peeces, & the Spaniard twelue. They fought a long time together, which we being in the Iland might stand & behold: whereupon our Gouernor of Tercera sent two Boats of Musketiers to helpe the Ship: but before they could come at her, the English Ship had shot her vnder water, and we saw her sinke into the Sea, with all her sailes vp, and not any thing seene of her aboue the water. The Englishmen with their Boats saued the Captaine and about thirty others with him, but not one peny worth of the goods, & yet in the Ship there was at the least to the value of 200000. Ducats in Gold, Siluer, and Pearles, the rest of the men were drowned, which might be about 50. persons, among the which were some Friers and women, which the Englishmen would not saue. Those that they had saued they set on land, & then they sailed away. The 27. of the same month, the said 14. Ships hauing refreshed themselues in the Iland, departed from Tercera towards Sinil, and comming vpon the coast of Spaine, they were taken by the English Ships, that lay there to watch for them, two onely excepted which escaped away, & the rest were wholly carried into England.

About the same time the Earle of Cumberland, with one of the Queenes Ships, and fiue or six more, kept about those Ilands and came oftentimes so close vnder the Iland, and to the Road of Angra, that the people on land might easily tell all his men that he had aboord, and knew such as walked on the Hatches; they of the Iland not once shooting at them, although they might easily haue done it, for they were within Musket shot both of the Towne and Fort. In these places he continued for the space of two Moneths, and sailed round about the Ilands, and landed in Gratiosa and Fayael, as in the description of those Ilands I haue already declared. Here he tooke diuers Ships and Caruels, which he sent into England: so that those of the Iland durst not once put forth their heads. At the same time about three or foure dayes after the Earle of Cumberland had beene in the Iland of Fayael, and was departed from thence, there arriued in the said Iland of Fayael six Indian Ships, whose Generall was one Iuan Derym: and there they discharged in the Iland fortie Millions of Gold and Siluer. And hauing with all speede refreshed their Ships, fearing the comming of the Englishmen, they set saile, and arriued safely in Saint Lucas, not meeting with the enemy, to the great good lucke of the Spaniards, and hard fortune of the Englishmen; for that within lesse then two daies, after the Gold and Siluer was laden again into the Spanish Ships, the Earle of Cumberland sailed againe by that Iland; so that it appeared that God would not let them haue it, for if they had once had sight thereof, without doubt it had beene theirs, as the Spaniards themselues confessed.

40. Millions, If the number be true.

In the moneth of November, there arriued in Tercera two great Ships, which were the Admirall and Viceadmirall of the Fleete laden with Siluer, who with stormy weather were seperated from the Fleete, and had beene in great torment and distresse, and ready to sinke; for they were forced to vse all their Pumps: so that they wished a thousand times to haue met with the Englishmen to whom they would willingly haue giuen their Siluer, and all that euer they brought with them, onely to saue their liues. And although the Earle of Cumberland lay still aboue those Ilands, yet they met not with him, so that after much paine and labor they got into the Road before Angra, where with all speed they vnladed, & discharged aboue 5. Millions of Siluer, all in peeces of 8. and 10. pound great: so that the whole Bay lay couered with plates & Chests of Siluer, full of Ryals of eight, most wonderfull to behold: euch Million being ten hundred thousand Ducats, besides Pearles, Gold, and other stones, which were not registred. The Admirall & chiefe commander of those Ships and Fleete called Aluaro Flores de Quiniones was sicke of the Neapolitan disease, and was brought to land, whereof not long after he dyed in Sanila. He brought with him the Kings broad Seale and full authority to be Generall & chiefe commander vpon the Seas, and of all Fleets or Ships, and of all places & Ilands, or Lands whereseuer he came: whereupon the Gouernor of Tercera did him great honor, and betweene them it was concluded, perchaunce the weakenesse of their Ships, and the danger of the Englishman, that they would send the Ships empty with Soldiers to conuey them, either to Sinil or Lisbone, where they could first arriue, with aduise vnto his Maiesty of all that had past, and that he would giue order to fetch the Siluer, with good and safe conuoy. Whereupon the said Aluaro Flores staied there, vnder colour of keeping the Siluer, but specially because of his disease, and for that they were afraid of the Englishmen. This Aluaro Flores had alone for his owne part aboue fifty thousand Ducats in Pearles, which he shewed vnto vs, and sought to sell them, or barter them with vs for Spices, or bils of exchange. The said two Ships set saile with three or foure hundred men, as well Soldiers as others, that came with them and not one man saued. The Vice-admirall cut downe her Mast, and ranne the Ship on ground out of India, and being at Sea had a storme, wherewith the Admirall burst and sinke in the Sea, hard by Sentuual, where it burst in peeces, some of the men sauing themselues by swimming, that brought the newes, but the rest were drowned.

Fiue Millions.

In

In the same moneth, there came two great ships out of the Spanish Indies, and being within halfe a mile of the Road of Tercera, they met with an English shippe, that after they had fought long together, tooke them both. About seuen or eight moneths before, there had beene an English ship in Tercera, that vnder the name of a Frenchman came to traffique in the Iland, there to lade wood, and being discouered was both ship and goods confiscated to the Kings vse, and all the men kept prisoners: yet went they vp and downe the streets to get their liuings, by labouring like slaues, being in deed as safe in that Iland, as if they had beene in prison. But in the end vpon a Sunday all the Sailers went downe behind the Hils called Bresil: where they found a Fisher-boat, wherinto they got, and rowed into the Sea to the Earle of Cumberlands ship, which to their great fortune chanced at that time to come by the Iland, and anchored with his ships about halfe a mile from the Road of Angra, hard by two small Hands, which lye about a Bases shot from the Iland, and are full of Goats, Buckes, and Sheepe, belonging to the Inhabitants of the Iland of Tercera. Those Saylers knew it well, and thereupon they rowed vnto them with their Boats, and lying at Anchor that day, they fetched as many Goats and Sheepe as they had neede of: which those of the Towne and of the Iland well saw and beheld, yet durst not once go forth, so there remayned no more on Land but the Master, and the Merchant, of the said English ship. This Master had a Brother in Law dwelling in England, who hauing newes of his brothers imprisonment in Tercera, got licence of the Queene of England, to set forth a ship, therewith to see if he could recouer his losses of the Spaniards, by taking some of them, and so to redeeme his brother, that lay prisoner in Tercera, and he it was, that tooke the two Spanish shippes before the Towne. The Master of the ship aforesaid, standing on the shore by me, and looking vpon them, for he was my great acquaintance, the shipps being taken, that were worth three hundred thousand Duckets, he sent all the men on Land sauing only two of the principall Gentlemen, which he kept aboord, thereby to ransome his brother: and sent the Pilot of one of the Indian ships that were taken, with a Letter to the Gouernour of Tercera: wherein he wrote that hee should deliuer him his brother, and he would send the two Gentlemen on Land: if not, he would saile with them into England, as indeed he did, because the Gouernoor would not doe it, saying that the Gentleman might make that suite to the King of Spaine himselfe. This Spanish Pilot we bid to supper with vs, and the Englishmen likewise, where hee shewed vs all the manner of their fight, much commending the order and manner of the Englishmens fighting, as also for their courteous vsing of him: but in the end the English Pilot likewise stole away in a French ship, without paying any ransome as yet.

In the moneth of Ianuary 1590. there arriued one ship alone in Tercera, that came from the Spanish Indies, and brought newes, that there was a fleet of a hundred ships which put out from the Firme Land of the Spanish Indies, and by a storme were driuen vpon the Coast called Florida, where they were all cast away, she hauing only escaped, wherein there were great riches, and many men lost, as it may well be thought: so that they made their account that of two hundred and twentie ships, that for certaine were knowne to haue put out of Nona Spaigna, Santo Domingo, Hauana, Cape verde, Brasilia, Guinea, &c. In the yeere 1589. to saile for Spaine in Portugall, there were not aboue fourteene or fifteene of them arriued there in safetie, all the rest being either drowned, burst or taken.

In the same Moneth of Ianuary, there arriued in Tercera fifteen or sixteene ships that came from Sicilia, which were most Flie-boats of the low Countries, and some Britons that were arrested in Spaine: these came full of Souldiers, and well appointed with munition, to lade the siluer that lay in Tercera, and to fetch Alnares de Flores, by the Kings commandement into Spaine. And because that time of the yeere there is alwayes stormes about those Ilands, therefore they durst not enter into the Road of Tercera, for that as then it blew so great a storme, that some of their ships that had anchored, were forced to cut downe their Masts, and were in danger to bee lost: and among the rest a ship of Biscay ranne against the Land, and was stricken in pieces, but all the men saued themselues. The other ships were forced to keepe the Sea, and separate themselues one from the other, where winde and weather would driue them, vntill the fifteenth of March: for that in all that time they could not haue one day of faire weather to anchor in, whereby they indured much misserie, cursing both the siluer and the Iland. This storme being past, they chanced to meete with a small English ship of about fortie tunnes in bignesse, which by reason of the great wind could not beare all her sailes: so they set vpon her, and tooke her, and with the English flagge in their Admirals sterne they came as proudly into the Hauen, as if they had conquered all the Realme of England: but as the Admirall that bare the English flagge vpon her sterne, was entring into the Road, there came by chance two English ships by the Iland, that paid her so well for her paines, that they were forced to cry Miserecordia, and without all doubt had taken her, if she had beene but a mile further in the Sea: but because she got vnder the Fortresse, which also began to shoot at the Englishmen, they were forced to leaue her, and to put further into the Sea, hauing slaine fiue or sixe of the Spaniards. The Englishmen that were taken in the small ship were put vnder hatches, and coupled in bolts, and after they had beene Prisoners three or foure dayes, there was a Spanish Ensigne-bearer in the ship, that had a brother slaine in the fleet that came for England, England, who as then, minding to reuenge his death, and withall to shew his man-hood to the English Captiues, that were in the English shippe, which they had taken, as is aforesaid, tooke a Ponyard in his hand, and went downe vnder the Hatches, where finding the poore Englishmen sitting in bolts, with the same Ponyard he stabbed sixe of them to the heart: which two others of them perceiuing, clasped each other about the middle, because they would not bee murthered by him, threw themselues into the Sea, and there were drowned. This act was of all the Spaniards much disliked and very ill taken, so that they carried the Spaniard prisoner vnto Lisbone, where being arriued, the King of Spaine willed he should be sent into England, that the Queene of England might vse him as she thought good: which sentence his friends by intreatie got to bee reuersed, notwithstanding he commanded he should without all fauour bee beheaded: but vpon a good Friday, the Cardinall going to Masse, all the Captaines and Commanders made so great intreatie for him that in the end they got his pardon. This I thought good to note, that men might vnderstand the bloudie and honest mindes of the Spaniards, when they haue men vnder their subiection.

The same two English ships, which followed the Spanish Admirall, till hee had got vnder the Fort of Tercera, as I said before, put into the Sea, where they met with an other Spanish ship, being of the same fleete, that had likewise beene scattered by the storme and was only missing, for the rest lay in the Road: this small ship the Englishmen tooke, and sent all the men on shore, not hurting any of them: but if they had knowne, what had beene done vnto the foresaid English Captiues, I beleeue they would soone haue reuenged themselues, as afterward many an innocent soule payed for it. This ship thus taken by the Englishmen, was the same that was kept and confiscated in the Iland of Tercera, by the Englishmen that got out of the Iland in a fisher-boat (as I said before) and was sold vnto the Spaniards, that as then came from the Indies, wherewith they sailed to Saint Lucas, where it was also arrested by the Duke, and appoined to goe in company to fetch the siluer in Tercera, because it was a shippe that sayled well: but among the Spaniards fleete it was the meanest of the Company. By this meanes it was taken from the Spaniards, and carried into England, and the Owners had it againe, when they least thought of it.

The nineteenth of March, the aforesaid ships, being nineteene in number, set saile, hauing laden the Kings siluer, and receiued in Aluaro Flores de Quiniones, with his company, and good prouision of necessaries, Munition and Souldiers, that were fully resolued (as they made shew) to fight valiantly to the last man, before they would yeeld or lose their riches: and although they set their course for Saint Lucas, the wind draue them vnto Lisbone, which (as it seemed) was willing by his force to helpe them, and to bring them thither in safetie: although Aluaro de Flores, both against the wind and weather would perforce haue sailed to Saint Lucas, but being constrained by the wind, and importunitie of the Sailers, that protested they would require their losses and damages of him, he was content to saile to Lisbone: from whence the siluer was by Land carried into Sicilia. At Cape Saint Vincent, there lay a Fleet of twentie English shippes, to watch for the Armada, so that if they had put into Saint Lucas, they had fallen right into their hands, which if the wind had serued they had done. And therefore they may say that the wind had lent them a happie Voyage: for if the Englishmen had met with them, they had surely beene in great danger, and possibly but few of them had escaped, by reason of the feare wherewith they were possessed, because Fortune or rather God was wholly against them. Which is a sufficient cause to make the Spaniards out of heart, to the contrarie to giue the Englishmen more courage, and to make them bolder for that they are victorious, stout and valiant: and seeing all their enterprizes doe take so good effect, that thereby they are become Lords and Masters of the Sea, and need care for no man, as it well appeareth by this briefe Discourse.

In the month of March 1590. There was a Blasing Starre with a taile seene in Tercera, that continued foure nights together, stretching the tayle towards the South. 1590.

In the moneth of May, a Carnell of Fayael arriued at Tercera, in the Hauen or Road of Angra, laden with Oxen, Sheepe, Hennes, and all other kinds of victuals, and full of people, which by a storme had broken her Ruther, whereby the Sea cast her about and therewith she sunke, and in her were drowned three children, and a Frier Franciscan, the rest of the men saued themselues by swimming, and by helpe from the shore, but all the Cattle and Hennes came drowned to land: the Frier was buried with a great Procession and Solemnitie, esteeming him for a Saint, because he was taken vp dead with his Booke betweene his armes: for the which cause euery man came to looke on him as a Miracle, giuing great Offerings to say Masses for his soule.

The first of August, the Gouernor of Tercera, receiued aduise out of Portugall and Spaine, that two yeeres before the date of his Letters, there were sayled out of England twelue great shippes well appointed, with full resolution to take their iournie, seuen of them into the Portugall Indies, and the other fiue to Malacca: of the which fiue, two were cast away in passing the Straits of Magellanes, and three sayled to Malacca: but what they had done there, was as then not knowne. The other seuen passed the Cape de bona Speranza, and arriued in India, where they put into the Coast of Malabares, but let them goe againe: and two Turkish Gallies, that came out of the Straits of Mecca or the Red Sea, to whom likewiſe they did no hurt. And there they laded their ſhips wis Spices, and returned backe againe on their way: but where or in what place they had laden, it was not certainely knowne, ſauing onely that thus much was written by the Gouernour of India, and ſent ouer Land to Venice, and from thence to Madrill.

Digitized by Google

Sir M. Frobiſher. The ſeuenth of Auguſt, a Nauie of Engliſh ſhips was ſeene before Tercera, beeing twentie in number, and fiue of them the Queenes ſhips: their Generall was one Martin Frobiſher, as wee after had intelligence. They came purpoſely to watch for the fleet of the Spaniſh Indies, and for the Indian ſhips, and the ſhippes of the Countries in the Weſt: which put the Ilanders in great feare, ſpecially thoſe of Fayael, for that the Engliſhmen ſent a Trumpet to the Gouernour to aske certaine wine, fleſh, and other victuals for their money, and good friendſhip. They of Fayael did not onely refuſe to giue eare vnto them, but with a ſhot killed their Meſſenger or Trumpetter: which the Engliſhmen tooke in euill part, ſending them word that they were beſt to looke to themſelues, and ſtand vpon their guard, for they meant to come and viſit them whether they would or no. The Gouernour made them anſwere, that he was there, in the behalfe of his Maieſtie of Spaine and that he would doe his beſt, to keepe them out, as he was bound: but no thing was done, although they of Fayael were in no little feare, ſending to Tercera for aide, from whence they had certaine Barkes with Powder and Munition for warre, with ſome Biſket and other neceſſary prouiſion.

The thirtieth of Auguſt, we receiued very certaine newes out of Portugall, that there were eightie ſhips put out of the Caruuho, laden with Victuals, Munition, Money, and Souldiers, to goe for Britaine to aide the Catholikes and Leaguers of France, againſt the King of Nauarre. At the ſame time, two Netherland Hulkes, comming out of Portugall to Tercera, beeing halfe the Seas ouer, met with foure of the Queenes ſhippes, their Generall beeing Sir Iohn Hawkins, that ſtayed them, but let them goe againe, without doing them any harme. The Netherlanders reported, that each of the Queenes ſhips had eightie Peeces of Ordnance, and that Captaine Drake lay with fortie ſhips in the Engliſh Channell, watching for the Armie of Caruuho: and likewiſe that there lay at the Cape Saint Vincent tenne other Engliſh ſhips, that if any ſhips eſcaped from the Ilands, they might take them. Thoſe tidings put the Ilanders in great feare, leſt if they failed of the Spaniſh fleete, and got nothing by them, that then they would fall vpon the Ilands, becauſe they would not returne emptie home, whereupon they held ſtraight watch, ſending aduiſe vnto the King what newes they heard.

The firſt of September, there came to the Iland of Saint Michael a Portugall ſhip, out of the Hauen of Pernambuco, in Braſilia, which brought newes that the Admirall of the Portugall fleet, that came from India, hauing miſſed the Iland of Saint Helena, was of neceſſitie conſtrained to put in at Pernambuco, although the King had expreſly vnder a great penaltie forbidden him ſo to doe, becauſe of the Wormes that there doe ſpoile the ſhips. The ſame ſhip wherein Bernaldine Rybero, was Admirall, the yeere before 1589. ſayled out of Liſbone into the Indies, with fiue ſhips in her company, whereof but foure got into India, the fift was neuer heard of, ſo that it was thought to be caſt away: The other foure returned ſafe againe into Portugall, though the Admirall was much ſpoiled, becauſe he met with two Engliſh ſhips, that fought long with him, and ſlue many of his men, but yet he eſcaped from them.

1589.

The fift of the ſame moneth, there arriued in Tercera, a Caruell of the Iland of Coruo, and brought with her fiftie men that had beene ſpoyled by the Engliſhmen, who had ſet them on ſhore in the Iland of Coruo, being taken out of a ſhippe that came from the Spaniſh Indies, they brought tydings that the Engliſhmen had taken foure more of the Indian ſhips, and a Caruell with the King of Spaines Letters of aduiſe for the ſhips comming out of the Portugall Indies, and that with thoſe which they had taken, they were at the leaſt forty Engliſh ſhips together, ſo that not one Barke eſcaped them, but fell into their hands, and that therefore the Portugall ſhips comming out of India, durſt not put into the Ilands, but tooke their courſe vnder fortie and fortie two degrees, and from thence ſailed to Liſbon, ſhunning likewiſe the Cape Saint Vincent, otherwiſe they could not haue had a proſperous iourney of it, for that as then the Sea was full of Engliſh ſhips. Wherupon the King aduiſed the fleet, lying in Hauana, in the Spaniſh Indies ready to come for Spaine, that they ſhould ſtay there all that yeere till the next yeere, becauſe of the great danger they might fall into by the Engliſhmen, which was no ſmall charge and hinderance to the fleet, for that the ſhips that lie there doe conſume themſelues, and in a manner eate vp one another, by reaſon of the great number of people, together with the ſcarcitie of all things, ſo that many ſhips choſe rather, one by one to aduenture themſelues alone, to get home, then to ſtay there: all which fell into the Engliſhmens hands, whereof diuers of the men were brought into Tercera, for that a whole day we could ſee nothing elſe, but ſpoyled men ſet on ſhore, ſome out of one ſhip ſome out of another, that pittie it was to ſee, all of them curſing the Engliſhmen, and their owne fortunes, with thoſe that had beene the cauſes to prouoke the Engliſhmen to fight, and complayning of the ſmall remedie and order taken therein by the King of Spaines Officers.

Note.

The nineteenth of the ſame moneth, there came to Tercera a Caruel of Liſbon, with one of the Kings Kings Officers, to cause the goods that were saued out of the ship, which came from Malacca, (for the which we stayed there) to be laden, and sent to Lisbon. And at the same time there put out of the Caruiba one Don Alonso de Bassan, with fortie great ships of warre to come vnto the Ilands, there to watch for the fleet of the Spanish and Portugall Indies, and the goods of the Malacca ship being laden, they were to conuoy them all together into the Riuer of Lisbon: but being certaine dayes at Sea, alwayes hauing a contrary wind they could not get vnto the Ilands: only two of them that were scattered from the fleet, they presently returned backe to seeke them: in the meane time the King changed his minde, and caused the fleet to stay in India, as I said before: and therefore he sent word vnto Don Alonso de Bassan, that hee should returne againe to the Caruiba, which he presently did (without doing any thing, nor once approching neere the Ilands, sauing only the two foresaid ships, for he well knew that the Englishmen lay by the Iland of Corue, but he would not visit them: and so he returned to the Hauen of Caruiba, whereby our goods that came from Malacca, were yet to ship, and stuffed vp againe, forced to stay a more fortunate time, with patience perforce.

The three and twentieth of October, there arriued in Tercera a Carrell, with aduise out of Portingall, that of fiue ships, which in the yeare 1590. were laden in Lisbon for the Indies, foure of them were turned againe to Portingall, after they had beene foure moneths abroad, and that the Admirall, wherein the Vice-roy called Mathias de Alburkerke sailed, had only gotten to India, as afterward newes thereof was brought ouer Land, hauing beene at the least eleuen monethes at Sea, and neuer saw Land, and came in great misery to Malacca. In this ship there died by the way two hundred and eightie men, according to a note by himselfe made, and sent to the Cardinall at Lisbon, with the names and surnames of euery man, together with a description of his Voyage, and the misery they had indured: which was only done, because he would not lose the gouernment of India: and for that cause he had sworne either to lose his life, or to arriue in India, as indeed he did afterwards, but to the great danger, losse and hinderance of his company, that were forced to buy it with their liues, and onely for want of prouision, as it may well bee thought: for he knew full well that if he had returned backe againe into Portingall, as the other ships did, hee should haue beene cashiered from his Indian Regiment, because the people began alreadie to murmurre at him, for his proude and loftie minde. And among other things that shewed his pride the more, behind aboue the Gallery of his ship, he caused Fortune to be painted, and his owne Picture with a staffe standing by her, as it were threatning Fortune, with this Poesie, Quero que vencas, that is, I will haue thee to ouercome: which beeing read by the Cardinall and other Gentlemen (that to honour him aboord his ship) it was thought to be a point of exceeding folly. But it is no strange matter among the Portingalls, for they aboue all others must of force Let the Foole peepe out of their sleeues, specially when they are in authoritie: for that I knew the said Mathias de Alberkerk in India, being a Souldier and a Captaine, where he was esteemed and accounted for one of the best of them, and much honoured, and beloued of all men, as behauing himselfe courteously to euery man: whereby they all desired that he might be Vice-roy. But when he once had receiued his Patent with full power and authoritie from the King to be Vice-roy, hee changed so much from his former behauiour, that by reason of his pride, they all began to feare and curse him, and that before he departed out of Lisbon, as it is often seene in many men that are aduanced vnto state and dignitie.

1590.

280. men die in one ship, in one Voyage, by one mans vanitie.

The twentieth of Ianuary, Anno 1591. there was newes brought out of Portingall into Tercera, that the Englishmen had taken a ship, that the King had sent into the Portingall Indies, with aduise to the Vice-roy, for the returning againe of the foure ships that should haue gone to India, and because the ships were come backe againe, that ship was stuffed and laded as full of goods as possible it might be, hauing likewise in ready money fiue hundred thousand Duckets in Rials of eight, besides other wares. It departed from Lisbone in the moneth of Nouember 1590. and met with the Englishmen, with whom for a time it fought: but in the end it was taken and carried into England with men and all, yet when they came there the men were set at libertie, and returned into Lisbone, where the Captaine was commited Prisoner: but hee excused himselfe, and was released, with whom I spake my selfe, and he made this report vnto me. At the same time also they tooke a ship that came from the Myne laden with Gold, and two ships laden with Pepper, and Spices that were to saile into Italie, the Pepper onely that was in them, being worth 170000. Duckets: all these ships were carried into England, and made good prize.

1591.

In the moneth of Iuly, An. 1591. there happened an Earth-quake in the Iland of S. Michael, which continued from the six and twentieth of Iuly to the t welfth of August: in which time no man durst stay within his house, but fled into the fields, fasting and praying, with great sorrow for that many of their houses fell downe, and a Towne called Villa Franca, was almost cleane razed to the ground all the Cloysters and houses shaken to the earth, and therein some people slaine. The Land in some places rose vp, and the Cliffes remooued from on place to another, and some Hils were defaced and made euen with the ground. The Earthquake was so strong, that the ships which lay in the Road, and on the Sea, shaked as if the World would haue turned round: there sprang also a Fountaine out of the earth, from whence for the space of foure dayes, Earthquake most terrible.

Prodigies.

there

there flowed a moſt cleare water, and after that it ceaſed. At the ſame time they heard ſuch thunder and noiſe vnder the earth, as if all the Diuels in hell had beene aſſembled together in that place; wherewith many died for feare. The Iland of Tercera ſhooke foure times together, ſo that it ſeemed to turne about, but there happened no misfortune vnto it. Earthquakes are common in thoſe Ilands, for about twenty yeares paſt there happened another earthquake, where in a high Hill that lyeth by the ſame towne of Villa Franca, fell halfe downe, and couered all the towne with earth, and killed many men.

The fiue and twentieth of Auguſt, the Kings Armada, comming out of Farol arriued in Tercera, being in all thirty Ships, Biskaues, Portugals, and Spaniards: and ten Dutch flye-boates, that were arreſted in Lisbone to ſerue the King, beſides other ſmall Ships Pataxos, that came to ſerue as meſſengers from place to place, and to diſcouer the Seas. This Nauie came to ſtay for, and conuoy the Ships that ſhould come from the Spaniſh Indies, and the flye-boates were appointed in their returne home, to take in the goods that were ſaued in the loſt Ship that came from Malacca, and to conuoy it to Lisbone.

The thirteenth of September the ſaid Armado arriued at the Iland of Corue, where the Engliſhmen with about ſixteene Ships, as then lay, ſtaying for the Spaniſh Fleete: whereof ſome or the moſt part were come, and there the Engliſh were in good hope to haue taken them. But when they perceiued the Kings Army to be ſtrong, the Admirall being the Lord Thomas Howard, commanded his Fleete not to fall vpon them, nor any of them once to ſeperate their Shippes from him, vnleſſe he gaue commiſſion ſo to doe: notwithſtanding the Vice-Admirall, Sir Richard Greenfield, being in the Ship called the Reuenge, went into the Spaniſh Fleete, and ſhot among them, doing them great hurt, and thinking the reſt of the company would haue followed: which they did not, but left him there, and ſailed away; the cauſe why they could not know: which the Spaniards perceiuing, with ſeuen or eight Ships they boorded her, but ſhe withſtood them all, fighting with them at the leaſt twelue houres together, and ſunke two of them, one being a new double Flie-boate of twelue thouſand tunnes, and Admirall of the Flie-boates, the other a Biſcaine: But in the end, by reaſon of the number that came vpon her, ſhe was taken, but to their great loſſe; for they had loſt in fighting, and by drowning aboue foure hundred men; and of the Engliſh were ſlaine about a hundred, Sir Richard Greenfield himſelfe being wounded in his braine, whereof afterwards he died. He was borne into the Ship called the Saint Paul, wherein was the Admirall of the Fleete Don Alonſo de Barſan: there his wounds were dreſt by the Spaniſh Surgeons, but Don Alonſo himſelfe would neither ſee him, nor ſpeake with him: all the reſt of the Captaines and Gentlemen went to viſite him, and to comfort him in his hard fortune, wondring at his courage and ſtout heart, for that he ſhewed not any ſigne of faintneſſe nor changing of colour. But feeling the houre of death to approach, he ſpake theſe words in Spaniſh, and ſaid; Here dye I Richard Greenfield, with a joyfull and quiet minde, for that I haue ended my life as a true Souldier ought to doe, that hath fought for his Countrey, Queene, Religion, and honour, whereby my Soule moſt ioyfull departeth out of this body, and ſhall alwayes leaue behinde it an euerlaſting fame of a valiant and true Soldier, that hath done his duetie, as hee was bound to doe. When he had finiſhed theſe or ſuch other like words, he gaue vp the Ghoſt with great and ſtout courage, and no man could perceiue any true ſigne of heauineſſe in him.

This Sir Richard Greenfield was a great and a rich Gentleman in England, and had great yearely reuenewes of his owne inheritance: but he was a man very vnquiet in his minde, and greatly affected to warre; in ſo much as of his owne priuate motion he offered his ſeruice to the Queene. He had performed many valiant acts, and was greatly feared in theſe Ilands, and knowne of euery man; but of nature very ſeuere, ſo that his owne people hated him for his fierceneſſe, and ſpake very hardly of him: for when they firſt entred into the Fleete or Armado, they had their great ſaile in a readineſſe, and might poſſibly enough haue ſailed away; for it was one of the beſt Ships for ſaile in England; and the Maſter perceiuing that the other Ships had left them, and followed not after, commanded the great ſaile to be cut, that they might make away: but Sir Richard Greenfield threatned both him, and all the reſt that were in the Ship, that if any man laid hand vpon it, he would cauſe him to be hanged, and ſo by that occaſion they were compelled to fight, and in the end were taken. He was of ſo hard a complexion, that as hee continued among the Spaniſh Captaines while they were at dinner or ſupper with him, hee would carouſe three or foure Glaſſes of Wine, and in a brauery take the Glaſſes betweene his teeth, and craſh them in peeces, and ſwallow them downe, ſo that often times the bloud ran out of his mouth without any harme at all vnto him: and this was told me by diuers credible perſons that many times ſtood and beheld him. The Engliſhmen that were left in the Ship, as the Captaine of the

Sir Richard Greenuile. See Hak. Tom. 2. This Storie penned by Sir Walter Ralcigh. There were but ſix of theſe Shippes the Queenes: and Sir Richard Greenuile ſtaid to recouer his men on ſhore; 93. of his men were ſicke. He ſcorned to flye as the Maſter counſelled (which had beene better) and thought to made way thorow their ſquadrons, and made ſome ſpring looſe till the greatneſſe of the S. Philip of 1500 tuns being in the winde of him, becalmed his ſailes; ſo that the Reuenge could not feele her ſailes nor helme, and was boorded by the S. Philip and foure others. Theſe were beaten off, and fifteen ſeuerall Armadas aſſailed her. All her Powder was ſpent to the laſt barrell; nor had firſt aboue 100. ſound men to ſuſtaine the brunt. Yet ſhe endured fifteene houres fight, fifteene Armadas by turne, 800. ſhot, many entries, 53. ſailes of men of warre, and 10000. men to doe this. After all this, Sir R. Greenfield now wounded, commanded to blow vp the Ship; but the Captaine intreating to the contrary, the Maſter was ſent, vnknowne to Sir R. Greenfield, to treat a compoſition with Bazan the Generall, who yeelded their liues to be ſaued, and to be ſent for England, the better ſort to pay ranſome, but free meane time from priſon and Gallie. Almoſt 1000. of the enemies were ſlaine in this fight. Thus haue I giuen you the briefe of Sir Walters report alſo, to make this ſtorie compleate.

Soldiers,

Digitized by Google

Souldiers, the Maſter and others were diſperſed into diuers of the Spaniſh Ships that had taken them, where there had almoſt a new fight arriſen betweene the Biſcaines and the Portugals; while each of them would haue the honour to haue firſt boorded her, ſo that there grew a great noiſe and quarrell among them, one taking the chiefe Ancient, and the other the Flagge, and the Captaine and euery one held his owne. The ſhips that had boorded her were altogether out of order and broken, and many of their men hurt, whereby they were compelled to come into the Iland of Tercera, there to repaire themſelues: where being arriued, I and my chamber-fellow, to heare ſome newes went aboord one of the Ships being a great Biſcaine, and one of the twelue Apoſtles, whoſe Captaine was called Bertandono, that had bin Generall of the Biſcaines in the fleete that went for England. He ſeeing vs, called vs vp into the Gallery, where with great curteſie he receiued vs, being as then ſet at dinner with the Engliſh Captaine that ſat by him, and had on a ſute of blacke Veluet; but he could not tell vs any thing, for that he could ſpeake no other language but Engliſh and Latine, which Bertandono alſo could a little ſpeake. The Engliſh Captaine that he might come on land with his weapon by his ſide, and was in our lodging with the Engliſhman that was kept priſoner in the Iland, being of that ſhip whereof the ſailers got away, as I ſaid before. The Gouernour of Tercera bad him to dinner, and ſhewed him great curteſie. The Maſter likewiſe with licence of Bertandono came on land, and was in our lodging, and had at the leaſt ten or twelue wounds, as well in his head, as on his body, whereof after that being at Sea, betweene Lisbone and the Ilands he died. The Captaine wrote a Letter, wherein he declared all the manner of the fight, and left it with the Engliſh Merchant that lay in our lodging, to ſend it to the Lord Admirall of England. The Engliſh Captaine comming to Lisbone, was there well receiued, and not any hurt done vnto him, but with good conuoy ſent to Sentuual, and from thence ſayled into England, with all the reſt of the Engliſhmen that were taken pryſoners.

The Spaniſh Armie ſtaied at the Iland of Corno till the laſt of September, to aſſemble the reſt of the Fleets together: which in the end were to the number of one hundred and forty ſayle of Ships, partly comming from India, and partly of the Army, and being altogether ready vnto ſaile to Tercera in good company, there ſodainly roſe ſo hard and cruell a ſtorme, that thoſe of the Iland did affirme, that in mans memory there was neuer any ſuch ſeene or heard of before: for it ſeemed the Sea would haue ſwallowed vp the Ilands, the water mounting higher then the Cliffes, which are ſo high that it amazeth a man to behold them: but the Sea reached aboue them, and liuing fiſhes were throwne vpon the land. This ſtorme continued not onely a day or two with one winde, but ſeuen or eight dayes continually, the winde turning round about, in all places of the compaſſe, at the leaſt twice or thrice during that time, and all alike, with a continuall ſtorme and tempeſt moſt terrible to behold, euen to vs that were on ſhore, much more then to ſuch as were at Sea: ſo that onely on the Coaſts and Clifts of the Iland of Tercera, there were aboue twelue Ships caſt away, and not onely vpon the one ſide, but round about it in euery corner: whereby nothing elſe was heard but complaining, crying, lamenting, and telling here is a ſhip broken in peeces againſt the Cliffes, and there another, and all the men drowned: ſo that for the ſpace of twenty dayes after the ſtorme, they did nothing elſe but fiſh for dead men, that continually came driuing on the ſhore. Among the reſt was the Engliſh ſhip called the Reuenge, that was caſt away vpon a Cliffe neere to the Iland of Tercera, where it brake in a hundred peeces, and ſunke to the ground, hauing in her ſeuenty men Gallegos, Biſcaines, and others, with ſome of the captiue Engliſhmen, whereof but one was ſaued that got vp vpon the Cliffes aliue, and had his body and head all wounded, and he being on ſhore brought vs the newes, deſiring to be ſhriuen, and thereupon preſently died. The Reuenge had in her diuers faire Braſſe Peeces, that were all ſunke in the Sea, which they of the Iland were in good hope to weigh vp againe the next Summer following. Among theſe Ships that were caſt away about Tercera, was likewiſe a Flie-boate, one of thoſe that had bin areſted in Portugall to ſerue the King, called the White Doue. The Maſter of her, was one Cornelius Martenſon of Schiedam in Holland, and there were in her one hundred Souldies, as in euery one of the reſt there was. He being ouer ruled by the Captaine, that he could not be Maſter of his owne, ſayling here and there at the mercy of God, as the ſtorme droue him, in the end came within the ſight of Tercera: which the Spaniards perceiuing, thought all their ſafety onely to conſiſt in putting into the Road, compelling the Maſter and the Pilot to make towards the Iland, although the Maſter refuſed to doe it, ſaying, that they were moſt ſure there to be caſt away, and vtterly ſpoiled: but the Captain called him drunkard, & Heretick, and ſtriking him with a ſtaffe, commanded him to do as he would haue him. The Maſter ſeeing this, and being compelled to doe it, ſaid: well then my Maſters, ſeeing it is the deſire of you all to be caſt away, I can but looſe one life; and therewith deſperately he ſailed towards the ſhoare, and was on that ſide of the Iland, where there was nothing elſe but hard ſtones and Rockes, as high as Mountaines, moſt terrible to behold, where ſome of the Inhabitants ſtood with long ropes and corke bound at the end thereof, to throw them downe vnto the men, that they might lay hold vpon them and ſaue their liues; but few of them got ſo neere, moſt of them being caſt away, and ſmitten in peeces before they could get to the wall. The Ship ſailed in this manner (as I said before) towards the Iland, and approaching to the shoare, the Master being an old man, and full of yeares, called his Sonne that was in the ship with him, and hauing imbraced one another, and taken their last farewell, the good old father willed his Sonne not to take care for him, but seeke to saue himselfe: for (said he) sonne, thou art yong, and may haue some hope to saue thy life, but as for me it is no great matter (I am old) what become of me, and therewith each of these shedding many teares, as euery louing father and kinde childe may well consider; the ship fell vpon the Cliffes and brake in peeces, the Father on the one side, the sonne on the other side falling into the sea, each laying hold vpon that which came next to hand, but to no purpose; for the sea was so high and furious, that they were all drowned, and onely foureteene or fifteene saued themselues by swimming, with their legges and armes halfe broken and out of ioynt; among the which was the Masters sonne, and foure other Dutch Boyes: the rest of the Spaniards and Sailers, with the Captaine and Master were drowned: whose heart would not melt with teares to behold so grieuous a sight, specially considering with himselfe that the greatest cause thereof was the beastlinesse and insolency of the Spaniards, as in this onely example may well be seene: whereby may be considered how the other ships sped, as we our selues did in part behold, and by the men that were saued did heare more at large, as also some others of our Countrimen that as then were in the like danger can well witnesse.

Great ſtorme.

Great hurts.

Reuenge reuenged with the loſſe of aboue 100. other ſhips of the Spaniards attending her fates: as great a blow as 88.

On the other Ilands the losse was no lesse then in Tercera; for on the Iland of Saint George there were two Ships cast away: on the Iland of Pico two Ships: on the Iland of Gratiosa three ships & besides those there came euery where round about diuers peeces of broken ships, & other things fleeting towards the Ilands, wherewith the Sea was all couered most pittifull to behold. On the Iland of Saint Michael, there were foure Ships cast away, and betweene Tercera and Saint Michaels; three more were sunke, which were seene and heard to crie out, whereof not one man was saued. The rest put into the Sea without Masts, all torne and rent: so that of the whole Fleete and Armado, being one hundred and forty ships in all, there were but thirty two or thirty three ariued in Spaine and Portugall, yea and those few with so great misery, paine and labour, that not two of them arriued there together, but this day one, and to morrow another, next day the third, & so one after the other to the number aforesaid. All the rest were cast away vpon the Ilands, and ouerwhelmed in the sea: whereby may be considered what great losse and hinderance they receiued at that time: for by many mens iudgements it was esteemed to be much more then was left by their Armie that came for England, and it may well be thought, and presumed, that it was no other but a iust plague purposely sent by God vpon the Spaniards, and that it might truely be said, the taking of the Reuenge was iustly reuenged vpon them, and not by the might or force of man, but by the power of God, as some of them openly said in the Isle of Tercera, that they beleeued verily God would consume them, and that he tooke part with Lutherans and Heretickes: saying further, that so soone as they had throwne the dead body of the Viceadmirall Sir Richard Greenfield ouer-boord, they verily thought that as he had a diuelliſh Faith and Religion, and therefore the Diuels loued him, so he presently sunke into the bottome of the Sea, and downe into Hell, where he raised vp all the Diuels to the reuenge of his death: and that they brought so great stormes and torments vpon the Spaniards, because they onely maintained the Catholike and Romish Religion: such and the like blasphemies against God, they ceased not openly to vtter, without that any man reproued them therein, nor for their false opinions, but the most part of them rather said and affirmed, that of truth it must needes be so.

Note.

Caiaphas propheticth.

God taketh part with Lutherans.

So then the gates of hell preuaileth against their faith.

As one of those Indian Fleetes put out of Noua Spaigna, there were fiue and thirty of them by storme and tempest cast away and drowned in the Sea, being fiftie in all, so that but fifteene escaped. Of the Fleete that came from Santo Domingo, there were foureteene cast away, comming out of the Channell of Hauana, whereof the Admirall and Viceadmirall were two of them: and from Terra Firma in India, there came two ships laden with Gold and Siluer, that were taken by the Englishmen, and before the Spanish Armie came to Corne, the Englishmen at times had taken at the least twenty ships, that came from Saint Domingo, India, Brasilia, &c. and all sent into England. Whereby it plainly appeareth, that in the end God will assuredly plague the Spaniards, hauing already blinded them, so that they haue not the sence to perceiue it, but still to remaine in their obstinate opinions: but it is lost labour to striue against God, and to trust in man, as being foundations erected vpon the sands, which with the winde are blowne downe and ouerthrowne, as we daily see before our eyes, and now not long since in many places haue euidently obserued: and therefore let euery man but looke into his owne actions, and take our Low-Countries for an example, wherein we can but blame our owne sinnes and wickednesses, which doth so blinde vs, that we wholly forget and reiect the benefits of God, continuing the seruants and yoke-slaues of Sathan. God of his mercy open our eyes and hearts, that wee may know our onely health and Sauiour Iesus Christ, who onely can helpe, gouerne, and preserue vs, and giue vs a happy end in all our affaires. By this destruction of the Spaniards, and their euill successe, the lading and shipping of the goods that were saued out of the ship that came from Malacca to Tercera, was againe put off: and therefore wee must haue patience till it please God to send a fitter time, and that we receiue further aduise and order from his Maiestie of Spaine.

Two Ships of treasure taken by the English, and 20. others of the Indian Fleete.

All

Digitized by Google

All this being thus paſt, the Farmers of Pepper and other Merchants that had their goods in Tercera, which were taken out of the loſt ſhip that came from Malacca, ſeeing that the hope of any Armada, or any ſhips in the Kings behalfe to be ſent to fetch it, was all in vaine: they made requeſt vnto his Maieſty, that he would grant them licence euery man particularly to ſhip his goods in what ſhip he would at his owne aduenture; which in the end, after long ſuite, was granted, vpon condition that euery man ſhould put in ſureties, to deliuer the goods in the Cuſtome-houſe at Lisbone, to the end the King might be paied his cuſtome; as alſo that the goods that ſhould be deliuered vnto them in Tercera, ſhould all be regiſtred: whereupon the Farmers of Pepper, with other Merchants, agreed with a Flaſhinger, to fetch all the Cloues, Nutmegs, Mace, and other ſpices and goods that belonged vnto them, the Pepper onely excepted, which as then the King would not grant to lade. The ſame Ship arriued in Tercera about the laſt of Nouember, and becauſe it was ſomewhat dangerous, being the latter end of the yeare, we laded her with all the ſpeede we could, for as then the coaſt was cleare of Engliſhmen. To be ſhort, this Flaſhinger being laden with moſt part of the goods, ſauing the Pepper that was left behinde, we ſet ſaile for Lisbone, paſſing ſome ſmall ſtormes, not once meeting with any ſhip, but onely vpon the coaſt where we ſaw ten Hollanders, that ſailed with Corne towards Ligorne, and other places in Italie, and ſo by Gods helpe vpon the ſecond of Ianuary, Anno 1592. we arriued in the Riuer of Lisbone, being nine yeares after my departure from thence, and there I ſtaied till the month of Iuly, to diſpatch ſuch things as I had to doe, and vpon the ſeuenteenth of the ſame month, I went to Sentinal, where certaine Hollanders lay, with whom I went for Holland. 1592

The end of the eight Booke.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

ENGLISH PLANTATIONS, DISCOVERIES, ACTS, AND OCCVRRENTS, IN VIRGINIA AND SVMMER ILANDS SINCE THE YEERE 1606. TILL 1624.

THE NINTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Part of the first Patent granted by his Maiestie for the Plantation of Virginia, Aprill the tenth 1606.

IAMES by the grace of God, &c. Whereas our loving and well disposed Subiects, Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Summers Knights, Richard Hakluyt Clerke, Prebendary of Westminster, Edward Maria Wingfield, Thomas Hannam, Rawleigh Gilbert Esquires, William Parker, George Popham, and diuers others of our loving Subiects haue beene humble Suitors vnto vs that we would vouchsafe vnto them our License to make Habitation, Plantation, and to deduce a Colonie of sundry of our people into that part of America; commonly called Virginia; and other parts and Territories in America, either appertayning vnto vs, or which now are not actually possessed by any Christian Prince or people, situate lying and being all along the Sea Coast betweene thirtie foure degrees of Northerly latitude from the Equinoctiall Line, and fortie fiue degrees of the same latitude, and in the mayne Land betweene the same thirtie foure and fortie fiue degrees, and the Ilands thereunto adiacent within one hundred miles of the Coast thereof. And to that end, and for the more speedie accomplishment of the said intended Plantation and Habitation there, are desirous to deuide themselues into two seuerall Colonies and Companies, the one consisting of certaine Knights, Gentlemen, Merchants, and other Aduenturers of our Citie of London and elsewhere, which are and from time to time shall be ioyned vnto them, which doe desire to beginne their Plantations and Habitations, in some fit and conuenient place betweene thirtie foure and fortie one degrees of the said latitude, all alongst the Sea Coast of Virginia, and Coast of America aforesaid. And the other consisting of sundry Knights, Gentlemen, Merchans, and other Aduenturers of our Cities, of Bristoll and Exeter, and of our Towne of Plymmouth and other places which doe ioyne themselues vnto that Colonie, which desire to beginne their Plantations and Habitations in some fit and conuenient place betweene thirtie eight and fortie fiue degrees of the said latitude: all alongst the said Coast of Virginia and America, as that Coast lyeth. We greatly commending and graciously accepting of their desires to the furtherance of so Noble a worke, which may by the prouidence of Almightie God hereafter tend to the glorie of his Diuine Maiestie, in propagating of Christian Religion, to such people as yet lime in darknesse, miserable ignorance of the true knowledge and worship of God, and may in time bring the Infidels and Sauages (liuing in those parts) to humane ciuilitie and to a settled and quiet gouernment, doe by these our Letters Patents graciously accept of, and agree to their humble and well intended desires, And doe therefore for vs our Heires and Successours

The first Colony to bee planted betwixt 34. & 41. degrees of North latitude. They to haue all the Lands, &c. for the space of fiftie miles West South-west from the place of their first plantings, and all Mynes, &c. The like East North-east with all Ilands for 100. miles in the Sea ouer against them. 100. within the Land, &c. None to inhabit on the backside without their speciall licence in writing, &c.

grant and agree that the said Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Summers, Richard Hakluyt, and Edward Maria Wingfield, Aduenturers of our Citie of London, and all such others as are or shall be ioyned vnto them of that Colonie shall be called the first Colonie, and they shall and may beginne their said first Plantation and Seate, of their first abode and Habitation at any place vpon the said Coast of Virginia or America, where they shall thinke fit and conuenient, betweene the said thirtie foure and fortie one degrees of the said latitude. And that they shall haue all the Lands, Woods, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Mynes, Minerals, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments whatsoeuer, from the said first seate of their Plantation, and Habitation by the space of fiftie miles of English Statute measure all alongst the said Coast of Virginia and America, towards the West and South-west as the Coast lyeth, with all the Ilands within one hundred miles directly ouer against the same Sea Coast: And also all the Lands, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Mynes, Mynerals, Woods, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoeuer from the said place of their first Plantation and Habitation for the space of fiftie like English miles all alongst the said Coast of Virginia, and America, towards the East and North-east as the Coast lyeth, together with all the Ilands within one hundred miles directly ouer against the same Sea-coast. And also all the Lands, Woods, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Mynes, Mynerals, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoeuer from the same, fiftie miles euery way on the Sea Coast directly into the mayne Land by the space of one hundred like English miles. And shall and may inhabit and remayne there, and shall and may also build and fortifie within any the same for their better safeguard and defence, according to their best discretions, and the direction of the Councell of that Colonie. And that no other of our Subiects shall be permitted or suffered to plant, or inhabit behind or on the backeside of them towards the mayne Land, without the expresse license or consent of the Councell of that Colonie, thereunto in writing first had or obtained. And we doe likewise for vs our Heires and Successors, by these presents, grant and agree that the said Thomas Hanham, Rawleigh Gilbert, William Parker, and George Popham, and all others of the Towne of Plimmouth in the Countie of Deuon, or elsewhere, which are or shall be ioyned vnto them of that Colonie shall be called the second Colonie, and that they shall and may begin their said first Plantation and Seate, of their first abood and Habitation at any place vpon the said Coast of Virginia and America; where they shall thinke fit and conuenient betweene thirtie eight and fortie fiue degrees of the same latitude, and that they shall haue all the Lands, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Mynes, Minerals, Woods, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments, whatsoeuer from the first Seate of their Plantation and Habitation, by the space of fiftie like English miles, as is before said, all alongst the said Coast of Virginia and America towards the West and South-west, and towards the South as the Coast lieth: And all the Ilands within one hundred miles directly ouer against the same Sea Coast. And also all the Lands, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Mynes, Mynerals, Woods, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities, and Hereditaments whatsoeuer from the said place of their first Plantation and Habitation for the space of fiftie like English miles all alongst the said Coast of Virginia and America, towards the East and North-east, and towards the North as the Coast lyeth, and all the Ilands within one hundred miles directly ouer against the same Coast, and also all the Lands, Soyle, Grounds, Hauens, Ports, Riuers, Woods, Mynes, Mynerals, Marishes, Waters, Fishings, Commodities and Hereditaments whatsoeuer, from the same fiftie miles euery way on the Sea Coast directly into the mayne Land, by the space of one hundred like English miles; and shall and may inhabit there, and shall and may also build and fortifie within any the same, for their better safeguard according to their best discretions, and the direction of the Councell of that Colonie, and that none of our Subiects shall be permitted or suffered to plant or inhabit behind, or on the backe of them towards the mayne Land, without the expresse license or consent of the Councell of that Colonie in writing thereunto first had and obteined. Prouided alwayes, &c.

It followeth that neither Colonie shall plant within one hundred miles of each other; also that each Colonie shal haue a Councell of thirteene persons to rule and be ruled according to Articles set downe and confirmed vnder the Priuie Seale (which I haue, but for breuitie omit, as also the rest of this Patent) the Seales of each Colonie appointed, the digging of Mynes granted in the same, and on the backside of their Colonies within the mayne Land, paying the fift of Gold and Siluer, and the fifteenth of Copper to the King; libertie to carrie all Subiects (not restrained) which will goe with them. Of coyning for the Colonies vse there, of repelling enemies, of staying ships which trade there without leaue, were too long to rehearse, seeing this Patent hath beene often altered and renewed.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. II.

Obſervations gathered out of a Diſcourſe of the Plantation of the Southerne Colonie in Virginia by the Engliſh, 1606. Written by that Honorable Gentleman Maſter GEORGE PERCY.

ON Saturday the twentieth of December in the yeere 1606. the fleet fell from London, and the fife of Ianuary we anchored in the Downes: but the winds continued contrarie ſo long, that we were forced to ſtay there ſome time, where wee ſuffered great ſtormes, but by the skilfulneſſe of the Captaine wee ſuffered no great loſſe or danger.

The twelfth day of February at night we ſaw a blazing Starre, and preſently a ſtorme. The three and twentieth day we fell with the Iland of Mattanenio in the Weſt Indies. The foure and twentieth day we anchored at Dominico, within fourteene degrees of the Line, a very faire Iland, the Trees full of ſweet and good ſmels inhabited by many Sauage Indians, they were at firſt very ſcrupulous to come aboord vs. Wee learned of them afterwards that the Spaniards had giuen them a great ouerthrow on this Ile, but when they knew what we were, there came many to our ſhips with their Canoas, bringing vs many kindes of ſundry fruites, as Pines, Potatoes, Plantons, Tobacco, and other fruits, and Roane Cloth abundance, which they had gotten out of certaine Spaniſh ſhips that were caſt away vpon that Iland. We gaue them Kniues, Hatchets for exchange which they eſteeme much, wee alſo gaue them Beades, Copper Iewels which they hang through their noſthrils, eares, and lips, very ſtrange to behold, their bodies are all painted red to keepe away the biting of Muſcetos, they goe all naked without couering: the haire of their head is a yard long, all of a length pleated in three plats hanging downe to their waſtes, they ſuffer no haire to grow on their faces, they cut their skinnes in diuers workes, they are continually in warres, and will eate their enemies when they kill them, or any ſtranger if they take them. They will lap vp mans ſpittle, whilſt one ſpits in their mouthes in a barbarous faſhion like Dogges. Theſe people and the reſt of the Ilands in the Weſt Indies, and Braſill, are called by the names of Canibals, that will eate mans fleſh, theſe people doe poyſon their Arrow heads, which are made of a fiſhes bone: they worſhip the Deuill for their God, and haue no other beliefe. Whileſt we remayned at this Iland we ſaw a Whale chaſed by a Threſher and a Sword-fiſh: they fought for the ſpace of two houres, we might ſee the Threſher with his flayle layon the monſtrous blowes which was ſtrange to behold: in the end theſe two fiſhes brought the Whale to her end.

The next day Cap. Smith was ſuſpected for a ſuppoſed Mutinie, though neuer no ſuch matter.

Trade at Dominica.

Bruitiſhneſſe of the Dominicans.

Fight betwixt a Whale, the Threſher and Sword-fiſh.

The ſixe and twentieth day, we had ſight of Marigalanta, and the next day wee ſailed with a ſlacke ſaile alongſt the Ile of Guadalupa, where we went aſhore, and found a Bath which was ſo hot, that no man was able to ſtand long by it, our Admirall Captaine Newport cauſed a piece of Porke to be put in it: which boyled it ſo in the ſpace of halfe an houre, as no fire could mend it. Then we went aboord and ſailed by many Ilands, as Mounſerot and an Iland called Saint Chriſtopher, both vnhabited about; about two a clocke in the afternoone wee anchored at the Ile of Mevis. There the Captaine landed all his men being well fitted with Muskets and other conuenient Armes, marched a mile into the Woods; being commanded to ſtand vpon their guard, fearing the treacherie of the Indians, which is an ordinary vſe amongſt them and all other Sauages on this Ile, we came to a Bath ſtanding in a Valley betwixt two Hils; where wee bathed our ſelues and found it to be of the nature of the Bathes in England, ſome places hot and ſome colder: and men may refreſh themſelues as they pleaſe, finding this place to be ſo conuenient for our men to auoid diſeaſes, which will breed in ſo long a Voyage, wee incamped our ſelues on this Ile ſixe dayes, and ſpent none of our ſhips victuall, by reaſon our men ſome went a hunting, ſome a fouling, and ſome a fiſhing, where we got great ſtore of Conies, ſundry kinds of fowles, and great plentie of fiſh. We kept Centinels and Courts de gard at euery Captaines quarter, fearing wee ſhould be aſſaulted by the Indians, that were on the other ſide of the Iland: wee ſaw none nor were moleſted by any: but ſome few we ſaw as we were a hunting on the Iland. They would not come to vs by any meanes, but ranne ſwiftly through the Woods to the Mountaine tops; ſo we loſt the ſight of them: whereupon we made all the haſte wee could to our quarter, thinking there had beene a great ambuſh of Indians there abouts. We paſt into the thickeſt of the Woods where we had almoſt loſt our ſelues, we had not gone aboue halfe a mile amongſt the thicke, but we came into a moſt pleaſant Garden, being a hundred paces ſquare on euery ſide, hauing many Cotton-trees growing in it with abundance of Cotton-wooll, and many Guiacum trees: wee ſaw the goodlieſt tall trees growing ſo thicke about the Garden, as though they had beene ſet by Art, which made vs maruell very much to ſee it.

Mariga. Guadalupa.

Bath very hot.

Mevis.

Bath at Mevis.

Commodities there.

The third day, wee ſet ſaile from Mevis: the fourth day we ſailed along by Caſtutia and by Saba: This day we anchored at the Ile of Virgines, in an excellent Bay able to harbour a hundred Ships:

Aprill.

Ships: if this Bay stood in England, it would be a great profit and commoditie to the Land. On this Iland wee caught great store of Fresh-fish, and abundance of Sea Tortoises, which serued all our Fleet three daies, which were in number eight score persons. We also killed great store of wilde Fowle, wee cut the Barkes of certaine Trees which tasted much like Cinnamon, and very hot in the mouth. This Iland in some places hath very good ground, straight and tall Timber. But the greatest discommoditie that wee haue seene on this Iland is that it hath no Fresh-water, which makes the place void of any Inhabitants.

Tortoises.

Vpon the sixt day, we set saile and passed by Becam, and by Saint Iohn deportorico. The seuenth day, we arriued at Mona: where wee watered, which we stood in great need of, seeing that our water did smell so vildly that none of our men was able to indure it. Whilst some of the Saylers were a filling the Caskes with water, the Captaine, and the rest of the Gentlemen, and other Soldiers marched vp in the Ile sixe myles, thinking to find some other prouision to maintaine our victualling; as wee marched we killed two wild Bores, and saw a huge wild Bull, his hornes was an ell betweene the two tops. Wee also killed Guanas, in fashion of a Serpent, and speckled like a Toade vnder the belly. These wayes that wee went, being so troublesome and vilde going vpon the sharpe Rockes, that many of our men fainted in the march, but by good fortune wee lost none but one Edward Brookes Gentleman, whose fat melted within him by the great heate and drought of the Countrey: we were not able to relieue him nor our selues, so he died in that great extreamitie.

Meuis water vnwholsome.

Ed. Brookes faint with thirst.

The ninth day in the afternoone, we went off with our Boat to the Ile of Moneta, some three leagues from Mona, where we had a terrible landing, and a troublesome getting vp to the top of the Mountaine or Ile, being a high firme Rocke step, with many terrible sharpe stones: After wee got to the top of the Ile, we found it to bee a fertill and a plaine ground, full of goodly grasse, and abundance of Fowles of all kindes, they flew ouer our heads as thicke as drops of Hale; besides they made such a noise, that wee were not able to heare one another speake. Furthermore, wee were not able to set our feet on the ground, but either on Fowles or Egges which lay so thicke in the grasse: Wee laded two Boats full in the space of three houres, to our great refreshing.

Moneta.

Store of fowles

The tenth day we set saile, and disimboged out of the West Indies, and bare our course Northerly. The fourteenth day we passed the Tropicke of Cancer. The one and twentieth day, about fiue a clocke at night there began a vehement tempest, which lasted all the night, with winds, raine, and thunders in a terrible manner. Wee were forced to lie at Hull that night, because we thought wee had beene neerer land then wee were. The next morning, being the two and twentieth day wee sounded; and the three and twentieth and foure and twenteth day, but we could find no ground. The fiue and twentieth day we sounded, and had no ground at an hundred fathom. The six and twentieth day of Aprill, about foure a clocke in the morning, wee descried the Land of Virginia: the same day wee entred into the Bay of Chesupioc directly, without any let or hinderance; there wee landed and discouered a little way, but wee could find nothing worth the speaking of, but faire meddowes and goodly tall Trees, with such Fresh-waters running through the woods, as I was almost rauished at the first sight thereof.

We were driuen to try that night, and by the storme were forced neere the shoare, not knowing where we were.

At night, when wee were going aboard, there came the Sauages creeping vpon all foure, from the Hills like Beares, with their Bowes in their mouthes, charged vs very desperately in the faces, hurt Captaine Gabrill Archer in both his hands, and a Sayler in two places of the body very dangerous. After they had spent their Arrowes, and felt the sharpnesse of our shot, they retired into the Woods with a great noise, and so left vs.

They land in Virginia.

The seuen and twentieth day we began to build vp our Shallop: the Gentlemen and Souldiers marched eight miles vp into the Land, we could not see a Sauage in all that march, we came to a place where they had made a great fire, and had beene newly a rosting Oysters: when they perceiued our comming, they fled away to the Mountaines, and left many of the Oysters in the fire: we eat some of the Oysters, which were very large and delicate in taste.

The eightenth day we lanched our Shallop, the Captaine and some Gentlemen went in her, and discouered vp the Bay, we found a River on the Southside running into the Maine; we entered it and found it very shoald water, not for any Boats to swim: Wee went further into the Bay, and saw a plaine plot of ground where we went on Land, and found the place fiue mile in compasse, without either Bush or Tree, we saw nothing there but a Cannow, which was made out of the whole tree, which was fiue and fortie foot long by the Rule. Vpon this plot of ground we got good store of Muscels and Oysters, which lay on the ground as thicke as stones: wee opened some, and found in many of them Pearles. Wee marched some three or foure miles further into the Woods, where we saw great smoakes of fire. Wee marched to those smoakes and found that the Sauages had beene there burning downe the grasse, as wee thought either to make their plantation there, or else to giue signes to bring their forces together, and so to giue vs battell. We past through excellent ground full of Flowers of diuers kinds and colours, and as goodly trees as I haue seene, as Cedar, Cipresse, and other kindes: going a little further we came into a little plat of ground full of fine and beautifull Strawberries, foure times bigger and better then ours in England.

Strawberries.

Digitized by Google

land. All this march we could neither see Sauage nor Towne. When it grew to be towards night we stood backe to our Ships, We sounded and found it shallow water for a great way, which put vs out of all hopes for getting any higher with our Ships, which road at the mouth of the Riuer. Wee rowed ouer to a point of Land, where wee found a channell, and sounded six, eight, ten, or twelue fathom: which put vs in good comfort. Therefore wee named that poine of Land, Cape Comfort. Point Comfort.

The nine and twentieth day we set vp a Crosse at Chesupioc Bay, and named that place Cape Henry. Thirtieth day, we came with our ships to Cape Comfort; where wee saw fiue Sauages running on the shoare; presently the Captaine caused the shallop to be manned, so rowing to the shoare, the Captaine called to them in signe of friendship, but they were at first very timersome, vntil they saw the Captain lay his hand on his heart: vpon that they laid down their Bowes and Arrowes, and came very boldly to vs, making signes to come a shoare to their Towne, which is called by the Sauages Kecoughtan. Wee coasted to their Towne, rowing ouer a Riuer running into the Maine, where these Sauages swam ouer with their Bowes and Arrowes in their mouthes. Kecoughtan.

When we came ouer to the other side, there was a many of other Sauages which directed vs to their Towne, where we were entertained by them very kindly. When we came first a Land they made a dolefull noise, laying their faces to the ground, scratching the earth with their nailes. We did thinke that they had beene at their Idolatry. When they had ended their Ceremonies, they went into their houses and brought out mats and laid vpon the ground, the chiefest of the sate all in a rank: the meanest sort brought vs such dainties as they had, & of their bread which they make of their Maiz or Gennea wheat, they would not suffer vs to eat vnlesse we sate down, which we did on a Mat right against them. After we were well satisfied they gaue vs of their Tabacco, which they tooke in a pipe made artificially of earth as ours are, but far bigger, with the bowle fashioned together with a piece of fine copper. After they had feasted vs, they shewed vs, in welcome, their manner of dancing, which was in this fashion: one of the Sauages standing in the midst singing, beating one hand against another, all the rest dancing about him, shouting, howling, and stamping against the ground, with many Anticke tricks and faces, making noise like so many Wolues or Deuils. One thing of them I obserued; when they were in their dance they kept stroke with their feet iust one with another, but with their hands, heads, faces, and bodies, euery one of them had a seuerall gesture: so they continued for the space of halfe an houre. When they had ended their dance, the Captaine gaue them Beades and other trifling Iewells. They hang through their eares Fowles legs: they shaue the right side of their heads with a shell, the left side they weare of an ell long tied vp with an artificiall knot, with a many of Foules feathers sticking in it. They goe altogether naked, but their priuities are couered with Beasts skinnes beset commonly with little bones, or beasts teeth: some paint their bodies blacke, some red, with artificiall knots of sundry liuely colours, very beautifull and pleasing to the eye, in a brauer fashion then they in the West Indies. Tobacco. Singing and Dancing.

The fourth day of May, we came to the King or Werowance of Paspihe: where they entertained vs with much welcome; an old Sauage made a long Oration, making a foule noise, vttering his speech with a vehement action, but we knew little what they meant. Whilst we were in company with the Paspihes, the Werowance of Rapahanna came from the other side of the Riuer in his Cannoa: he seemed to take displeasure of our being with the Paspihes: he would faine haue had vs come to his Towne, the Captaine was vnwilling; seeing that the day was so far spent he returned backe to his ships for that night. A long oration.

The next day, being the fift of May, the Werowance of Rapahanna sent a Messenger to haue vs come to him. We entertained the said Messenger, and gaue him trifles which pleased him: Wee manned our shallop with Muskets and Targatiers sufficiently: this said Messenger guided vs where our determination was to goe. When wee landed, the Werowance of Rapahanna came downe to the water side with all his traine, as goodly men as any I haue seene of Sauages or Christians: the Werowance comming before them playing on a Flute made of a Reed, with a Crown of Deares haire colloured red, in fashion of a Rose fastened about his knot of haire, and a great Plate of Copper on the other side of his head, with two long Feathers in fashion of a paire of Hornes placed in the midst of his Crowne. His body was painted all with Crimson, with a Chaine of Beads about his necke, his face painted blew, besprinkled with siluer Ore as wee thought, his eares all behung with Braslets of Pearle, and in either eare a Birds Claw through it beset with fine Copper or Gold, he entertained vs in so modest a proud fashion, as though he had beene a Prince of ciuill gouernment, holding his countenance without laughter or any such ill behauiour; he caused his Mat to be spred on the ground, where hee sate downe with a great Maiestie, taking a pipe of Tabacco: the rest of his company standing about him. After he had rested a while he rose, and made signes to vs to come to his Towne: Hee went formost, and all the rest of his people and our selues followed him vp a steepe Hill where his Palace was seated. Wee passed through the Woods in fine paths, hauing most pleasant Springs which issued from the Mountaines: Wee also went through the goodliest Corne fields that euer was seene in A Flute made of a Reed.

any

any Countrey. When wee came to Rapahamos Towne, hee entertained vs in good humanitie.

The eight day of May we discouered vp the Riuer. We landed in the Countrey of Apamatica, at our landing, there came many stout and able Sauages to resist vs with their Bowes and Arrowes, in a most warlike manner, with the swords at their backes beset with sharpe stones, and pieces of yron able to cleane a man in sunder. Amongst the rest one of the chiefest standing before them crosse-legged, with his Arrow readie in his Bow in one hand, and taking a Pipe of Tobacco in the other, with a bold vttering of his speech, demanded of vs our being there, willing vs to bee gone. Wee made signes of peace, which they perceiued in the end, and let vs land in quietnesse.

Archers Hope. The twelfth day we went backe to our ships, and discouered a point of Land, called Archers Hope, which was sufficient with a little labour to defend our selues against any Enemy. The soile was good and fruitfull, with excellent good Timber. There are also great store of Vines in bignesse of a mans thigh, running vp to the tops of the Trees in great abundance. We also did see many Squirels, Conies, Black Birds with crimson wings, and diuers other Fowles and Birds of diuers and sundrie collours of crimson, Watchet, Yellow, Greene, Murry, and of diuers other hewes naturally without any art vsing.

We found store of Turkie nests and many Egges, if it had not beene disliked, because the ship could not ride neere the shoare, we had setled there to all the Collonies contentment.

The thirteenth day, we came to our seating place in Paspihas Countrey, some eight miles from the point of Land, which I made mention before: where our shippes doe lie so neere the shoare that they are moored to the Trees in six fathom water.

Their Plantation at Iames Towne. The fourteenth day we landed all our men which were set to worke about the fortification, and others some to watch and ward as it was conuenient. The first night of our landing, about midnight, there came some Sauages saylng close to our quarter: presently there was an alarum giuen; vpon that the Sauages ran away, and we not troubled any more by them that night. Not long after there came two Sauages that seemed to be Commanders, brauely drest, with Crownes of coloured haire vpon their heads, which came as Messengers from the Werowance of Paspiha; telling vs that their Werowance was comming and would be merry with vs with a fat Deare.

The eighteenth day, the Werowance of Paspiha came himselfe to our quarter, with one hundred Sauages armed, which garded him in a very warlike manner with Bowes and Arrowes, thinking at that time to execute their villany. Paspiha made great signes to vs to lay our Armes away. But we would not trust him so far: he seeing he could not haue conuenient time to worke his will, at length made signes that he would giue vs as much land as we would desire to take. As the Sauages were in a throng in the Fort, one of them stole a Hatchet from one of our company, which spied him doing the deed: whereupon he tooke it from him by force, and also strooke him ouer the arme: presently another Sauage seeing that, came fiercely at our man with a wooden sword, thinking to beat out his braines. The Werowance of Paspiha saw vs take to our Armes, went suddenly away with all his company in great anger.

Land giuen.

These Sauages are naturally great theeues.

The nineteenth day, my selfe and three or foure more walking into the Woods by chance wee espied a path-way like to an Irish pace: wee were desirous to knowe whither it would bring vs; wee traced along some foure miles, all the way as wee went, hauing the pleasantest Suckles, the ground all flowing ouer with faire flowers of sundry colours and kindes, as though it had beene in any Garden or Orchard in England. There be many Strawberries, and other fruits vnknowne: wee saw the Woods full of Cedar and Cypresse trees, with other trees, which issues out sweet Gummes like to Balsam: wee kept on our way in this Paradise, at length wee came to a Sauage Towne, where wee found but few people, they told vs the rest were gone a hunting with the Werowance of Paspiha: we stayed there a while, and had of them Strawberries, and other things; in the meane time one of the Sauages came running out of his house with a Bowe and Arrowes and ranne mainly through the Woods: then I beganne to mistrust some villanie, that he went to call some companie, and so betray vs, wee made all the haste away wee could: one of the Sauages brought vs on the way to the Wood side, where there was a Garden of Tobacco, and other fruits and herbes, he gathered Tobacco, and distributed to euery one of vs, so wee departed.

The twentieth day the Werowance of Paspiha sent fortie of his men with a Deere, to our quarter: but they came more in villanie than any loue they bare vs: they faine would haue layne in our Fort all night, but wee would not suffer them for feare of their treachery. One of our Gentlemen hauing a Target which hee trusted in, thinking it would beare out a slight shot, hee set it vp against a tree, willing one of the Sauages to shoot; who tooke from his backe an Arrow of an elle long, drew it strongly in his Bowe, shoots the Target a foote thorow, or better: which was strange, being that a Pistoll could not pierce it. Wee seeing the force of his Bowe, afterwards set him vp a steele Target; he shot again, and burst his arrow all to pieces, he presently pulled out another Arrow, and bit it in his teeth, and seemed to bee in a great rage, so hee went away in great anger. Their Bowes are made of tough Hasell, their strings of Leather, their Arrowes of Canes or Hasell, headed with very sharpe stones, and are made artificially like a broad

Their arrowes

Digitized by Google

a broad Arrow: other ſome of their Arrowes are headed with the ends of Deeres hornes, and are feathered very artificially. Paſpihe was as good as his word; for hee ſent Veniſon, but the Sawſe came within few dayes after.

At Port Cotage in our Voyage vp the Riuer, we ſaw a Sauage Boy about the age of ten yeeres, which had a head of haire of a perfect yellow and a reaſonable white skinne, which is a Miracle amongſt all Sauages. Yellow haired Virginian.

This Riuer which wee haue diſcouered is one of the famouſeſt Riuers that euer was found by any Chriſtian, it ebbes and flowes a hundred and threeſcore miles where ſhips of great burthen may harbour in ſafetie. Whereſoeuer we landed vpon this Riuer, wee ſaw the goodlieſt Woods as Beech, Oke, Cedar, Cypreſſe, Wal-nuts, Saſſafras and Vines in great abundance, which hang in great cluſters on many Trees, and other Trees vnknowne, and all the grounds beſpred with many ſweet and delicate flowres of diuers colours and kindes. There are alſo many fruites as Strawberries, Mulberries, Rasberries and Fruits vnknowne, there are many branches of this Riuer, which runne flowing through the Woods with great plentie of fiſh of all kindes, as for Sturgeon all the World cannot be compared to it. In this Countrey I haue ſeene many great and large Medowes * hauing excellent good paſture for any Cattle. There is alſo great ſtore of Deere both Red and Fallow. There are Beares, Foxes, Otters, Beuers, Muskats, and wild beaſts vnknowne. Riuer of Pohatan. * Low Marſhes.

The foure and twentieth day wee ſet vp a Croſſe at the head of this Riuer, naming it Kings Riuer, where we proclaimed Iames King of England to haue the moſt right vnto it. When wee had finiſhed and ſet vp our Croſſe, we ſhipt our men and made for Iames Fort. By the way wee came to Pohatans Towre where the Captaine went on ſhore ſuffering none to goe with him, hee preſented the Commander of this place with a Hatchet which hee tooke ioyfully, and was well pleaſed. Wee came downe the Riuer.

But yet the Sauages murmured at our planting in the Countrie, whereupon this Werowance made anſwere againe very wiſely of a Sauage, Why ſhould you bee offended with them as long as they hurt you not, nor take any thing away by force, they take but a litle waſte ground, which doth you nor any of vs any good.

I ſaw Bread made by their women which doe all their drugerie. The men takes their pleaſure in hunting and their warres, which they are in continually one Kingdome againſt another. The manner of baking of bread is thus, after they pound their wheat into flowre with hote water, they make it into paſte, and worke it into round balls and Cakes, then they put it into a pot of ſeething water, when it is ſod throughly, they lay it on a ſmooth ſtone, there they harden it as well as in an Ouen. Bread how made.

There is notice to be taken to know married women from Maids, the Maids you ſhall alwayes ſee the fore part of their head and ſides ſhauen cloſe, the hinder part very long, which they tie in a pleate hanging downe to their hips. The married women weares their haire all of a length, and is tied of that faſhion that the Maids are. The women kinde in this Countrey doth pounce and race their bodies, legges, thighes, armes and faces with a ſharpe Iron, which makes a ſtampe in curious knots, and drawes the proportion of Fowles, Fiſh, or Beaſts, then with paintings of ſundry liuely colours, they rub it into the ſtampe which will neuer be taken away, becauſe it is dried into the fleſh where it is ſered. Diſtinct habit of Maids and Wiues.

The Sauages beare their yeeres well, for when wee were at Pamunkies, wee ſaw a Sauage by their report was aboue eight ſcore yeeres of age. His eyes were ſunke into his head, hauing neuer a tooth in his mouth, his haire all gray with a reaſonable bigge beard, which was as white as any ſnow. It is a Miracle to ſee a Sauage haue any haire on their faces, I neuer ſaw, read, nor heard, any haue the like before. This Sauage was as luſtie and went as faſt as any of vs, which was ſtrange to behold. Sauage 160. yeeres old. Bearded.

The fifteenth day of Iune, we had built and finiſhed our Fort which was triangle wiſe, hauing three Bulwarkes at euery corner like a halfe Moone, and foure or fiue pieces of Artillerie mounted in them, we had made our ſelues ſufficiently ſtrong for theſe Sauages, we had alſo ſowne moſt of our Corne on two Mountaines, it ſprang a mans height from the ground, this Countrey is a fruitfull ſoile, bearing many goodly and fruitfull Trees, as Mulberries, Cherries, Walnuts, Cedders, Cypreſſe, Saſſafras, and Vines in great abundance.

Munday the two and twentieth of Iune, in the morning Captaine Newport in the Admirall departed from Iames Port for England. Cap. Newports departure.

Captaine Newport being gone for England, leauing vs (one hundred and foure perſons) verie bare and ſcantie of victualls, furthermore in warres and in danger of the Sauages. We hoped after a ſupply which Captaine Newport promiſed within twentie weekes. But if the beginners of this action doe carefully further vs, the Country being ſo fruitfull, it would be as great a profit to the Realme of England, as the Indies to the King of Spaine, if this Riuer which wee haue found had beene diſcouered in the time of warre with Spaine, it would haue beene a commoditie to our Realme, and a great annoyance to our enemies. The ſeuen and twentieth of Iuly the King of Rapahanna, demanded a Canoa which was reſtored, lifted vp his hand to the Sunne, which they worſhip worship as their God, besides he laid his hand on his heart, that he would be our speciall friend. It is a generall rule of these people when they swere by their God which is the Sunne, no Christian will keepe their Oath better vpon this promise. These people haue a great reuerence to the Sunne aboue all other things at the rising and setting of the same, they sit downe lifting vp their hands and eyes to the Sunne making a round Circle on the ground with dried Tobacco, then they began to pray making many Deuilish gestures with a Hellish noise, foming at the mouth, staring with their eyes, wagging their heads and hands in such a fashion and deformitie as it was monstrous to behold.

The Sauages vse to sacrifice to the Sunne.

The sixt of August there died Iohn Asbie of the bloudie Flixe. The ninth day died George Flowre of the swelling. The tenth day died William Bruster Gentleman, of a wound giuen by the Sauages, and was buried the eleuenth day.

The fourteenth day, Ierome Alsheck Ancient, died of a wound, the same day Francis Midwinter, Edward Moris Corporall died suddenly.

The fifteenth day, their died Edward Browne and Stephen Galthrope. The sixteenth day, their died Thomas Gower Gentleman. The seuenteenth day, their died Thomas Mounslie. The eighteenth day, there died Robert Pennington, and Iohn Martine Gentleman. The nineteenth day, died Drue Piggase Gentleman. The two and twentieth day of August, there died Captaine Bartholomew Gosnold one of our Councell, he was honourably buried, hauing all the Ordnance in the Fort shot off with many vollies of small shot.

Death of Cap. Bart. Gosnold.

After Captaine Gosnols death, the Councell could hardly agree by the dissention of Captaine Kendall, which afterward was committed about hainous matters which was proued against him.

The foure and twentieth day, died Edward Harington and George Walker, and were buried the same day. The sixe and twentieth day, died Kenelme Throgmorton. The seuen and twentieth day died William Roods. The eight and twentieth day died Thomas Stoodie, Cape Merchant.

The fourth day of September died Thomas Iacob Sergeant. The fift day, there died Beniamin Beast. Our men were destroyed with cruell diseases as Swellings, Flixes, Burning Feuers, and by warres, and some departed suddenly, but for the most part they died of meere famine. There were neuer Englishmen left in a forreigne Countrey in such miserie as wee were in this new discouered Virginia. Wee watched euery three nights lying on the bare cold ground what weather soeuer came warded all the next day, which brought our men to bee most feeble wretches, our food was but a small Can of Barlie sod in water to fiue men a day, our drinke cold water taken out of the Riuer, which was at a floud verie salt, at a low tide full of slime and filth, which was the destruction of many of our men. Thus we liued for the space of fiue moneths in this miserable distresse, not hauing fiue able men to man our Bulwarkes vpon any occasion. If it had not pleased God to haue put a terrour in the Sauages hearts, we had all perished by those vild and cruell Pagans, being in that weake estate as we were; our men night and day groaning in euery corner of the Fort most pittifull to heare, if there were any conscience in men, it would make their harts to bleed to heare the pittiful murmurings & out-cries of our sick men without relieue euery night and day for the space of sixe weekes, some departing out of the World, many times three or foure in a night, in the morning their bodies trailed out of their Cabines like Dogges to be buried: in this sort did I see the mortalitie of diuers of our people.

Miserable famine.

Gods goodnesse.

It pleased God, after a while, to send those people which were our mortall enemies to releeue vs with victuals, as Bread, Corne, Fish, and Flesh in great plentie, which was the setting vp of our feeble men, otherwise wee had all perished. Also we were frequented by diuers Kings in the Countrie, bringing vs store of prouision to our great comfort.

The eleuenth day, there was certaine Articles laid against Master Wingfield which was then President, thereupon he was not only displaced out of his President ship, but also from being of the Councell. Afterwards Captaine Iohn Ratcliffe was chosen President.

The eighteenth day, died oue Ellis Kinistone which was starued to death with cold. The same day at night, died one Richard Simmons. The nineteenth day, there died one Thomas Monton.

He was a made man.

* The rest is omitted, being more fully set downe in Cap. Smiths Reldtions.

William White (hauing liued with the Natiues) reported to vs of their customes in the morning by breake of day, before they eate or drinke both men, women and children, that be aboue tenne yeeres of age runnes into the water, there washes themselues a good while till the Sunne riseth, then offer Sacrifice to it, strewing Tobacco on the water or Land, honouring the Sunne as their God, likewise they doe at the setting of the * Sunne.

CHAP.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. III.

The description of Virginia by Captaine IOHN SMITH, inlarged out of his written Notes.

Virginia is a Countrie in America, that lieth betweene the degrees of 34.* and 44. of the North Latitude. The bounds thereof on the East side are the great Ocean. On the South lieth Florida: on the North Nona Francia. As for the West thereof, the limits are vnknowne. Of all this Countrie we purpose not to speake, but only of that part which was planted by the Englishmen in the yeere of our Lord, 1606. And this is vnder the degrees 37. 38. and 39. The temperature of this Countrie doth agree wel with English constitutions being once seasoned to the Countrie. Which appeared by this, that though by many occasions our people fell sicke; yet did they recouer by verie small meanes and continued in health, though there were other great causes, not only to haue made them sicke, but euen to end their dayes, &c.

The Latitude * By later Patents this is extended further to the 30. degrees, &c.

The Summer is hot as in Spaine; the Winter cold as in France or England. The heate of Summer is in Iune, Iuly, and August, but commonly the coole Breeses asswage the vehemencie of the heate. The chiefe of Winter is halfe December, Ianuary, February, and halfe March. The cold is extreme sharpe, but heere the Prouerbe is true, That no extreme continueth long. In the yeere 1607. was an extraordinary Frost in most of Europe, and this Frost was found as extreme in Virginia. But the next yeere for eight or ten daies of ill weather, other fourteene daies would be as Summer.

The temperature.

The winds here are variable, but the like Thunder and Lightning to purifie the Aire, I haue seldome either seene or heard in Europe. From the South-west came the greatest guists with Thunder and heate. The North-west winde is commonly coole, and bringeth faire weather with it. From the North is the greatest cold, and from the East and South-east as from the Bermudas, fogges and raines.

The winds.

Sometimes there are great droughts other times much raine, yet great necessitie of neither, by reason we see not, but that all the varietie of needfull Fruits in Europe may bee there in great plentie by the industry of men, as appeareth by those we there planted.

There is but one entrance by Sea into this Countrey, and that is at the mouth of a verie goodly Bay, the wideneſse whereof is neere eighteene or twentie miles. The Cape on the South side is called Cape Henrie, in honour of our most Noble Prince. The shew of the Land there is a white Hilly Sand like vnto the Downes, and along the shoares great plentie of Pines and Firres.

The entrance.

Cape Henry.

The North Cape, is called Cape Charles, in honour of the worthy Duke of Yorke. The Iles before it are named Smiths Iles, because he first of ours set foot on them. Within is a Countrey that may haue the prerogatiue ouer the most pleasant places of Europe, Asia, Africa, or America, for large and pleasant nauigable Riuers, Heauen and Earth neuer agreed better to frame a place for mans habitation being of our constitutions, were it fully mannured and inhabited by industrious people. Here are Mountaynes, Hils, Plaines, Vallies, Riuers and Brookes, all running most pleasantly into a faire Bay compassed but for the mouth with fruitful & delightsome Land. In the Bay and Riuers are many Iles both great and small, some woodie, some plaine, most of them low and not inhabited. This Bay lieth North an South, in which the water floweth neere two hundred miles, and hath a Channell for one hundred and fortie miles, of depth betwixt seuen and fifteene fadome, holding in breadth for the most part ten or fourteene miles. From the head of the Bay at the North, the Land is mountainous, and so in a manner from thence by a South-west Line; So that the more Southward, the farther off from the Bay are those Mountaines. From which fall certaine Brookes which after come to fiue principall Nauigable Riuers. These runne from the North-west into the South-east, and so into the West side of the Bay, where the fall of euery Riuer is within twentie or fifteene miles one of another.

Cape Charles. Gap. Smith.

The Country.

The Bay.

The Mountaines are of diuers natures, for at the head of the Bay the Rockes are of a composition like Mil-stones. Some of Marble, &c. And many pieces of Christall we found as throwne downe by water from the Mountaines. For in Winter these Mountaines are couered with much Snow, and when it dissolueth the waters fall with such violence, that it causeth great inundations in the narrow Vallies, which yet is scarce perceiued being once in the Riuers. These waters wash from the Rockes such glistering tinctures that the ground in some places seemeth as gilded, where both the Rockes and the Earth are so splendent to behold, that better iudgements then ours might haue beene perswaded, they contained more then probabilities. The vesture of the Earth in most places doth manifestly proue the nature of the soile to be lustie and very rich. The colour of the Earth we found in diuers places, resembleth Bole Armoniae, terra sigillata ad lemnia, Fullers Earth, Marle, and diuers other such appearances. But generally for the most part the Earth is a blacke sandie mould, in some places a fat slimie clay, in other places a very barren grauell. But the best

The Mountaines.

The soile.

Digitized by Google

beſt ground is knowne by the veſture it beareth, as by the greatneſſe of Trees or abundance of Weeds, &c.

The Vallies. The Countrie is not mountainous nor yet low, but ſuch pleaſant plaine Hils and fertile Vallies, one pretily croſſing another, and watered ſo conueniently with their ſweete Brookes and Chriſtall Springs, as if Art it ſelfe had deuiſed them. By the Riuers are many plaine Mariſhes containing ſome twentie, ſome one hundred, ſome two hundred Acres, ſome more, ſome leſſe.

Plaines. Other Plaines there are few, but only where the Sauages inhabit: but all ouer-growne with Trees and Weeds, being a plaine Wilderneſſe as God firſt made it.

On the Weſt ſide of the Bay, we ſaid were fiue faire and delightfull nauigable Riuers, of which we will now proceed to report. The firſt of thoſe Riuers and the next to the mouth of the Bay hath his courſe from the Weſt and by North. The name of this Riuer they call Powhatan according to the name of a principall Countrie that lieth vpon it. The mouth of this Riuer is neere three miles in breadth, yet doe the ſhoales force the Channell ſo neere the Land that a Sacre will ouer-ſhoot it at Point blanke. This Riuer is nauigable one hundred and fiftie miles as the Channell goeth; the ſhoales and ſoundings are heere needleſſe to be expreſſed. It falleth from Rockes farre Weſt in a Countrie inhabited by a Nation that they call Monacan. But where it commeth into our Diſcouerie it is Powhatan. In the fartheſt place that was diligently obſerued, are Falles, Rockes, Shoales, &c. which makes it paſt nauigation any higher. Thence in the running downeward, the Riuer is enriched with many goodly Brookes, which are maintained by an infinite number of ſmall Rundles and pleaſant Springs that diſperſe themſelues for beſt ſeruice, as doe the veines of a mans bodie. From the South there fals into this Riuer; Firſt; the pleaſant Riuer of Apamatuck: next more to the Eaſt are the two Riuers of Quiyoughcohanocks. A little farther is a Bay wherein falleth three or foure pretie Brookes and Creekes that halfe intrench the Inhabitants of Warraskoyac: then the Riuer of Nandſamund, and laſtly, the Brooke of Chiſaptack. From the North ſide is the Riuer of Chickahamania, the backe Riuer of Iames Townes; another by the Cedar Ile, where we liued ten weekes vpon Oiſters, then a conuenient Harbour for fiſher-boats or ſmall Boats at Kecoughtan, that ſo conueniently turneth it ſelfe into Bayes and Creekes that make that place very pleaſant to inhabit, their Corne fields being girded therein in a manner as Peninſulaes. The moſt of theſe Riuers are inhabited by ſeuerall Nations, or rather Families, of the name of the Riuers. They haue alſo in euery of thoſe places ſome Gouernour, as their King, which they call Werowances. In a Peninſula on the North ſide of this Riuer are the Engliſh planted in a place by them called Iames Towne, in honour of the Kings moſt excellent Maieſtie, vpon which ſide are alſo many places vnder the Werowances.

The branches.

Iames Towne.

The ſeuerall Inhabitants. The firſt and next the Riuers mouth are the Cecoughtans, who beſides their women and children, haue not paſt twentie fighting men. The Paſpaheges on whoſe Land is ſeated the Engliſh Colonie, ſome fortie miles from the Bay haue not paſt fortie. The Riuer called Chickahamania neere two hundred. The Weanocks one hundred. The Arrowhatocks thirtie. The place called Powhatan, ſome fortie. On the South ſide this Riuer the Appamatucks haue ſixtie fighting men. The Quiyoughcohanocks, fiue and twentie. The Warraskoyacks fortie. The Nandſamunds two hundred. The Cheſapeacks are able to make one hundred. Of this laſt place the Bay beareth the name. In all theſe places is a ſeuerall Commander, which they call Werowance except the Chickahamanians, who are gouerned by the Prieſts and their Aſſiſtants of their Elders called Caw-cawwaſſoughes. In Summer no place affoordeth more plentie of Sturgeon, nor in Winter more abundance of Fowle, eſpecially in the time of Froſt. There was once taken fiftie two Sturgeons at a draught, at another draught ſixtie eight. From the latter end of May till the end of Iune are taken, but young Sturgeons of two foot or a yard long: From thence till the midſt of September, of two or three yards long and few others. And in foure or fiue houres with one Net were ordinarily taken ſeuen or eight: often more, ſeldome leſſe. In the ſmall Riuers all the yeere there is good plentie of ſmall fiſh, ſo that with Hookes thoſe that would take paines had ſufficient.

Free State.

R. Pamaunke. Fourteene miles Northward from the Riuer Powhatan; is the Riuer Pamaunke, which is nauigable ſixtie miles, but with Catches and ſmall Barkes, twentie or thirtie miles farther. At the ordinary flowing of ſalt water, it diuideth it ſelfe into two gallant branches. On the South inhabit the people of Youghtanund, who haue about ſixtie men for warres. On the North branch Mattapament, who haue thirtie men. Where this Riuer is diuided, the Countrie is called Panamaunke, and nouriſheth neere three hundred able men. About fiue and twentie miles lower on the North ſide of this Riuer is Werawocomoco, where their great King inhabited when Captaine Smith was deliuered him priſoner; yet there are not paſt fortie able men. But now he hath abandoned that, and liueth at Orapakes by Youghtanund in the Wilderneſſe; tenne or twelue miles lower; on the South ſide of this Riuer is Chiskiack, which hath ſome fortie or fiftie men. Theſe, as alſo Apamatuck Irrohatocke, and Powhatan, are their great Kings chiefe Alliance and Inhabitance. The reſt (as they report) his Conqueſts.

The Inhabitants.

K. Pohatan.

Payankatank R. Before we come to the third Riuer that falleth from the Mountaines, there is another Riuer (ſome thirtie miles nauigable) that commeth from the In-land, the Riuer is called Payankatanke, the Inhabitants are about ſome fortie ſeruiceable men.

The

The third nauigable Riuer is called Toppahannock. (This is nauigable some one hundred and thirtie miles.) At the top of it inhabit the people called Manahoackes amongst the Mountaines, but they are aboue the place we describe. Vpon this Riuer on the North side are seated a people called Cuttatawomen, with thirtie fighting men. Higher on the Riuer are the Moraughtacunds, with eighteene able men. Beyond them Toppahannocke with one hundred men. Farre aboue is another Cuttatawomen with twentie men. On the South, farre within the Riuer is Nantaughtacund, hauing one hundred and fiftie men. This Riuer also as the two former, is replenished with fish and fowle. Toppahannock R. The Inhabitants.

The fourth Riuer is called Rappahannock, and is sixe or seuen miles in breadth. It is nauigable one hundred and fortie miles, and fed as the rest with many sweet Riuers and Springs, which fall from the bordering Hils. These Hils many of them are planted, and yeeld no lesse plentie and varietie of fruit then the Riuer exceedeth with abundance of fish. This Riuer is inhabited on both sides. First on the South side at the very entrance is Naphicomico, and hath some one hundred and thirtie men, beyond them Sekacawone with thirtie. The Onawmanient with one hundred. Then Patawomeke with one hundred and sixtie able men. Here doth the Riuer diuide it selfe in to three or foure conuenient Riuers. The greatest of the least is called Quiyough, trendeth North-west, but the Riuer it selfe turneth North-east, and is still a nauigable streame. On the Westerne side of this bought is Tauxenent, with fortie men. On the North of this Riuer is Secowocomoco with forsie men. Some what further Potapaco with twentie. In the East part of the bought of the Riuer, is Pamacacack with sixtie men. After Moyaoncer with one hundred. And lastly, Nacotchtanke, with eightie able men. The Riuer tenne miles aboue this place maketh his passage downe a low pleasant Vally ouer-shadowed in many places with high Rockie Mountaines, from whence distill innumerable sweet and pleasant Springs. Rappahannock R.

The fift Riuer is called Pawtuxunt, and is of a lesse proportion then the rest; but the channell is sixteene or eighteene fadome deepe in some places. Here are infinite skuls of diuers kinds of fish more then elsewhere. Vpon this Riuer dwell the people called Acquintanacksuak, Pawtuxunt and Mattapanient. Two hundred men was the greatest strength that could be there perceiued. But they inhabit together, and not so dispersed as the rest. These of all other were found the most ciuill to giue entertainment. Pawtuxunt R.

Thirtie leagues Northward is a Riuer not inhabited, yet nauigable; for the red Earth or Clay resembling Bole Armoniack, the English called it Bolus. At the end of the Bay where it is sixe or seuen miles in breadth, there fall into it foure small Riuers, three of them issuing from diuers bogges inuironed with high Mountaines. There is one that commeth due North three or foure dayes iourney from the head of the Bay, and fals from Rockes and Mountaines, vpon this [illegible] inhabit a people called Sasquesahanocke. They are seated two dayes higher then [illegible] for the Discouerers Barge, which was hardly two tunnes, and had in it but twelue men to performe this Discouery, wherein they lay aboue the space of twelue weekes vpon those great waters in those vnknowne Countries, hauing nothing but a little Meale or Oat-meale and water to feed them; and scarce [illegible] sufficient of that for halfe that time, but that by the Sauages, and by the plenty of fish they found in all places, they made themselues prouision as opportunity serued, yet had they not a Mariner or any that had skill to trimme their Sayles, vse their Oares, or any businesse belonging to the Barge, but two or three. The rest being Gentlemen, or as ignorant in such toyle and labour, yet necessitie in a short time by their Captaines diligence and example, taught them to become so perfect, that what they did by such small meanes, I leaue to the censure of the Reader to iudge by this Discourse and the annexed Map. But to proceed, sixtie of those Sasquesahanocks, came to the Discouerers with Skinnes, Bowes, Arrowes, Targets, Beades, Swords and Tobacco-pipes for Presents. Such great and well proportioned men, are seldome seene, for they seemed like Giants to the English, yea, and to the Neighbours, yet seemed of an honest and simple disposition, with much adoe restrained from adoring the Discouerers as Gods. Those are the most strange people of all those Countries, both in Language and Attire; for their Language it may well beseeme their proportions, sounding from them, as it were a great voyce in a Vault, or Caue, as an Eccho. Their Attire is the Skinnes of Beares, and Woolues; some haue Cassacks made of Beares heads and Skinnes that a mans necke goes through the Skinnes necke, and the Eares of the Beare fastned to his shoulders behind, the Nose and Teeth hanging downe his breast, and at the end of the Nose hung a Beares Pawe, the halfe sleeues comming to the elbowes were the neckes of the Beares and the armes through the mouth with pawes hanging at their Noses. One had the head of a Woolfe hanging in a Chaine for a Iewell his Tobacco-pipe three quarters of a yard long, prettily carued with a Bird, a Beare, a Deere, or some such deuice at the great end, sufficient to beate out the braines of a man, with Bowes, and Arrowes, and Clubs sutable to their greatnesse and conditions. These are scarce knowne to Powhatan. They can make neere sixe hundred able and mightie men, and are pallisadoed in their Townes to defend them from the Massawomekes their mortall enemies. Fiue of their chiefe Weromances came aboord the Discouerers, and crossed the Bay in their Barge. Bolus R. The head of the Bay. Sasquesahanocks. Giantly people. The description of a Sasquesahanough. See the Map. Long Spoone to eate with the Deuill.

The Picture of the greatest of them is signified in the Mappe. The calfe of whose legge was three quarters of a yard about, and all the rest of his limbes so answerable to that proportion, that hee seemed the goodliest man that euer wee beheld. His haire, the one side was long, the other shorne close with a ridge ouer his crowne like a Cockes Combe. His Arrowes were fiue quarters long, headed with flints or spinters of stones, in forme like a Heart, an inch broad, and an inch and a halfe or more long. These hee wore in a Woolues Skinne at his backe for his Quiuer, his Bow in the one hand and his Clubbe in the other, as is described.

Tockwhogh R. On the East side the Bay, is the Riuer of Tockwhogh, and vpon it a people that can make one hundred men, seated some seuen miles within the Riuer: where they haue a Fort very well palliſadoed and mantelled with the Barke of Trees. Next to them is Oxinies with fiftie men. Rapahanock R. More to the South of that East side of the Bay, the Riuer of Rapahanock, neere vnto which is Kuskarawaok R. the Riuer of Kuskarawaok. Vpon which is seated a people with two hundred men. After that Wighcocomoco R. is the Riuer of Tants Wighcocomoco; and on it a people with one hundred men. The people of Accomack R. those Riuers are of little stature, of another Language from the rest, and very rude. But they on the Riuer of Acohanock with fortie men, and they of Accomack eighty men do equalize any of the Territories of Powhatan and speake his Language, who ouer all those doth rule as King.

Chawonock. Southward they went to some parts of Chawonock and the Mangoags to search for the men there left by Sir Walter Raleigh; for those parts to the Towne of Chisapeack haue formerly beene discouered by Master Hariots and Sir Ralph Lane. Amongst those people are thus many seuerall Nations of sundry Languages, that enuiron Powhatans Territories. The Chawonockes, the Mangoags, the Monacans, the Mannahokes, the Massawomekes, the Powhatans, the Sasquesahanocks, the Atquanachukes, the Tockwogbes, and the Kuscarawaokes. Of all those not any one vnderstandeth another but by Interpreters. Their seuerall Habitations are more plainly described by this annexed Mappe, which will present to the eye, the way of the Mountaines and current of the Riuers, with their seuerall Turnings, Bayes, Shoales, Iles, Inlets, and Creekes, the breadth of the waters, the distances of places and such like. In which Map obserue this, that as farre as you see the little Crosses on Riuers, Mountaines, or other places haue beene discouered; the rest was had by information of the Sauages, and are set downe, according to their instructions.

The seuerall Languages.

Of such things which are naturall in Virginia, and how they vse them.

Why there is little grasse. Virginia doth affoord many excellent vegitables and liuing creatures, yet grasse there is little or none, but what groweth in low Marishes: for all the Country is ouergrowne with Trees, whose droppings continually turne their grasse to weedes, by reason of the rankenesse of the ground which would soone be amended by good husbandry. The wood that is most common is Woods with their fruits. Oke and Walnut, many of their Okes are so tall and straight, that they will beare two foote and a halfe square of good Timber for twenty yards long; Of this wood there is two or three seuerall kinds. The Acornes of one kind, whose barke is more white then the other, are somewhat sweetish, which being boyled halfe a day in seuerall waters, at last affoord a fine Oyle, which they keep in Goards to annoint their heads & ioynts. The fruit they eate made in bread or otherwise. There is also some Elme, some blacke Wal-nut tree, and some Ash: of Ash and Elme they make Sope-ashes. If the trees be very great, the ashes will be good, and melt to hard lumps, but if they be small, it will be but powder, and not so good as the other. Of Walnuts there is two or three kinds; there is a kind of wood we called Cypresse, because both the wood, the fruit, and leafe did most resemble it, and of those trees there are some neere three fadome about the Roote very straight, and fifty, sixty, or eighty foot without a branch. By the dwelling of the Sauages are some great Mulberie trees, and in some parts of the Countrey, they are found growing naturally in pretie Groues. There was an assay made to make silke, and surely the Wormes prospered excellent well, till the Master workman fel sick. During which time they were eaten with Rats.

Elme.

Walnuts.

Supposed Cypresse.

Mulberies.

Chesnuts. In some parts were found some Chesnuts whose wild fruit equalize the best in France, Spaine, Germany, or Italy, to their tasts that had tasted them all. Plummes there are of three sorts. The red and white are like our hedge Plummes, but the other which they call Putchamins, grow as high as Palmeta: the fruit is like a Medler; it is first greene then yellow, and red when it is ripe; if it be not ripe it will draw a mans mouth awrie, with much torment, but when it is ripe, it is as delicious as an Apricock.

Plummes.

Cheries. Crabs. Vines. They haue Cherries, and those are much like a Damson, but for their tastes and colour we called them Cherries. Wee saw some few Crabbes, but very small and bitter. Of Vines great abundance in many parts climbe the tops of the highest trees in some places; but these beare but few Grapes. But by the Riuers and Sauage habitations where they are not ouershadowed from the Sunne, they are couered with fruit, though neuer pruned nor manured. Of those hedge Grapes wee made neere twenty gallons of Wine, which was neere as good as your French Britisb Wine: but certainly they would proue good, were they well manured. There is another sort of Grape, neere as great as a Cherrie, this they call Messamines, they be fat, and the iuyce thicke, thicke. Neither doth the taſte ſo well pleaſe when they are made in Wine. They haue a ſmall fruit growing on little trees, husked like a Cheſnut, but the fruit moſt like a very ſmall Acorne: this they call Chechinquamins, which they eſteeme a great daintie. They haue a berrie much like our Gooſeberrie, in greatneſſe, colour, and taſte; thoſe they call Rawcomenes, and doe eate them raw or boyled. Of theſe naturall fruits they liue a great part of the yeere, which they vſe in this manner. The Walnuts, Cheſnuts, Acornes, and Chechinquamins, are dried to keepe. When they need them they breake them betweene two ſtones, yet ſome part of the Walnut ſhels will cleaue to the fruit. Then doe they drie them againe vpon a Mat ouer a Hurdle. After they put it in a Morter of wood, and beate it very ſmall: that done they mixe it with water, that the ſhels may ſinke to the bottome. This water will be coloured as milke, which they call Pawcohiſcora, and keepe it for their vſe. The fruit like Medlers they call Putchamins, they caſt vpon Hurdles on a Mat, and preſerue them as Pruines. Of their Cheſnuts and Chechinquamins boyled foure houres, they make both Broth and Bread for their chiefe men, or at their greateſt feaſts. Beſides thoſe fruit trees, there is a white Populer, and another tree like vnto it, that yeeldeth a very cleare and an odoriferous Gumme like Turpentine, which ſome called Balſam. There are alſo Cedars and Saxafras tree. They alſo yeeld Gummes in a ſmall proportion of themſelues. Wee tried concluſions to extract it out of the wood, but nature affoorded more than our arts.

Chechinquamins

Rawcomenes.

How they vſe their fruits.

Walnut milke.

Gums. Cedars. Saxafras trees.

In the watery Valleyes groweth a Berrie, which they call Acoughtanamis, very much like vnto Capers. Theſe they dry in Summer. When they will eate them, they boyle them neere halfe a day; for otherwiſe they differ not much from poiſon. Mattoume groweth as our Bents doe in medowes: the ſeed is not much vnlike to Rie, though much ſmaller: this they vſe for a dainty Bread buttered with Deeres Suet.

Berries.

Mattoume.

During Summer there are either Strawberries which doe ripen in Aprill; or Mulberries which ripen in May and June: Raſpiſes, Hurtes, or a fruit that the Inhabitants call Maracocks, which is a pleaſant wholſome fruit, much like a Limond. Many Herbes in the Spring time there are commonly diſperſed throughout the Woods, good for Broths and Sallets, as Violets, Purſlane, Sorrell, &c. Beſides many wee vſed whoſe names we know not.

Strawberries, and other berries. Herbes.

The chiefe root they haue for food is called Tockawhoughe, It groweth like a Flag in low muddy Freſhes. In one day a Sauage will gather ſufficient for a weeke. Theſe rootes are much of the greatneſſe and taſte of Potatoes. They vſe to couer a great many of them with Oke Leaues and Ferne, and then couer all with earth in the manner of a Cole-pit; ouer it, on each ſide, they continue a great fire twentie foure houres before they dare eat it. Raw it is no better then poiſon, and being roaſted, except it be tender and the heat abated, or ſliced and dried in the Sunne, mixed with Sorrell and Meale, or ſuch like, it will prickle and torment the throat extreamely, and yet in Summer they vſe this ordinarily for bread.

They haue another root which they call Wighſacan: as the other feedeth the bodie, ſo this cureth their hurts and diſeaſes. It is a ſmall roote which they bruiſe and apply to the wound. Pocones, is a ſmall root that groweth in the Mountaines, which being dried and beat in powder turneth red. And this they vſe for ſwellings, aches, anointing their ioynts, painting their heads and garments. They account it verie precious, and of much worth. Muſquaſpenne is a root of the bigneſſe of a finger, and as red as bloud. In drying it will wither almoſt to nothing. This they vſe to paint their Mats, Targets, and ſuch like. There is alſo Pellitorie of Spaine, Saſafrage, and diuers others Simples, which the Apothecaries gathered, and commended to be good and medicinable. In the low mariſhes grow plots of Onions containing an acre of ground or more in many places; but they are ſmall, not paſt the bigneſſe of the top of ones thumbe.

Wighſacan a medicinable root. Pocones a ſmall root. Muſquaſpenne a root. Parietarie. Saſſafras. Onions. See inſt. c. 14. of certaine Oxen found by Cap. Aryoll.

Of beaſts the chiefe are Deare, nothing differing from ours. In the Deſarts towards the heads of the Riuers, there are many, but amongſt the Riuers few. There is a beaſt they call Aroughcun, much like a Badger, but vſeth to liue on trees as Squirrels doe. Their Squirrels, ſometime neere as great as our ſmalleſt ſort of wilde Rabbets, ſome blackiſh or blacke and white, but the moſt are gray. A ſmall beaſt they haue, they call Aſſapanick, but wee call them flying Squirrels, becauſe ſpreading their legs, and ſo ſtretching the largeneſſe of their skinnes, that they haue beene ſeene to flie thirtie or fortie yards. An Opaſſam hath a head like a Swine, and a taile like a Rat, and is of the bigneſſe of a Cat. Vnder her belly ſhe hath a bag, wherein ſhe lodgeth, carrieth, and ſuckleth her young. Muſſaſcus, is a beaſt of the forme and nature of our water Rats, but many of them ſmell exceeding ſtrongly of Muske. Their Hares are no bigger then our Conies, and few of them to be found.

Their Beares are verie little in compariſon of thoſe of Muſcouia and Tartaria. The Beauer is as big as an ordinarie great Dog, but his legs exceeding ſhort. His fore feet like a Dogs, his hinder feet like a Swans. His taile ſomewhat like the forme of a Racket bare without haire, which to eate the Sauages eſteeme a great delicate. They haue many Otters, which as the Beauers they take with ſnares, and eſteeme the skins great ornaments, and of all thoſe beaſts they vſe to feede when they catch them.

Aroughcun: Squirrels. Aſſapanick a Squirrel flying Opaſſum.

Muſſaſcus. Beares. The Beauer. Otters.

There is alſo a beaſt they call Vetchinquoyes, in the forme of a wilde Cat, their Foxes are like our ſiluer haired Conies of a ſmall proportion, and not ſmelling like thoſe in England. Their Vetchinquoyes. Foxes.

Digitized by Google

Dogs. Dogs of that Countrey are like their Wolues, and cannot barke but howle; and their Wolues not much bigger then our Engliſh Foxes.

Martins. Martins, Powlecats, Weeſſels and Minkes we know they haue, becauſe we haue ſeene many of their skins, though very ſeldome any of them aliue.

Polcats. Weeſels, and Minkes. But one thing is ſtrange, that wee could neuer perceiue their vermine deſtroy our Hens, Egges, nor Chickens, nor doe any hurt, nor their Flyes nor Serpents any way pernitious, where in the South parts of America they are alwaies dangerous and often deadly.

Note.

Birds. Of Birds the Eagle is the greateſt deuourer. Hawkes there bee of diuers ſorts as our Falconers called them. Sparrowhawkes, Lanarets, Goſhawkes, Falcons, and Oſperaies, but they all prey moſt vpon Fiſh.

Fiſh-hawkes. Partridges there are little bigger then our Quailes, wilde Turkies are as bigge as our tame. There are Wooſels or Black-birds with red ſhoulders, Thruſhes and diuers ſorts of ſmall Birds, ſome red, ſome Blew, ſcarce ſo big as a Wren, but few in Summer. In Winter there are great plentie of Swans, Cranes, gray and white with blacke wings, Herons, Geeſe, Brants, Duck, Wigeon, Dotterell, Oxeies, Parrats and Pigeons. Of all thoſe ſorts great abundance, and ſome other ſtrange kinds to vs vnknowne by name. But in Summer not any or a very few to be ſeene.

Fiſh. Of Fiſh, we are beſt acquainted with Sturgeon, Grampus, Porpus, Seales, Stingraies, whoſe tail is very dangerous. Bretts, Mullets, white Salmonds, Trowts, Soles, Plaice, Herrings, Conyfiſh, Rockfiſh, Eeles, Lampreyes, Catfiſh, Shades, Perch of three ſorts, Crabs, Shrimps, Creuiſes, Strange forme Oyſters, Cocles and Muſcles. But the moſt ſtrange Fiſh is a ſmall one, ſo like the picture of Saint George his Dragon, as poſſible can bee, except his legges and wings, and the Todefiſh, which will ſwell till it be like to burſt, when it commeth into the aire.

The Rocks. Concerning the entrailes or the earth, little can be ſaid for certaintie. There wanted good Refiners, for thoſe that tooke vpon them to haue skill this way, tooke vp the waſhings from the mountaines, and ſome moskered ſhining ſtones and ſpangles which the waters brought downe, flattering themſelues in their owne vaine conceit to haue ſuppoſed what they were not, by the meanes of that Ore, if it proued as their Arts and judgements expected. Onely this is certaine, that many Regions lying in the ſame Latitude, afford Mines very rich of diuers natures. The cruſt alſo of theſe Rocks would eaſily perſwade a man to beleeue there are other Mines then Iron and Steele, if there were but meanes and men of experience that knew the Mine from ſpare.

Of their Planted fruits in Virginia, and how they vſe them.

How they diuide the yeere. They diuide the yeere into fiue ſeaſons. Their Winter ſome call Pepaxw, the Spring Cattapeuk, the Summer Cohattayough, the earing of their Corne Nepinough, the Harueſt and fall of leafe Taquitock. From September, vntill the miuſt of Nouember are the chiefe Feaſts and Sacrifice. Then haue they plentie of fruits, as well planted as naturall, as Corne, green and ripe, Fiſh, Fowle, and wild beaſts exceeding fat.

How they prepare the ground. The greateſt labour they take, is in planting their Corne, for the Countrey is naturally ouergrowne with Wood. To prepare the ground they bruiſe the barke of the trees neere the roote, then doe they ſcorch the roots with fire that they grow no more. The next yeere with a crooked piece of Wood, they beat vp the Woods by the roots, and in thoſe moulds they plant their Corne. Their manner is this. They make a hole in the earth with a ſticke, and into it they put foure graines of Wheat, and two of Beanes. Theſe holes they make foure foot one from another; Their women and children do continually keepe it with weeding, and when it is growne middle high, they hill it about like a Hop-yard.

How they plant. In April they begin to plant, but their chiefe plantation is in May, and ſo they continue till the midſt of Iune. What they plant in April, they reape in Auguſt; for May, in September; for Iune, in October. Euery ſtalke of their Corne commonly beareth two eares, ſome three, ſeldome any foure, many but one, and ſome none. Euery eare ordinarily hath betwixt two hundred and fiue hundred graines. The ſtalke being greene hath a ſweet iuyce in it, ſomewhat like a Sugar Cane, which is the cauſe that when they gather their Corne greene, they ſucke the ſtalkes for as we gather greene Peaſe, ſo doe they their Corne being greene, which excelleth their old. They plant alſo Peaſe, which they call Aſſentamens, which are the ſame they call in Italy, Fagioli. Their Beanes are the ſame the Turkes call Garuanſos, but theſe they much eſteeme for dainties.

How they vſe their Corne. Their Corne they roſt in the eare greene, and bruiſed it in a Morter of Wood with a Polt, lap it in roules in the leaues of their Corne, and ſo boile it for a daintie. They alſo reſerue the Corne late planted that will not ripe, by roaſting it in hot aſhes, the heat thereof drying it. In Winter they eſteeme it, being boiled with Beanes, for a rare diſh, they call Pausarowmena. Their old Wheat they firſt ſteepe a night in hot water, in the morning pounding it in a Morter. They vſe a ſmall basket for their Temmes, then pound againe the great, and ſo ſeparating by daſhing their hand in the basket, receiue the flower in a platter made of Wood, ſcraped to that forme with burning and ſhels. Tempering this flower in water, they make it either in cakes couering with aſhes till they be baked, and then waſhing them in faire water they drie preſently with their owne heat; or elſe boile them in water, eating the broth with the bread, which they call Ponap. The grouts and pieces of the cornes remaining, by fanning in a platter, or in the wind, away, the branne they boile three or foure houres with water, which is an ordinary food they call Vstatahamen. But some more thriftie then cleanly, doe burne the coare of the eare to powder, which they call Pungnough, mingling that in their meale, but it neuer tasted well in bread, nor broth. There fish and flesh they boile either very tenderly, or broile it so long on hurdles ouer the fire, or else after the Spanish fashion, putting it on a spit, they turne first the one side, then the other, till it bee as drie as their Ierkin beefe in the West Indies, that they may keepe it a month or more without putrifying. The broth of fish or flesh they eate as commonly as the meat. How they vse their fish and flesh.

they

In May also amongst their Corne they plant Pumpeons, and a fruit like vnto a Muske Millen, but lesse and worse, which they call Macocks. These increase exceedingly, and ripen in the beginning of Iuly, and continue vntill September. They plant also Marasocks, a wilde fruit like a Lemmon, which also increase infinitely. They begin to ripe in September, and continue till the end of October. When all their fruits be gathered, little else they plant, and this is done by their women and children; neither doth this long suffice them, for neere three parts of the yeere they onely obserue times and seasons, and liue of what the Countrey naturally affordeth from hand to mouth, &c. Planted fruits.

The mildnesse of the aire, the fertilitie of the soile, and the situation of the Riuers, are so propitious to the nature and vse of man, as no place is more conuenient for pleasure, profit, and mans sustenance. Vnder that Latitude or Climate, here will liue any beasts, as Horses, Goats, Sheepe, Asses, Hens, &c. as appeared by them that were carried thither. The waters, Iles, and shoales, are full of safe harbours for ships of Warre or Merchandize, for boats of all sorts, for transportation or fishing, &c. The Bay and Riuers haue much merchandable fish, and places fit for Salt coats, building of Ships, making of Iron, &c. The commodities in Virginia, or that may bee had by industry. A proote, cattell will liue well.

Muscouia and Polonia doe yeerely receiue many thousands, for Pitch, Tarre, Sope, ashes, Rosen, Flax, Cordage, Sturgeon, Masts, Yards, Wainscot, Firres, Glasse, and such like: also Swetheland for Iron and Copper. France in like manner for Wine, Canvas, and Salt; Spaine as much for Iron, Steele, Figs, Reasons, and Sackes. Italy with Silkes and Veluets consume our chiefe commodities. Holland maintaines it selfe by Fishing and Trading at our owne doores. All these temporize with other for necessities, but all as vncertaine as Peace or Warres. Besides the charge, trauell, and danger in transporting them, by seas, lands, stormes, and Pyrats. Then how much hath Virginia the prerogatiue of all those flourishing Kingdomes, for the benefit of our Land, when as within one hundred miles all those that are to bee had, either readie prouided by nature, or else to be prepared, were there but industrious men to labour. Onely Copper (we may doubt) is wanting; but there is good probabilitie that both Copper, and better munerals are there to bee had for their labour. Other Countries haue it. So then here is a place, a nurse for Souldiers, a practise for Mariners, a trade for the Merchants, a reward for the good, and that which is most of all, a businesse (most acceptable to God) to bring such poore Infidels to the true knowledge of God, and his holy Gospel. The Commodities.

Of the naturall Inhabitants of Virginia, and their customes.

The land is not populous, for the men be few; their farre greater number is of women and children. Within sixtie miles of Iames Towne there are about some 7000. people, but of able men fit for their warres scarse 2000. To nourish so many together they haue yet no meanes, because they make so small a benefit of their Land, be it neuer so fertill: seuen or eight hundred (though by their owne report they were aboue a thousand) haue beene the most which hath beene seene together, when they gathered themselues to haue surprised Captaine Smith at Pamaunke, hauing but fifteene to withstand the worst of their furie. As small as the proportion of ground that hath yet beene discouered, is in comparison of that yet vnknowne, the people differ very much in stature, especially in language, as before is expressed. Some being very great, as the Sesquesahamocks; others very little, as the Wighcocomocos; but generally tall and straight, of a comely proportion, and of a colour browne when they are of any age, but they are borne white. Their haire is generally blacke, but few haue any beards. The men weare halfe their heads shauen, the other halfe long; for Barbers they vse their women, who with two shels will grate away the haire, of any fashion they please. The women are cut in many fashions agreeable to their yeares, but euer some part remaineth long. They are very strong, of an able body and full of agilitie, able to endure to lye in the woods vnder a tree by the fire, in the worst of winter, or in the weedes and grasse, in Ambuscado in the Summer. They are inconstant in euery thing, but what feare constraineth them to keepe. Craftie, timerous, quicke of apprehension, and very ingenious. Some are of disposition fearefull, some bold, most cautelous, all Sauage: Generally couetous of Copper, Beads, and such like trash. They are soone moued to anger, and so malicious, that they seldome forget an iniury: they seldome steale one from another, least their Coniurers should reueale it, and so they be pursued and punished. That they are thus feared is certaine, but that any can reueale their offences by coniuration I am doubtfull. Their women are carefull not to be suspected of dishonesty without the leaue of their husbands. Each household

The numbers. 700. men were the most seene together, when they thought to haue surprised Captaine Smith. A description of the people. The Barbars. The constitution. The disposition.

knoweth

The poſſeſſions. knoweth their owne lands and gardens, and moſt liue of their owne labours. For their apparell, they are ſometime couered with the skins of wilde Beaſts, which in winter are dreſſed with the haire, but in ſummer without. Their attire. The better ſort vſe large mantels of Deare skins, not much differing in faſhion from the Iriſh Mantels: ſome imbrodered with white Beades, ſome with Copper, other painted after their manner. But the common ſort haue ſcarce to couer their nakedneſſe but with graſſe, the leaues of trees, or ſuch like. Wee haue ſeene ſome vſe mantels made Fether Mantels. of Turkie-feathers, ſo prettily wrought and wouen with threds, that nothing could be diſcerned but the feathers. That was exceeding warme and very handſome. But the women are alwayes couered about their middles with a skin, and very ſhamefac't to be ſeene bare. Their ornaments. They adorne themſelues moſt with Copper Beads and paintings. Their women, ſome haue their legs, hands, breſts and face cunningly imbrodered with diuers works, as Beaſts, Serpents, artificially wrought into their fleſh with blacke ſpots. In each eare commonly they haue three great holes, whereat the hang Chaines, Bracelets or Copper. Some of their men weare in thoſe holes, a ſmall greene and yellow coloured Snake, neere halfe a yard in length, which crawling and lapping her ſelfe about his necke oftentimes familiarly would kiſſe his lips. Others weare a dead Rat tied by the taile. Some on their heads weare the wing of a bird, or ſome large feather with a Rattell. Thoſe Rattels are ſomewhat like the chape of a Rapier but leſſe, which they take from the taile of a Snake. Many haue the whole skin of a Hawke or ſome ſtrange fowle, ſtuffed with the wings abroad. Others a broad peece of Copper, and ſome the hand of their enemy dried. Their head and ſhoulders are painted red with the roote Pocone braied to powder mixed with Oyle, this they hold in ſummer to preſerue them from the heate, and in winter from the cold. Many other formes of paintings they vſe, but he is the moſt gallant that is the moſt monſtrous to behold.

Their buildings. Their Buildings and habitations are for the moſt part by the Riuers, or not farre diſtant from ſome freſh Spring. Their Houſes are built like our Arbors, of ſmall yong ſprigs bowed and tied, and ſo cloſe couered with mats, or the barks of trees very handſomely, that notwithſtanding either winde, raine or weather, they are ſo warme as ſtoues, but very ſmoakie, yet at the top of the houſe there is a hole made for the ſmoake to goe into right ouer the fire.

Their lodgings. Againſt the fire they lye on little hurdles of Reedes couered with a mat borne from the ground a foote and more by a Hurdle of wood. On theſe round about the houſe they lye heads and points one by thother againſt the fire, ſome couered with Mats, ſome with Skins, and ſome ſtarke naked, lye on the ground, from ſix to twenty in a houſe. Their Houſes are in the midſt of their Their gardens. Fields or Gardens, which are ſmall plots of grounds; ſome twenty, ſome forty, ſome a hundred, ſome two hundred, ſome more, ſome leſſe, ſometimes from two to a hundred of thoſe houſes together, or but a little ſeperated by groues of trees. Neare their habitations is little ſmall wood or old trees on the ground by reaſon of their burning of them for fire. So that a man may gallop a horſe amongſt theſe woods any way, but where the creekes or Riuers ſhall hinder.

How they vſe their children. Men, Women, and Children haue their ſeuerall names, according to the ſeuerall humour of their Parents. Their women (they ſay) are eaſily deliuered of child, yet doe they loue children very dearely. To make them hardy, in the coldeſt mornings they waſh them in the Riuers, and by painting and ointments ſo tan their skins, that after a yeare or two, no weather will hurt them.

The induſtry of their women. The men beſtow their times in fiſhing, hunting, warres, and ſuch manlike exerciſes, ſcorning to be ſeene in any womanlike exerciſe, which is the cauſe that the women be very painfull, and the men often idle. The women and children doe the reſt of the worke. They make Mats, Baſkets, Pots, Mosters, pound their corne, make their bread, prepare their victuals, plant their corne, gather their corne, beare all kinde of burdens, and ſuch like.

How they ſtrike fire. Their fire they kindle preſently by chaſing a dry pointed ſticke in a hole of a little ſquare peece of wood, that firing it ſelfe, will ſo fire moſſe, leaues, or any ſuch like dry thing, that will quickly burne. Their order of diet. In March and Aprill they liue much vpon their fiſhing wares, and feede on fiſh, Turkies, and Squirrels. In May and Iune they plant their fields, and liue moſt of Acornes, Walnuts, and fiſh. But to mend their diet, ſome diſperſe themſelues in ſmall companies, and liue vpon fiſh, Beaſts, Crabs, Oyſters, land Tortoyſes, Strawberries, Mulberries, and ſuch like. In Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt, they feede vpon the rootes of Tocknough Berries, Fiſh, and greene Wheate. It is ſtrange to ſee how their bodies alter with their diet, euen as the Deere and wilde Beaſts, they ſeeme fat and leane, ſtrong and weake. Powhatan their great King, and ſome others that are prouident, roſt their fiſh and fleſh vpon hurdles, as before is expreſſed, and keepe it till ſcarce times.

How they make their Bowes and Arrowes. For fiſhing, and hunting, and warres, they vſe much their Bowe and Arrowes. They bring their Bowes to the forme of ours: by the ſcraping of a ſhell. Their Arrowes are made ſome of ſtraight yong ſprigs, which they head with bone, ſome two or three inches long. Theſe they vſe to ſhoote at Squirrels on trees. Another ſort of Arrowes they vſe, made of reedes: theſe are peeced with wood, headed with ſplinters of Chriſtall, or ſome ſharpe ſtone; the ſpurs of a Turkey, or the bill of ſome Bird. For his Knife, he hath the ſplinter of a reede to cut his feathers in forme. Their Knife. With this Knife alſo, he will ioynt a Deere or any Beaſt, ſhape his ſhooes, buskins, Mantels, tels, &c. To make the noch of his Arrow, he hath the tooth of a Beuer, set in a sticke, wherewith he grateth it by degrees. His Arrow head he quickly maketh with a little bone, which he euer weareth at his braeer, of any splint of a stone or glasse, in the forme of a hart; and these they glew to the end of their Arrowes. With the sinewes of Deere, and the tops of Deeres hornes boiled to a ielly, they make a glew that will not dissolue in cold water.

Digitized by Google

For their warres also they vse Targets that are round and made of the barkes of trees, and a sword of wood at their backes, but oftentimes they vse for swords the horne of a Deere put through a peece of wood, in forme of a Pickaxe: some a long stone sharpened at both ends, vsed in the same manner. This they were wont to vse also for Hatchets, but now by trucking, they haue plenty of the same forme of Iron. And those are their chiefe instruments and armes. Their Targets and Swords.

Their fishing is much in Boates. These they make of one tree by burning and scratching away the coles with stones and shels, till they haue made it in forme of a Trough. Some of them are an elle deepe, and forty or fifty foote in length, and some will beare forty men, but the most ordinary are smaller, and will beare ten, twenty, or thirty, according to their bignesse. Instead of Oares, they vse paddles and sticks, with which they will rowe faster then our Barges. Betwixt their hands and thighes, their women vse to spin; the Barkes of trees, Deere sinewes, or a kinde of grasse they call Pemmenaw; of these they make a thred very euen and readily. This thred serueth for many vses, about their housing, apparell, as also they make nets for fishing, for the quantity as formally braded as ours. They make also with it lines for angles. Their hookes are either a bone grated, as they nocke their Arrowes, in the forme of a crooked pin or fishhooke, or of the splinter of a bone tied to the clift of a little sticke, and with the end of the line, they tye on the baite. They vse also long Arrowes tyed in a line, wherewith they shoote at fish in the Riuer. But they of Accawmack vse staues, like vnto Iauelins, headed with bone. With these they dart fish swimming in the water. They haue also many artificiall wares, in which they get abundance of fish. Their Boates. How they spin. Their Fishcoles

In their hunting & fishing they take extreame paines; yet it being their ordinary exercise from their infancy, they esteemed it a pleasure and are very proud to be expert therein. And by their continuall ranging, and trauell, they know all the aduantages and places most frequented with Deere, Beasts, Fish, Fowle, Rootes, and Berries. At their huntings they leaue their habitations, and reduce themselues into companies, as the Tartars doe, and goe to the most desert places with their families, where they spend their time in hunting and fowling vp towards the Mountains, by the heads of their Riuers, where there is plenty of game. For betwixt the Riuers, the grounds are so narrow, that little commeth there which they deuoure not. It is a maruell they can so directly passe these desarts, some three or foure daies iournie without habitation. Their hunting houses are like vnto Arbours couered with mats. These their women beare after them, with Corne, Acornes, Morters, and all bag and baggage they vse. When they come to the place of exercise, euery man doth his best to shew his dexteritie, for by their excelling in those qualities, they get their wiues. Forty yards will they shoote leuell, or very neere the marke, and one hundred and twenty is their best at random. At their hunting in the desarts they are commonly two or three hundred together: Hauing found the Deere, they enuiron them with many fires, and betwixt the fires they place themselues. And some take their stands in the midst. The Deere being thus feared by the fires and their voices, they chace them so long within that circle, that many times they kill six, eight, ten, or fifteene at a hunting. They vse also to driue them into some narrow point of land, when they finde that aduantage, and so force them into the Riuer, where with their Boates they haue Ambuscadoes to kill them. When they haue shot a Deere by land they follow him like Bloud-hounds, by the bloud and straine, and oftentimes so take them. Hares, Partridges, Turkies, Egges, fat or leane, yong or old, they deuoure all they can catch in their power. In one of these iourneys they found Captaine Smith, in the discouery of the head of the Riuer of Chickahamania, where they ambushed his men, and tooke him prisoner in a Bogmire, where he saw those exercises, and gathered these obseruations. Hunting labours. How they hunt. Hunting houses.

One Sauage hunting alone, vsed the skinne of a Deere slit from the one side, and so put on his arme, through the necke, so that his hand comes to the head which is carued, and the hornes, head, eies, eares, and euery part as artificially counterfeited as they can deuise. Thus shrowding his body in the skin, by stalking he approacheth the Deere, creeping on the ground from tree to another. If the Deere chance to finde fault, or stand at gaze, hee turneth the head with his hand to his best aduantage to seeme like a Deere, also gazing and licking himselfe. So watching his best aduantage to approach, hauing shot him, he chaseth him by his bloud and straine till he get him. One Sauage hunting alone.

When they intend any Warre, the Werowances vsually haue the aduise of their Priests and Coniurers, and their allies and ancient friends, but chiefely the Priests determine their resolution. Euery Werowance, or some lusty fellow, they appoint Captaine ouer euery Nation. They seldome make Warre for lands or goods, but for women and children, and principally for reuenge. They haue many enemies, namely all their Westernely Countries beyond the Mountaines, and Their consultations. Their enemies.

the heads of the Riuers. Vpon the head of the Powhatans are the Monacans, whose chiefe habitation is at Rassawmeake, vnto whom the Moubemenchughes, the Massinnacacks, the Monahassanuggs, and other Nations pay tributes. Vpon the head of the Riuer of Toppahanocke is a people called Mannahoacks. To these are contributers the Tauxsnitanias, the Shackaconias, the Ourponcas, the Tegoneats, the Whonkentyaes, the Stegarakes, the Hassinungaes, and diuers others, all confederates with the Monacans though many differ in language, and be very barbarous, liuing for most part of wilde Beasts and fruits. Beyond the Mountaines, from whence is the head of the Riuer Patawomeke, the Sauages report inhabit their most mortall enemies, the Massawomekes vpon a great salt water, which by all likelihood is either some part of Canada, some great Lake, or some inlet of some Sea that falleth into the South Sea. These Massawomekes are a great Nation and very populous. For the heads of all those Riuers, especially the Patawomekes, the Pauuxunnes, the Sasquesahanoks, the Tockwoughes are continually tormented by them: of whose cruelty, they generally complained, and very importunate they were with Captaine Smith and his company to free them from these tormentors. To this purpose they offered food, conduct, assistance, and continuall subiection; which hee concluded to effect. But the councell then present, emulating his successe, would not thinke it fit so spare him forty men to be hazarded in those vnknowne Regions, hauing passed (as before was spoken of) but with twelue, and so was lost that opportunity. Seuen Boates full of these Massawomekes the discouerers encountred at the head of the Bay; whose Targets, Baskets, Swords, Tobaccopipes, Platters, Bowes and Arrowes, and euery thing shewed, they much exceeded them of our parts, and their dexteritie in their small Boates made of the barkes of trees sowed with barke, and well luted with gum, argueth that they are seated vpon some great water.

Their offer of subiection.

Massawomekes.

Against all these enemies the Powhatans are constrained sometimes to fight. Their chiefe attempts are by Stratagems, trecheries, or surprisals. Yet the Werowances, women and children they put not to death, but keepe them Captiues. They haue a method in warre, and for our pleasure they shewed it vs, and it was in this manner performed at Mattapanient.

Their manner of battell.

Hauing painted and disguised themselues in the fiercest manner they could deuise. They diuided themselues into two Companies, neere a hundred in a Company. The one company called Monacans, the other Powhatans. Either army had their Captaine. These as enemies tooke their stands a Musket shot one from another, ranked themselues fifteene a breast, and each ranke from another foure or fiue yards, not in fyle, but in the opening betwixt their fyles. So as the Reare could shoote as conueniently as the Front. Hauing thus pitched the fields; from either part went a Messenger with these conditions, that whosoeuer were vanquished, such as escape vpon their submission in two daies after shall liue, but their wiues and children should be prize for the Conquerours. The Messengers were no sooner returned, but they approached in their orders: On each flanke a Sarieant, and in the Reare an officer for Lieutenant, all duely keeping their orders, yet leaping and singing after their accustomed tune which they vse onely in warre. Vpon the first flight of Arrowes they gaue such horrible shouts and screeches, as so many infernall hellhounds could not haue made them more terrible. When they had spent their Arrowes, they ioyned together prettily, charging and retiring, euery ranke seconding other. As they got aduantage, they catched their enemies by the haire of the head, & down he came that was taken: his enemy with his wodden Sword seemed to beate out his braines, and still they crept to the Reare to maintaine the skirmish. The Monacans decreasing, the Powhatans charged them in the forme of a halfe Moon; they vnwilling to be incloſed, fled all in a troope to their Anchsoedoes, on whom they led them very cunningly. The Monacans disperse themselues among the fresh men, whereupon the Powhatans retired with all speede to their seconds; which the Monacans seeing, tooke that aduantage to retire againe to their owne battell, and so each returned to their owne quarter. All their actions, voices and gestures, both in charging and retiring, were so strained to the height of their quallitie and nature, that the strange thereof made it seeme very delightfull.

Their Musicke.

For their musicke they vse a thicke Cane [illegible] which they pipe as on a Recorder. For their warres they haue a great deepe platter of wood. They couer the mouth thereof with a skin, at each corner they tie a Wal[illegible], which meeting on the backeside neere to the bottome, with a small rope they twi[illegible] them together till it be so tough and stiffe, that they may beate vpon it as vpon a D[illegible]. But their chiefe instruments are Rattels made of small gourds or Pumpions shels. Of these they haue Base, Tenor, Countertenor, Meane and Trible. These mingled with their voyces, sometimes twenty or thirty together, make such a terrible noise, as would rather affright then delight any man. If any great Commander arriue at the habitation of a Werowance, they spread a Mat, as the Turkes doe a Carpet, for him to sit vpon. Vpon another right opposite they sit themselues. Then doe all with a tunable voice of howling bid him welcome. After this doe two or more of their chiefest men make an Oration, testifying their loues which they doe with such vehemency, and so great passions, that they sweate till they drop, and are so out of breath they can scarce speake: so that a man would take them to be exceeding angry, or starke mad. Such victuall as they haue, they spend freely, and at night where his

Their entertainment.

lodging

lodging is appointed, they set a woman fresli painted red with Pocones and Oile, to be his bedfellow.

Their manner of trading is for Copper, Beades, and such like, for which they giue such commodities as they haue, as Skins, Fowle, Fish, Flesh, and their Countrie Corne. But their victuall is their chiefest riches. Their trade.

Euery spring they make themselues sicke with drinking the iuice of a roote they call Wighsacan, and water, whereof they powre so great a quantity, that it purgeth them in a very violent manner; so that in three or foure daies after they scarce recouer their former health. Sometimes they are troubled with dropsies, swellings, aches, and such like diseases; for cure whereof they build a stoue, in the forme of a Douehouse, with mats, so close that a few coales therein couered with a pot, will make the patient sweate extreamely. For swellings also they vse small peeces of touchwood, in the forme of cloues, which pricking on the griefe they burne close to the flesh, and from thence draw the corruption with their mouth. With this root Wighsacan they ordinarily heale greene wounds. But to scarrifie a swelling or make incision, their best instruments are some splinted stone. Old vlcers or putrified hurts are seldome seene cured amongst them. They haue many professed Physitians, who with their charmes and Rattels with an infernall rowt of words and actions will seeme to sucke their inward griefe from their nauels or their grieued places; bnt of our Chirurgians they were so conceited, that they beleeued any Plaister would heale any hurt. Their phisicke. Their chirurgery. Their charmes to cure.

Of their Religion.

There is yet in Virginia no place discouered to be so Sauage in which the Sauages haue not a Religion, Deere, and Bow, and Arrowes. All things that were able to doe them hurt beyond their preuention, they adore with their kinde of diuine worship; as the fire, water, lightning, thunder, our ordnance, peeces, horses, &c. But their chiefe God they worship is the Diuell; him they call Oke, and serue him more of feare then loue. They say they haue conference with him and fashion themselues as neere to his shape as they can imagine. In their Temples they haue his image euilfauouredly carued, and then painted and adorned with Chaines, Copper, and Beads, and couered with a skin, in such manner as the deformitie may well suite with such a God. By him is commonly the sepulcher of their Kings. Their bodies are first bowelled, then dried vpon hurdles till they be very dry, and so about the most of their ioints and necke they hang Bracelets or Chaines of Copper, Pearle, and such like, as they vse to weare, their inwards they stuffe with Copper Beads and couered with a Skin, Hatchets, and such trash. Then lap they them very carefully in white Skins, and so rowle them in mats for their winding-sheetes. And in the Tombe, which is an arch made of Mats, they lay them orderly. What remaineth of this kinde of wealth, their Kings haue, they set at their feete in baskets. These Temples and bodies are kept by their Priests. Their God. How they bury their Kings.

For their ordinary burials, they dig a deepe hole in the earth with sharpe stakes, and the corpes being lapped in Skins and Mats with their Iewels, they lay them vpon sticks in the ground, and so couer them with earth. The buriall ended, the women being painted all their faces with black cole and oyle, doe sit foure and twenty houres in the houses mourning and lamenting by turnes, with such yelling and howling as may expresse their great passions. Their ordinary burials.

In euery Territory of a Werowance is a Temple and a Priest, two, or three, or more. Their principall Temple or place of superstition is at Vttamussack at Pamaunke, neere vnto which is a house temple or place of Powhatans. Vpon the top of certain red sandy hils in the woods, there are three great houses filled with images of their Kings, and Diuels, & Tombes of their Predecessors. Those houses are neere sixty foot in length, built arbor-wise after their building. This place they count so holy as that none but the Priests and Kings dare come into them; nor the Sauages dare not goe vp the Riuer in Boates by it, but that they solemnly cast some peece of Popper, white Beads or Pocones into the Riuer; for feare their Oke should be offended and reuenged of them. In this place commonly are resident seuen Priests. The chiefe differed from the rest in his ornaments, but inferior Priests could hardly be knowne fiom the common people, but that they had not so many holes in their eares to hang their Iewels at. The ornament of the chiefe Priest were certaine attires for his head made thus: They tooke a dosen, or sixteene, or more Snake skins, and stuffed them with mosse, & of Weesels, and other vermine skins a good many. All these they tye by their tailes, so as all their tailes meete in the top of their head, like a great Tassell. Round about this Tassell is as it were a cown of feathers, the skins hang round about his head, necke, and shoulders, and in a manner couer his face. The faces of all their Priests are painted as vgly as they can deuise, in their hands they had euery one his Rattell, some base, some smaller. Their deuotion was most in Songs, which the chiefe Priest beginneth, and the rest followed him, sometimes he maketh inuocations with broken sentences by starts and strange passions, and at euery pause, the rest giue a short groane. Their Temples. Their ornaments for their Priests.

It could not be perceiued that they keepe any day as more holy then other; but onely in some great distresse of want, feare of enemies, times of triumph and gathering together their fruits, the Their times of solemnities.

whole

whole Country of men, women, and children come together to solemnities. The manner of their deuotion is, sometimes to make a great fire in the house or fields, and all to sing and dance about it with Rattles and shours together foure or fiue houres. Sometime they set a man in the midst, and about him they dance and sing, he all the while clapping his hands if he would keepe time, and after their songs and dancings ended they goe to their Feasts.

Their Coniurations.

They haue also diuers coniurations; one they made when Captaine Smith was their prisoner (as they reported) to know if any more of his Country-men would arriue there, and what hee there intended. The manner of it followeth in his story.

Their Altars. C. Smith.

They haue also certaine Altar stones, they call Pawcorances, but these stand from their Temples, some by there houses; others in the Woods and Wildernesses: Where they haue had any extraordinary accident or incounter. As you trauell by them they will tell you the cause of their erection, wherein they instruct their children; so that they are in stead of Records and memorialls of their Antiquities. Vpon this they offer bloud, Deare suet, and Tobacco. These they doe when they returne from the warres, from hunting, and vpon many other occasions. They haue also another superstition that they vse in stormes, when the waters are rough in the Riuers and Sea Coasts. Their Coniurers runne to the water sides, or passing in their Boats, after many hellish outcries and inuocations, they cast Tobacco, Copper, Pocones, or such trash into the water, to pacifie that God whom they thinke to be very angry in those stormes. Before their dinners and suppers, the better sort will take the first bit, and cast it in the fire, which is all the grace they are knowne to vse.

Sacrifices to the water.

Their solemne making of black-berries.

Euery Nation in seuen or ten yeeres vseth a kind of solemnity. Such a one was at Quiyoughcohanock, some ten miles from Iames Towne, and thus performed. Fifteene of the properest young Boyes, betweene ten and fifteene yeeres of age they painted white. Hauing brought them forth, the people spent the forenoone in dancing and singing about them with Rattles. In the afternoone they put those children to the root of the tree. By them all the men stood in a gard, euery one hauing a Bastinado in his hand, made of Reeds bound together. This made a lane betweene them all along, through which there were appointed fiue young men to fetch these children; so euerie one of the fiue went through the guard to fetch a child each after other by turnes, the guard fearlesly beating them with the Bastinadoes, and they patiently enduring and receiuing all, defending the children with their naked bodies from the vnmercifull blowes, that pay them soundly, though the children escape. All this while the women weepe and cry out verie passionately, prouiding Mats, Skins, Mosse, and drie Wood, as things fitting their childrens Funeralls. After the children were thus passed, the guard tore downe the trees, branches, and boughs, with such violence that they rent the bodie, and made wreathes for their heads, or bedecked their haire with leaues. What else was done with the children, was not seene, but they were all cast on a heape, in a Valley as dead, where they made a great feast for all the company.

C. Smith.

The Werowance being demanded the meaning of this sacrifice, answered, That the children were not all dead, but the next day they were to drinke Wighsakon, which would make them mad; and they were to bee kept by the last made Blacke boyes in the wildernesse, where their Oke did sucke the bloud of those which fell to his lot. The truth is, as I thinke, that many die with the misery which they endure. For they lye in all weathers in a little bouell naked, and they seldome speake or keepe company with any but their Keepers; whom they obey so, that if they be bidden sit on the frozen snow, they will not rise till they be called. And if they bid them goe take Fish, Flesh, or Corne from their mothers, or else they are Old me, this word is so terrible that they will teare their mothers throat, but they will haue it; yea it makes them do whatsoeuer they are commanded: and much mischiefe they often doe to such as they find straggling. Yet hurt they not each other. They continue thus nine months. Then are diuers platters of broth set, of which some are poysoned; and he whose diuination finds out the poysoned, is much esteemed and made a Quiyoughcosuck. These are the degrees to become Priests or Coniurers. This sacrifice they held to be so necessary, that if they should omit it, their Oke or Deuil, and all their other Quiyoughcosughes which are there other Gods, would let them haue no Deare, Turkies, Corne, nor Fish, and yet besides, be would make a great slaughter amongst them.

They thinke that their Werowances and Priests, which they also esteeme Quiyoughcosughes, when they are dead, goe beyond the Mountaines towards the setting of the Sunne, and euer remaine there in forme of their Oke, with their heads painted with Oile and Pocones, finely trimmed with Feathers, and shall haue Beades, Hatchets, Copper, and Tobacco, doing nothing but dance and sing, with all their Predecessors. But the common people they suppose shall not liue after death.

Their resurrection.

To diuert them from this blind Idolatry, many vsed there best endeauours, chiefly with the Werowances of Quiyoughcohanock, whose deuotion, apprehension, and good disposition, much exceeded any in those Countries, whom though wee could not as yet preuaile withall to forsake his false Gods, yet this he did beleeue, that our God as much exceeded theirs, as our Gunnes did their Bowes and Arrowes, and many times did send to the President, at Iames Towne, men with Presents, intreating them to pray to his God for Raine, for his Gods would not send him any. And in this lamentable ignorance, doe these poore soules sacrifice themselues to the Deuill, not knowing their Creator.

Of

Digitized by Google

Of the manner of the Virginians Gouernment.

Although the Countrey people be very barbarous, yet haue they amongst them such gouernment, as that their Magistrates for good commanding, and their people for due subiection, and obeying, excell many places that would be counted verie ciuill. The forme of their Commonwealth is a Monarchiall gouernment, one as Emperour ruleth ouer many Kings or Gouernours. Their chiefe Ruler is called Powhatan, and taketh his name of the principall place of dwelling, called Powhatan. But his proper name is Wahunsonacock. Some Countries hee hath which haue beene his Ancestors, and came vnto him by Inheritance, as the Countrie called Powhatan, Arrohateck, Appamatuke, Pamaunke, Youghtanund, and Mattapanient. All the rest of his Territories expressed in the Map, they report haue beene his seuerall conquests. In all his ancient Inheritances, hee hath houses built after their manner like arbours, some thirtie, some fortie yards long, and at euerie house prouision for his entertainment according to the time. At Werowocomoco, hee was seated vpon the Northside of the Riuer Pamaunke, some fourteene miles from Iames Towne, where for the most part, hee was resident, but hee tooke so little pleasure in our neere neighbourhood, that were able to visit him against his will in sixe or seuen houres, that he retired himselfe to a place in the Desarts at the top of the Riuer Chickahamania, betweene Youghtanund and Powhatan. His habitation is called Orapaks, where he ordinarily now resideth. He is of parsonage a tall well proportioned man, with a sower looke, his head somewhat gray, his beard so thin that it seemeth none at all, his age neere sixtie; of a verie able and hardie bodie to endure any labour. About his person ordinarily attendeth a guard of fortie or fiftie of the tallest men his Countrie doth afford. Euerie night vpon the foure quarters of his house are foure Sentinels each standing from other a flight shoot, and at euery halfe houre one from the Corps due guard doth hollow, vnto whom euerie Sentinell doth answere round from his stand; if any faile, they presently send forth an officer that beateth him extreamely.

A description of Powhatan.

His attendance & watch

A mile from Orapakes, in a thicket of Wood, hee hath a house in which hee keepeth his kind of Treasure, as Skins, Copper, Pearle, and Beads, which he storeth vp against the time of his death and buriall. Here also is store of Red paint for ointment, and Bowes and Arrowes. This house is fiftie or sixtie yards in length, frequented onely by Priests. At the foure corners of this house stand foure Images as Sentinels, one of a Dragon, another a Beare, the third like a Leopard, and the fourth like a Giant-like man, all made euill-fauor'dly, according to their best workmanship.

His treasurie.

He hath as many women as he will, whereof when he lieth on his bed, one sitteth at his head, and another at his feet, but when he sitteth, one sitteth on his right hand & another on his left. As he is weary of his women, he bestoweth them on those that best deserue them at his hands. When he dineth or suppeth, one of his women before and after meat, bringeth him water in a woodden Platter to wash his hands. Another waiteth with a bunch of Feathers to wipe them insteed of a Towell, and the Feathers when he hath wiped are dried againe. His Kingdome descendeth not to his sonnes nor children, but first to his brethren, whereof hee hath three, namely, Opitchapan, Opechancanough, and Catataugh, and after their decease to his sisters. First to the eldest sister, then to the rest, and after them to the heire male and female of the eldest sister, but neuer to the heires of the males.

His Wiues.

His Successors

The title of succession.

Hee, nor any of his people vnderstand any letters whereby to write or read, onely the Lawes whereby he ruleth is Custome. Yet when hee listeth his will is a law, and must be obeyed: not only as a King, but as halfe a God they esteeme him. His inferiour Kings, whom they call Werowances are tied to rule by customes, and haue power of life and death, as their command in that nature. But this word Werowance, which we call and conster for a King, is a common word whereby they call all Commanders: for they haue but few words in their language, and but few occasions to vse any officers more then one Commander, which commonly they call Werowances. They all know their seuerall lands, and habitations, and limits, to fish, fowle, or hunt in, but they hold all of their great Werowance Powhatan, vnto whom they pay tribute of Skins, Beads, Copper, Pearle, Deare, Turkies, wild Beasts, and Corne. What hee commandeth they dare not disobey in the least thing. It is strange to see with what great feare & adoration all these people do obey this Powhatan. For at his feet they present whatsoeuer hee commandeth, at the least frowne of his brow, their greatest spirits will tremble with feare: and no maruell, for hee is very terrible and tyrannous in punishing such as offend him. For example, hee caused certaine malefactors to bee bound hand and foot, then hauing many fires, gathering great store of burning coles, they rake these coles round in the forme of a cock-pit, and in the midst they cast the offenders to broyle to death. Somtimes hee causeth the heads of them that offend him, to bee laid vpon the altar or sacrificing stone, and one with clubs beat out their braines. When he would punish any notorious enemy or malefactor, hee causeth him to bee tied to a tree, and with Muscle shels, or Reeds, the executioner cutteth off his ioynts one after another, euer casting what they cut off into the fire; then doth hee proceed with Shels and Reeds to case the skin from his head and face; then doe they rip his belly, and so burne him with the tree and all. Thus themselues reported they executed George Cassen. Their ordinary correction is to beat them with cudgels. Wee haue seene a man kneeling on his

The tenor of their lands.

Their authoritie.

His manner of punishments.

Digitized by Google

knees, and at Powhatans command, two men haue beat him on the bare skin, till hee hath fallen senseleſſe in a ſound, and yet neuer cry nor complained.

In the yeere 1608, he ſurpriſed the people of Payankatank, his neere neighbours and ſubiects. The occaſion was to vs vnknowne, but the manner was thus. Firſt, he ſent diuers of his men to lodge amongſt them that night, then the Ambuſcades inuironed all their houſes, and at the hour appointed, they all fel to the ſpoile, twenty foure men they ſlew, the long haire of their one ſide of their heads, with the skinne caſed off with ſhels or reeds, they brought away. They ſurpriſed alſo the women, the children, and the Werowance. All theſe they preſent to Powhatan. The Werowance, women and children became his priſoners, and doe him ſeruice. The lockes of haire with their skins he hanged on a line vnto two trees. And thus hee made oſtentation of as great a triumph at Werowocomoco, ſhewing them to the Engliſh men that then came vnto him at his appointment, they expecting proviſion, he to betray them, ſuppoſed to halfe conquer them by this ſpectacle of his terrible crueltie.

And this is as much as my memory can call to mind worthy of note; which I haue purpoſely collected, to ſatisfie my friends of the true worth and qualitie of Virginia. Yet ſome bad natures will not ſtick to ſlander the Countrey, that will ſlouenly ſpit at all things, eſpecially in company where they can find none to contradict them. Who though they were ſcarce euer ten miles from Iames Towne, or at the moſt but at the Falls; yet holding it a great diſgrace that amongſt ſo much action, their actions were nothing, exclaime of all things, though they neuer aduentured to know any thing; nor euer did any thing but deuoure the fruits of other mens labours. Being for moſt part of ſuch tender educations and ſmall experience in martiall accidents, becauſe they found not Engliſh Cities, nor ſuch faire houſes, nor at their owne wiſhes any of their accuſtomed dainties, with Feather-beds, and Down-pillowes, Tauernes and Ale-houſes in euery breathing place, neither ſuch plentie of Gold and Siluer and diſſolute libertie as they expected, had little or no care of any thing, but to pamper their bellies, to fly away with our Pinnaces, or procure their meanes to returne for England. For the Countrey was to them a miſery, a ruine, a death, a hell, their reports here, and their owne actions were there according.

Vanitie of Effeminate Planters.

Some other there were that had yeerely ſtipends to paſſe to and againe for tranſportation: who to keepe the myſtery of the buſineſſe in themſelues, though they had neither time nor meanes to know much of themſelues; yet all mens actions or relations they ſo formally tuned to the temporizing times ſimplicitie, as they could make their ignorances ſeeme much more, then all the true actors could by their experience. And thoſe with their great wordes deluded the world with ſuch ſtrange promiſes, as abuſed the buſineſſe much worſe then the reſt. For the buſineſſe being builded vpon the foundation of their fained experience, the planters, the Money, Tin, and meanes haue ſtill miſcarried: yet they euer returning, and the Planters ſo farre abſent, who could contradict their excuſes? which ſtill to maintaine their vain-glory and eſtimation, from time to time they haue vſed ſuch diligence as made them paſſe for truths, though nothing more falſe. And that the aduenturers might be thus abuſed, let no man wonder; for the wiſeſt liuing is ſooneſt abuſed by him that hath a faire tongue and a diſſembling heart.

Vanitie of ſelf-ſeeking glorioſos.

There were many in Virginia meerely proiecting, verball and idle contemplators, and thoſe ſo deuoted to pure idleneſſe, that though they had liued two or three yeeres in Virginia, lordly, neceſſitie it ſelfe could not compel them to paſſe the Peninſula, or Palliſadoes of Iames Town, & thoſe wittie ſpirits, what would they not affirme in the behalfe of our tranſporters to get victuall from their ſhips, or obtaine their good words in England to their paſſes. Thus the clamors and the ignorance of falſe informers, are ſprung thoſe diſaſters that ſprung in Virginia, and our ingenious Verbaliſts were no leſſe plague to vs in Virginia, then the Locuſts to the Egyptians. For the labour of thirtie of the beſt only, preſerued in Chriſtianitie by their induſtry the idle liuers of neere two hundred of the reſt: who liuing neere ten months of ſuch naturall meanes, as the Countrey naturally of it ſelfe afforded, not withſtanding all this, and the worſt fury of the Sauages, the extremitie of ſickneſſe, mutinies, faction, ignorances, and want of victuall: in all that time I loſt but ſeuen or eight men, yet ſubiected the Sauages to our deſired obedience, and receiued contribution from fiue and thirtie of their Kings, to protect and aſſiſt them againſt any that ſhould aſſault them; in which order they continued true and faithfull, and as ſubiects to his Maieſtie, ſo long after as I did gouerne there, vntill I left the Countrey: ſince, how they haue reuolted, the Countrey loſt, and againe replanted, and the buſineſſes haue ſucceeded from time to time, I refer you to the relations of them returned from Virginia, that haue beene more diligent in ſuch obſeruations, gathered out of the Writings of diuers of that Plantation, by Doctor William Simons.

Miſerie of baſe idleneſſe

CHAP.

CHAP. IIII.

The proceedings of the Engliſh Colony in Virginia, taken faithfully out of the writings of THOMAS STVDLY Cape-Merchant, ANAS TODKILL, Doctor RVSSELL, NATHANIEL POWELL, WILLIAM PHETIPLACE, and RICHARD POT, * RICHARD WIFFIN, THO. ABBAY, THO. HOPE; and ſince enlarged out of the Writings of Capt. IOHN SMITH, principall Agent and Patient in theſe Virginian Occurrents, from the beginning of the Plantation 1606. till Ann. 1610. ſomewhat abridged.

* I haue many written Treatiſes lying by me, written by Capt. Smith and others, ſome there, ſome here after there returne: but becauſe theſe haue alreadie ſeene the light, and containe a full relation of Virginian affaires, I was loth to wearie the Reader with others of this time.

CAptaine Bartholomew Goſnold, the firſt mouer of this Plantation, hauing many yeeres ſolicited many of his friends, but found ſmall aſſiſtants; at laſt preuailed with ſome Gentlemen, as M. Edward-Maria Wingfield, Captaine Iohn Smith, and diuers others, who depended a yeere vpon his proiects, but nothing could be effected, till by their great charge and induſtrie it came to bee apprehended by certaine of the Nobilitie, Gentrie, and Merchants, ſo that his Maieſtie by his Letters Patents, gaue Commiſſion for eſtabliſhing Councels, to direct here, and to gouerne, and to execute there; to effect this, was ſpent another yeere, and by that time three Ships were prouided, one of one hundred Tuns, another of fortie, and a Pinnace of twentie. The tranſportation of the Company was committed to Captaine Chriſtopher Newport, a Mariner well practiſed for the Weſterne parts of America. But their orders for gouernment were put in a Box, not to bee opened, nor the Gouernours knowne vntill they arriued in Virginia.

The firſt mouer of the action.

Orders for gouernment.

On the ninteenth of December, 1606. wee ſet ſaile, but by vnproſperous winds, were kept ſix weekes in the ſight of England; all which time, M. Hunt our Preacher, was ſo weake and ſicke, that few expected his recouerie. Yet although hee were but ten or twelue miles from his habitation (the time we were in the Downes) and notwithſtanding the ſtormy weather, nor the ſcandalous imputation (of ſome few, little better then Atheiſts, of the greateſt ranke amongſt vs) ſuggeſted againſt him, all this could neuer force from him ſo much as a ſeeming deſire to leaue the buſineſſe, but preferred the Seruice of God, in ſo good a Voyage, before any affection to conteſt with his godleſſe foes, whoſe diſaſterous deſignes (could they haue preuailed) had euen then ouerthrowne the buſineſſe, ſo many diſcontents did then ariſe, had he not with the water of patience, and his godly exhortations (but briefly by his true deuouted examples) quenched thoſe flames of enuy and diſſention.

Suſan Conſtant Admirall with 71.

God ſpeed Vice-admirall with 52.

Commanded by Cap. Goſnol.

Diſcouery Rear-admirall, with 21.

Godly zeale of M. Hunt.

Wee watred at the Canaries, we traded with the Sauages at Dominica; three weekes we ſpent in refreſhing our ſelues amongſt theſe Weſt India Iles; in Gwardalupa wee found a Bath ſo hot, as in it we boiled Porck as well as ouer the fire. And at a little Ile, called Monica, wee tooke from the Buſhes with our hands, neere two Hogſheads of Birds in three or foure houres. In Mevis, Monica an vnfrequented Ile full of birds Mona *, and the Virgin Iles, we ſpent ſome time, wherewith a loathſome beaſt like a Crocadil, called a Gwayn, Tortoſes, Pellicans, Parrots, and Fiſhes, wee daily feaſted. Gone from thence in ſearch of Virginia, the Company was not a little diſcomforted, ſeeing the Mariners had three daies paſſed their reckoning and found no Land, ſo that Captaine Ratcliffe (Captaine of the Pinnace) rather deſired to beare vp the Helme to returne for England, then make further ſearch. But God the guider of all good actions, forcing them by an extreame ſtorme to Hull all night, did driue them by his prouidence to their deſired Port, beyond all their expectations, for neuer any of them had ſeene that Coaſt. The firſt Land they made, they called Cape Henry; where anchoring, M. Wingfield, Goſnoll, and Newport, with thirtie others, recreating themſelues on ſhoare, Were aſſaulted by fiue Sauages, who hurt two of the Engliſh very dangerouſly. That night was the Box opened, and the orders read, in which Bartholomew Goſnoll, Edward Wingfield, Chriſtopher Newport, Iohn Smith, Iohn Ratliffe, Iohn Martin, and George Kendall, were named to be the Councell, and to chuſe a Preſident amongſt them for a yeere, who with the Councell ſhould gouerne. Matters of moment were to be examined by a Iury, but determined by the Maior part of the Councell, in which the Preſident had two voices. Vntill the thirteenth of May they ſought a place to plant in, then the Councell was ſworne, M. Wingfield was choſen Preſident, and an Oration made, why Captaine Smith was not admitted to the Councell as the reſt.

Their firſt landing.

Matters of gouernment.

Now falleth euery man to worke, the Councell contriue the Fort, the reſt cut downe Trees to make place to pitch their Tents; ſome prouide Clap-board to relade the Ships, ſome make Gardens, ſome Nets, &c. The Sauages often viſited vs kindly. The Preſidents ouerweening iealouſie would admit no exerciſe at Armes, or Fortification, but the Boughs of Trees caſt together in the forme of a halfe Moone, by the extraordinary paine and diligence of Captaine Kendall, Newport, with Smith, and twentie others, were ſent to diſcouer the head of the Riuer: by diuers ſmall habi-

The diſcouerie of the Fals and Powhatan.

Digitized by Google

tations they paſſed, in ſixe dayes they arriued at a Towne called Powhatan, conſiſting of ſome twelue houſes pleaſantly ſeated on a Hill; before it three fertill Iles, about it many of their Cornfields, the place is very pleaſant, and ſtrong by nature, of this place the Prince is called Powhatan, and his people Powhatans, to this place the Riuer is Nauigable, but higher within a mile, by reaſon of the Rockes and Iles, there is not paſſage for a ſmall Boat, this they call the Falls, the people in all parts kindly intreated them, till being returned within twentie miles of Iames Towne, they gaue iuſt cauſe of iealouſie, but had God not bleſſed the diſcouerers otherwiſe then thoſe at the Fort, there had then beene an end of that Plantation; for at the Fort, where they arriued the next day, they found ſeuenteene men hurt, and a boy ſlaine by the Sauages, and had it not chanced a croſſe Bar ſhot from the Ships ſtrooke downe a Bough from a Tree amongſt them, that cauſed them to retire, our men had all beene ſlaine, being ſecurely all at worke, and their Armes in Dry-fats. Heereupon the Preſident was contented the Fort ſhould be palliſadoed, the Ordnance mounted, his men armed and exerciſed, for many were the aſſaults, and Ambuſcadoes of the Sauages, and our men by their diſorderly ſtragling were often hurt, when the Sauages by the nimbleneſſe of their heeles well eſcaped. What toile we had, with ſo ſmall a power to guard our workemen adayes, watch all night, reſiſt our enemies, and effect our buſineſſe, to relade the Ships, cut downe Trees, and prepare the ground to plant our Corne, &c. I refer to the Readers conſideration. Six weekes being ſpent in this manner; Captaine Newport (who was hired onely for our tranſportation) was to returne with the Ships.

The Fort aſſaulted by the Sauages. I haue alſo M. Wingfields notes of theſe affaires: but would not trouble the Reader here with things more then troubleſome there.

Now Captaine Smith (who all this time from their departure from the Canaries) was reſtrained as a priſoner vpon the ſcandalous ſuggeſtions of ſome of the chiefe (enuying his repute) who fained he intended to vſurpe the gouernment, murder the Councell, and make himſelfe King, that his confederates were diſperſed in all the three Ships, and that diuers of his confederates that reuealed it, would affirme it; for this he was committed, thirteene weekes hee remained thus ſuſpected, and by that time the Ships ſhould returne, they pretended, out of their commiſſerations, to referre him to the Councell in England to receiue a check, rather then by particulating his deſignes make him ſo odious to the world, as to touch his life, or vtterly ouerthrow his reputation; but he much ſcorned their charitie, and publikely defied the vttermoſt of their cruelties, hee wiſely preuented their policies, though hee could not ſuppreſſe their enuies, yet ſo well hee demeaned himſelfe in this buſineſſe, as all the Company did ſee his innocencie, and his aduerſaries malice, and thoſe which had beene ſubborned to accuſe him, accuſed his accuſers of ſubornation; many vntruths were alledged againſt him; but being ſo apparantly diſproued, begat a generall hatred in the hearts of the Company againſt ſuch vniuſt Commanders; many were the miſchiefes that daily ſprung from their ignorant (yet ambitious) ſpirits; but the good doctrine and exhortation of our Preacher Maſter Hunt reconciled them, and cauſed Captaine Smith to be admitted of the Councell: the next day all receiued the Communion, the day following the Sauages voluntarily deſired peace; and Captaine Newport returned for England with newes; leauing in Virginia one hundred, the fifteenth of Iune 1607.

The names of them that were the firſt planters, were theſe following. Maſter Edward-Maria Wingfield, Captaine Bartholomew Goſnoll, Capt. Iohn Smith, Capt. Iohn Ratcliffe, Cap. Iohn Martin, Capt. George Kendall, Councellors.

M. George Piercy, M. Robert Hunt Preacher, Anthony Goſnoll, Capt. Gabrill Archer, Rob. Ford, William Bruſter, Dru Pickhouſe, Iohn Brookes, Thomas Sands, Iohn Robinſon, Vſtis Clouell, Kellam Throgmorton, Nathaniell Powell, Robert Behethland, Ieremy Alicock, Thomas Studley, Richard Crofts, Nicholas Houlgraue, Thomas Webbe, Iohn Waler, William Tankard, Francis Snarsbrough, Edward Brookes, Richard Dixon, Iohn Martin, George Martin, Anthony Goſnold, Thomas Wotton, Seirg. Thomas Gore, Francis Midwinter, Gentlemen.

William Laxon, Edward Piſing, Tho. Emry, Rob. Small, Carpenters. Anas Todkill, Iohn Capper.

Iames Read, Blackſmith. Ionas Profit, Sailer. Tho. Cowper, Barber. Iohn Herd, Brick-layer. William Garret, Brick layer. Edward Brinto, Maſon. William Loue, Taylor. Nic. Skot, Drum.

Iohn Laydon, William Caſſen, George Caſſen, Tho. Caſſen, William Rods, William White, Ould Edward, Henry Tauin, George Golding, Iohn Dods, Will. Iohnſon, Will. Finger, Labourers. Will. Wilkinſon. Surgeon.

Samuell Collier, Nat. Pecock, Iames Brumfield, Rich. Mutton, with diuers others to the number of one hundred and fiue.

Capt. Newports returne for England.

What happened till the firſt ſupply. Chap. 2. The occaſion of ſickneſſe. The Sailers abuſes.

BEing thus left to our fortunes, it fortuned that within ten dayes, ſcarce ten amongſt vs could either goe, or well ſtand, ſuch extreame weakneſſe and ſickneſſe oppreſſed vs. And thereat none need maruell, if they conſider the cauſe and reaſon, which was this; whileſt the ſhips ſtayed, our allowance was ſomewhat bettered, by a daily proportion of bisket which the Saylers would pilfer to ſell, giue or exchange with vs, for money, ſaxefras, furres, or loue. But when they departed, there remained neither Tauerne, Beere-houſe, nor place of reliefe but the common kettell. Had we beene as free from all ſinnes as gluttony, and drunkenneſſe, we might haue beene canonized for Saints: But our Preſident would neuer haue beene admitted, for ingroſſing to his priuate, Otemeale, Sack, Oile, Aquavitæ, Beefe, Egges, or what not, but the kettel; that indeed he allowed allowed equally to be distributed, and that was halfe a pinte of Wheat, and as much Barly boiled with water for a man a day, and this hauing fryed some six and twentie weekes in the ships hold, contained as many wormes as graines; so that wee might truely call it rather so much Bran then Corne, our drinke was water, our lodgings castles in aire, with this lodging and diet, our extreame toile in bearing and planting Pallisadoes, so strained and bruised vs, and our continuall labour in the extreamitie of heat had so weakned vs, as were cause sufficient to haue made vs as miserable in our natiue Countrey, or any other place in the world. From May, to September, those that escaped liued vpon Sturgion, and Sea-Crabs; fiftie in this time we buried: The rest seeing the Presidents proiects to escape these miseries in our Pinnace by flight (who all this time had neither felt want nor sickneſſe) so moued our dead spirits, as wee deposed him; and established Ratcliffe in his place, (Gosnoll being dead) Kendall deposed, Smith newly recouered, Martin and Ratliffe was by his care preserued and relieued, but now was all our prouision spent, the Sturgeon gone, all helpes abandoned, each houre expecting the fury of the Sauages; when God, the Patron of all good indeauours in that desperat extreamitie, so changed the hearts of the Sauages, that they brought such plentie of their fruits and prouision, as no man wanted.

Digitized by Google

A bad President.

Plentie vnexpected.

The new President, and Martin, being little beloued; of weake iudgement in dangers; and lesse industry in peace, committed the managing of all things abroad to Captaine Smith: who by his owne example, good words, and faire promises, set some to mow, others to binde thatch, some to build houses, others to thatch them, himselfe alwaies bearing the greatest taske for his owne share, so that in short time he prouided most of them lodgings, neglecting any for himselfe. This done, seeing the Sauages superfluitie begin to decrease (with some of his workmen) hee shipped himselfe in the shallop to search the Countrey for trade, the want of the language, knowledge to mannage his Boat without Sailers, the wants of sufficient power (knowing the multitude of the Sauages) apparell for his men, and other necessaries, were infinite impediments, yet no discouragement. Being but sixe or seuen in company, hee went downe the Riuer to Kecoughtan, where at first they scorned him, as a starued man; and would in derision offer him a handfull of Corne, or a piece of Bread for their Swords and Muskets, and such like proportions also for their apparell. But seeing by trade there was nothing to be had, necessitie forced him to exceed his Commission, and to vse his Muskets to another kind of trading, which made these deriders flye to the Woods. Hee hasted to their houses, and found store of Corne, from which the hungry Souldiers were hardly detained, in hastier spoile to haue betrayed themselues to the returning Sauages assault. This sixtie or seuenty did presently, with hideous noise to the eare, and manifold colours painted to the eye, singing and dancing with their Okee (which was an Idol made with skins, stuffed with mosse, all painted and hanged with Chaines and Copper, borne before them) and being well armed with Clubs, Targets, Bowes and Arrowes, they charged the English, who so kindly receiued them with their Muskets loaden with Pistoll shot, that downe fell their God, and diuers of his worshippers lay sprauling on the ground, the rest flying to the Woods. Soone after they sent one of their Quiyoughcasucks to offer peace, and redeeme their Okee. Smith agreed that if onely sixe would come vnarmed and load his Boat with Corne, hee would be their friend, restore their Okee, and giue them also Beads, Copper, Hatchets; which on both sides was performed to mutuall content, and they brought him (singing and dansing) Venison, Turkeys, wild Fowle, Bread, &c. In his returne hee discouered and kindly traded with the Weraskoyks, in the meane time those at the Fort so glutted the Sauages with their commodities as they became not regarded.

C. Smith.

The building of Iames towne.

The beginning of trade abroad.

Smith perceiuing (notwithstanding their late misery) not any regarded but from hand to mouth (the company being well recouered) caused the Pinnace to bee prouided with things fitting to get prouision for the yeere following; but in the interim he made three or foure iournyes and discouered the people of Chickahamine, yet what hee carefully prouided the rest careleſly spent. Wingfield and Kendall liuing in disgrace, seeing all things at randome in the absence of Smith. The Companies dislike of their Presidents weakneſſe, and their small loue to Martins neuer-mending sickneſſe, strengthened themselues with the Sailers, and other confederates to regaine their former credit and authoritie, or at least such meanes aboard the Pinnace (being fitted to saile as Smith had appointed for trade) to alter her course and to goe for England. Smith vnexpectedly returning had the plot discouered vnto him, much trouble hee had to preuent it, till with store of Fauken and Musket shot hee forced them to stay or sinke in the Riuer, which action cost the life of Captaine Kendall. The President and Captaine Archer not long after intended also to haue abandoned the Countrey, which proiect also was curbed and suppressed by Smith. And now the Winter approaching, the Riuers became so couered with Swans, Geese, Ducks, and Cranes, that wee daily feasted with good Bread, Virginia Peale, Pumpions, and Putchamins, Fish, Fowle, and diuers sorts of wild Beasts as fat as wee could eate them: so that none of our Tuftaffatie humorists desired to goe for England. But our Comædies neuer endured long without a Tragedie; some idle exceptions being muttered against Captaine Smith, for not discouering the head of Chickahamine riuer, & taxed by the Councel, to be too slow in so worthy an attempt. The next voyage hee proceeded so far, that with much labour by cutting off Trees in sunder hee made his passage, but when his Barge could passe no farther, hee left her in a broad Bay out of danger of shot, commanding none should goe ashoare till his returne t himselfe

The discouery of Chickahamine.

Another proiect to abandon the Countrey.

Winter Fowles

himselfe with two English and two Sauages went vp higher in a Canowe, but hee was not long absent, but his men went ashoare, whose want of gouernment, gaue both occasion and opportunity to the Sauages to surprize one George Casson, and much failed not to haue cut off the Boate and all the rest.

Cap. Smith assalted and taken.

The Sauages hauing drawne from George Casson, whither Captaine Smith was gone, followed him with three hundred Bowmen, conducted by Opechankanough the King of Pamaunke; who searching the diuisions of the Riuer, found Robinson and Emery by the fire side, whom they shot full of Arrowes and slew. Smith being assaulted, slew three of them, and so galled the rest that they would not come neere: he vsed the Sauage his guide as a shield, hauing bound him to his arme with his garters; and thinking to haue recouered his Boate, hauing more eye to them in his march then to his way, he slipped vp to the middle in an ozie creeke, and his Sauage with him; yet durst they not come to him till he threw away his armes, being neere dead with cold. Then according to composition they drew him forth, and led him to the fire, where his men were slaine. Diligently they chafed his benummed limbes; and he gaue Opechankanough a round Iuory double compassed Diall. They much marueiled at the playing of the fine which they could see and not touch, by reason of the Glasse couer; but when he had read a Cosmographicall lecture to them of the Skies, Earth, Day, and night, with the varietie of Nations, and such like, they were all amazed: notwithstanding which sudden wonder, they tide him to a tree within an houre after, as many as could stand about him prepard their fatall Arrowes to his death, which were all laid downe when Opechankanough held vp the said Diall: and they led him in a kinde of triumph to Oropaxe. 19

Diall admired of Sauages.

Sauage triumph, disciplin and gallantry.

Their order was this: drawing themselues all in file, the King in the midst had all their Peeces and Swords borne before him: Captaine Smith was led after him by three great lubbers, holding him fast; on each side went six in file, with their Arrowes nocked. When they arriued at the Towne (which was of thirty or forty hunting houses made of Mats, remoued at pleasure, as Tents with vs) the women and children came to stare on him; the Souldiers in file had their Sargiants to keepe them in order. A good while they thus continued, and then cast themselues into a ring, dancing in seuerall postures, and singing hellish notes, strangely painted, each hauing his Quiuer of Arrowes, and at his backe a Clubbe; on his arme a Foxes or Otters Skinne for his vambrace, their heads and shoulders painted red with Oyle and Pecones mingled together, his Bowe in his hand, and the Skinne of a Bird, with her wings abroad, dried, tied on his head, with a peece of Copper, a white Shell, a long Fether, and a small Rattle growing at the taile of their Snakes, or some such toy fastened thereto. All this while Smith stood with the King guarded in the midst, till three dances being done, they departed. Then did they conduct Smith to a long house, where thirty or forty men guarded him, and soone after was brought more Bread and Venison then would haue serued twenty: what he left they put in Baskets, and tied ouer his head, which about midnight they againe set before him, none of them eating ought with him, till hauing brought as much more the next morning, they did eate the old, and reserued the new in like manner. Hee thought they intended to fat and eate him. 29 39

Their feasting cheere.

One Maocassater, in requitall of Beads which he had giuen him, brought him his Gowne to defend him from the cold. Another was possessed with a contrary humour, and would haue slaine him for the death of his sonne, had not the guard preuented; to him, yet breathing his last, they brought him to recouer him. Smith told them that at Iames Towne he had a water that would doe it, if they would let him fetch it. But they prepared to assault Iames Towne, promising him liberty, and women, if he would assist them. In part of a Table Booke he writ his minde to those which were at the Fort; that they should send such things mentioned. They went in bitter weather for Frost and Snow, and seeing men sally out, as he had before told them, they fled; but comming againe in the night to the place which he had appointed, for an answer, they found things ready, and speedily returned, as if either he had diuined, or the paper had spoken. 49

Sauage simplicity.

After this, they led him to the Youghtanunds, the Matapanients, the Payankatiks, the Nantaughtacunds, the Onanmanients, vpon the Riuers of Rapahanocke, and Patanomecke, and backe againe by diuers other Nations, to the Kings habitation at Pamaunk, where they entertained him with strange coniurations. Earely in a morning a great fire was made in a long house, a Mat spred on each side; on one of which he was set, the guard went out, and in came a great grim fellow skipping, all painted with cole mingled with Oyle, many Snakes and Weesels skins stuffed with Masse, their tailes tied together, and meeting on the crowne of his head; round about the tassell was a coronet of Fethers; the skins hung round about his head, shoulders, backe and face: With a hellish voyce, strange gestures and passions, with a Rattle in his hand, hee began his inuocation, and enuironed the fire with a circle of Meale. After this, three such other diuels rushed in with like trickes, painted halfe blacke, halfe red, all their eyes painted white, with some red strokes along their cheekes. These hauing danced a prettie while, three more came in as vgly as the rest, with red eyes and white strokes ouer their blacke faces. At last they all sat downe right against him, the chiefe Priest in the midst, and three on each hand. All then with their Rattles began a song; which ended, the chiefe Priest laid downe fiue Wheate cornes: and straining his armes and hand with such violence, that he swet, and his veines swelled: hee began a short Oration; at the conclusion whereof they gaue a short groane, and then laid downe three graines more. Now 50 60

Rites of Coniuration.

they

they began their Song againe, and then another Oration, euer laying downe so many cornes as before, till they had twice encircled the fire. That done, they take a bunch of little sticks, prepared for that purpose, and at the end of euery Song and Oration laid downe a sticke betwixt the diuisions of the Corne. Till night, neither he nor they did eate or drinke, and then they feasted merrily with their best prouisions. Three dayes they vsed this Ceremonie, thereby to know (as they said) whether hee intended them well or no. The circle of meale signified their Countrey, the two circles of Corne the Sea-bounds; and the sticks his Countrey. They imagined the World to be flat and round like a trencher, and themselues in the midst. After this, they brought him a bagge of Powder, which they carefully preserued till the next spring, to plant as they did their Corne, because they would be acquainted with the nature of that seede. Sauage Geography. Gunpowder sowne.

Opitchapam the Kings brother, inuited him to his house, where hee welcommed him with as many Platters of Bread, Fowle and wilde Beasts, as did encompasse him: but not any would eate with him, reseruing the remainders in Baskets. At his returne to Opechankanoughs, all the Kings women and their children flocked about him, as for their customary due, to be merry with such fragments. At last they brought him to Werowocomoco to Pohatan, where aboue two hundred of his Courtiers stood wondring on him, till Pohatan and his traine had put themselues in their greatest branery. Before a fire hee sat on a seate like a bedsted, couered with a great robe made of Rarowcun Skinnes, all the tailes hanging by: on each hand did sit a yong wench of sixteene or eighteene yeeres of age; along on each side the house two rowes of men, and behinde them as many women, with all their heads and shoulders painted red; many of their heads bedecked with the white downe of Birds, euery one adorned with some thing; a great chaine also of white Beades about their neckes. At his entrance before the King all the people gaue a great shout. The Queene of Appanatucke was appointed to bring water to wash his hands, another brought him a bunch of Feathers instead of a Towell to drie them. Hauing feasted him in their best manner, they held a consultation, in conclusion whereof, two great stones were brought before Pohatan, and as many as could lay hold on him dragged him to them, and thereon laid his head, being ready with their clubbes to beate out his braines. Pocahuntas the Kings deerest Daughter, when no intreatie would preuaile, got his head into her armes, and laid her owne vpon his to saue him from death: whereupon the Emperour was contented hee should liue to make him Hatchets, and Beads, Bels, and Copper for her. For they thought him like themselues, of all occupations; the King himselfe making his owne Robes, Shooes, Bowes, Arrowes, Pots, Planting also, Hunting, and doing Offices, no lesse then the rest. He is brought to Pohatan. Wilde royalty. Pocahuntas saueth his life. All men of all occupations.

Two dayes after, Pohatan hauing disguised himselfe in the dreadfullest manner, caused Captaine Smith to be brought forth to a great house in the woods, and there vpon a Mat by the fire to bee left alone. Not long after from behinde a Mat which diuided the house, was made the dolefullest noise that euer hee had heard. After this Pohatan with twenty more as blacke as himselfe came vnto him, and told him that they were now friends, and presently hee should goe to Iames Towne to send him two great Gunnes and a Grindstone, for which hee would giue him the Countrey of Capahowosick, and for euer esteeme him as his Sonne Nantaquaus. Hee sent him thither with twelue guides. When they came to the Fort, Smith vsed the Sauages kindely, and shewed Rawhunt, Pohatans trusty seruant two Demiculuerins and a Millstone to carry to Pohatan; somewhat too heauie for their carriage. But when they saw him discharge them loden with stones, on the boughes of a great tree hanging full of icicles, the Ice and boughes comming downe with such furie, the Sauages were halfe dead with feare; and at last returning contented with toies and presents for Pohatan, his women and children. This his returning safe to the Port, once more staied the Pinnace her flight for England, which till his returne, could not set saile, so extreame was the weather, and so great the Frost. The third ptie ict to abandon the Fort.

His relation of the plenty he had seene, especially at Werowocomoco, where inhabited Powhatan (that till that time was vnknowne) so reuiued againe their dead spirits, as all mens feare was abandoned, Powhatan hauing sent with this Captaine diuers of his men loaded with prouision, hee had conditioned, and so appointed his trustie Messengers to bring but two or three of our great Ordnances; but the Messengers being satisfied with the sight of one of them discharged, ran away amazed with feare, till meanes were vsed with gifts to assure them our loues.

ALL this time our cares were not so much to abandon the Countrie, but the Treasurer and Counsell in England, were as diligent and careful to supply vs. Two tall Shippes they sent vs, with neere one hundred men, well furnished with all things could be imagined necessary, both for them and vs. The one commanded by Captaine Newport: the other by Captaine Nelson, an honest man and an expert Mariner, but such was the leewardnesse of his Ship (that though he were within sight of Cape Henry) by stormy contrary windes, was forced so farre to Sea, as the West Indies was the next land for the repaire of his Masts, and reliefe of wood and water. But Captaine Newport got in, and arriued at Iames Towne, not long after the redemption of Captaine Smith, to whom the Sauages euery other day brought such plenty of Bread, Fish, Turkies, Squirrels, Deere, and other wilde Beasts, part they gaue him as presents from the King; the rest, he as their market Clarke set the price how they should sell. The arriuall of the first supply with their proceedings and returne. Chap. 3. The Phenix from Cape Henry forced to the West Indies.

So

How C. Smith got his liberty.

So he had inchanted thoſe poore ſoules (being their Priſoner) in demonſtrating vnto them the roundneſſe of the World, the courſe of the Moone and Starres, the cauſe of the day and night, the largeneſſe of the Seas, the qualities of our ſhips, ſhot and powder: The diuiſion of the World, with the diuerſitie of people, their complexions, cuſtomes and conditions. All which he fained to be vnder the command of Captaine Newport, whom he termed to them his Father; of whoſe arriuall, it chanced he ſo directly prophecied, as they eſteemed him an Oracle; by theſe fictions he not only ſaued his owne life, and obtained his liberty; but had them at that command, he might command them what he liſted. That God that created all theſe things; they knew he adored for his God, whom they would alſo tearme in their Diſcourſes, the God of Captaine Smith.

Their opinion of our God.

10

Folly in vnderualuing our Commodities to the Sauages by gifts or ſmall prizes. Another folly in Mariners trade both which ſupplanted the good of the plantation.

The Preſident and Councell ſo much enuied his eſtimation amongſt the Sauages (though wee all in generall equally participated with him of the good thereof) that they wrought it into their vnderſtandings, by their great bountie in giuing foure times more for their Commodities then he appointed, that their greatneſſe and authoritie, as much exceeded his, as their bountie and liberalitie; Now the arriuall of his firſt ſupply, ſo ouer-ioyed vs, that wee could not deuiſe too much to pleaſe the Mariners. Wee gaue them libertie to trucke or trade at their pleaſures. But in a ſhort time, it followed, that that could not be had for a pound of Copper, which before was ſold for an ounce, Thus Ambition and Sufferance, cut the throat of our Trade, but confirmed their opinion of Newports greatneſſe wherewith Smith had poſſeſſed Powhatan) eſpecially by the great Preſents Newport often ſent him, before he could prepare the Pinnace to goe and viſit him; ſo that this Sauage alſo deſired to ſee him. A great brute there was to ſet him forward: when hee went he was accompanied, with Captaine Smith, and Maſter Scrimener a very wiſe vnderſtanding Gentleman newly arriued, and admitted of the Councell, and thirtie or fortie choſen men for that guard. Arriuing at Werowocomo, Newports conceit of this great Sauage bred many doubts and ſuſpicions of Treacheries; which Smith, to make appeare was needleſſe, with twentie men well appointed, vndertooke to encounter (with that number) the worſt that could happen.

20

Smith reuiſiting Powhatan.

Powhatans firſt entertainment of our men. I haue by me a large Iournall of this iournie: but content my ſelfe with this briefer to auoid prolixity

These being kindly receiued aſhore, with two or three hundred Sauages were conducted to their Towne; Powhatan ſtrained himſelfe to the vttermoſt of his greatneſſe to entertaine vs, with great ſhouts of Ioy, Orations of proteſtations, and the moſt plentie of victuall hee could prouide to feaſt vs. Sitting vpon his Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather imbroydered (after their rude manner) with Pearle and white Beads, his Attire a faire Robe of skinnes as large as an Irish Mantle, at his head and feet a handſome young woman; on each ſide his houſe ſate twentie of his Concubines, their heads and ſhoulders painted red, with a great chaine of white Beads about their neckes, before thoſe ſate his chiefeſt men in like order in his Arbor-like houſe. With many pretie Diſcourſes to renue their old acquaintance; the great King and our Captaine ſpent the time till the ebbe left our Barge aground, then renuing their Feaſts and mirth, we quartred that night with Powhatan: the next day Newport came aſhore, and receiued as much content as thoſe people could giue him, a Boy named Tho. Sauage was then giuen vnto Powhatan, whom Newport called his Sonne, for whom Powhatan gaue him Namontacke his truſtie Seruant, and one of a ſhrewd ſubtill capacitie. Three or foure dayes were ſpent in feaſting, dancing and trading, wherein Powhatan carried himſelfe ſo proudly, yet diſcreetly (in his Sauage manner) as made vs all admire his naturall gifts conſidering his education, as ſcorning to trade as his ſubiects did; hee beſpake Newport in this manner. Captaine Newport it is not agreeable with my greatneſſe in this pedling manner to trade for trifles, and I eſteeme you a great Weroans, Therefore lay mee downe all your Commodities together, what I like, I will take, and in recompence giue you that I thinke fitting their value. Captaine Smith being our Interpreter, regarding Newport as his Father, knowing beſt the diſpoſition of Powhatan told vs his intent was but to cheat vs; yet Captaine Newport thinking to out-braue this Sauage in oſtentation of greatneſſe, and ſo to bewitch him with his bountie, as to haue what he liſted; but ſo it chanced; Powhatan hauing his deſire, valued his Corne at ſuch a rate, as I thinke it better cheape in Spaine, for we had not foure buſhels for that we expected twentie Hogſheads. This bred ſome vnkindneſſe betweene our two Captaines, Newport ſeeking to pleaſe the humour of the vnſatiable Sauage; Smith to cauſe the Sauage to pleaſe him, but ſmothering his diſtaſte (to auoid the Sauages ſuſpition) glanced in the eyes of Powhatan many Trifles who fixed his humour vpon a few blue Beads; A long time he importunately deſired them, but Smith ſeemed ſo much the more to affect them, ſo that ere we departed, for a pound or two of blue Beads he brought ouer my King for two or three hundred buſhels of Corne, yet parted good friends. The like entertainment we found of Opechantynough King of Pamaunke whom alſo he in like manner fitted, (at the like rates) with blue Beads: and ſo wee returned to the Fort. Where this new ſupply being lodged with the reſt, accidentally fired the quarters, and ſo the Towne, which being but thatched with Reeds, the fire was ſo fierce as it burnt their Pallizadoes (though ten or twelue yards diſtant) with their Armes, Bedding, Apparell, and much priuate prouiſion. Good Maſter Hunt our Preacher loſt all his Librarie, and all that hee had (but the clothes on his backe) yet none euer ſaw him repine at his loſſe, Vpon any alarme he would be as readie for defence as any, and till he could ſpeake; he neuer ceaſſed to his vtmoſt to animate vs conſtantly to perſiſt: whoſe ſoule queſtion-

30

40

Powhatans ſpeech.

Difference of opinions.

50

Iames Towne burnt.

M. Hunts loſſe.

60

ſtionleſſe is with God. This happened in the Winter, in that extreme Froſt 1607. Now though we had victuall ſufficient, I meane, only of Oate-meale, Meale, and Corne, yet the ſhip ſtaying there fourteene weekes, when ſhe might as well haue beene gone in fourteene dayes, ſpent the Beefe, Porke, Oyle, Aquauitæ, Fiſh, Butter, and Cheeſe, Beere and ſuch like; as was prouided to be landed vs. When they departed, what their diſcretion could ſpare vs, to make a Feaſt or two with Bisket, Porke, Beefe, Fiſh, and Oyle, to relliſh our mouthes, of each ſomewhat they left vs, yet I muſt confeſſe, thoſe that had either Money, ſpare Clothes, credit to giue Bils of payment, Gold Rings, Furres, or any ſuch Commodities were euer welcome to this remouing Tauerne; ſuch was our patience to obey ſuch vile Commanders, and buy our owne prouiſion at fifteene times the value, ſuffering them to feaſt (we bearing the charge) yet muſt not repine, but faſt; and then leakage, ſhip-rats, and other caſualties occaſioned the loſt, but the veſſell and remnants (for totals) we were glad to receiue with all our hearts to make vp the account, highly commending their Prouidence for preſeruing that. For all this plentie our ordinarie was but meale and water, ſo that this great charge little relieued our wants, whereby with the extremitie of the bitter cold Aire more then halfe of vs died, and tooke our deaths, in that piercing Winter. I cannot deny, but both Scriuener and Smith did their beſt to amend what was amiſſe, but with the Preſident went the maior part; that their hornes were too ſhort. But the worſt miſchiefe was, our gilded Refiners with their golden promiſes, made all men their ſlaues in hope of recompence; there was no talke, no hope, no worke, but digge Gold, waſh Gold, refine Gold, load Gold, ſuch a brute of Gold, as one mad fellow deſired to bee buried in the Sands, leaſt they ſhould by their Art make Gold of his bones: Little need there was and leſſe reaſon, the ſhippe ſhould ſtay, their wages runne on, our victuall conſume fourteene weekes, that the Mariners might ſay, they built ſuch a golden Church, that we can ſay, the raine waſhed neere to nothing in fourteene dayes. Captaine Smith would not applaud all thoſe Golden inuentions, neuer any thing did more torment him, then to ſee all neceſſary buſineſſe neglected, to fraught ſuch a drunken ſhip with ſo much gilded * dirt; till then we neuer accounted Captaine Newport a Refiner; who being fit to ſet ſaile for England, and we not hauing any vſe of Parliaments, Playes, Petitions, Admirals, Recorders, Interpreters, Chronologers, Courts of Plea, nor Iuſtices of Peace, ſent Maſter Wingfield and Captaine Archer with him for England, to ſeeke ſome place of better imployment.

A ſhip idly loitring fourteen weekes, and ſhamefully abuſing the company here and Colonie there for priuate lucre.

The effect of meere Verbaliſts.

A needleſſe charge.

* Certaine ſhining yellow ſand which was ſent ouer (I ſaw it) with great promiſes of gold, like the promiſers yeelding ſandy performance.

THe authority now conſiſting in refining Captaine Martin, and the ſtill ſickly Preſident, the ſale of the ſtores Commodities maintayned their eſtates as inheritable Reuenues. The Spring approching, and the ſhip departed, Maſter Scriuener and Captaine Smith diuided betwixt them, the rebuilding our Towne, the repayring our Palliſadoes, the cutting downe Trees, preparing our fields, planting our Corne, and to rebuild our Church, and recouer our Storehouſe; all men thus buſie at their ſeuerall labours, Maſter Nelſon arriued with his loſt Phœnix, (loſt I ſay, for that all men deemed him loſt) landing ſafely his men, ſo well hee had mannaged his ill hap, cauſing the Indian Iles to feed his company that his victuall (to that was left vs before) was ſufficient for halfe a yeere, he had nothing but he freely imparted it; which honeſt dealing (in a Mariner) cauſed vs admire him, wee would not haue wiſhed ſo much as he did for vs. Now to relade this ſhip with ſome good tydings. The Preſident (yet not ſtanding with his dignity to leaue the Fort) gaue order to Captaine Smith and Maſter Scriuener to diſcouer and ſearch the Commodities of Monacans Countrey beyond the Falls, ſixty able men were allotted, the which within ſixe dayes exerciſe, Smith had ſo well trained to their Armes and Orders, that they little feared with whom they ſhould encounter. Yet ſo vnſeaſonable was the time, and ſo oppoſite was Captaine Martin to euery thing, but only to fraught his ſhip alſo with his phantaſticall Gold, as Cap. Smith rather deſired to relade her with Cedar, which was a preſent diſpatch; then either with dirt, or the reports of an vncertaine Diſcouerie. Whilſt their concluſion was reſoluing, this happened.

The repairing of Iames towne Nelſons honeſty & fidelitie.

Sixtie appointed to diſcouer Monacan.

Powhatan to expreſſe his loue to Newport, when he departed, preſented him with twenty Turkeyes, conditionally to returne him twenty Swords, which immediatly were ſent him; Now after his departure he preſented Captaine Smith with the like luggage, but not finding his humour obeyed in ſending him Weapons, he cauſed his people with twentie deuices to obtaine them; at laſt by Ambuſcadoes at our very Ports they would take them perforce, ſurprize vs at worke, or any way, which was ſo long permitted that they became ſo inſolent, there was no Rule, the command from England was ſo ſtraight not to offend them, as our authority Bearers (keeping their houſes) would rather be any thing then Peace-breakers: this vncharitable charity preuailed, till well it chanced that they medled with Captaine Smith, who without farther deliberation gaue them ſuch an incounter, as ſome hee ſo hunted vp and downe the Ile, ſome hee ſo terrified with whipping, beating and impriſonment, as for reuenge they ſurprized two of his foraging diſorderly Souldiers, and hauing aſſembled their forces, boldly threatned at our Ports to force Smith to re-deliuer ſeuen Sauages, which for their villanies he detained Priſoners. But to try their furies, in leſſe then halfe an houre he ſo hampered their inſolencies, that they brought the two priſoners

An ill example to ſell ſwords to Sauages.

Powhatans free cheere.

The Gouernours weakneſſe.

Smiths attempt to ſuppreſſe the Sauages inſolencies.

Digitized by Google

soners desiring peace without any farther composition for their Prisoners, who being threatned and examined their intents and plotters of their villanies, confessed they were directed only by Powhatan, to obtaine him our owne weapons to cut our owne throats, with the manner how, where, and when, which we plainly found most true and apparant. Yet hee sent his Messengers and his deerest Daughter Pocahuntas to excuse him, of the iniuries done by his Subiects, desiring their liberties, with the assurance of his loue. After Smith had giuen the Prisoners what correction he thought fit, vsed them well a day or two after, he then deliuered them to Pocahuntas, for whose sake only hee fained to saue their liues and grant them liberty. The patient counsell, that nothing would moove to warre with the Sauages, would gladly haue wrangled with Captaine Smith for his cruelty, yet none was slaine to any mans knowledge, but it brought them in such feare and obedience, as his very name would sufficiently affright them. The fraught of this ship being concluded to be Cedar, by the diligence of the Master, and Captaine Smith, shee was quickly reladed; Master Scrivener was neither idle nor slow to follow all things at the Fort, the ship falling to the Cedar Ile, Captaine Martin hauing made shift to bee sicke neere a yeere, and now, neither Pepper, Sugar, Cloues, Mace, nor Nutmegs, Ginger, nor Sweet meats in the Countrey (to enioy the credit of his supposed Art) at his earnest request, was most willingly admitted to returne for England, yet hauing beene there but a yeere, and not past halfe a yeere since the ague left him (that he might say somewhat he had seene) he went twice by water to Passahegh a place neere seuen miles from Iames Towne, but left the dew should distemper him, was euer forced to returne before night. Thus much I thought fit to expresse, hee expresly commanding me to record his Iournies, I being his man, and he sometimes my Master. One hundred and twentie were landed in the last supply. Thomas Studly. Anas Todkill.

Powhatans exercises.

A ship fraught with Cedar.

The aduentures of Cap. Martin.

The accidents which hapned in the discouerie of the Bay. Chap. 5.

I haue a Diarie of this and the following Discouerie of the Bay, containing things more particularly & largely but I was loth to be tedious, & find the substance in this.

THe prodigalitie of the Presidents state went so deepe in the store that Smith and Scrivener had a while tyed both Martin and him to the Rules of Proportion, but now Smith being to depart, the Presidents authority so ouerswayed Master Scriveners discretion as our store, our time, our strength and labours were idlely consumed to fulfill his phantasies. The second of Iune 1608. Smith left the Fort to performe his Discouery; with this company. Walter Russell Doctor of Physicke. Ralph Morton. Thomas Momford. William Cantrill. Richard Fotherstone. Iames Bourne. Michael Sicklemore. Anas Todkill. Robert Small. Iames Watkins. Iohn Powell. Iames Read blacke Smith. Richard Keale Fishmonger. Ionas Profit fisher.

Cape Charles.

Acawmacke.

A strange mortalitie of Sauages.

These being in an open Barge of two tunnes burthen leauing the Phœnix at Cape Henrie, we crossed the Bay to the Easterne shoare, and fell with the Iles called Smiths Iles: the first people we saw there were two grimme and stout Sauages vpon Cape Charles, with long Poles like lauelings, headed with bone, they boldly demanded what we were, and what we would, but after many circumstances, they in time seemed very kind, and directed vs to Acawmacke, the habitation of the Weroans where we were kindly intreated; this King was the comeliest proper ciuill Sauage we incountred: his Country is a pleasant fertile clay soyle. He told vs of a strange accident lately happened him, and it was: Two dead children by the extreme passions of their Parents, or some dreaming Visions, Phantasie, or affection mooued them againe to reuisit their dead carkasses, whose benummed bodies reflected to the eyes of the beholders such pleasant delightfull countenances, as though they had regained their vitall spirts. This is a Miracle drew many to behold them, all which, (being a great part of his people) not long after died, and not any one escaped. They spake the Language of Powhatan, wherein they made such descriptions of the Bay, Iles, and Riuers that often did vs exceeding pleasure. Passing alongst the Coast, searching euery Inlet, and Bay fit for Harbours and Habitations, seeing many Iles in the midst of the Bay, we bore vp for them, but ere we could attaine them, such an extreame gust of Winde, Raine, Thunder, and Lightning happened, that with great danger wee escaped the vnmercifull raging of that Ocean-like water.

An extreame gust.

Russels Iles.

The next day searching those inhabitable Iles (which wee called Russells Iles) to prouide fresh water, the defect whereof forced vs to follow the next Easterne Channell, which brought vs to the Riuer Wighcocomoco, the people at first with great furie seemed to assault vs, yet at last with Songs, Dances, and much mirth, became very tractable, but searching their habitations for water, we could fill but three, and that such puddle, that neuer till then, we knew the want of good water. We digged and searched many places, but ere the end of two dayes wee would haue refused two Barricoes of Gold for one of that puddle water of Wighcocomoco. Being past these Iles, falling with a high Land vpon the Mayne, we found a great pond of fresh water, but so exceeding hot, that we supposed it some Bath: that place we called Point-pleyer, in honour of that Honourable House of Mousaye, that in an extreame extremitie once robbed our Captaine: Beeing thus refreshed in crossing ouer from the Mayne to other Iles, the winde and waters so much increased with Thunder, Lightning, and Raine, that our fore-mast blew ouer-boord, and such mightie waues ouer-wrought vs in that small Barge, that with great labour, wee kept her from sinking by freeing out the water: two dayes wee were inforced to inhabit these vninhabited Iles, which (for the extremitie of Gusts, Thunder, Raine, Stormes, and ill weather) we called Limbo. Repairing Wighcocomoco.

An extreme want of fresh water.

The Barge neere sunke in a gust.

Limbo Iles.

Digitized by Google

ring our fore-ſayle with our ſhirts, we ſet ſayle for the Mayne, and fell with a faire Riuer on the Eaſt called Kuſkarawaocke.

The people ran as amazed in troupes, from place to place, and diuers got into the tops of Trees, they were not ſparing of their Arrowes, nor the greateſt paſſion they could expreſſe of anger, long they ſhot we ſtill riding at an Anchor out of their reach, making all the ſignes of friendſhip wee could. The next day they came vnarmed, with euery one a Bisket, dancing in a ring to draw vs on ſhore, but ſeeing there was nothing in them but villanie, we diſcharged a volley of Muskets charged with Piſtoll ſhot, whereat they all lay tumbling on the ground, creeping ſome one way, ſome another into a great cluſter of Reeds hard by, where there companions lay in Ambuſcado. Towards the Euenning wee weighed and approched the ſhore, diſcharging fiue or ſixe ſhot amongſt the Reeds we landed, where they laid a many of baskets, but ſaw not a Sauage, a ſmoke appearing on the other ſide the Riuer we went thither, where wee found two or three little Houſes in each a fire, there we left ſome pieces of Copper, Beads, Bels, and Looking-glaſſes, and then went into the Bay. When it was darke we came to an Anchor againe. Earely in the morning, foure Sauages came to vs in their Canoa, whom we vſed with ſuch courteſie, nor knew what we were, nor had done, hauing beene in the Bay a fiſhing, bad vs ſtay, and ere long they would returne, which they did, and ſome twentie more with them, with whom after a little conference, two or three hundred men, women, and children came cluſtering about vs, euery one preſenting vs ſomewhat, which a little Bead would ſo well requite, we became ſuch friends, they would contend who ſhould fetch vs water, ſtay with vs for hoſtage, conduct our men any whether, and giue vs the beſt content. Cap. Smith.

By it inhabit the people of Soraphanigh, Nauſe, Arſek, and Nantaquake, that much extolled a great Nation called Maſſawomekes, in ſearch of whom wee returned by Limbo, but finding this Eaſterne ſhore ſhallow broken Iles, and the Mayne for moſt part without freſh water, we paſſed by the Straits of Limbo, for the Weſterne ſhore. So broad is the Bay here, that we could ſcarce perceiue the great high Cliffes on the other ſide; by them wee anchored that night, and called them Richards Cliffes. Thirtie leagues we ſayled more Northwards, not finding any Inhabitants, yet the Coaſt well watered, the Mountaines very barren, the Valleyes very fertile, but the Woods extreme thicke, full of Wolues, Beares, Deere, and other wild Beaſts. The firſt Inlet we found, we called Bolus, for that the clay (in many places) was like (if not) Bole-Armoniacke: when we firſt ſet ſaile, ſome of our Gallants doubted nothing, but that our Captaine would make too much haſt home; but hauing lien not aboue twelue dayes in this ſmall Barge, oft tyred at their Oares, their Bread ſpoyled with wet, ſo much that it was rotten (yet ſo good were their ſtomackes that they could digeſt it) did it with continuall complaints ſo importune him now to returne, as cauſed him beſpeake them in this manner. The firſt notice of the Maſſawomekes. Bolus Riuer.

Gentlemen, if you would remember the memorable Hiſtorie of Sir Ralfe Lane, how his company importuned him to proceed in the Diſcouerie of Morattico, alleaging, they had yet a Dogge, that beeing boyled with Saxafras leaues, would richly feed them in their returnes; what a ſhame would it bee for you (that haue beene ſo ſuſpicious of my tenderneſſe) to force me returne with a moneths proniſion, ſcarce able to ſay where we haue beene, nor yet heard of that we were ſent to ſeeke; you cannot ſay but I haue ſhared with you of the worſt is paſt; and for what is to come of lodging, diet, or whatſoeuer, I am contented you allot the worſt part to my ſelfe: as for your feares that I would loſe my ſelf in theſe vnknown large waters, or be ſwallowed vp in ſome ſtormie guſt, abandon thoſe childiſh feares, for worſe then is paſt cannot happen, and there is as much danger to returne, as to proceed forward. Regaine therefore your old ſpirits; for returne I will not, (if God aſſiſt me) till I haue ſeene the Maſſawomekes, found Patawomeck, or the head of this great water, you conceit to be endleſſe. Smiths ſpeech to his ſouldiers

Three or foure dayes we expected wind and weather, whoſe aduerſe extremities added ſuch diſcouragements to our diſcontents as three or foure fell extreme ſicke, whoſe pittifull complaints cauſed vs to returne, leauing the Bay ſome ten miles broad at nine or ten fathome water. The ſixteenth of Iune we fell with the Riuer of Patawomeck: feare being gone, and our men recouered, we were all contented to take ſome paines to know the name of this nine miles broad Riuer, we could ſee no Inhabitants for thirtie miles ſayle; then we were conducted by two Sauages vp a little bayed Creeke toward Onawmament, where all the Woods were laid with Ambuſcadoes to the number of three or foure hundred Sauages, but ſo ſtrangely painted, grimed, and diſguized, ſhouting, yelling, and crying, as we rather ſuppoſed them ſo many Deuils, they made many brauadoes, but to appeaſe their furie, our Captaine prepared with as ſeeming willingnes (as they) to encounter them, the grazing of the bullets vpon the Riuer, with the Eccho of the woods ſo amazed them, as downe went their Bowes and Arrowes; (and exchanging hoſtage) Iames Watkins was ſent ſixe miles vp the Woods to their Kings Habitation: wee were kindly vſed by theſe Sauages, of whom we vnderſtood, they were commanded to betray vs, by Powhatans direction, and he ſo directed from the diſcontents of Iames Towne. The like incounters we found at Patawomecke, Cecocawne, and diuers other places, but at Moyaones Nacothtant and Taux, the people did their beſt to content vs. The cauſe of this Diſcouerie, was to ſearch a giliſtering Mettall, the Sauages told vs they had from Patawomeck, (the which Newport aſſured that hee had tryed to hold halfe ſiluer) alſo to ſearch what Furres, Metals, Riuers, Rockes, Nations, Woods, Fiſhings, Fruits, Victuals and other Commodities the Land affoorded, and whether the Bay The diſcouerie of Patawomeck. Ambuſcadoes of Sauages. A treacherous proiect.

were

Antimony.

were endleſſe, how farre it extended. The Mine we found nine or ten miles vp in the Country from the Riuer, but it proued of no value; to which he marched, leading his hinds in Chaines, which they were to haue for their paines, and ſo returning loded with that Ore they had. Some Otters, Beuers, Martins, Lizards, and Sabels we found, and in diuers places that abundance of fiſh lying ſo thicke with their heads aboue the water, as for want of nets (our Barge driuing amongſt them) we attempted to catch them with a Frying-pan, but wee found it a bad inſtrument to catch fiſh with. Neither better fiſh, more plenty, or variety, had any of vs euer ſeene, in any place ſwimming in the water, then in the Bay of Cheſabeack, but there not to be caught with Frying-pans,

An abundant plenty of fiſh.

How to deale with the Sauages.

To expreſſe all our quarrels, treacheries, and incounters amongſt thoſe Sauages, I ſhould be too tedious; but in briefe, at all times we ſo incountred them and curbed their inſolencies, as they concluded with preſents to purchaſe peace, yet wee loſt not a man. At our firſt meeting, our Captaine euer obſerued this order, to demand their Bowes and Arrowes, Sword, Mantles or Furs, with ſome childe for hoſtage; whereby he could quickly perceiue when they intended any villanie. Hauing finiſhed this diſcouery (though our victuall was neere ſpent) he intended to haue ſeene his impriſonments, acquaintance vpon the Riuer of Toppahannocke. But our Boate (by reaſon of the ebbe) chanſing to ground vpon a many ſhoules lying in the entrance, wee ſpied many fiſhes lurking amongſt the weedes on the Sands, our Captaine ſporting himſelfe to catch them by nailing them to the ground with his Sword, ſet vs all a fiſhing in that manner; by this deuiſe, we tooke more in an houre, then we all could eate: but it chanced, the Captaine taking a fiſh from his Sword (not knowing her condition) being much of the faſhion of a Thornebacke with a longer taile, whereon is a moſt poyſoned ſting of two or three inches long, which ſhee ſtrooke an inch and halfe into the wriſt of his arme the which in foure houres had ſo extreamely ſwolne his hand, arme, ſhoulder, and part of his body, as wee all with much ſorrow concluded his funerall, and prepared his graue in an Ile hard by (as himſelfe appointed) which then wee called Stingeray Ile, after the name of the fiſh. Yet by the helpe of a precious Oyle which Doctour Ruſſells applied, ere night his tormenting paine was ſo well aſſwaged that hee eate the fiſh to his ſupper, which gaue no leſſe ioy and content to vs, then eaſe to himſelfe. Hauing neither Surgeon nor Surgery but that preſeruatiue Oyle, we preſently ſet ſaile for Iames Towne; paſſing the mouth of Pyankatanck, and Pamaunke Riuers, the next day we ſafely arriued at Kecoughtan. The ſimple Sauages, ſeeing our Captaine hurt, and another bloudy (which came by breaking his ſhin) our number of Bowes, Arrowes, Swords, Targets, Mantles and Furres; would needes imagine wee had bin at warres, the truth of theſe accidents would not ſatisfie them, but impatiently they importuned vs to know with whom wee fought, finding their aptneſſe to beleeue, we failed not (as a great ſecret) to tell them any thing that might affright them, what ſpoyle wee had got and made of the Maſawomeckes, this rumour went faſter vp the Riuer then our Barge; that arriued at Weraſkoyack the twentieth of Iuly, where trimming her with painted ſtreamers, and ſuch deuiſes, we made the Fort iealous of a Spaniſh Frigot; where we all ſafely arriued the twenty one of Iuly.

A Stingrayvery hurtfull; one in foulenes was ſo ſwolne with the ſting of a Ray thorow his thicke fiſhermans-boots, that he therof died, An. 1613. and was ſo ſwolne that they could not bring his coffin out of the dore but brake the wall (as they tolu me) for that purpoſe.

The Sauages affrighted with their owne ſuſpition.

A needeleſſe miſery.

There we found the laſt ſupply, all ſicke, the reſt, ſome lame, ſome bruiſed, all vnable to doe any thing, but complaine of the pride and vnreaſonable needeleſſe cruelty of their ſilly Preſident, that had riotouſly conſumed the ſtore, and to fulfill his follies about building him an vnneceſſary Pallace in the Woods, had brought them all to that miſery: That had not we arriued, they had as ſtrangely tormented him with reuenge. But the good newes of our diſcouery, and the good hope we had (by the Sauages relation) our Bay had ſtretched to the South Sea, appeaſed their furie; but conditionally that Ratliffe ſhould be depoſed, and that Captaine Smith would take vpon him the gouernment: their requeſt being effected, hee Subſtituted Maſter Scriuener his deare friend in the Preſidencie, equally diſtributing thoſe priuate prouiſions that the other had ingroſſed; appointing more honeſt officers to aſſiſt Scriuener (who then lay extreamely tormented with a callenture) and in regard of the weakeneſſe of the company, and heate of the yeare, they being vnable to worke; he left them to liue at eaſe, but imbarked himſelfe to finiſh his diſcouery. Written by Walter Ruſſell and Anas Todkill.

The Company left to liue at eaſe.

What hapned the ſecond voiage to diſcouer the Bay. Chap. 6.

THe twentieth of Iuly Captaine Smith ſet forward to finiſh the diſcouery with twelue men their names were Nathaniell Powell, Thomas Momford, Richard Fetherſtone, Michaell Sicklemore, Iames Bourne, Anas Todkill, Edward Pyſing, Richard Keale, Anthony Bagnall, Iames Watkins, William Ward, Ionas Profit. The winde being contrary cauſed our ſtay two or three daies at Kecoughtan, the Werowans feaſting vs with much mirth, his people were perſwaded wee went purpoſely to be reuenged of the Maſſawomeckes, in the euening we firing two or three rackets, ſo terrified the poore Saluages, they ſuppoſed nothing impoſſible we attempted, and deſired to aſſiſt vs. The firſt night we ancored at Stingeray Ile, the next day croſſed Patawomecks Riuer, and haſted for the Riuer Bolus, we went not much farther before wee might perceiue the Bay to deuide in two heads, and arriuing there wee found it deuided in foure, all which wee ſearched ſo farre as we could ſaile them; two of them we found vninhabited, but in croſſing the Bay to the other,

The Sauages admire fireworkes.

The head of the Bay.

Digitized by Google

other, we encountered seuen or eight Canoaes full of Massawomeckes, wee seeing them prepare to assault vs, left our Oares and made way with our saile to incounter them, yet were we but fiue (with our Captaine) that could stand: for within two dayes after wee left Kecoughtan, the rest (being all of the last supply) were sicke almost to death (vntill they were seasoned to the Countrey) hauing shut them vnder our tarpawling, we put their hats vpon stickes by the Barge side to make vs seeme many, and on each side a man a loded Musket; and so wee thinke the Indians supposed those hats to be men, for they fled withall possible speede to the shoare, and there stayed, staring at the sailing of our Barge, till wee anchored right against them. Long it was ere we could draw them to come vnto vs, at last they sent two of their company vnarmed in a Canoa, the rest all followed to second them if neede required: These two being but each presented with a Bell, brought aboord all their fellowes, presenting the Captaine with Venison, Beares flesh, Bowes, Arrowes, Clubbes, Targets, and Beare-skins, we vnderstood them nothing at all but by signes, whereby they signified vnto vs that they had beene at warres with the Tockwoghs, the which they confirmed by shewing their green wounds; but the night parting vs, we imagined they appointed the next morning to meete, but after that we neuer saw them.

An incounter with the Massawomecks.

Good policy.

Entring the Riuer of Tockwogh the Sauages all armed in a fleete of Boates round inuironed vs; it chanced one of them could speake the language of Powhatan, who perswaded the rest to a friendly parley: but when they saw vs furnished with the Massawomeckes weapons, and we fained the inuention of Kecoughtan to haue taken them perforce; they conducted vs to their pallizadoed Towne, mantelled with the Barkes of trees, with Scaffolds like Mounts, brested about with Barkes very formally, their men, women, and children, with Dances, Songs, Fruits, Fish, Furres, and what they had kindely entertained vs, spreading Mats for vs to sit on, stretching their best abilities to expresse their loues.

An incounter with the Tockwoghs.

Many Hatchets, Kniues, and peeces of Iron, and Brasse, we saw, which they reported to haue from the Sasquesahanockes a mighty people, and mortall enemies with the Massawomeckes: The Sasquesahanocks, inhabit vpon the chiefe Spring of these foure, two dayes iourney higher then our Barge could passe for Rockes. Yet we preuailed with the interpreter to take with him another interpreter to perswade the Sasquesahanocks to come to visite vs, for their language is different: three or foure dayes we expected their returne, and then sixty of these Gyantlike people came downe with presents of Venison, Tobacco-pipes, Baskets, Targets, Bowes and Arrowes, fiue of their Werowances came boldly aboord vs, to crosse the Bay for Tockwogh, leauing their men and Canoaes, the winde being so violent that they durst not passe.

Hatchets from Sasquesahanock.

Our order was daily to haue prayer, with a Psalme; at which solemnity, the poore Sauages much wondered: our prayers being done, they were long busied with consultation till they had contriued their businesse; then they began in most passionate manner to hold vp their hands to the sunne with a most fearefull song, then imbracing the Captaine, they began to adore him in like manner, though he rebuked them, yet they proceeded till their Song was finished, which done with a most strange furious action, and a hellish voyce began an Oration of their loues: that ended, with a great painted Beares skinne they couered our Captaine, then one ready with a chaine of white Beades (weighing at least six or seuen pound) hung it about his necke, the others had eighteene mantles made of diuers sorts of Skins sowed together, all these with many other toyes, they laid at his feete, stroking their ceremonious hands about his necke for his creation to be their Gouernour, promising their aides, victuals, or what they had to be his, if he would stay with them to defend and reuenge them of the Massawomeckes: But we left them at Tockwogh, they much sorrowing for our departure, yet we promised the next yeare againe to visit them; many descriptions and discourses they made vs of Atquanahucke, Massawomecke, and other people, signifying they inhabited the Riuer of Cannida, and from the French to haue their Hatchets, and such like tooles by trade, these know no more of the territories of Powhatan then his name, and he as little of them.

The Sasquesahanocks offer to the English.

Cannida.

Thus hauing sought all the Inlets and Riuers worth noting, we returned to discouer the Riuer of Pawtuxunt; these people we found very tractable, and more ciuill then any, wee promised them, as also the Patawomeckes, the next yeare to reuenge them of the Massawomeckes.

Pawtuxunt. R.

In the discouery of this Riuer, which some call Rapahanocke, others Tapahanocke; we were kindely entertained by the people of Moraughtacun: here we encountred our old friend Mosko, a lustie Sauage of Wighcocomoco, vpon the Riuer of Patawomecke, wee supposed him some Frenchmans Sonne, because he had a thicke, blacke, bush Beard, and the Sauages seldome haue any at all, of which hee was not a little proud to see so many of his Countrie men: wood, and water hee would fetch vs, guide vs any whether, nay cause diuers of his Countrie men to helpe vs too, against winde or tyde, from place to place, till we came to Patawomeke. There he rested, till we returned from the head of the Riuer, and then occasioned vs conduct to the Mine, which we supposed Antimony. Now in this place hee failed not to doe vs all the good he could, perswading vs in any case not to goe to the Rapahanocks, for they would kill vs, for being friends with the Moraughtacuds, that but lately had stolne three of the Kings women. This we did thinke was but that his friends might onely haue our trade, & so crossed the Riuer to the Rapahanocks: there some twelue or sixteene standing on the shore, directed vs to a little narrow creeke,

The exceeding loue of the Sauage Mosco.

Mine of Antimony.

Digitized by Google

Our fight with the Tapahonecks where was good landing, and commodities for vs, in three or foure Canoaes which we saw there. But according to our custome, we demanded to exchange a man, in signe of loue, which after they had a little consulted, foure or fiue came to the middles to fetch our man, and leaue vs one of them, shewing we neede not feare them, for they had neither Clubs, Bowes, nor Arrowes: notwithstanding Anas Todkill being sent on shore to see if he could discouer any ambuscados; desired to goe ouer the plaine to fetch some wood, but they were vnwilling, except we would come into the creeke, where the Boate might come close ashore. Todkill by degrees hauing gotten some two stones throwes vp the plaine, perceiued two or three hundred men as he thought behinde the trees, so that offering to returne to the Boate, the Sauages assayed to carry him away perforce. he called to vs, we were betraid, and by that he had spoken the word, our hostage was ouerboord, but Watkins his keeper slew him in the water, immediatly we let fly amõgst them so that they fled, & Todkill escaped, yet they shot so fast that he fell flat on the ground ere he could recouer the Boate: here the Massawomecks Targets stood vs in good stead, for vpon Mosco*s words we had set them about the forepart of our Boate like a fore-castell, from whence we securely beate the Sauages from off the plaine without any hurt, yet they shot more then* 1000. Arrowes, and then fled into the woods, arming our selues with those light Targets (which are made of little small sticks, wouen betwixt strings of their hempe and silke grasse, as is our cloth, but so firmly, that no Arrow can possibly pierce them) we rescued Todkill, who was blended by some of them that were shot, but as it pleased God, he had no hurt, and followed them vp to the woods, we found some wounded some slaine. & in diuers places much blood: it seemes all their Arrows were spent, for we hard no more of them: their Canoas we tooke, the Arrowes which we found we broke, except those we kept for Mosco, to whom we gaue the Canoaes for his kindnes, that entertained vs in the best triumphing manner and warlike order in armes he could procure of the Moroughtacunds.

The Sauages disguised like bushes, fight.

The rest of the day wee spent in accommodating our Boate, instead of holes we made stickes like bedstaues, to which we fastned so many of our Massawomecke Targets, that inuironed her as wastcloathes: the next morning we went vp the Riuer, and our friend Mosco followed vs along the shoare, but at last desired to goe with vs in our Boate. But as wee passed by Pitacacke, Machopeake and Weiuppom, three Townes scituated vpon high white clay Clifts, the other side all a low plaine marish, and the Riuer there but narrow, thirty or forty of the Rapahanockes had so prepared themselues with branches, as we tooke them for little Bushes growing amongst the Sedge: seeing their Arrowes strike the Targets and drop in the Riuer, Mosco fell flat on his face, crying the Rapahanocks; which presently we espied to be the Bushes, which at our first Volley fell downe in the Sedge; when we were gone neere halfe a mile, they shewed themselues, dancing and singing very merrily. The Kings of Pissaskack, Naudtaughtacund and Cuttatawomen, vsed vs kindely, and all the people neglected not any thing to Mosco to bring vs to them. Betwixt Secobecke and Massatecke is a small Ile or two, which causeth the Riuer to be broder then ordinary: there it pleased God to take one of our company, called M. Richard Fetherstone, that all the time hee had beene in the Country had behaued himselfe very honestly, valiantly, & industriously, where in a little Bay, called hereupon Fetherstones Bay, we buried him with a volly of shot, the rest notwithstanding their ill diet and bad lodging crouded in so small a Barge, in so many dangers neuer resting, but alwaies tossed to & againe, had all well recouered their healths. The next day we sailed so high as our Boat would flote, there setting vp Crosses. Then we discouered the Riuer of Payankatank so high as it was Nauigable, but the people were most a hunting, but a few old men, women and children, that were tending their Corne; of which, they promised vs part when wee would fetch it, as had done all the other Nations where euer we had yet beene. In a faire calme, rowing towards Point Comfort, wee anchored in Gulnolds Bay; but such a sodaine gust surprised vs in the night, with thunder and raine, that wee neuer thought more to haue seene Iames Towne; yet running before the winde, we sometimes see the Land by the flashes of fire from heauen, by which light onely wee kept from the splitting shoare, vntill it pleased God in that blacke darkenesse to preserue vs by that light to finde Point Comfort: there refreshing our selues, because wee had onely but heard of the Chisapeareckes and Nandsamunds, wee thought it as fit to know all our Neighbours neere home, as so many Nations abroad. This wee did (the particulars are omitted) and arriued safe the seuenth of September, 1608. where wee found Master Skrinener, and diuers others well recouered, many dead, some sicke: The late President prisoner for muteny; by the honest diligence of Master Skrinener the haruest gathered, but the stores prouision much spoiled with raine. Thus was that yeare (when nothing wanted) consumed and spent, and nothing done (such was the gouernment of Captaine Ratcliffe) but onely this Discouery, wherein to expresse all the dangers, accidents, and incounters this small number passed in that small Barge, with such watrie diet in these great waters and barbarous Countries (till then to any Christian vtterly vnknowne) I rather referre their merit to the censure of the courteous and experienced Reader, then I would be tedious, or partiall, being a party. By Nathaniell Powell, and Anas Todkill.

Fetherstones Bay.

For feare of tediousnesse I haue left out the most.

Their proceedings at Iames Towne.

The Presidency surrendred to Cap. Smith, the arrriual and returne of the second supply: and what happened. Chap. 7.

THe tenth of September 1608. by the election of the Councell, and request of the Compa- ny, Captaine Smith receiued the Letters Patents, and tooke vpon him the place of President, which till then by no meanes he would accept, though he were often importuned thereunto. Now the building of Ratcliffes Pallace was staid as a thing needelesse. The Church was repaired, the Storehouse recouered; building prepared for the supply we expected. The Fore reduced to the forme of this figure, the order of watch reuied; the squadrons (each setting of the watch) trained: The whole Company euery Saturday exercised in a field prepared for that purpose; the Boates trimmed for trade, which in their iourney encountred the second supply, that brought them backe to discouer the Countrey of Monacan. How, or why, Captaine Newport obtained such a priuate Commission as not to returne without a lumpe of Gold, a certainty of the South-Sea or one of the lost Company of Sir Walter Rawley, I know not, nor why he brought such a fiue pieced Barge, not to heare vs to that South-Sea, till wee had borne her ouer the Mountaines: which how farre they extend is yet vnknowne) as for the Coronation of Powhatan, and his Presents of Bason, Ewer, Bed, Cloathes, and such costly nouelties, they had bin much better well spared, then so ill spent. For we had his fauour much better, onely for a poore peece of Copper, till this stately kinde of soliciting made him so much ouerualue himselfe, that he respected vs as much as nothing at all; as for the hiring of the Poles and Dutch to make Pitch and Tarre, Glasse, Mils, and Sope-ashes, was most necessary and well. But to send them and seuenty more without victuall to worke, was not so well considered; yet this could not haue hurt vs, had they bin two hundred (though then we were one hundred and thirty that wanted for our selues.) For wee had the Sauages in that order (their harueſt being newly gathered) that we feared not to get victuall sufficient, had wee bin fiue hundred. Now was there no way to make vs miserable, but to neglect that time to make our Prouision, whilst it was to be had; the which was done to performe this strange Discouery, but more strange Coronation; to loose that time, spend that victuall wee had, tire and starue our men, hauing no meanes to carry victuall, munition, the hurt or sicke, but their owne backes, how or by whom they were inuented, I know not; But Captaine Newport we onely accounted the author, who to effect these proiects had so gilded all our hopes, with great promises, that both Company and Councell concluded his resolution. I confesse wee little vnderstood then our estates, to conclude his conclusion, against all the inconueniences the foreseeing President alleadged. There was added to the Counsell one Captaine Waldo, and Captaine Winne, two ancient Souldiers and valiant Gentlemen, but ignorant of the businesse (being newly arriued) Ratcliffe was also permitted to haue his voyce, and Master Scrimener desirous to see strange Countries, so that although Smith was President, yet the Counsell had the authority, and ruled it as they listed; as for cleering Smiths obiections, how Pitch, and Tarre, Wanscot, Clapboord, Glasse, and Sope-ashes, could be prouided to relade the Ship; or prouision got to liue with all, when none was in the Countrey, and that which we had, spent before the Shippes departed: The answere was, Captaine Newport vndertooke to fraught the Pinnace with Corne, in going and returning in his Discouery, and to refraught her againe from Werowocomoco; also promising a great proportion of victuall from his Ship, inferring that Smiths propositions were onely deuises to hinder his iourney, to effect it himselfe; and that the cruelty Smith had vsed to the Sauages, in his absence, might occasion them to hinder his designes: For which, all workes were left, and one hundred and twenty chosen men were appointed for his guard; and Smith, to make cleere these seeming suspitions, that the Sauages were not so desperate, as was pretended by Captaine Newport, and how willing hee was to further them to effect their proiects (because the Coronation would consume much time) vndertooke their message to Powhatan, to intreate him to come to Iames Towne to receiue his Presents, accompanied onely with Captaine Waldo, Master Andrew Buckler, Edward Brinton, and Samuell Collier; with these foure hee went ouer land, against Werawocomoco; there passed the Riuer of Pamaunke in the Sauages Canoaes, Powhatan being thirty miles off, who, presently was sent for, in the meane time his women entertained Smith in this manner.

reduced

The figure is left out.

Ciuility is not the way to win Sauages, nor magnificence and bounty to reclaime Barbarians. Children are pleased with toyes and awed with rods; and this course of toies & feares hath alwaybest prospered with wilde Indians either to doe them, or to make them good to vs or themselues. This vanity of ours made Powhatan ouerualue himselfe, his Corne, &c. No way but one to ouerthrow the businesse.

Captain Smith with foure goeth to Powhatan.

In a faire plaine field they made a fire, before which he sitting vpon a Mat; suddenly amongst the woods was heard such a hideous noise and shriking, that they betooke them to their armes, supposing Powhatan with all his power came to surprise them; but the beholders which were many, men, women, and children, satisfied the Captaine there was no such matter, being presently presented with this anticke, thirty yong women came naked out of the woods (onely couered behinde & before with a few greene leaues) their bodies all painted, some white, some red, some blacke, some party colour, but euery one different, their leader had a faire paire of Stagges hornes on her head, and another Skinne at her girdle, another at her arme, a quiuer of Arrowes at her backe, and Bowes and Arrowes in her hand, the next in her hand a Sword, another a Clubbe, another a Pot-sticke, all hornd alike, the rest euery one with their seuerall deuises. These Feinds with most hellish cries and shouts rushing from amongst the trees, cast themselues in a ring about the fire, singing and dancing with excellent ill variety, oft falling into their infernall passions, and then solemnely againe to sing and dance. Hauing spent neere an houre in this Maskarado, as they entred, in like manner they departed. Hauing reaccommodated themselues, they solemnly inuited Smith to their lodging, but no sooner was hee within the house, but all these Nimphes more tormented him then euer, with crowding, and pressing, and hanging vpon him, most tediously crying, Loue you not mee? This salutation ended, the feast was set, consisting of Fruite in Baskets, Fish and Flesh in woodden Platters,

The womens entertainment at Werawocomoco.

A wilde Diana Atheon in one person.

Digitized by Google

Beanes and Peaſe there wanted not (for twenty Hogges) nor any Sauage daintie which their inuention could deuiſe; ſome attending, others ſinging and dancing about them: this mirth and banquet being ended, with Firebrands (inſtead of Torches) they conducted him to his lodging.

Captain Smiths meſſage.

The next day came Powhatan; Smith deliuered his Meſſage of the Preſents ſent him, and redeliuered him Namontacke, deſiring him to come to his Father Newport to accept thoſe Preſents; and conclude their reuenge againſt the Monacans: whereupon, the ſubtill Sauage thus replyed:

Powhatans anſwer.

If your King haue ſent mee preſents, I alſo am a King, and this my land; eight dayes I will ſtay to receiue them; your Father is to come to mee, not I to him, nor yet to your Fort, neither will I bite at ſuch a baite: as for the Monacans, I can reuenge my owne iniuries, and as for Aaquanuchucke, where you ſay your Brother was ſlaine, it is a contrary way from thoſe parts you ſuppoſe it. But for any ſalt water beyond the Mountaines, the relations you haue had from my people are falſe; whereupon he began to draw plots vpon the ground (according to his diſcourſe) of all thoſe Regions: many other diſcourſes they had (yet both deſirous to giue each other content in Complementall curteſies) and ſo Captaine Smith returned with this anſwer.

Powhatans Coronation.

So much was done to buy repentance with more coſt then worſhip. If we feeke Sauages we looſe them, if wee force them to ſeeke vs, wee ſhal finde theſe ſhadowes of men cloſe at our feet. I haue read more ſtories of them then perhaps any man, and finde that a cruell mercy in awing Sauages to feare vs is better then that mercifull cruelty, which by too much kindenes hath made vs feare them, or elſe by too much confidence to looſe our ſelues. Smith & Newport may by their examples teach the iuſt courſe to be take with ſuch: the one breeding awe and dread, without Spaniſh or Panike terror, the other diſgraced in ſeeking to grace with offices of humanity, thoſe which are graceleſſe, Neither doth it become vs to vſe Sauages with ſauageneſſe, nor yet with too humaine vſage, but in a middle path (medio tutiſſimus ibis) to goe and doe ſo that they may admire and feare vs, as thoſe whom God, Religion, Ciuility, and Art, haue made ſo farre ſuperiour; yet to abuſe them (vnprouoked) as hoſtile ſlaues, or as meere beaſts, with cruell and beaſtly feriety, whom nature hath equally made men. This breedes deſperate depopulations, as in the Spaniſh Indies hath beene ſeene; that gentleneſſe and vnequall equity makes them proud and treacherous, as wofull experience hath taught in the late maſſacre. Our temperance and iuſtice ſhould be qualified with prudence and fortitude. Neither muſt wee make them beaſts, nor yet value them as Chriſtians, till we haue made them ſuch; and the way to make them Chriſtian men, is firſt to make them ciuill men, to file off the ruſt of their humanity, which as children (the like in taming wilde Beaſts) muſt be done with ſeuere gentleneſſe, and gentle ſeuerity, which may breede in them a louing awe, or awfull loue, at leaſt a iuſt dread toward vs, that feare may make them know vs, and then the fault is ours if they ſee no cauſe to loue vs.

Vpon this Captaine Newport ſent his preſents by water, which is neere one hundred miles, with fifty of the beſt ſhot, himſelfe went by land, which is but twelue miles, where he met with our three Barges to tranſport him ouer. All things being fit for the day of his Coronation, the preſents were brought, his Baſon, Ewer, Bed and Furniture ſet vp, his Scarlet Cloake and Apparell (with much adoe) put on him, being perſwaded by Namontacke, they would doe him no hurt. But a foule trouble there was to make him kneele to receiue his Crowne, he neither knowing the Maieſty nor meaning of a Crowne, nor bending of the knee, indured ſo many perſwaſions, examples, and inſtructions, as tired them all: At laſt, by leaning hard on his ſhoulders, he a little ſtooped, ſo they put the Crowne on his head: When by the warning of a Piſtoll, the Boates were prepared with ſuch a Volly of ſhot, that the King ſtart vp in a horrible feare, till he ſee all was well, then remembring himſelfe, to congratulate their kindeneſſe, he gaue his old Shooes and his Mantle to Captaine Newport. But perceiuing his purpoſe was to diſcouer the Monacans, he laboured to diuert his reſolution, refuſing to lend him either men or guides, more then Namontacke, and ſo (after ſome complementall kindeneſſe on both ſides) in requitall of his preſents, he preſented Newport with a heape of Wheate eares, that might containe ſome ſeuen or eight buſhels, and as much more we bought ready dreſſed in the Towne, wherewith we returned to the Fort.

The Ship hauing disburdened her ſelfe of ſeuenty perſons, with the firſt Gentlewoman, and woman ſeruant that arriued in our Colony; Captaine Newport with all the Counſell, and one hundred and twenty choſen men, ſet forward for the diſcouery of Monacan, leauing the Preſident at the Fort with eighty (ſuch as they were) to relade the Ship. Arriuing at the fals, wee marched by land ſome forty miles in two dayes and a halfe, and ſo returned downe to the ſame path we went. Two Townes we diſcouered of the Monacans, the people neither vſing vs well nor ill, yet for our ſecurity we tooke one of their petty Werowances, and led him bound, to conduct vs the way. And in our returne ſearched many places we ſuppoſed Mines, about which we ſpent ſome time in refining, hauing one William Callicut a refiner, fitted for that purpoſe, from that cruſt of earth which we digged, he perſwaded vs to beleeue hee extracted ſome ſmall quantity of Siluer (and not vnlikely ſome better ſtuffe might be had for the digging) with this poore triall being contented to leaue this faire, fertill, well watered Country. Comming to the Fals, the Sauages fained there were diuers Ships come into the Bay to kill them at Iames Towne. Trade they would not, and finde their Córne we could not, for they had hid it in the woods, and being thus deluded we arriued at Iames Towne, halfe ſicke, all complaining, and tired with toile, famine, and diſcontent, to haue onely but diſcouered our gilded hopes, and fruitleſſe certainties, as the Preſident foretold vs.

No ſooner were we landed, but the Preſident diſperſed as many as were able, ſome for Glaſſe, others for Pitch, Tarre and Sope-aſhes, leauing them (with the Fort) to the Councels ouerſight. But thirtie of vs he conducted fiue miles from the Fort to learne to make clap-boord, cut downe Trees, and lie in Woods; amongſt the reſt he had choſen Gabriell Beadell, and Iohn Ruſſell the only two Gallants of this laſt ſupply, and both proper Gentlemen: ſtrange were theſe pleaſures to their

to their conditions, yet lodging, eating, drinking, working, or playing, they doing but as the President, all these things were carried so pleasantly, as within a weeke they became Masters, making it their delight to heare the Trees thunder as they fell, but the Axes so oft blistered there tender fingers, that commonly euery third blow had a lowd Oath to drowne the Eccho; for remedie of which sinne the President deuised how to haue euery mans Oathes numbred, and at night, for euery Oath to haue a Kan of water powred downe his sleeue, with which euery Offender was so washed (himselfe and all) that a man should scarce heare an Oath in a Weeke. A pretie punishment for swearing.

By this, let no man thinke that the President, or these Gentlemens spent their times as common Wood-hackers at felling of Trees, or such like other labours, or that they were pressed to any thing as hirelings or common slaues, for what they did (beeing but once a little inured) it, seemed, and they conceited it only as a pleasure and a recreation. Yet thirtie or fortie of such voluntarie Gentlemen would doe more in a day then one hundred of the rest that must be prest to it by compulsion. Master Scriuener, Captaine Waldo, and Captaine Winne at the Fort, euery one in like manner carefully regarded their charge. The President returning from amongst the Woods seeing the time consumed, and no prouision gotten, (and the ship lay idle, and would do nothing presently imbarked himselfe in the Discouery Barge, giuing order to the Councell, to send Master Percie after him with the next Barge that arriued at the Fort; two Barges, he had himselfe, and twentie men, but arriuing at Chickahamina, that dogged Nation was too well acquainted with our wants, refusing to trade, with as much scorne and insolencie as they could expresse. The President perceiuing it was Powhatans policie to starue vs, told them hee came not so much for their Corne, as to reuenge his imprisonment, and the death of his men murdered by them, and so landing his men, and readie to charge them, they immediatly fled; but then they sent their Ambassadors, with corne, fish, fowle, or what they had to make their peace (their corne being that yeere bad) they complained extremely of their owne wants, yet fraughted our Boates with one hundred bushels of Corne, and in like manner Master Percies, that not long after vs arriued; they hauing done the best they could to content vs, within foure or fiue dayes wee returned to Iames Towne. One Gentleman better then twentie Lubbers. The Chickahamines forced to contribution.

All this time our old Tauerne, made as much of all them that had either Money or Ware as could be desired; and by this time they were become so perfect on all sides (I meane Souldiers, Saylers, and Sauages) as there was ten times more care, to maintayne their damnable and priuate Trade, then to prouide for the Colonie things that were necessarie, neither was it a small policie in the Mariners, to report in England wee had such plentie, and bring vs so many men without victuall, when they had so many priuate Factors in the Fort, that within sixe or seuen weekes after the ships returne, of two or three hundred Hatchets, Chissels, Mattockes, and Pick-axes scarce twentie could bee found, and for Pike-heads, Kniues, Shot, Powder, or any thing (they could steale from their fellowes) was vendible; They knew as well (and as secretly) how to conuay them to trade with the Sauages, for Furres, Baskets, Mussaneekes, young beasts or such like Commodities, as to exchange them with the Saylers, for Butter, Cheese, Beefe, Porke, Aqua-uitæ, Beere, Bisket, and Oate-meale; and then faine, that all was sent them from their friends. And though Virginia afford no Furres for the store, yet one Mariner in one Voyage hath got so many, as he hath confessed to haue sold in England for thirtie pound. And for all this riot and Newports boasting to leaue vs for twelue monethes, though we had eightie nine by his Discouerie sicke and lame, which by one waie for a pound of Copper might much better haue beene done, and hauing but a pint of Corne a day for a man, we were constrained to giue him three Hogsheads of that Corne to victuall his ship homeward. A good tauern in Virginia. A bad trade of Masters and Saylers.

Those are the Saint-seeming Worthies of Virginia, that haue notwithstanding all this, meat, drinke, and pay, but now they beginne to grow wearie, their Trade beeing both perceiued and preuented; none hath beene in Virginia (that hath obserued any thing) which knowes not this to be true, and yet the scorne, and shame was the poore Souldiers, Gentlemen and careleſſe Gouernours, who were all thus bought and sold, the Aduenturers coozened, and the action ouerthrowne by their false excuses, informations, and directions by this let all the World Iudge, how this businesse could prosper, being thus abused by such pilfering occasions.

The proceedings and accidents, with the second supply.

Master Scriuener was sent with the Barges and Pinnace to Werawocomoco, where he found the Sauages more readie to fight then trade, but his vigilancie was such, as preuented their proiects, and by the meanes of Namontack got three or foure Hogsheads of Corne, and as much red paint, which (then) was esteemed an excellent die. Scriuenors voyage to Werawocomoco.

Captaine Newport being dispatched with the tryals of Pitch, Tarre, Glasse, Frankincense, and Sope-ashes, with that Clapboord and Wainscot which could bee prouided, met with Master Scriuener at Point Comfort, and so returned for England, leauing vs in all two hundred, with those he brought vs.

Digitized by Google

Nanſamund forced to contribution.

Thoſe poore concluſions ſo affrighted vs all with famine; that the Preſident prouided for Nanſamund, tooke with him Captaine Winne and Maſter Scrimener, (then returning from Captaine Newport) theſe people alſo long denied him Trade (excuſing themſelues to be ſo commanded by Powhatan) till we were conſtrained to begin with them perforce, and then they would rather ſell vs ſome, then we ſhould take all; ſo loading our Boats, with one hundred buſhels wee parted friends, and came to Iames Towne, at which time, there was a Marriage betweene Iohn Laydon and Anna Burrowes, being the firſt Marriage we had in Virginia.

First marriage.

Long he ſtayed not, but fitting himſelfe and Captaine VValdo with two Barges, from Chawopo, VVeanocke and all parts there, was found neither Corne nor Sauage, but all fled (being iealous of our intents) till we diſcouered the Riuer and people of Appametuck, where we found little: that which they had, wee equally deuided, betwixt the Sauages and vs (but gaue them Copper in conſideration) Maſter Percie, and Maſter Scrimener went alſo abroad but could finde nothing.

Appamatucke diſcouered.

The Preſident ſeeing this procraſtinating of time, was no courſe to liue, reſolued with Captaine VValdo (whom he knew to be ſure in time of need) to ſurprize Powhatan, and all his prouiſion, but Captaine VVinne, and Maſter Scrimener (for ſome priuate reſpects) did their beſt to hinder their proiect: But the Preſident whom no perſwaſions could perſwade to ſtarue, being inuited by Powhatan to come vnto him, and if he would ſend him but men to build him a houſe, bring him a Grindſtone, fiftie Swords, ſome Peeces, a Cocke and a Henne, with Copper and Beads, he would load his ſhip with Corne, the Preſident not ignorant of his deuices, yet vnwilling to neglect any opportunitie, preſently ſent three Dutchmen and two Engliſh (hauing no victuals to imploy them, all for want thereof being idle) knowing there needed no better Caſtell, then that houſe to ſurprize Powhatan, to effect this proiect hee tooke order with Captaine Waldo to ſecond him if need required; Scrimener he left his Subſtitute; and ſet forth with the Pinnace two Barges, and ſixe and fortie men which only were ſuch as voluntarily offered themſelues for his iournie the which) by reaſon of Maſter Scrimeners ill ſucceſſe) was cenſured very deſperate, they all knowing Smith would not returne emptie how ſoeuer, cauſed many of thoſe that he had appointed, to find excuſes to ſtay behind.

Cap. Smiths iourne to Pamaunke. Ch. 8.

THe nine and twentieth of December hee ſet forward for Weraweomoco. In the Pinnace. Maſter George Percie, brother to the Earle of Northumberland. Maſter Francis Weſt, brother to the Lord De-la-Ware. William Phetiplace Captaine of the Pinnace. Ionas Profit Maſter. Robert Ford Clerke of the Councell.

Michaell Phetiplace. Geoffery Abbot Sergeant. William Tankard. George Yarington. Iames Bourne. George Burton. Thomas Coe. Gentlemen.

Iohn Dods. Edward Brinton. Nathaniell Peacocke. Henry Powell. Dauid Ellis. Thomas Gipſon. Iohn Prat. George Acrigge. Iames Reade. Nicholas Hancocke. Iames Watkins. Anthony Bagely Sergeant. Thomas Lambert. Edward Piſing Sergeant. Souldiers.

Foure Dutchmen and Richard Sauage were ſent by Land, to build the houſe for Powhatan againſt our arriuall.

This company being victualled but for three or foure dayes lodged the firſt night at Werokoyack, where the Preſident tooke ſufficient prouiſion; This kinde Sauage did his beſt to diuert him from ſeeing Powhatan, but perceiuing hee could not preuaile, hee aduiſed in this manner; Captaine Smith, you ſhall find Powhatan to vſe you kindly, but truſt him not, and be ſure he haue no opportunitie to ſeize on your armes, for he hath ſent for you only to cut your throts; the Captaine thanked him for his good counſell, yet the better to try his loue, deſired Guides to Chowanoke, for hee would ſend a preſent to that King to bind him his friend. To performe this Iourney, was ſent Michael Sicklemore, a very honeſt valiant, and painfull Souldier, with him two Guides, and directions how to ſearch for the loſt company of Sir Walter Rawleigh, and Silke Graſſe: then wee departed thence, the Preſident aſſuring the King his perpetuall loue, and left with him Samuell Collier his Page to learne the Language.

The good counſell of Werokoyake.

The next night being lodged at Kecoughtan ſixe or ſeuen dayes, the extreme wind, raine, froſt, and ſnow, cauſed vs to keepe Chriſtmaſſe amongſt the Sauages, where we were neuer more merrie, nor fed on more plentie of good Oyſters, Fiſh, Fleſh, Wild-foule, and good Bread, nor neuer had better fires in England then in the dry warme ſmokie houſes of Kecoughtan. But departing thence, when we found no houſes, we were not curious in any weather, to lie three or foure nights together vpon any ſhore vnder the Trees by a good fire. The Preſident Anthony Bagly, and Edward Piſing, did kill one hundred fortie and eight Fowles at three ſhootes. At Kiskiack the Froſt forced vs three or foure dayes alſo to ſuppreſſe the inſolencie of thoſe proud Sauages; to quarter in their houſes, and guard our Barge, and cauſe them giue vs what we wanted, yet were wee but twelue with the Preſident, and yet wee neuer wanted Harbour where wee found any houſes.

Plentie of victuall. 148. Fowle killed at three ſhoots.

The twelfth of Ianuary we arriued at Weraweomo, where the Riuer was frozen neere halfe a mile from the ſhore; but to neglect no time, the Preſident with his Barge, ſo farre had approached ched by breaking the Ice as the ebbe left him amongst those Ozie shoales, yet rather then to lie there frozen to death, by his owne example he taught them to march middle deepe, more then a flight shot through this muddie frozen Oze; when the Barge floted hee appointed two or three to returne her aboord the Pinnace, where for want of water in melting the Salt Ice they made fresh water, but in this march Master Russell (whom none could perswade to stay behind) being somewhat ill, and exceeding heauie, so ouer-toyled himselfe, as the rest had much adoe (ere hee got ashore) to regaine life, into his dead benumned spirits, quartering in the next Houses wee found, we sent to Powhatan for prouision, who sent vs plentie of Bread, Turkeyes, and Venison. The next day hauing feasted vs after his ordinary manner, he began to aske, when we would bee gone, fayning hee sent not for vs, neither had hee any Corne, and his people much lesse, yet for fortie Swords hee would procure vs fortie bushels. The President shewing him the men there present, that brought him the message and conditions, asked him how it chanced hee became so forgetfull, thereat the King concluded the matter with a merrie laughter, asking for our Commodities, but none hee liked without Gunnes and Swordes, valuing a basket of Corne more precious then a Basket of Copper, saying, hee could eate his Corne, but not his Copper.

An ill march. Powhatans subtletie.

Captaine Smith seeing the intent of this subtle Sauage; beganne to deale with him after this manner, Powhatan, Though I had many courses to haue made my prouision, yet beleeuing your promises to supply my wants, I neglected all, to satisfie your desire, and to testifie my loue, I sent you my men for your building, neglecting my owne: what your people had you haue engrossed, forbidding them our Trade, and now you thinke by consuming the time, we shall consume for want, not hauing to fulfill your strange demands, as for Swords and Gunnes, I told you long agoe, I had none to spare. And you shall know, those I haue, can keepe me from want; yet steale, or wrong you I will not nor dissolue that friendship we haue mutually promised, except you constraine me by your bad vsage.

Cap. Smiths discourse to Powhatan.

The King hauing attentiuely listned to this Discourse; promised, that both he and his Countrey would spare him what they could, the which within two dayes, they should receiue, yet Captaine Smith (saith the King) some doubt I haue of your comming hither, that makes me not so kindly seeke to releeue you as I would; for many doe informe mee, your comming is not for Trade, but to inuade my people and possesse my Country, who dare not come to bring you corne, seeing you thus armed with your men. To cleere vs of this feare, leaue aboord your weapons, for here they are needlesse we being all friends and for euer Powhatans.

Powhatans reply and flattery

With many such Discourses they spent the day, quartering that night in the Kings houses, the next day he reuiewed his building, which he little intended should proceed; for the Dutchmen finding his plentie, and knowing our want, and perceiuing his preparation to surprize vs, little thinking we could escape, both him and famine (to obtaine his fauour) reuealed to him as much as they knew of our estates projects, and how to preuent them; one of them being of so good a iudgement, spirit, and resolution, and a hireling that was certaine of wages for his labor, and euer well vsed, both he and his Countrimen, that the President knew not whom better to trust, and not knowing any fitter for that imployment, had sent him as a spie to discouer Powhatans intent, then little doubting his honestie, nor could euer be certaine of his villany, till neere halfe a yeere after. Whilst we expected the comming in of the Country, we wrangled out of the King ten quarters of Corne for a Copper Kettle, the which the President perceiuing him much to effect, valued it at a much greater rate, but (in regard of his scarcitie) he would accept of as much more the next yeere, or else the Country of Monacan; the King exceeding liberall of that he had not yeelded him Monacan. Wherewith each seeming well contented; Powhatan began to expostulate the difference betwixt Peace and Warre, after this manner.

Wickednesse of their Dutchmen.

Captaine Smith you may vnderstand, that I, hauing seene the death of all my people thrice, and not one liuing of those three Generations, but my selfe, I know the difference of Peace and Warre, better then any in my Countrie. But now I am old, and ere long I must die, my Brethren, namely Opichapam, Opechankanough, and Kekataugh, my two sisters, and their two daughters, are distinctly each others successors, I wish their experiences no lesse then mine, and your loue to them, no lesse then mine to you; but this brute from Nansamund that you are come to destroy my Countrie, so much affrighteth all my people, as they dare not visit you; what will it auaile you, to take that perforce you may quietly haue with loue, or to destroy them that prouide you food? what can you get by war, when we can hide our prouision and flie to the woods, wherby you must famish by wronging vs your friends; and why are you thus iealous of our loues, seeing vs vnarmed, and both doe, and are willing still to feed you with that you cannot get but by our labours? thinke you I am so simple not to know, it is better to eat good meate, lie well, and sleepe quietly with my women and children, laugh & be merrie with you, haue Copper, Hatchets, or what I want, being your friend; then be forced to flie from all to lie cold in the woods, feed vpon Acornes, roots and such trash, and be so hunted by you, that I can neither rest, eat, nor sleepe; but my tired men must watch, and if a twig but breake, euery one cry there comes Captaine Smith, then must I flie I know not whether, and thus with miserable feare end my miserable life; leauing my pleasures to such youths as you, which through your rash vnadui sednesse, may quickly as miserably end, for want of that you neuer know how to find! Let this therefore assure you of our loues, and euerie yeere our friendly Trade shall furnish you with Corne, Powhatans discourse of Peace and Warre.

and

and now alſo, if you would come in friendly manner to ſee vs, and not thus with your Guns and Swords, as to inuade your foes. To this ſubtill diſcourſe the Preſident thus replied.

C. Smiths reply.

Seeing you will not rightly conceiue of our words, we ſtriue to make you know our thoughts by our deeds. The vow I made you of my loue, both my ſelfe and my men haue kept, as for your promiſe I find it euerie day violated by ſome of your ſubiects, yet we finding your loue and kindneſſe (our cuſtome is ſo far from being vngratefull) that for your ſake onely, we haue curbed our thirſting deſire of reuenge, elſe had they knowne as well the cruelties we vſe to our enemies, as our true loue and curteſie to our friends. And I thinke your iudgement ſufficient to conceiue as well by the aduentures wee haue vndertaken, as by the aduantage we haue by our Armes of yours: that had we intended you any hurt, long ere this wee could haue effected it; your people comming to me at Iames Towne, are entertained with their Bowes and Arrowes without exception; we eſteeming it with you, as it is with vs, to weare our Armes as our apparell. As for the dangers of our enemies, in ſuch warres conſiſt our chiefeſt pleaſure, for your riches wee haue no vſe, as for the hiding your proviſion, or by your flying to the Woods, wee ſhall ſo vnaduiſedly ſtarue as you conclude, your friendly care in that behalfe is needleſſe; for wee haue a rule to find beyond your knowledge.

Many other diſcourſes they had, till at laſt they began to trade, but the King ſeeing his will would not be admitted as a law, our guard diſperſed, nor our men diſarmed, he (ſighing) breathed his mind once more in this manner.

Powhatans importunitie for to haue them vnarmed, to betray them.

Captaine Smith, I neuer vſed any Werowances ſo kindly as your ſelfe; yet from you I receiue the leaſt kindneſſe of any. Captaine Newport gaue me ſwords, Copper, Clothes, a Bed, Tooles, or what I deſired, euer taking what I offered him, and would ſend away his Guns when I intreated him: none doth deny to lay at my feet (or doe) what I deſire, but onely you, of whom I can haue nothing, but what you regard not, and yet you will haue what ſoeuer you demand. Captaine Newport you call father, and ſo you call me, but I ſee for all vs both, you will doe what you liſt, and wee muſt both ſeeke to content you: But if you intend ſo friendly as you ſay, ſend hence your Armes that I might beleeue you, for you ſee the loue I beare you, doth cauſe me thus naked to forget my ſelfe.

Smith ſeeing this Sauage but trifled the time to cut his throat: procured the Sauages to breake the Ice (that his Boat might come to fetch both him and his Corne) and gaue order for his men to come aſhore, to haue ſurpriſed the King, with whom alſo hee but trifled the time till his men landed, and to keepe him from ſuſpition, entertained the time with this reply.

C. Smiths diſcourſe to delay time, that he might ſurpriſe Powhatan.

Powhatan, you muſt know as I haue but one God, I honour but one King; and I liue not here as your ſubiect, but as your friend, to pleaſure you with what I can: by the gifts you beſtow on me, you gaine more then by trade, yet would you viſit mee as I doe you, you ſhould know it is not our cuſtomes to ſell our curteſie as a vendible commoditie. Bring all your Countrey with you for your guard, I will not diſlike of it as being ouer iealous. But to content you, to morrow I will leaue my Armes, and truſt to your promiſe. I call you father indeed, and as a father you ſhall ſee I will loue you, but the ſmall care you had of ſuch a child, cauſed my men to perſwade me to ſhift for my ſelfe.

Powhatans plot to haue murdered Smith.

By this time Powhatan hauing knowledge, his men were readie: whilſt the Ice was breaking, his luggage, women, and children fled, and to auoid ſuſpition, left two or three of his women talking with the Captaine, whilſt hee ſecretly fled, and his men as ſecretly beſet the houſe, which being at the inſtant diſcouered to Captaine Smith, with his Piſtol, Sword, and Target, hee made ſuch a paſſage amongſt thoſe naked Deuills, that they fled before him, ſome one way, ſome another, ſo that without hurt hee obtained the Corps du-guard: when they perceiued him ſo well eſcaped, and with his eight men (for hee had no more with him) to the vttermoſt of their skill, they ſought by excuſes to diſſemble the matter, and Powhatan to excuſe his flight, and the ſudden comming of this multitude, ſent our Captaine a great Bracelet, and a Chaine of Pearle, by an ancient Orator that beſpoke vs to this purpoſe (perceiuing then from our Pinnace, a Barge, and men departing and comming vnto vs.) Captaine Smith, our Werowance is fled, fearing your Guns, and knowing when the Ice was broken there would come more men, ſent theſe of his to guard his Corne from the pilfry, that might happen without your knowledge: now though ſome bee hurt by your miſpriſion, yet he is your friend, and ſo will continue: and ſince the Ice is open hee would haue you ſend away your Corne; and if you would haue his company ſend alſo your Armes, which ſo affrighteth his people, that they dare not come to you, as he hath promiſed they ſhould: Now hauing prouided Baskets for our men to carry the Corne, they kindly offered their ſeruice to guard our Armes, that none ſhould ſteale them. A great many they were, of goodly well appointed fellowes as grim as Deuills: yet the very ſight of cocking our matches againſt them, and a few wordes cauſed them to leaue their Bowes and Arrowes to our guard, and beare downe our Corne on their owne backes; wee needed not importune them to make quick diſpatch. But our owne Barge being left by the ebbe, cauſed vs to ſtay till the midnight tide carried vs ſafe aboard, hauing ſpent that halfe night with ſuch mirth, as though we neuer had ſuſpected or intended any thing, we left the Dutchmen to build Brinton to kill Fowle for Powhatan (as by his Meſſengers he importunately deſired) and left directions with our men to giue Powhatan all the content they could, that we might inioy his company at our returne from Pamaunke.

A Chaine of Pearle for a Preſent.

His excuſe.

Pretending to kill our men loaded with baskets, wee forced the Sauages to carrie them.

We

WE had no sooner set saile, but Powhatan returned, and sent Adam and Francis (two stout Dutch men) to the Fort, who faining to Captaine Winne that all things were well, and that Captaine Smith had vse for their Armes, wherefore they requested new (the which were giuen them) they told him their comming was, for some extraordinary tooles and shift of apparell, by this colourable excuse, they obtained sixe or seuen more to their confederacie, such expert theeues that presently furnished them with a great many of Swords, Pike-heads, Peeces, Shot, Powder, and such like; they haue Sauages at hand ready to carry it away. The next day they returned vnsuspected, leauing their confederates to follow, and in the interim, to conuay them a competencie of all things they could, for which seruice they should liue with Powhatan as his chiefe affected: free from those miseries that would happen the Colony. Samuell their other consort, Powhatan kept for their pledge, whose diligence had prouided them three hundred of their kind of Hatchets, the rest fiftie Swords, eight Peeces, and eight Pikes: Briton, and Richard Sauage seeing the Dutch-men so strangely diligent to accommodate the Sauages, these weapons attempted to haue got to Iames Towne, but they were apprehended. Within two or three daies we arriued at Pamaunke, the King as many daies entertained vs with feasting and much mirth: and the day he appointed to begin our trade, the President, with M. Persie, M. West, M. Russell, M. Beheathland, M. Powell, M. Crashaw, M. Ford, and some others to the number of fifteene went vp to Opechancanoughs house (neere a quarter of a mile from the Riuer) where we found nothing, but a lame fellow and a boy, and all the houses about, of all things abandoned; not long wee staid ere the King arriued, and after him came diuers of his people loaded with Bowes and Arrowes, but such pinching commodities, and those esteemed at such a value, as our Captaine began with him in this manner.

How we escaped surprising at Pamaunke. Chap. 9.

The Dutchmen deceiue C. Smith.

Perfidious wretches.

Opechancanoughs abandoned.

Opechancanough, the great loue you professe with your tongue, seemes meere deceit by your actions; last yeere you kindly fraughted our ship, but now you haue inuited me to starue with hunger. You know my want, and I your plentie, of which by some meanes I must haue a part, remember it is fit for Kings to keepe their promise, here are my commodities, whereof take your choice; the rest I will proportion fit bargaines for your people.

Smiths speech to Opechancanough.

The King seemed kindly to accept his offer; and the better to colour his proiect, sold vs what they had to our owne content; promising the next day more company, better prouided (the Barges and Pinnace being committed to the charge of M. Phetiplace) the President, with his old fifteene marched vp to the Kings house, where wee found foure or fiue men newly come with great Baskets. Not long after came the King, who with a strained cheerefulnesse held vs with discourse, what paines he had taken to keepe his promise; till M. Russell brought vs in newes that we were all betrayed: for at least sixe or seuen hundred of well appointed Indians had inuironed the house and beset the fields. The King coniecturing what Russell related, wee could well perceiue how the extremitie of his feare bewrayed his intent: whereat some of our company seeming dismayed with the thought of such a multitude; the Captaine incouraged vs after this manner. Worthy Country-men were the mischiefes of my seeming friends, no more then the danger of these enemies, I little cared, were they as many more; if you dare doe, but as I. But this is my torment, that if I escape them, our malicious Councell, with their open mouthed Minions, will make me such a peace-breaker (in their opinions) in England, as will breake my necke: I could wish those here, that make these seeme Saints, and me an Oppressor. But this is the worst of all, wherein, I pray aide me with your opinions; should we begin with them and surprize this King, we cannot keepe him, and defend well our selues, if wee should each kill our man, and so proceed wt hall in this house; the rest will all fly, then shall we get no more, then the bodies that are slaine, and then starue for victuall: as for their furie it is the least danger, for well you know (being alone assaulted with two or three hundred of them) I made them compound to saue my life, and we are now sixteene, and they but seuen hundred at the most, and assure your selues GOD will so assist vs, that if you dare but to stand to discharge your Peeces, the verie smoake will be sufficient to affright them: yet howsoeuer (if there be occasion) let vs fight like men, and not die like sheepe: but first I will deale with them, to bring it to passe, we may fight for some thing, and draw them to it by conditions: If you like this motion, promise me youle be valiant. The time not permitting any argument, all vowed to execute whatsoeuer he attempted, or die; whereupon the Captaine approaching the King, bespoke him in this manner.

700. Sauages beset the English being but sixteene.

Smiths speech to his Company.

I see Opechancanough your plot is to murder me, but I feare it not; as yet your men and mine, haue done no harme, but by our directions. Take therefore your Armes; you see mine: my bodie shall bee as naked as yours; the Ile in your Riuer is a fit place, if you be contented: and the conquerour (of vs two) shall be Lord and Master ouer all our men: otherwaies draw all your men into the field; if you haue not enough, take time to fetch more, and bring what number you will, so euerie one bring a basket of Corne, against all which I will stake the value in Copper; you see I haue but fifteene men, and our gaine shall be, The conquerour take all.

Smiths offer to Opechancanough.

The King, being guarded with fiftie or sixtie of the chiefe men, seemed kindly to appease Smiths suspition of vnkindnesse, by a great present at the doore, they intreated him to receiue. This was to draw him without the doore where the present was guarded with (at the least two hundred men, and thirtie lying vnder a great tree (that lay thwart as a Barricado) each his Arrow nocked ready to ſhoot; ſome the Preſident commanded to go & ſee what kind of deceit this was, and to receiue the Preſent, but they refuſed to doe it) yet diuers offered whom he would not permit: but commanding M. Perſie, and M. Weſt to make good the houſe, to M. Powell, and M. Beheathland to guard the doore, and in ſuch a rage ſnatched the King by his long locke of haire in the midſt of his men, with his Piſtoll readie bent againſt his breſt, he inſtantly yeelded his Bow and Arrowes, and ſued for his life: Thus he led the King (neere dead with feare) amongſt all his people, who deliuering the Captaine his Bow and arrowes, all his men were eaſily intreated to caſt downe their Armes, little dreaming any durſt in that manner haue vſed their King: who then to eſcape himſelfe, beſtowed his Preſents in good ſadneſſe. And hauing cauſed all his multitude to approach diſarmed; the Preſident argued with them to this effect,

Opechancanoughs deuice to betray Smith.

row,

Opechancanough taken priſoner amids his men. If this courſe had bin taken by others Virginia by this had bin out of her cradle, & able to goe alone, yea to trade or fight. But names of peace haue bred worſe then wars, and our confidence hatched the miſerable maſſacre by this perfidious Sauage. And would God a Dale or Smith, or ſome ſuch ſpirit were yet there to take this, that is the onely right courſe, with thoſe which know not to doe right, further for feare of ſuffering it enforceth. Smiths diſcourſe to the Pamaunkies. The Sauages diſſemble their intent. See their vſe of Engliſh Armes. Their excuſe and reconcilement. The loſſe of M. Skriuener and others with a Skiffe. M. Wiffin his iourney to the Preſident.

I ſee you Pamaunkies, the great deſire you haue to cut my throat; and my long ſuffering your iniuries, haue inboldned you to this preſumption. The cauſe I haue forborne your inſolencies, is the promiſe I made you (before the God I ſerue) to be your friend, till you giue mee iuſt cauſe to bee your enemy. If I keepe this vow, my God will keepe me, you cannot hurt me; if I breake it, he will deſtroy me. But if you ſhoot but one Arrow, to ſhed one drop of bloud of any of my men, or ſteale the leaſt of theſe Beades, or Copper (I ſpurne before me with my foot) you ſhall ſee, I will not ceaſe reuenge (if once I begin) ſo long as I can beare where to find one of your Nation that will not deny the name of Pamaunke: I am not now at Raſſeneac (halfe drown'd with mire) where you tooke me priſoner, yet then for keeping promiſe, and your good vſage, and ſauing my life, I ſo affect you, that your denialls of your treacherie, doth halfe perſwade me to miſtake my ſelfe. But if I be the marke you aime at, here I ſtand, ſhoot he that dare. You promiſed to fraught my ſhip ere I departed, and ſo you ſhall, or I meane to load her with your dead carkaſſes; yet if as friends you will come and trade, I once more promiſe not to trouble you, except you giue mee the firſt occaſion. Vpon this away went your Bowes and Arrowes, and men, women, and children brought in their commodities, but two or three houres they ſo thronged about the Preſident, and ſo ouerwearied him, as hee retired himſelfe to reſt, leauing M. Beheathland, and M. Powel to accept their Preſents: but ſome Sauages perceiuing them faſt aſleepe, and the guard careleſly diſperſed, fortie or fiftie of their choice men each with an Engliſh Sword in his hand, began to enter the houſe, with two or three hundred others that preſſed to ſecond them. The noiſe and haſt they made in, did ſo ſhake the houſe, as they awoke him from his ſleepe, and being halfe amazed with this ſudden ſight, betooke him ſtraight to his Sword and Target, M. Craſhaw and ſome other charging in like manner, they thronged faſter backe, then before forward. The houſe thus clenſed, the King and his Ancients, with a long Oration came to excuſe this intruſion. The reſt of the day was ſpent with much kindneſſe, the company againe renuing their Preſents of their beſt prouiſion. And what ſoeuer we gaue them, they ſeemed well contented with it.

Now in the meane while ſince our departure, this hapned at the Fort; M. Scrimener willing to croſſe the ſurprizing of Powhatan; nine daies after the Preſidents departure, would needs viſit the Ile of Hogs, and tooke with him Captaine Waldo (though the Preſident had appointed him to be readie to ſecond his occaſions) with M. Anthony Goſnoll, and eight others; but ſo violent was the wind (that extreame frozen time) that the Boat ſunke, but where or how, none doth know, for they were all drowned; onely this was knowne, that the Skiffe was much ouerladed, and would ſcarce haue liued in that extreame tempeſt, had ſhe beene emptie; but by no perſwaſion he could be diuerted, though both Waldo and a hundred others doubted as it hapned. The Sauages were the firſt that found their bodies, which ſo much the more encouraged them to effect their proiects. To aduertiſe the Preſident of this heauy newes, none could be found would vndertake it, but the iourney was often refuſed of all in the Fort, vntill M. Wiffin vndertooke alone the performance thereof; wherein he was encountred with many dangers and difficulties, and in all parts as he paſſed (as alſo that night he lodged with Powhatan) he perceiued ſuch preparation for warre, that aſſured him, ſome miſchiefe was intended, but with extraordinary bribes, and much trouble, in three daies trauell at length he found vs in the midſt of theſe turmoiles. This vnhappy newes, the Preſident ſwore him to conceale from the reſt, and ſo diſſembling his ſorrow, with the beſt countenance he could, when the night approached, went ſafely aboard with all his company.

Powhatan conſtraineth his men to be treacherous.

Now ſo extreamely Powhatan had threatned the death of his men, if they did not by ſome meanes kill Captaine Smith, that the next day they appointed the Country ſhould come to trade vnarmed: yet vnwilling to be treacherous, but that they were conſtrained, hating fighting, almoſt as ill as hanging, ſuch feare they had of bad ſucceſſe. The next morning the Sunne had not long appeared, but the fields appeared couered with people, and baskets to tempt vs aſhore. The Preſident determined to keepe aboard, but nothing was to be had without his preſence, nor they would not indure the ſight of a Gun: then the Preſident ſeeing many depart, and being vnwilling to loſe ſuch a bootie, ſo well contriued the Pinnace, and his Barges with Ambuſcadoes, as only with M. Perſie, M. Weſt, and M. Ruſſell armed, he went aſhore, others vnarmed hee appointed to receiue what was brought; the Sauages flocked before him in heapes, and (the banke ſeruing as a trench for retreate) he drew them faire open to his Ambuſcadoes, for he not being to be perſwaded to goe to viſit their King, the King came to viſit him with two or three hundred men,

The third attempt to betray vs.

men, in the forme of two halfe Moones, with some twentie men, and many women loaded with great painted baskets; but when they approached somewhat neere vs, their women and children fled, for when they had enuironed and beset the fields in this manner, they thought their purpose sure; yet so trembled with feare, as they were scarce able to nock their Arrowes: Smith standing with his three men readie bent beholding them, till they were within danger of our Ambuscado, who, vpon the word discouered themselues, and hee retiring to the banke: which the Sauages no sooner perceiued, but away they fled, esteeming their heeles for their best aduantage. That night we sent to the Fort M. Crashaw, and M. Ford, who (in the mid-way betweene Werawocomoco and the fort) met foure or fiue of the Dutchmens confederates going to Powhatan, the which (to excuse those Gentlemens suspition of their running to the Sauages returned to the Fort and there continued.

The Sauages hearing our Barge depart in the night were so terribly affraide, that wee sent for more men (wee hauing so much threatned their ruine, and the rasing of their Houses, Boates, and Canowes), that the next day the King, sent our Captaine a Chaine of Pearle to alter his purpose, and stay his men, promising (though they wanted themselues) to fraught our ship, and bring it aboard to auoid suspition; so that fiue or sixe daies after, from all parts of the Countrey within ten or twelue miles, in the extreame cold Frost, and Snow, they brought vs prouision on their naked backes. A Chaine of Pearle sent to obtaine peace.

Yet notwithstanding this kindnesse and trade, had their art and poison beene sufficient, the President with Master West and some others had beene poysoned: it made them sicke, but expelled it selfe, Wecuttanow a stout young fellow, knowing hee was suspected for bringing this present of poison, with fortie or fiftie of his choice companions (seeing the President but with a few men at Potauquat) so proudly brawed it, as though hee expected to incounter a reuenge: which the President perceiuing, in the midst of his company did not onely beat, but spurned him like a dogge, as scorning to doe him any worse mischiefe: whereupon all of them fled into the Woods, thinking they had done a great matter, to haue so well escaped: and the Townsmen remayning, presently fraughted our Barge, to bee rid of our companies, framing many excuses to excuse Wecuttanow (being sonne to their chiefe King, but Powhatan) and told vs, if wee would shew them him that brought the poyson, they would deliuer him to vs to punish as wee pleased. The President poysoned. The offender punished.

Men may thinke it strange there should bee this stirre for a little Corne, but had it beene Gold with more ease wee might haue got it: and had it wanted, the whole Colony had starued. Wee may bee thought verie patient, to indure all those iniuries; yet onely with fearing them, wee got what they had. Whereas if wee had taken reuenge, then by their losse wee should haue lost our selues. We searched all the Countries of Tough-tanund and Mattapamient, where the people imparted that little they had, with such complaints and teares from women and children; as hee had beene too cruell to bee a Christian that would not haue beene satisfied, and moued with compassion. But this happened in October, Nouember, and December, when that vnhappy discouerie of Monacan was made, wee might haue fraughted a Ship of fortie Tunnes, and twice as much might haue beene had from the Riuers of Toppahanock, Patawomeck, and Pawtuxunt. The maine occasion of our temporizing with the Sauages was to part friendes (as wee did) to giue the lesse cause of suspition to Powhatan, to flye: by whom wee now returned, with a purpose to haue surprised him and his prouision: for effecting whereof (when wee came against the Towne) the President sent Master Wiffin and Master Coe, a shoare to discouer and make way for his intended proiect. But they found that those damned Dutchmen had caused Powhatan to abandon his new house, and Werawocomoco, and to carrie away all his Corne and prouision; and the people they found by their meanes so ill affected, that had they not stood well vpon their guard, they had hardly escaped with their liues. So the President finding his intention thus frustrated, and that there was nothing now to bee had, and therefore an vnfit time to reuenge their abuses, held on the course for Iames Towne; wee hauing in this iourney (for fiue and twentie pound of Copper, fiftie pound of Iron and Beades) kept fortie men sixe weekes, and daily feasted with Bread, Corne, Flesh, Fish, and Fowle, euery man hauing for his reward (and in consideration of his commodities) a months prouision (no trade being allowed but for the store) and wee deliuered at Iames Towne to the Cape-Merchant two hundred seuentie nine bushels of Corne. The Sauage want and pouertie. The Dutchmen did much hurt.

WHen the ships departed, all the prouision of store (but that the President had gotten) was so rotten with the last Summers Raine, and eaten with Rats and Wormes, as the Hogges would scarcely eate it, yet it was the Souldiers Diet, till our returnes: so that we found nothing done, but victuall spent, and the most part of our Tooles, and a good part of our Armes conueyed to the Sauages. But now, casting vp the store, and finding sufficient till the next Harueſt, the feare of staruing was abandoned; and the Company diuided into tennes, fifteenes, or as the busines required foure houres each day was spent in work, the rest in pastimes and merrie exercise. The Dutchmens Consorts so closely still conuaid Powder, Shot, Swords, and Tooles, that though How the Sauages became subiect to the English. Chap. 10.

The Dutchmens plot to murder Cap. Smith.

though wee could find the defect, we could not find by whom it was occasioned, till it was too late. All this time the Dutchmen remayning with Powhatan, receiued them, instructing the Sauages their vse. But their Consorts not following them as they expected (to know the cause, they sent Francis their companion (a stout young fellow) diguised Sauage like) to the Glasse-house (a place in the Woods neere a mile from Iames Towne) where was the randeuoze for all their vnsuspected villany; fortie men they procured of Powhatan to lie in Ambuscadoe for Captaine Smith, who no sooner heard of this Dutchman, but he sent to apprehend him, who found he was gone, yet to crosse his returne to Powhatan, Captaine Smith presently dispatched twenty shot after him, and then returning but from the Glasse-house alone, he incountred the King of Pasp- heigh, a most strong stout Sauage, whose perswasions not being able to perswade him to his ambush, seeing him only armed but with a Fauchion, attempted to haue shot him; but the President preuented his shot by grapling with him, and the Sauage as well preuented him for drawing his Fauchion, and perforce bore him into the Riuer to haue drowned him; long they struggled in the water, from whence the King perceiuing two of the Poles vpon the sands would haue fled; but the President held him by the haire and throat till the Poles came in; then seeing how pittifully the poore Sauage begged his life, they conducted him prisoner to the Fort. The Dutchman ere long was also brought in, whose Villany, though all this time it was suspected, yet he fained such a formall excuse, that for want of Language, Winne had not rightly vnderstood them, and for their dealings with Powhatan, that to saue their liues they were constrained to accomodate his armes, of whom he extremely complained to haue detained them perforce; and that hee made this escape with the hazard of his life, and meant not to haue returned, but only walked in the woods to gather Walnuts: yet for all this faire Tale (there was so small appearance of truth) hee went by the heeles; the King also he put fetters; purposing to regaine the Dutchmen, by the sauing his life; the poore Sauage did his best, by his daily Messengers to Powhatan, but all returned that the Dutchmen would not returne, neither did Powhatan stay them, and to bring them fiftie miles on their backes they were not able. Daily this Kings Wiues, children, and people, came to visit him with Presents, which he liberally bestowed to make his peace, much trust they had in the Presidents promise, but the King finding his Guard negligent (though fettered) yet escaped; Captaine Winne thinking to pursue him, found such troupes of Sauages to hinder his passages, as they exchanged many volies of shot for flight of Arrowes. Captaine Smith hearing of this, in returning to the Fort tooke two Sauages Prisoners, the one called Kemps, the other Kinsock, the two most exact Villaines in the Countrey; with those, Captaine Winne and fiftie chosen men attempted that night to haue regained the King, and reuenged his iniurie (and so had doue if he had followed his directions, or beene aduised by those two Villaines, that would haue betrayed both their King and Kindred for a piece of Copper) but hee trifling away the night, the Sauages the next morning by the rising of the Sunne, braued him to come ashore to fight, a good time both sides let flie at other, but we heard of no hurt, only they tooke two Canoaes, burnt the Kings House and so returned.

Smith taketh the King of Paspaheigh prisoner.

The Sauages desire peace.

The President fearing those brauadoes, would but incourage the Sauages, begunne himselfe to trie his conclusions; whereby sixe or seuen Sauages were slaine, as many made Prisoners; burnt their Houses, tooke their Boats with all their fishing weares, and planted them at Iames Towne for his owne vse; and now resolued not to ceasse till hee had reuenged himselfe vpon all that had iniured him, but in his iourney passing by Paspaheigh towards Chickahamina, the Sauages did their best to draw him to their Ambuscadoes; but seeing him regardlesly passe their Countrey, all shewed themselues in their braueste manner, to try their valours; he could not but flie, and ere hee could land, the Sauages no sooner knew him, but they threw downe their Armes and desired Peace; their Orator was a stout young man called Ocanindge, whose worthy Discourse deser-eth to be remembred; and this it was.

Ocanindge his Oration.

Captaine Smith, my Master is here present in this companie thinking it Captaine Winne, and not you; and of him he intended to haue beene reuenged, hauing neuer offended him: if he haue offended you in escaping your imprisonment; the Fishes swimme, the Fowles flie, and the verie Beasts striue to escape the snare and line; then blame not him being a man; he would entreate you remember, your being a prisoner, what paines hee tooke to saue your life; if since hee hath iniured you, hee was compelled to it; but howsoeuer, you haue reuenged it with our too great losse; we perceiue and well know you intend to destroy vs, that are here to intreat and desire your friendship, and to enioy our houses and plant our fields, of whose fruit you shall participate, otherwise you will haue the worst by our absence, for we can plant any where, though with more labour, and we know you cannot liue if you want our Harueste, and that reliefe we bring you; if you promise vs peace we will beleeue you, if you proceed in reuenge, we will abandon the Countrie. Vpon these tearmes the President promised them peace, till they did vs iniurie, vpon condition they should bring in prouision, so all departed good friends, and so continued till Smith left the Countrey.

A Sauage smothered at Iames Towne, and was recouered.

Arriuing at Iames Towne, complaint was made to the President that the Chickahaminos, who all this while continued Trade, and seemed our friends by colour thereof were the only Theeues, and amongst other things, a Pistoll being stolne, and the Theife fled, there was apprehended two proper proper young fellowes that were brothers, knowne to be his confederates. Now to regaine this Pistoll, the one we imprisoned, the other was sent to returne againe within twelue houres, or his brother to be hanged, yet the President pitying the poore naked Sauage in the dungeon, sent him victuall and some Char-cole for fire; ere midnight his brother returned with the Pistoll, but the Sauage in the dungeon was so smothered with the smoake hee had made, and so piteously burnt, that he found him dead, the other most lamentably bewailed his death, and brake forth in such bitter agonies, that the President (to quiet him) told him that if hereafter they would not steale, he would make him aliue againe, but little thought he could be recouered, yet (we doing our best with Aquauitæ and Vineger) it pleased God to restore him againe to life, but so drunke and affrighted that he seemed lunaticke, not vnderstanding any thing he spoke or heard, the which as much grieued and tormented the other, as before to see him dead; of which maladie (vpon promise of their good behauiour afterward) the President promised to recouer him; and so caused him to be laid by a fire to sleepe, who in the morning (hauing well slept) had recouered his perfect senses; and then being dressed of his burning, and each a piece of Copper giuen them, they went away so well contented, that this was spread amongst all the Sauages for a Miracle, that Captaine Smith could make a man aliue that is dead. These and many other such pretie accidents, so amazed and affrighted both Powhatan and all his people that from all parts with presents they desired peace, returning many stolne things which wee neither demanded nor thought of. And after that, those that were taken stealing (both Powhatan and his people) hath sent them backe to Iames Towne to receiue their punishment, and all the Countrie became absolutely as free for vs, as for themselues.

Charcole-smoke an vnfit murtherer by ouersight, where no vent is left to it.

Perhaps the Iesuites wits haue (besides meere lies) hatched many of their Indian Miracles from as vnlikely egs as this by conioyning industrie and opportunitie.

Powhatan desireth peace.

NOw wee so quietly followed our businesse, that in three moneths wee made three or foure last of Pitch and Tarre, and Sope-ashes, produced a triall of Glasse, made a Well in the Fort of excellent sweet water (which till then was wanting) built some twenty houses, recouered our Church, prouided Nets and wares for fishing (and to stop the disorders of our disorderly theeues and the Sauages) built a Blocke-house in the necke of our Ile, kept by a garrison to entertaine the Sauages trade, and none to passe nor repasse, Sauage, nor Christian, with out the Presidents order; thirty or forty acres of ground we digged, and planted; of three Sowes in one yeare increased sixty and odde Pigges, and neere fiue hundred Chickens brought vp themselues (without hauing any meate giuen them) but the Hogges were transported to Hogge Ile, where also we built a Blocke-house with a Garrison, to giue vs notice of any shipping, and for their exercise they made Clap-board, Wainscot, and cut downe Trees against the ships comming. Wee built also a Fort for a retreat, neere a conuenient Riuer vpon a high commanding Hill, very hard to be assaulted, and easie to be defended; but ere it was halfe finished, this defect caused a stay; in searching our Casked Corne, wee found it halfe rotten, the rest so consumed with the many thousand Rattes (increased first from the ships) that wee knew not how to keepe that little wee had. This did driue vs all to our wits end, for there was nothing in the Countrey but what Nature affoorded, vntill this time Keinps and Tassore, were fettered Prisoners, and daily wrought, and taught vs how to order and plant our fields. Whom now (for want of victuall) we set at libertie, but so well were they vsed, that they little desired it; and to expresse their loues, for sixteene dayes continuance, the Countrey brought vs (when least) one hundred a day of Squirrils, Turkeyes, Deare, and other wilde Beasts; but this want of Corne occasioned the end of all our workes, it beeing worke sufficient to prouide victuall, fortie or eightie with Ensigne Laxon, were sent downe the Riuer to liue vpon Oysters, and twentie with Lieutenant Percie to try for fishing at Point Comfort, but in sixe weekes, they would not agree once to cast out their Net. Master West with as many went vp to the Falls, but nothing could be found but a few Berries and Acornes; of that in the store euery one had their equall proportion. Till this present (by the hazard and endeauour of some thirtie or fortie) this whole number had euer bin fed. We had more Sturgeon then could be deuoured by Dogge and Man; of which the industrious, by drying and pownding, mingled with Cauiare, Sorrell, and other wholsome hearbs, would make Bread and Meate; others would gather as much Tockwough Roots in a day, as would make them Bread a Weeke, so that of those wilde Fruites, Fish, and Berries, these liued very well (in regard of such a Diet) but such was the most strange condition of some one hundred and fiftie, that had they not beene forced to gather and prepare their victuall they would all haue starued, and haue eaten one another: of those wilde fruites the Sauages often brought vs: and for that the President would not fulfill the vnreasonable desire of those distracted lubberly Gluttons to sell, not only our Kettles, Howes, Tooles, and Iron, nay Swords, Peeces, and the very Ordnance, and Houses (might they haue preuailed but to haue beene but idle) for those Sauage fruites they would haue imparted all to the Sauages, especially for one basket of Corne they heard of, to bee at Powhatans, fiftie miles from our Fort, though hee brought neere halfe of it to satisfie their humours, yet to haue had the other halfe, they would haue sold their soules (though not sufficient to haue kept them a Weeke) thousands were their exclamations, suggestions, and deuises, to force him to those base

Rat-plague.

The paines of [illegible]

Basenesse of idlenesse.

Their desire to destroy themselues.

Inuentions, to haue made it an occasion to abandon the Countrey. Want perforce constrayned him to indure their exclayming follies till hee found out the Author, one Dyer, a most craftie Knaue, and his ancient maligner, whome hee worthily punished, and with the rest hee argued the case in this manner. Fellow Souldiers, I did little thinke any so false to report, or so many so simple to bee perswaded, that I either intend to starue you, or that Powhatan (at this present) hath Corne for himselfe, much lesse for you; or that I would not haue it, if I knew where it were to be had. Neither did I thinke any so malicious as now I see a great many, yet it shall not so much passionate mee, but I will doe my best for my worst maligner. But dreame no longer of this vaine hope from Powhatan, nor that I will longer forbeare to force you from your idlenesse, and punish you if you raile, you cannot denie but that by the hazard of my life, many a time I haue saued yours, when, might your owne wills haue preuailed, you would haue starued, and will doe still whether I will or no. But I protest by that God that made me, since necessitie hath not power to force you to gather for your selues those fruits the Earth doth yeeld, you shall not only gather for your selues, but for those that are sicke: as yet I neuer had more from the store then the worst of you; and all my English extraordinary prouision that I haue, you shall see me deuide among the sicke. And this Sauage trash, you so scornfully repine at, being put in your mouthes your stomacks can digest it, and therefore I will take a course you shall prouide it. The sicke shall not starue, but equally share of all our labours, and euery one that gathereth not euery day as much I doe, the next day shall be set beyond the Riuer, and for euer be banished from the Fort, and liue there or starue.

The Presidents Speech to the Drones.

This order many murmured, was very cruell, but it caused the most part so well bestirre themselues, that of two hundred men (except they were drowned) there died not past seuen or eight. As for Captaine Winne, and Master Ley, they died ere this want happened, and the rest died not for want of such as preserued the rest. Many were billitted among the Sauages, whereby we knew all their passages, fields, and habitations, how to gather and vse their fruits, as well as themselues. So well those poore Sauages vsed vs (that were thus Billited) as diuers of the Souldiers ranne away, to search Kemps our old prisoner. Glad was this Sauage to haue such an occasion to testifie his loue, for insteed of entertayning them, and such things as they had stolne with all the great offers and promises they made them, to reuenge their iniuries vpon Captaine Smith. First hee made himselfe sport, in shewing his Countrimen (by them) how hee was vsed; feeding them with this Law, Who would not worke must not eate, till they were neere starued, continually threatning to beate them to death, neither could they get from him, till perforce he brought them to our Captaine; that so we contented him, and punished them: as many others that intended also to haue followed them, were rather contented to labour at home, then aduenture to liue idle among the Sauages (of whom there was more hope to make better Christians and good subiects, then the one halfe of those that counterfeited themselues both) For so affraid were all those Kings and the better sort of their people, to displease vs, that some of the baser sort that wee haue extreamely hurt and punished for their villanies, would hire vs that wee should not tell it to their Kings or Countrimen, who would also repunish them, and yet returne them to Iames Towne to content the President, by that testimonie of their loues.

But 7. of 200. died in two moneths.

The Sauages returne our Fugitiues.

Master Sicklemore well returned from Chawonock, but found little hope and lesse certaintie of them which had beene left by Sir Walter Rawley. So that Nathaniell Powell and Anas Todkill, were also, by the Quiyoughquohanocks, conducted to the Mangoages to search them there. But nothing could we learne but they were all dead. This honest, proper, good-promise-keeping King, of all the rest did euer best affect vs, and though to his false Gods hee was yet very zealous, yet he would confesse, our God as much exceeded his, as our Guns did his Bow and Arrowes, often sending our President many Presents to pray to his God for rain, or his corn would perish, for his Gods were angrie all this time. To reclaime the Dutchmen, and one Bentley another Fugitiue, we imployed one William Volda, (a Switzer by birth) with pardons and promises to regain them. Little we then suspected this double villanie of any villany, who plainly taught vs, in the most trust was the greatest Treason. For this wicked Hypocrite, by the seeming hate hee bore to the lewd condition of his cursed Countrimen, hauing this opportunitie by his imployment to regaine them, conueighed them euery thing they desired to effect their project to destroy the Colonie. With much deuotion they expected the Spaniard, to whom they intended to haue done good seruice. But to begin with the first opportunitie, they seeing necessitie thus inforced vs to disperse our selues, importuned Powhatan to lend them but his forces, and they would not only destroy our Hogges, fire our Towne, and betray our Pinnasse; but bring to his seruice and subiection the most part of our companies. With this plot they had acquainted many discontents, and many were agreed to their deuillish practise. But one Thomas Douese and Thomas Mallard (whose Christian hearts much relenting at such an vnchristian act) voluntarily reuealed it to Captaine Smith: who did his best it might be concealed, perswading Douese and Mallard to proceed in the confederacie: only to bring the irreclamable Dutchmen, and inconstant Sauages in such a manner amongst his Ambuscadoes, as hee had prepared, as not many of them should euer haue returned from out our Peninsula.

Search for them sent by Sir W. Rawlew. Powhatan confessed that hee had bin at the murther of that Colonie: and shewed to Cap. Smith a Musket barrell and a brasse Morter, and certaine peeces of Iron which had bin theirs.

The Dutchmens trayterous proiects.

But

But this brute comming to the eares of the impatient multitude, they so importuned the President to cut off those Dutchmen, as amongst many that offered to cut their throats before the face of Powhatan, Master Wiffin and Iefra Abbot were sent to stabbe or shoote them; but these Dutchmen made such excuses accusing Voldav whom they supposed had reuealed their proiect, as Abbot would not, yet Wiffin would, perceiuing it but deceit. The King vnderstanding of this their imployment, sent presently his Messengers to Captaine Smith, to signifie it was not his fault to detayne them, nor hinder his men from executing his command, nor did hee nor would he maintaine them, or any to occasion his displeasure. But ere this businesse was brought to a point, God hauing seene our misery sufficient, sent in Captaine Argall to fish for Sturgeon with a ship well furnished with Wine and Bisket, which though it was not sent vs, such were our occasions we tooke it at a price, but left him sufficient to returne for England, till dissembling Valdo his villany, but certainly he had not escaped had the President continued.

Two Gentlemen sent to kil them.

Notwithstanding this Valdo comming for England, pretending to the Company what rich Mynes he had found, for which he was verie much fauoured, rewarded and respected, but returning with the Lord La-ware, he could not performe any thing hee promised, And thus also hauing cousened them all, died both basely and miserably. For the rest of his Consorts vpon the arriuall of the Lord La-ware, whom they highly recommended to Powhatan, promising what great wonders they would worke with his Lordship, would be giue them leaue to goe to him, but when he saw they would be gone, he replied, as you would haue betrayed Captaine Smith to me, so will you me to this Lord, for you that would be so false to him, cannot be true to me, so caused his men to beat out their braines, as the Sauages reported to diuers that came from thence.

Cap. Smith.

TO redresse those iarres and ill proceedings, the Councell in England altered the gouernment and deuolued the authoritie to the Lord De-la-ware. Who for his Deputie, sent Sir Thomas Gates, and Sir George Somers, with nine ships and fiue hundred persons: they set saile from England in May 1609. a small Catch perished at Sea in a Hericano. The Admirall, with 150. men, with the two Knights, and their new Commission, their Bils of loading with all manner of directions, and the most part of their prouision arriued not. With the other seuen (as Captaines) arriued Ratliffe (whose right name was Sickelmore) Martin, and Archer. Who as they had beene troublesome at Sea, began againe to marre all ashore. For though, as is said, they were formerly deposed and sent for England, yet now returning againe, graced by the title of Captaines of the passengers, seeing the Admirall wanting, and great probabilitie of her losse: strengthned themselues with those new Companies, so railing and exclayming against Captaine Smith, that they mortally hated him, ere euer they saw him. Who vnderstanding by his Scowts, the arriuall of such a fleet (little dreaming of any such supply) supposing them Spaniards, he so determined and ordered his affaires, as we little feared their arriuall, nor the successe of our encounter, nor were the Sauages any way negligent or vnwilling, to aide and assist vs with their best power, had it so beene, we had beene happy. For we would not haue trusted them but as our foes, whereas receiuing those as our Countrimen and friends, they did their best to murder our President, to surprize the store, the Fort, and our Lodgings, to vsurpe the gouernment, and make vs all their seruants and slaues to our owne merit. To a thousand mischiefes those lewd Captaines led this lewd company, wherein were many vnruly Gallants packed thether by their friends to escape ill Destinies, and those would dispose and determine of the gouernment, sometimes one, the next day another, to day the old Commission, to morrow the new, the next day by neither. In fine, they would rule all or ruine all; yet in Charitie wee must endure them thus to destroy vs, or by correcting their follies, haue brought the Worlds censure vpon vs to haue beene guiltie of their bloods. Happie had we beene had they neuer arriued; and wee for euer abandoned, and (as wee were) left to our fortunes, for on Earth was neuer more confusion, or misery, then their factions occasioned.

The arriuall of the third supply. Chap. 12.
The alteration of the gouernment.
The losse of Virginia.
The Sauages offer to fight vnder our colours.
Mutinies.

The President seeing the desire those Braues had to rule, seeing how his authoritie was so vnexpectedly changed, would willingly haue left all and returned for England, but seeing there was small hope this new Commission would arriue, longer hee would not suffer those factious spirits to proceed. It would be too tedious, too strange, and almost incredible, should I particularly relate the infinite dangers, plots, and practises, hee daily escaped amongst this factious crue, the chiefe whereof hee quickly laid by the heeles, till his leasure better serued to doe them iustice, and to take away all occasions of further mischiefe, Master Percie had his request granted to returne for England, and Master West with one hundred and twentie went to plant at the Falls, Martin with neere as many to Nansamund, with their due proportions of all prouisions, according to their numbers.

The planting Nansamund.
A plantation of the fals.

Now the Presidents yeere being neere expired, he made Martin President, who knowing his owne insufficiencie, and the Companies scorne and conceit of his vnworthinesse, within three houres resigned it againe to Captaine Smith, and at Nansamund thus proceeded. The people being Contributors vsed him kindly: yet such was his iealous feare, and cowardize in the midst of his mirth, he did surprize this poore naked King, with his Monuments, Houses, and the Ile hee in-inhabited; and there fortified himselfe, but so apparantly distracted with feare, as imboldned the Sauages to assault him, kill his men, redeeme their King, gather and carrie away more then one thousand bushels of Corne, he not once daring to intercept them. But sent to the President then at the Falls for thirtie good shot, which from Iames Towne immediatly were sent him, but he so well imployed them, as they did iust nothing, but returned, complayning of his childishnesse, that with them fled from his company, and so left them to their fortunes.

The breach of peace with the Sauages.

Master West hauing seated his men at the Falls, presently returned to reuisit Iames Towne, the President met him by the way as hee followed him to the Falls: where hee found this Company inconsiderately seated, in a place not only subiect to the Riuers inundation, but round inuironed with many intollerable inconueniences. For remedy whereof, hee sent presently to Powhatan, to sell him the place called Powhatan, promising to defend him against the Monacans, and these should be his conditions (with his people) to resigne him the Fort and Houses, and all that Countrey for a proportion of Copper: that all stealing offenders should bee sent him, there to receiue their punishment: that euery House as a custome should pay him a bushell of Corne for an inch square of Copper, and a proportion of Pocones as a yeerely Tribute to King Iames, for their protection as a dutie: what else they could spare to barter at their best discretion.

Powhatan sold for Copper.

But both this excellent place and those good conditions did those furies refuse, contemning both him, his kinde care and authoritie, the worst they could to shew their spight, they did. I doe more then wonder to thinke how only with fiue men, hee either durst, or would aduenture as he did (knowing how greedie they were of his bloud) to land amongst them, and commit to imprisonment the greatest spirits amongst them, till by their multitudes being one hundred and twentie, they forced him to retire, yet in that retreat he surprized one of the Boats, wherewith he returned to their ship, wherein was their prouisions, which also he tooke. And well it chanced he found the Mariners so tractable and constant, or there had beene small possibilitie hee had euer escaped. Notwithstanding there were many of the best, I meane, of the most worthy in iudgement, reason or experience, that from their first landing hearing the generall good report of his old Souldiers, and seeing with their eyes his actions so well mannaged with discretion, as Captaine Wood, Captaine Web, Captaine Moone, Captaine Phitz-Iames, Master Partridge, Master White, Master Powell, and diuers others; when they perceiued the malice and condition of Ratcliffe, Martin, and Archer, left their factions; and euer rested his faithfull friend: But the worst was, the poore Sauages that daily brought in their contribution to the President, that disorderly company so tormented those poore naked soules, by stealing their Corne, robbing their Gardens, beating them, breaking their Houses, and keeping some prisoners; that they daily complayned to Captaine Smith, hee had brought them for Protectors worse enemies then the Monacans themselues, which though till then (for his loue) they had indured: they desired pardon, if hereafter they defended themselues, since hee would not correct them, as they had long expected he would: so much they importuned him to punish their misdemeanours, as they offered (if he would conduct them) to fight for him against them. But hauing spent nine dayes in seeking to reclaime them, shewing them how much they did abuse themselues, with their great gilded hopes, of Seas, Mynes, Commodities, or Victories they so madly conceiued. Then (seeing nothing would preuaile with them) hee set saile for Iames Towne: now no sooner was the ship vnder saile but the Sauages assaulted those one hundred and twentie in their Fort, finding some straggling abroad in the Woods they slue many, and so affrighted the rest, as their prisoners escaped, and they scarce retyred, with the Swords and Clokes, of these they had slaine. But ere we had sailed a league our ship grounding, gaue vs once more libertie to summon them to a parlie Where we found them all so strangely amazed with this poore simple assault, as they submitted themselues vpon any tearmes to the Presidents mercy. Who presently put by the heeles six or seuen of the chiefe offenders, the rest he seated gallantly at Powhatan, in their Sauage Fort they built and pretily fortified with Poles and Barkes of Trees sufficient to haue defended them from all their Sauages in Virginia, dry Houses for Lodgings three hundred Acres of ground readie to plant, and no place so strong, so pleasant and delightfull in Virginia, for which wee called it None-such. The Sauages also he presently appeased; redeliuering to euery one their former losses. Thus all were friends, new Officers appointed to command, and the President againe ready to depart. But at that instant arriued Master VVest, whose good nature with the perswasions and compassion of those mutinous prisoners was so much abused, that to regaine their old shops new turmoyles arose. For the rest being possessed of all their Victuall, Munition, and euery thing, they grow to that height in their former factions, as there the President left them to their Fortunes, they returning againe to the open Aire at VVest Fort, abandoning Nonsuch, and hee to Iames Towne with his best Expedition, but this happened him in that Iourney.

Mutinies.

Fiue suppresse 120.

The breach of peace with the Sauages at the Falls.

An assault by the Sauages.

The planting of Nonsuch. New peace concluded.

Sleeping in his Boat (for the Ship was returned two dayes before) accidentally, one fired his Powder-bag, which tore his flesh from his bodie and thighes, nine or ten inches square in a most pittifull manner: but to quench the tormenting fire, frying him in his clothes, hee leaped ouerboard into the deepe Riuer, where ere they could recouer him hee was neere drowned. In this estate,

Cap. Smith blowne vp with powder.

Digitized by Google

estate, without either Chirurgion, or Chirurgerie he was to goe neere one hundred miles. Arriuing at Iames Towne, causing all things to be prepared for Peace or Warres to obtaine prouision, whileſt thoſe things were prouiding, Martin, Ratcliffe, and Archer, being to haue their trialls, their guiltie conſciences fearing a iuſt reward for their deſerts, ſeeing the Preſident vnable to ſtand, and neere bereft of his ſenſes by reaſon of his torment, they had plotted to haue murdered him in his bed. But his heart did faile him that ſhould haue giuen fire to that mercileſſe Piſtoll: So, not finding that courſe to be the beſt, they ioyned together to vſurpe the gouernment, thereby to eſcape their puniſhment, and excuſe themſelues by accuſing him. The Preſident had notice of their proiects: the which to withſtand, though his old Souldiers importuned him, but to permit them to take off their heads that would reſiſt his command, yet he would not permit them: but ſent for the Maſters of ſhips, and tooke order with them for his returne for England. Seeing their was neither Chirurgion, nor Chirurgery in the Fort to cure his hurt, and the ſhips to depart the next day, his Commiſſion to be ſuppreſſed hee knew not why, himſelfe and Souldiers to bee rewarded he knew not how, and a new Commiſſion granted they knew not to whom, the which ſo diſabled that authoritie he had, as made them preſume ſo oft to thoſe mutinies and factions as they did. Beſides, ſo grieuous was his wounds, and ſo cruell his torment, few expected he could liue, nor was he able to follow his buſineſſe to regaine what they had loſt, ſuppreſſe thoſe factions, and range the Countries for prouiſion as he intended, and well he knew thoſe affaires his owne actions and preſence was as requiſite as his experience, and directions, which now could not be, hee went preſently aboard, reſoluing there to appoint them gouernours, and to take order for the mutiners and their confederates. Who ſeeing him gone, perſwaded Maſter Perſie to ſtay and be their Preſident, and within leſſe then an houre was this mutation begun & concluded. For when the Company vnderſtood Smith would leaue them, and ſee the reſt in Armes called Preſidents and Councellors, diuers began to fawne on thoſe new Commanders, that now bent all their wits to get him reſigne them his Commiſſion, who after many ſalt and bitter repulſes, that their confuſion ſhould not bee attributed to him, for leauing the Country without gouernment and authoritie; hauing taken order to be free from danger of their malice; he was not vnwilling they ſhould ſteale it from him, but neuer conſented to deliuer it to any.

A bloudy intent.

The gouernment vſurped.

The cauſes why Smith left the Countrie and his Commiſſion.

Leauing vs thus, with three Ships, ſeuen Boats, commodities readie to trade, the Harueſt newly gathered, ten weekes prouiſion in the ſtore, foure hundred nintie and odde perſons, foure and twentie Peeces of Ordnance, three hundred Muskets, Snaphanches, and fire-lockes, Shot, Powder, and match ſufficient, Curats, Pikes, Swords, and Morions more then men: the Sauages their language and habitations well knowne to one hundred well trained and expert Souldiers: Nets for Fiſhing, Tooles of all ſorts to worke, Apparell to ſupply our wants, ſixe Mares, and a Horſe, fiue or ſixe hundred Swine, as many Hennes and Chickens; ſome Goates, ſome Sheepe, what was brought or bred there remained: but they regarded nothing but from hand to mouth, to conſume what wee had, tooke care for nothing but to perfit ſome colourable complaints againſt Captaine Smith, for effecting whereof, three weekes longer they ſtaied the ſixe Ships till they could produce them. That time and charge might much better haue beene ſpent, but it ſuted well with the reſt of their diſcretions. Now all theſe which Smith had either whipped, puniſhed, or any way diſgraced, had free power and libertie to ſay or ſweare any thing, and from a whole armefull of their examination, this was concluded:

The Theft of the Colony, when C. Smith left it. Prouiſions left

Their complaints and proofe againſt him.

The Mutiners at The Falls, complained he cauſed the Sauages to aſſault them, for that he would not reuenge their loſſe, they being but one hundred and twentie, and hee fiue men and himſelfe, and this they proued by the oath of one hee had oft whipped for periury and pilfering. The Dutch-men that hee had appointed to be ſtab'd for their treacheries, ſwore he ſent to poiſon them with Rats-bane. The prudent Councell, that he would not ſubmit himſelfe to their ſtolne authoritie. Coe and Dyer, that ſhould haue murdered him, were highly preferred for ſwearing, they heard one ſay, he heard Powhatan ſay, That hee heard a man ſay: if the King would not ſend that Corne hee had, hee ſhould not long enioy his Copper Crowne, nor thoſe Robes hee had ſent him: yet theſe alſo ſwore he might haue had Corne for Tooles, but would not. The truth was, Smith had no ſuch Engines as the King demanded, nor Powhatan any Corne. Yet this argued he would ſtarue them. Others complained hee would not let them reſt in the Fort (to ſtarue) but forced them to the Oyſter Bankes to liue or ſtarue, as hee liued himſelfe. For though hee had of his owne priuate prouiſions ſent from England, ſufficient: yet hee gaue it all away to the weake and ſicke, cauſing the moſt vntoward (by doing as he did) to gather their food from the vnknowne parts of the Riuers and Woods, that they liued (though hardly) that otherwayes would haue ſtarued, ere they would haue left their beds, or at the moſt the ſight of Iames Towne to haue got their owne victuall. Some propheticall ſpirit calculated he had the Sauages in ſuch ſubiection, he would haue made himſelfe a King, by marrying Pocahontas, Powhatans daughter. It is true, ſhe was the very nonpareil of his Kingdome, and at moſt not paſt thirteene or fourteene yeeres of age. Very oft ſhe came to our Fort, with what ſhee could get for Captaine Smith, that euer loued and vſed all the Country well, but her eſpecially hee euer much reſpected: and ſhee ſo well requited it, that when her father intended to haue ſurpriſed him, ſhe by ſtealth in the darke night came through the wild Woods and told him of it. But her marriage could no way haue entitled him by any right to the Kingdome, nor was it euer ſuſpected he had euer ſuch a thought, or more regarded her, or any of them, then in honeſt reaſon and diſcretion he might. If he would he might haue married her, or haue done what him liſted. For there was none that could haue hindred his determination.

Pocahontas, Powhatans daughter, her kindneſſe to C. Smith.

Digitized by Google

mination. Some that knew not any thing to say, the Councell instructed, and aduised what to sweare. So diligent they were in this businesse, that what any could remember, he had euer done, or said in mirth, or passion, by some circumstantiall oath, it was applyed to their fittest vse, yet not past eight or nine could say much, and that nothing but circumstances, which all men did know was most false and vntrue. Many got their Passes, by promising in England to say much against him. Instead of accusing him, I haue neuer heard any giue him a better report, then many of those witnesses themselues that were sent only home to testifie against him. Richard Pots, W. P.

The planting at Point Comfort.

The day before the Ships departed, C. Davis arriued in a small Pinnace, with some sixteene proper men more: to those were added a company from Iames Towne, vnder the command of Captaine Ratcliffe, to inhabite Point-Comfort. Martin, and Master West hauing lost their Boats, and neere halfe their men amongst the Sauages, were returned to Iames Towne. For the Sauages no sooner vnderstood of Captaine Smiths losse, but they all reuolted, and did murder and spoile all they could encounter. Now were wee all constrained to liue onely of that which Smith had onely for his owne company, for the rest had consumed their proportions. And now haue wee twentie Presidents, with all their appurtenances, for Master Persie was so sicke he could not goe nor stand. But ere all was consumed, Master West, and Ratliffe, each with a Pinnace, and thirtie or fortie men well appointed, sought abroad to trade, and vpon confidence of Powhatan, Ratliffe and his men were slaine, onely Ieffery Shortridge escaped, and Pochahuntas the Kings daughter saued a boy, called Henry Spelman, who liued many yeeres after by her meanes amongst the Patawomekes. Powhatan still as hee found meanes, cut off their Boats and denied them trade. And Master West finding little better successe, set saile for England. Now we all found the want of Captaine Smith, yea his greatest maligners could then curse his losse. Now for corne, prouision, and contribution from the Sauages; wee had nothing but mortall wounds with Clubs and Arrowes. As for our Hogs, Goats, Sheepe, Horse, or what liued, our Commanders and Officers did daily consume them: some small proportions (sometimes) wee tasted till all was deuoured, then Swords, Arrowes, Peeces, or any thing we traded to the Sauages, whose bloudy fingers were so imbrued in our blouds, that what by their crueltie, our Gouernours indiscretion, and the losse of our Ships: Of fiue hundred within sixe moneths, after there remained not any more then sixtie most miserable and poore creatures. It were to vild to say what wee endured, Life was now preserued by Roots, Herbs, Acornes, Walnuts, Berries, now and then a little Fish, and Starch by such as had any. A Sauage slaine and buried, is said to haue beene taken vp by the poorer and eaten: which is reported also to haue hapned to others of their owne. A report was that one slew his wife, and had eaten part of her: this is by others denied, the murther acknowledged, and he iustly executed for that parricide.

Ratliffe alias Sicklemore slain by Powhatan.

The occasion of these miseries was onely our owne, for want of prouidence, industrie, and gouernment, and not the barrennesse and defect of the Countrey, as is generally supposed, for till then in three yeeres (for the numbers were landed vs) wee had neuer landed sufficient prouision for sixe moneths, such a glutton is the Sea, and such good fellowes the Mariners, wee as little tasted of those great proportions for their prouisions, as they of our miseries, that notwithstanding euer swayd and ouerruled the businesse; though wee did liue as is said, three yeeres chiefly of what this good Countrey naturally affordeth: yet now had wee beene in Paradice it selfe (with those Gouernours) it would not haue beene much better with vs, yet were there some amongst vs, who had they had the gouernment, would surely haue kept vs from those extreamities of miseries, that in ten dayes more would haue supplanted vs all by death. Thus you see the miserable ends of those vsurping Commanders, for all their greatnesse, Oratory, and long being there, and what is the want of owne man in Authoritie, that is honest and valiant, discreet, and industrious; and how easily that may also be blemished, by ambitious indiscretion, or what did hinder them now in his absence, they had not done much better then hee, hauing all these aduantages.

Wickednes of some Mariners The fruits of improuidences

But God that would not it should bee vnplanted, sent Sir Thomas Gates, and Sir George Summers, with one hundred and fiftie men, most happily preserued by the Bermudas to preserue vs. But when those noble Knights did see our miseries (being strangers in the Countrey) and could vnderstand no more of the cause but by their coniecture of our clamours and complaints, of accusing or excusing one another, they imbarked vs with themselues, with the best meanes they could, and abandoning Iames Towne, set saile for England.

The arriuall of Sir Tho. Gates with 150. Iames Towne abandoned.

But yet God would not so haue it, for ere wee left the Riuer; wee met the Lord de-la-ware, then gouernour of the Countrey, with three Ships exceeding well furnished with all necessaries fitting, who againe returned them to the abandoned Iames Towne, the ninth of Iune, 1610. accompanied with Sir Ferdinando Wainman, and diuers other Gentlemen of sort. Sir George Somers, and Captaine Argall he presently dispatcheth to repaire to the Bermudas, to furnish them with prouision: Sir Thomas Gates for England to helpe forward their supplies: himselfe neglected not the best was in his power for the furtherance of the businesse, and regaining what was lost. But euen in the beginning of his proceedings, his Lordship had such an incounter, that after eight moneths sickenesse, he was forced to saue his life, by his returne for England.

The arriuall of the Lord La-ware.

Two ships sent to the Bermudas.

In this time Argall, not finding the Bermudas, hauing lost Sir George Somers at sea, fell on the coast of Sagadahock, where refreshing himselfe, he found a conuenient fishing for Cod. With a taste whereof whereof he returned to Iames Towne, from whence the Lord De-la-ware ſent him to trade in the Riuer of Patawomeck, where finding an Engliſh boy thoſe people had preſerued from the fury of Powhatan, by his acquaintance had ſuch good vſage of thoſe kind Sauages, that they fraughted his Ship with Corne, wherewith he returned to Iames Towne, and ſo for England with the Lord Gouernour; yet before his returne, the aduenturers had ſent Sir Thomas Dale with three Ships, men and cattell, and all other prouiſions neceſſarie for a yeere, all which arriued the tenth of May, 1611. The arriual of Sir Tho. Dale.

Againe, to ſecond him with all poſſible expedition there was prepared for Sir Thomas Gates, ſixe tall Ships with three hundred men, and one hundred Kine, with other cattell, with munition, and all manner of prouiſion could be thought needfull, and they arriued about the firſt of Auguſt next after ſafely at Iames Towne.

Sir George Somers all this time was ſuppoſed loſt: but thus it hapned, miſſing the Barmudas, hee fell alſo as did Argall with Sagadahock, where being refreſhed, would not content himſelfe with that repulſe, but returned againe in the ſearch, and there ſafely arriued. But ouertoyling himſelfe on a ſurfet died. And in this Cedar Ship built by his owne directions, and partly with his owne hands, that had not in her any Iron, but onely one bolt in her Keele, yet well endured thus toſſed to and againe in this mightie Ocean, till with his dead bodie ſhe arriued in England, and at Whitchurch in Dorſetſhire, his body by his friends was honourably buried, with mane volies of ſhot, and the rites of a Souldier, &c. Sir George Somers arriuall at the Bermudas, and dieth. His heart and entralls were buried in Summer Ilands, a name from his to them communicated.

But thus much may ſerue as the argument of the diſcourſes following, and as the Prologue to the Virginian Scene, where we will firſt produce M. Archer, after whoſe ſuccinct narration, M. Strachies copious diſcourſe ſhall feaſt you with the liuely expreſſion of others miſeries, and Barmudas happy diſcouery in Rhetorickes Full ſea and ſpring tide.

CHAP. V.

A Letter of M. GABRIEL ARCHAR, touching the Voyage of the Fleet of Ships, which arriued at Virginia, without Sir THO. GATES, and Sir GEORGE SVMMERS, 1609.

FRom Woolwich the fifteenth of May, 1609, ſeuenth ſaile weyed anchor, and came to Plimmouth the twentieth day, where Sir George Somers, with two ſmall Veſſels, conſorted with vs. Here we tooke into the Bleſſing (being the ſhip wherein I went) ſixe Mares and two Horſes; and the Fleet layed in ſome neceſſaries belonging to the action: In which buſineſſe we ſpent time till the ſecond of Iune. And then wee ſet ſayle to Sea, but croſt by South-weſt windes, we put in to Faulemouth, and there ſtaying till the eight of Iune, we then gate out. Our Courſe was commanded to leaue the Canaries one hundred leagues to the Eaſtward at leaſt, and to ſteere away directly for Virginia, without touching at the Weſt Indies, except the Fleet ſhould chance to be ſeparated, then they were to repaire to the Bermuda, there to ſtay ſeuen dayes in expectation of the Admirall; and if they found him not, then to take their courſe to Virginia. The appointed Course.

Now thus it happened: about ſixe dayes after we loſt the ſight of England, one of Sir George Somers Pinnaſſes left our company, and (as I take it) bare vp for England; the reſt of the Ships, viz. The Sea Aduenture Admirall, wherein was Sir Thomas Gates, Sir George Somer, and Captaine Newport: The Diamond Vice-admirall, wherein was Captaine Ratcliffe, and Captaine King. The Falcon Reare-admirall, in which was Captaine Martin, and Maſter Nellſon: The Bleſſing, wherein I and Captaine Adams went: The Vnitie, wherein Captaine Wood, and Maſter Pett were. The Lion, wherein Captaine Webb remained: And the Swallow of Sir George Somers, in which Captaine Moone, and Maſter Somer went. In the Catch went one Matthew Fitch Maſter: and in the Boat of Sir George Somers, called the Virginia, which was built in the North Colony, went one Captaine Davies, and one Maſter Davies. Theſe were the Captaines and Maſters of our Fleet. The Ships, and chiefe men in the Fleet.

We ran a Southerly courſe from the Tropicke of Cancer, where hauing the Sun within ſixe or ſeuen degrees right ouer our head in Iuly, we bore away Weſt; ſo that by the feruent heat and loomes breezes, many of our men fell ſicke of the Calenture, and out of two ſhips was throwne ouer-board thirtie two perſons. The Viceadmirall was ſaid to haue the plague in her; but in the Bleſſing we had not any ſicke, albeit we had twenty women and children. Sickneſſe and mortalitie at Sea.

Vpon Saint Iames day, being about one hundred and fiftie leagues diſtant from the Weſt Indies, in croſſing the Gulfe of Bahoma, there hapned a moſt terrible and vehement ſtorme, which was a taſte of the Weſt Indian Horacano; this tempeſt ſeperated all our Fleet one from another, and it was ſo violent that men could ſcarce ſtand vpon the Decks, neither could any man heare another ſpeake, being thus diuided, euery man ſteered his owne courſe, and as it fell out about fiue or ſixe dayes after the ſtorme ceaſed (which endure for the foure houres in extremitie.) The Lion firſt, and after the Falcon and the Vnitie, got ſight Terrible tempeſt.

of

Note. False rumors chargeable.

of our Shippe, and ſo we lay a way directly for Virginia, finding neither current nor winde oppoſite, as ſome haue reported, to the great charge of our Counſell and Aduenturers. The Vnity was ſore diſtreſſed when ſhe came vp with vs, for of ſeuenty land men, ſhe had not ten ſound, and all her Sea men were downe, but onely the Maſter and his Boy, with one poore ſailer, but we relieued them, and we foure conſorting, fell into the Kings Riuer haply the eleuenth of Auguſt. In the Vnity were borne two children at Sea, but both died, being both Boyes.

Arriuall in Virginia.

When wee came to Iames Towne, we found a Ship which had bin there in the Riuer a moneth before we came; this was ſent out of England by our Counſels leaue and authority, to fiſh for Sturgeon, and to goe the ready way, without tracing through the Torrid Zoan, and ſhee performed it: her Commander was Captaine Argall (a good Marriner, and a very ciuill Gentleman) and her Maſter one Robert Tindall.

Captain Argall

State of the Colony.

The people of our Colonie were found all in health (for the moſt part) howbeit when Captaine Argoll came in, they were in ſuch diſtreſſe, for many were diſperſed in the Sauages townes, liuing vpon their almes for an ounce of Copper a day, and foureſcore liued twenty miles from the Fort, and fed vpon nothing but Oyſters eight weekes ſpace, hauing no other allowance at all, neither were the people of the Country able to relieue them if they would. Whereupon Captaine Newport and others haue beene much to blame to informe the Counſell of ſuch plenty of victuall in this Country, by which meanes they haue beene ſlacke in this ſupply to giue conuenient content. Vpon this, you that be aduenturers, muſt pardon vs, if you finde not returne of Commodity ſo ample as you may expect, becauſe the law of nature bids vs ſeeke ſuſtenance firſt, and then to labour to content you afterwards. But vpon this point I ſhall be more large in my next Letter.

Idleneſſe and other vices to blame alſo.

Some things partly, falſe rumors, partly factions, ſuggeſtions, are here left out.

After our foure Ships had bin in harbour a few dayes, came in the Viceadmirall, hauing cut her maine Maſt ouer boord, and had many of her men very ſicke and weake, but ſhe could tell no newes of our Gouernour, and ſome, three or foure dayes after her, came in the Swallow, with her maine Maſt ouerboord alſo, and had a ſhrewd leake, neither did ſhe ſee our Admirall.

They chooſe a new Gouernor

Now did we all lament much the abſence of our Gouernour, for contentions began to grow, and factions, and partakings, &c. Inſomuch as the Preſident, to ſtrengthen his authority, accorded with the Mariners, and gaue not any due reſpect to many worthy Gentlemen, that came in our Ships: whereupon they generally (hauing alſo my conſent) choſe Maſter Weſt, my Lord de la Warr brother, to be their Gouernour, or preſident de bene eſſe, in the abſence of Sir Thomas Gates, or if he miſcarried by Sea, then to continue till we heard newes from our Counſell in England. This choice of him they made not to diſturbe the old Preſident during his time, but as his authority expired, then to take vpon him the ſole gouernment, with ſuch aſſiſtants of the Captaines, as diſcreeteſt perſons as the Colonie afforded. Perhaps you ſhall haue it blazoned a mutenie by ſuch as retaine old malice; but Maſter Weſt, Maſter Percie, and all the reſpected Gentlemen of worth in Virginia, can and will teſtifie otherwiſe vpon their oathes. For the Kings Patent we ratified, but refuſed to be gouerned by the Preſident that now is, after his time was expired, and onely ſubiected our ſelues to Maſter Weſt, whom we labour to haue next Preſident. I cannot certifie you of much more as yet; vntill we grow to ſome certaine ſtay in this our ſtate, but by the other Ships you ſhall know more. So with my harty commendations I ceaſe. From Iames Towne this laſt of Auguſt 1609.

Hinc ille lachrymæ Hence frō the malecontents which had beene in Virginia before enemies to the Preſident, raiſing now ill reports at their comming of him aroſe theſe ſtirs, and the following miſeries in which this Author with almoſt the whole Colony periſhed.

CHAP. VI.

A true reportory of the wracke, and redemption of Sir THOMAS GATES Knight; vpon, and from the Ilands of the Bermudas: his comming to Virginia, and the eſtate of that Colonie then, and after, vnder the gouernment of the Lord LA WARRE, July 15. 1610. written by WILLIAM STRACHY, Eſquire.

§. I.

A moſt dreadfull Tempeſt (the manifold deaths whereof are here to the life deſcribed) their wracke on Bermuda, and the deſcription of thoſe Ilands.

2. June. 1609.

EXcellent Lady, know that vpon Friday late in the euening, we brake ground out of the Sound of Plymouth, our whole Fleete then conſiſting of ſeuen good Ships, and two Pinnaces, all which from the ſaid ſecond of Iune, vnto the twenty three of Iuly, kept in friendly conſort together not a whole watch at any time, looſing the ſight each of other. Our courſe when we came about the height of betweene 26. and 27. degrees, we declined to the Northward, and according to our Sea-courſe altered.

Digitized by Google

our Gouernours instructions altered the trade and ordinary way vsed heretofore by Dominico, and Mevis, in the West Indies, and found the winde to this course indeede as friendly, as in the iudgement of all Sea-men, it is vpon a more direct line, and by Sir George Summers our Admirall had bin likewise in former time sailed, being a Gentleman of approued assuredneſſe, and ready knowledge in Sea-faring actions, hauing often carried command, and chiefe charge in many Ships Royall of her Maiesties, and in sundry Voyages made many defeats and attempts in the time of the Spaniards quarrelling with vs, vpon the Ilands and Indies, &c. We had followed this course so long, as now we were within seuen or eight dayes at the most, by Cap. Newports reckoning of making Cape Henry vpon the coast of Virginia: When on S. Iames his day, Iuly 24. being Monday (preparing for no lesse all the blacke night before) the cloudes gathering thicke vpon vs, and the windes singing, and whistling most vnusually, which made vs to cast off our Pinnace towing the same vntill then asterne, a dreadfull storme and hideous began to blow from out the North-east, which swelling, and roaring as it were by fits, some houres with more violence then others, at length did beate all light from heauen; which like an hell of darkeneſſe turned blacke vpon vs, so much the more fuller of horror, as in such cases horror and feare vse to ouerrunne the troubled, and ouermastered sences of all, which (taken vp with amazement) the eares lay so sensible to the terrible cries, and murmurs of the windes, and distraction of our Company, as who was most armed, and best prepared, was not a little shaken. For surely (Noble Lady) as death comes not so sodaine nor apparant, so he comes not so eluish and painfull (to men especially euen then in health and perfect habitudes of body) as at Sea; who comes at no time so welcome, but our frailty (so weake is the hold of hope in miserable demonstrations of danger) it makes guilty of many contrary changes, and conflicts: For indeede death is accompanied at no time, nor place with circumstances euery way so vncapable of particularities of goodneſſe and inward comforts, as at Sea. For it is most true, there ariseth commonly no such vnmercifull tempest, compound of so many contrary and diuers Nations, but that it worketh vpon the whole frame of the body, and most loathsomely affecteth all the powers thereof: and the manner of the sickneſſe it laies vpon the body, being so vnsufferable, giues not the minde any free and quiet time, to vse her iudgement and Empire: which made the Poet say:

Hoſtium uxores, puerique caeci
Sentiant motus orientis Haedi, &
Æquoris nigri fremitum, & trementes
Verbere ripas.

Sir G. Summers a good mariner and tried Souldier.

A terrible storme expreſſed in a pathetical and retoricall description.

Blacke-darkneſs.

Feare of death at Sea more fearefull.

For foure and twenty houres the storme in a restleſſe tumult, had blowne so exceedingly, as we could not apprehend in our imaginations any possibility of greater violence, yet did wee still finde it, not onely more terrible, but more constant; fury added to fury, and one storme vrging a second more outragious then the former; whether it so brought vpon our feares, or indeede met with new forces: Sometimes strikes in our Ship amongst women, and passengers, not vsed to such hurly and discomforts, made vs looke one vpon the other with troubled hearts, and panting bosomes: our clamours dround in the windes, and the windes in thunder. Prayers might well be in the heart and lips, but drowned in the outcries of the Officers: nothing heard that could giue comfort, nothing seene that might incourage hope. It is impossible for me, had I the voyce of Stentor, and expreſſion of as many tongues, as his throate of voyces, to expreſſe the outcries and miseries, not languishing, but wasting his spirits, and art constant to his owne principles, but not prenailing. Our sailes wound vp lay without their vse, and if at any time wee bore but a Hollocke, or halfe forecourse, to guide her before the Sea, six and sometimes eight men were not inough to hold the whipstaffe in the steerage, and the tiller below in the Gunner roome, by which may be imagined the strength of the storme: In which, the Sea swelled aboue the Clouds, and gaue battell vnto Heauen. It could not be said to raine, the waters like whole Riuers did flood in the ayre. And this I did still obserue, that whereas vpon the Land, when a storme hath powred it selfe forth once in drifts of raine, the winde as beaten downe, and vanquished therewith, not long after indureth: here the glut of water (as if throatling the winde ere while) was no sooner a little emptied and qualified, but instantly the windes (as hauing gotten their mouthes now free, and at liberty) spake more loud, and grew more tumultuous, and malignant: What shall I say? Windes and Seas were as mad, as fury and rage could make them; for mine owne part, I had bin in some stormes before, as well vpon the coast of Barbary and Algeere, in the Leuant, and once more distresfull in the Adriatique gulfe, in a bottome of Candy, so as I may well say. Ego quid sit ater; Adria noui sinus, & quid albus Peccet Iapex. Yet all that I had euer suffered gathered together, might not hold comparison with this: there was not a moment in which the sodaine splitting, or instant ouer-setting of the Shippe was not expected.

Continuance and increaſe.

Swelling Sea set forth in a swelling stile.

Compared with the Authors former experiments.

Howbeit this was not all; It pleased God to bring a greater affliction yet vpon vs; for in the beginning of the storme we had receiued likewise a mighty leake. And the Ship in euery ioynt almost, hauing spued out her Okam, before we were aware (a casualty more desperate then any other that a Voyage by Sea draweth with it) was growne fiue foote suddenly deepe with water aboue

Leake added to the stormes terrour.

aboue her ballaſt, and we almoſt drowned within, whileſt we ſat looking when to periſh from aboue. This imparting no leſſe terrour then danger, ranne through the whole Ship with much fright and amazement, ſtartled and turned the bloud, and cooke downe the braues of the moſt hardy Mariner of them all, inſomuch as he that before happily felt not the ſorrow of others, now began to ſorrow for himſelfe, when he ſaw ſuch a pond of water ſo ſuddenly broken in, and which he knew could not (without preſent auoiding) but inſtantly ſinke him. So as ioyning (onely for his owne ſake, not yet worth the ſauing) in the publique ſafety, there might be ſeene Maſter, Maſters Mate, Boateſwaine, Quarter Maſter, Coopers, Carpenters, and who not, with candels in their hands, creeping along the ribs viewing the ſides, ſearching euery corner, and liſtening in euery place, if they could heare the water runne. Many a weeping leake was this way found, and haſtily ſtopt, and at length one in the Gunner roome made vp with I know not how many peeces of Beefe: but all was to no purpoſe, the Leake (if it were but one) which drunke in our greateſt Seas, and cooke in our deſtruction faſteſt, could not there be found, nor euer was, by any labour, counſell, or ſearch. The waters ſtill increaſing, and the Pumpes going, which at length choaked with bringing vp whole and continuall Bi-ket (and indeede all we had, tenne thouſand weight) it was conceiued, as moſt likely, that the Leake might be ſprung in the Bread-roome, whereupon the Carpenter went downe, and ript vp all the roomd, but could not finde it ſo.

Leake cannot be found, which cannot but be found.

I am not able to giue vnto your Ladiſhip euery mans thought in this perplexity, to which we were now brought; but to me, this Leakage appeared as a wound giuen to men that were before dead. The Lord knoweth, I had as little hope, as deſire of life in the ſtorme, & in this, it went beyond my will; becauſe beyond my reaſon, why we ſhould labour to preſerue life; yet we did, either becauſe ſo deare are a few lingring houres of life in all mankinde, or that our Chriſtian knowledges taught vs, how much we owed to the rites of Nature, as bound, not to be falſe to our ſelues, or to neglect the meanes of our owne preſeruation; the moſt deſpaireſull things among ſt men, being matters of no wonder nor moment with him, who is the rich Fountaine and admirable Eſſence of all mercy.

Their labour for life three dayes and foure nights.

Our Gouernour, vpon the tueſday morning (at what time, by ſuch who had bin below in the hold, the Leake was firſt diſcouered) had cauſed the whole Company, about one hundred and forty, beſides women, to be equally diuided into three parts, and opening the Ship in three places (vnder the forecaſtle, in the waſte, and hard by the Beacke) appointed each man where to attend; and thereunto euery man came duely vpon his watch, tooke the Bucket, or Pumpe for one houre, and reſted another. Then then might be ſeene labour, I may well ſay, for life, and the beſt ſort, euen our Gouernour, and Admirall themſelues, not refuſing their turne, and to ſpeak each to other, to giue example to others. The common ſort ſtripped naked, as men in Gallies, the eaſier both to hold out, and to ſhrinke from vnder the ſalt water, which continually leapt in among them, kept their eyes waking, and their thoughts and hands working, with tyred bodies, and waſted ſpirits, three dayes and foure nights deſtitute of outward comfort, and deſperate of any deliuerance, teſtifying how mutually willing they were, yet by labour to keepe each other from drowning, albeit each one drowned whileſt he laboured.

Sea breakes in.

Once, ſo huge a Sea brake vpon the poope and quarter, vpon vs, as it couered our Shippe from ſtearne to ſtemme, like a garment or a vaſt cloude, it filled her brimme full for a while within, from the hatches vp to the ſparre decke. This ſource or confluence of water was ſo violent, as it ruſht and carried the Helm-man from the Helme, and wreſted the Whipſtaffe out of his hand, which ſo flew from ſide to ſide, that when he would haue ceaſed the ſame againe, it ſo toſſed him from Star-board to Lar-board, as it was Gods mercy it had not ſplit him: It ſo beat him from his hold, and ſo bruiſed him, as a freſh man hazarding in by chance fell faire within it; and by maine ſtrength bearing ſomewhat vp, made good his place, and with much clamour incouraged and called vpon others; who gaue her now vp, rent in pieces and abſolutely loſt. Our Gouernour was at this time below at the Capſtone, both by his ſpeech and authoritie heartening euery man vnto his labour. It ſtrooke him from the place where hee ſate, and grouelled him, and all vs about him on our faces, beating together with our breaths all thoughts from our boſomes, elſe, then that wee were now ſinking. For my part, I thought her alreadie in the bottome of the Sea; and I haue heard him ſay, wading out of the floud thereof, all his ambition was but to climbe vp aboue hatches to dye in Aperto cœlo, and in the company of his old friends. It ſo ſtunkt the ſhip in her full pace, that ſhee ſtirred no more, then if ſhee had beene caught in a net, or then, as if the fabulous Remora had ſtucke to her fore-caſtle. Yet without beating one inch of laſke, euen then ſhee was making her way nine or ten leagues in a watch. One thing, it is not without his wonder (whether it were the feare of death in ſo great a ſtorme, or that it pleaſed God to be gracious vnto vs) there was not a paſſenger, gentleman, or other, after hee beganne to ſtirre and labour, but was able to relieue his fellow, and make good his courſe: And it is moſt true, ſuch as in all their life times had neuer done houres worke before (their mindes now helping their bodies) were able twice fortie eight houres together to toile with the beſt.

The Gouernours care.

Remero is ſabled to be a ſmall fiſh able to withſtand a Shippe in her courſe.

God inableth whom he will ſaue to ſaue themſelues.

During all this time, the heauens looked ſo blacke vpon vs, that it was not poſſible the eleua-

tion

uation of the Pole might be obserued: nor a Starre by night, not Sunne beame by day was to be seene. Onely vpon the thursday night Sir George Summers being vpon the watch, had an apparition of a little round light, like a faint Starre, trembling, and streaming along with a sparkeling blaze, halfe the height vpon the Maine Mast, and shooting sometimes from Shroud to Shroud, tempting to settle as it were vpon any of the foure Shrouds: and for three or foure houres together, or rather more, halfe the night it kept with vs, running sometimes along the Maine-yard to the very end, and then returning. At which, Sir George Summers called diuers about him, and shewed them the same, who obserued it with much wonder, and carefulnesse: but vpon a sodaine, towards the morning watch, they lost the sight of it, and knew not what way it made. The superstitious Sea-men make many constructions of this Sea-fire, which neuertheleſſe is vsuall in stormes: the same (it may be) which the Graecians were wont in the Mediterranean to call Castor and Pollux, of which, if one onely appeared without the other, they tooke it for an euill signe of great tempest. The Italians, and such, who lye open to the Adriatique and Tyrrene Sea, call it (a sacred Body) Corpo sancto: the Spaniards call it Saint Elmo, and haue an authentique and miraculous Legend for it. Be it what it will, we laid other foundations of safety or ruine, then in the rising or falling of it, could it haue serued vs now miraculously to haue taken our height by, it might haue stucken amazement, and a reuerence in our deuotions, according to the due of a miracle. But it did not light vs any whit the more to our knowne way, who ran now (as doe hood-winked men) at all aduentures, sometimes North, and North-east, then North and by West, and in an instant againe varying two or three points, and sometimes halfe the Compasse. East and by South we steered away as much as we could to beare vpright, which was no small carefulnesse nor paine to doe, albeit we much vnrigged our Ship, threw ouer-boord much luggage, many a Trunke and Chest (in which I suffered no meane losse) and staued many a Butt of Beere, Hogsheads of Oyle, Syder, Wine, and Vinegar, and heaued away all our Ordnance on the Starboord side, and had now purposed to haue cut downe the Maine Mast, the more to lighten her, for we were much spent, and our men so weary, as their strengths together failed them, with their hearts, hauing trauailed now from Tuesday till Friday morning, day and night, without either sleepe or foode; for the leakeage taking vp all the hold, wee could neither come by Beere nor fresh water; fire we could keepe none in the Cookeroome to dresse any meate, and carefulnesse, griefe, and our turne at the Pumpe or Bucket, were sufficient to hold sleepe from our eyes.

Vtter darkneſs.

Light on the Shrouds.

See Tom. 1. l. 9. c. 12. §. 1.

No sleepe or food from tuesday till friday.

And surely Madam, it is most true, there was not any houre (a matter of admiration) all these dayes, in which we freed not twelue hundred Barricos of water, the least whereof contained six gallons, and some eight, besides three deepe Pumpes continually going, two beneath at the Capstone, and the other aboue in the halfe Decke, and at each Pumpe foure thousand stroakes at the least in a watch; so as I may well say, euery foure houres, we quitted one hundred tunnes of water: and from tuesday noone till friday noone, we bailed and pumped two thousand tunne, and yet doe what we could, when our Ship held least in her, after tuesday night second watch) shee bore ten foote deepe, at which stay our extreame working kept her one eight glasses, forbearance whereof had instantly sunke vs, and it being now Friday, the fourth morning, it wanted little, but that there had bin a generall determination, to haue shut vp hatches, and commending our sinfull soules to God, committed the Shippe to the mercy of the Sea: surely, that night we must haue done it, and that night had we then perished: but see the goodnesse and sweet introduction of better hope, by our mercifull God giuen vnto vs. Sir George Summers, when no man dreamed of such happinesse, had discouered, and cried Land. Indeede the morning now three quarters spent, had wonne a little cleerenesse from the dayes before, and it being better surueyed, the very trees were seene to moue with the winde vpon the shoare side: whereupon our Gouernour commanded the Helme-man to beare vp, the Boate-swaine sounding at the first, found it thirteene fathome, & when we stood a little in seuen fatham; and presently hearing his lead the third time, had ground at foure fathome, and by this, we had got her within a mile vnder the South-east point of the land, where we had somewhat smooth water. But hauing no hope to saue her by comming to an anker in the same, we were inforced to runne her ashoare, as neere the land as we could, which brought vs within three quarters of a mile of shoare, and by the mercy of God vnto vs, making out our Boates, we had ere night brought all our men, women, and children, about the number of one hundred and fifty, safe into the Iland.

1200. Barricos an houre, besides 3. Pumps, acquitting 100 tuns of water euery 4. houres.

Summer Ilands descried by Sir George Summers.

They go a land.

We found it to be the dangerous and dreaded Iland, or rather Ilands of the Bermudas: whereof let mee giue your Ladyship a briefe description, before I proceed to my narration. And that the rather, because they be so terrible to all that euer touched on them, and such tempests, thunders, and other fearefull obiects are seene and heard about them; that they be called commonly, The Deuils Ilands, and are feared and auoyded of all sea trauellers aliue, aboue any other place in the world. Yet it pleased our mercifull God, to make euen this hideous and hated place, both the place of our safetie, and meanes of our deliuerance.

Bermuda Ilands supposed the Diuels, &c.

And hereby also, I hope to deliuer the world from a foule and generall errour: it being counted of most, that they can be no habitation for Men, but rather giuen ouer to Deuils and wicked Spirits;

Spirits; whereas indeed wee find them now by experience, to bee as habitable and commodious as most Countries of the same climate and situation: insomuch as if the entrance into them were as easie as the place it selfe is contenting, it had long ere this beene inhabited, as well as other Ilands. Thus shall we make it appeare, That Truth is the daughter of Time, and that men ought not to deny euery thing which is not subiect to their owne sense.

Bermuda Ilands described.

The Bermudas bee broken Ilands, fiue hundred of them in manner of an Archipelagus (at least if you may call them all Ilands, that lie, how little soeuer into the Sea, and by themselues) of small compasse, some larger yet then other, as time and the Sea hath wonne from them, and eaten his passage through, and all now lying in the figure of a Croissant, within the circuit of sixe or seuen leagues at the most, albeit at first it is said of them that they were thirteene or fourteene leagues; and more in longitude as I haue heard. For no greater distance is it from the Northwest Point to Gates his Bay, as by this Map your Ladyship may see, in which Sir George Sommers, who coasted in his Boat about them all, tooke great care to expresse the same exactly and full, and made his draught perfect for all good occasions, and the benefit of such, who either in distresse might be brought vpon them, or make saile this way.

Sir George Sommers diligent surucy: his draught which we haue not. M. Norgate hath since published an exact Map.

It should seeme by the testimony of Gonzalus Ferdinandus Ouiedus, in his Booke intituled, The Summary or Abridgement of his generall History of the West Indies, written to the Emperor Charles the Fift, that they haue beene indeed of greater compasse (and I easily beleeue it) then they are now, who thus saith: In the yeere 1515. when I came first to informe your Maiesty of the state of the things in India, and was the yeere following in Flanders, in the time of your most fortunate successe in these your kingdomes of Aragony and Castell, whereas at that voyage I sayled aboue the Iland Bermudas, otherwise called Gorza, *being the farthest of all the Ilands that are yet found at this day in the world, and arriuing there at the depth of eight yards * of water, and distant from the Land as farre as the shot of a Peece of Ordnance, I determined to send some of the ship to Land, as well to make search of such things as were there, as also to leaue in the Iland certaine Hogges for increase, but the time not seruing my purpose, by reason of contrary winde I could bring my Ships no neerer: the Iland being twelue leagues in length, and sixteene in breadth, and about thirtie in circuit, lying in the thirtie three degrees of the North side.* Thus farre hee.

* Or fadams; braccia.

In his Gen hist. li 2 c. 9. he reciteth the same historie more particularly he saith it hath two names, Gorza, of the ship which first discouered it, being so called, and Bermudez, of the Captain of that ship, named Iohn Bermudes. Note that he placeth it more to the North, then that which is by ours inhabited, & say sometime they see it, sometime not as they passe. The Spaniards (as I haue heard) which were wracked there in Cap. Butlers time, were of opinion that ours are not the Bermudas: Yea some of ours affirme, they haue seen such an Iland to the North of ours, and haue offered to discouer it, sub iudice lis est; veritas temporis filia. Halo, the circle seen about the Moon, of great compasse.

True it is; the maine Iland, or greatest of them now, may bee some sixteene miles in length East North-east, and West South-west the longest part of it, standing in thirtie two degrees and twentie minutes, in which is a great Bay on the North side, in the North-west end, and many broken Ilands in that Sound or Bay, and a little round Iland at the South-west end. As occasions were offered, so we gaue titles and names to certaine places.

These Ilands are often afflicted and rent with tempests, great strokes of thunder, lightning and raine in the extreamity of violence: which (and it may well bee) hath so sundred and torne downe the Rockes, and whurried whole quarters of Ilands into the maine Sea (some sixe, some seuen leagues, and is like in time to swallow them all) so as euen in that distance from the shoare there is no small danger of them and with them, of the stormes continually raging from them, which once in the full and change commonly of euery Moone (Winter or Summer) keepe their vnchangeable round, and rather thunder then blow from euery corner about them, sometimes fortie eight houres together: especially if the circle, which the Philosophers call Halo were (in our being there) seene about the Moone at any season, which bow indeed appeared there often, and would bee of a mightie compasse and breadth. I haue not obserued it any where one quarter so great, especially about the twentieth of March, I saw the greatest when followed vpon the eues eue of the Annuntiation of our Ladie, the mightiest blast of lightning, and most terrible rap of thunder that euer astonied mortall men, I thinke. In August, September, and vntill the end of October, wee had very hot and pleasant weather onely (as I say) thunder, lightning, and many scattering showers of Raine (which would passe swiftly ouer, and yet fall with such force and darkenesse for the time as if it would neuer bee cleere againe) wee wanted not any; and of raine more in Summer then in Winter, and in the beginning of December wee had great store of hayle (the sharpe windes blowing Northerly) but it continued not, and to say truth, it is wintry or summer weather there, according as those North and Noth-west windes blow. Much taste of this kind of Winter wee had; for those cold windes would suddenly alter the ayre: but when there was no breath of wind to bring the moyst ayre out of the Seas, from the North and North-west, wee were rather weary of the heate, then pinched with extreamitie of cold: Yet the three Winter moneths, December, Ianuary, and February, the winds kept in those cold corners, and indeed then it was heauy and melancholy being there, nor were the winds more rough in March, then in the foresaid moneths, and yet euen then would the Birds breed. I thinke they bredde there, most moneths in the yeere, in September, and at Christmasse I saw young Birds, and in Februarie, at which time the mornings are there (as in May in England) fresh and sharpe.

Well may the Spaniards, and these Biscaui Pilots, with all their Traders into the Indies, passe by these Ilands as afraid (either bound out or homewards) of their very Meridian, and leaue the fishing for the Pearle (which some say, and I beleeue well is as good there, as in any of their other Indian Ilands, and whereof we had some triall) to such as will aduenture for them. The Seas about them are so ful of breaches, as with those dangers, they may wel be said to be the strongest situate in the world. I haue often heard Sir George Summers, and Captaine Newport say, how they haue not beene by any chance or discouery vpon their like. It is impossible without great and perfect knowledge, and search first made of them to bring in a bable Boat, so much as of ten Tun without apparant ruine, albeit within there are many faire harbours for the greatest English Ship: yea, the Argosies of Venice may ride there with water enough, and safe land-lockt. There is one onely side that admits so much as hope of safetie by many a league, on which (as before described) it pleased God to bring vs, wee had not come one man of vs else a shoare, as the weather was: they haue beene euer therefore left desolate and not inhabited.

Seas

10 The soile of the whole Iland is one and the same, the mould, dark, red, sandie, dry, and vncapable I beleeue of any of our commodities or fruits. Sir George Summers in the beginning of August, squared out a Garden by the quarter (the quarter being set downe before a goodly Bay, vpon which our Gouernour did first leape ashoare, and therefore called it (as aforesaid) Gates his Bay, which opened into the East, and into which the Sea did ebbe and flow, according to their tides, and sowed Muske Melons, Pease, Onyons, Raddish, Lettice, and many English seeds, and Kitchen Herbes. All which in some ten daies did appeare aboue ground, but whether by the small Birds, of which there be many kindes, or by Flies (Wormes I neuer saw any, nor any venomous thing, as Toade, or Snake, or any creeping beast hurtfull, onely some Spiders, which as many affirme are 20 signes of great store of Gold: but they were long and slender legge Spiders, and whether venomous or no I know not, I beleeue not, since wee should still find them amongst our linnen in our Chests, and drinking Cans; but we neuer receiued any danger from them: A kind of Melontha, or blacke Beetell there was, which bruised, gaue a sauour like many sweet and strong gums punned together) whether, I say, hindred by these, or by the condition or vice of the soyle they came to no proofe, nor thriued. It is like enough that the commodities of the other Westerne Ilands would prosper there, as Vines, Lemmons, Oranges, and Sugar Canes: Our Gouernour made triall of the later, and buried some two or three in the Garden mould, which were reserued in the wracke amongst many which wee carried to plant here in Virginia, and they beganne to grow, but the Hogs breaking in, both rooted them vp and eate them: there is not through the whole Ilands, either Champion ground, Valleys, or fresh Riuers. They are full of Shawes of good-
30 ly Cedar, fairer then ours here of Virginia; the Berries, whereof our men seething, straining, and letting stand some three or foure daies, made a kind of pleasant drinke: these Berries are of the same bignesse, and collour of Corynthes, full of little stones, and verie restringent or hard building. Peter Martin saith, That at Alexandria in Egypt there is a kind of Cedar, which the Iewes dwelling there, affirme to be the Cedars of Libanus, which beare old fruite and new all the yeere, being a kinde of Apple which tast like Prunes: but then, neither those there in the Bermudas, nor ours here in Virginia are of that happy kind.

Likewise there grow great store of Palme Trees, not the right Indian Palmes, such as in Saint Iohn Port-Rico are called Cocos, and are there full of small fruites like Almonds (of the bignesse of the graines in Pomgranates) nor of those kind of Palmes which beares Dates, but a kind of Si-
40 merons or wild Palmes in growth, fashion, leaues, and branches, resembling those true Palmes: for the Tree is high, and straight, sappy and spongious, vnfirme for any vse, no branches but in the vppermost part thereof, and in the top grow leaues about the head of it (the most inmost part whereof they call Palmeto, and it is the heart and pith of the same Trunke, so white and thin, as it will peele off into pleates as smooth and delicate as white Sattin into twentie folds, in which a man may write as in paper) where they spread and fall downward about the Tree like an ouer-blowne Rose, or Saffron flower not early gathered; so broad are the leaues, as an Italian Vmbrello, a man may well defend his whole body vnder one of them, from the greatest storme raine that falls. For they being stiffe and smooth, as if so many flagges were knit together, the raine easily slideth off. Wee oftentimes found growing to these leaues, many Silk-wormes inuolued there-
50 in, like those small wormes which Acosta writeth of, which grew in the leaues of the Tunall Tree, of which being dried, the Indians make their Cochinile so precious and marchantable. With these leaues we thatched our Cabbins, and roasting the Palmito or soft top thereof, they had a taste like fried Melons, and being sod they eate like Cabbedges, but not so offensiuely thankefull to the stomacke. Many an ancient Burger was therefore heaued at, and fell not for his place, but for his head: for our common people, whose bellies neuer had eares, made it no breach of Charitie in their hot blouds and tall stomackes to murder thousands of them. They beare a kind of Berry, blacke and round, as bigge as a Damson, which about December were ripe and luscious: being scalded (whilest they are greene) they eate like Bullaces. These Trees shed their leaues in the Winter moneths, as withered or burnt with the cold blasts of the North winde, especi-
60 ally those that grow to the Seaward, and in March, there Burgen new in their roome fresh and tender.

Other kindes of high and sweet smelling Woods there bee, and diuers colours, blacke, yellow, and red, and one which beares a round blew Berry, much eaten by our owne people, of a stiptick qualitie and rough taste on the tongue like a Slow to stay or binde the Fluxe, which the often Experience hath better shewed since, as we after see, both for fruits, wormes, &c. those that dwell there finding more then these, which tooke there Inne or lodging. Yet the dawning & Aurora yeeld a delightsome light, though not all so certaine as the Sun: for which cause I haue not omitted these first discoueries.

Spiders.

Beetle very sweet.

Hogs.

Cedars.

Cedar-drinke.

American Cedars, are not the same kind with those of Libanus, as by the historie of them in our former Tome, pag. 1500, &c.

Palmetos.

Many sorts of Palmes, the Coco, the Date-Palme, the Wine-Palme, or taddie, &c. besides these Reed-Palmes.

Silke-wormes.

Other Trees.

Digitized by Google

eating of the luscious Palme berry would bring them into, for the nature of sweet things is to Prickle-peare. clense and dissolue. A kinde of Pease of the bignesse and shape of a Katherine Peare, wee found growing vpon the Rockes full of many sharpe subtill prickes (as a Thistle) which wee therefore called, The Prickle Peare, the outside greene, but being opened, of a deepe murrie, full of iuyce like a Mulberry, and iust of the same substance and taste, wee both eate them raw and baked.

Waters. No Springs then found, since Wells haue bin there digged which ebbe and flow with the Sea. &c.

Sure it is, that there are no Riuers nor running Springs of fresh water to bee found vpon any of them: when wee came first wee digged and found certaine gushings and soft bublings, which being either in bottoms, or on the side of hanging ground, were onely fed with raine water, which neuertheless soone sinketh into the earth and vanisheth away, or emptieth it selfe out of sight into the Sea, without any channell aboue or vpon the superficies of the earth: for according as their raines fell, we had our Wels and Pits (which we digged) either halfe full, or absolute exhausted and dry, howbeit some low bottoms (which the continuall descent from the Hills filled full, and in those flats could haue no passage away) we found to continue as fishing Ponds, or standing Pooles, continually Summer and Winter full of fresh water.

Fish. The shoare and Bayes round about, when wee landed first afforded great store of fish, and that of diuers kindes, and good, but it should seeme that our fiers, which wee maintained on the shoares side draue them from vs, so as wee were in some want, vntill wee had made a flat bottome Gundall of Cedar with which wee put off farther into the Sea, and then daily hooked great store of many kindes, as excellent Angell-fish, Salmon Peale, Bonetas, Stingray, Cabilly, Snappers, Hogge-fish, Sharkes, Dogge-fish, Pilcherds, Mullets, and Rock-fish, of which bee diuers kindes: and of these our Gouernour dryed and salted, and barrelling them vp, brought to sea fiue hundred, for he had procured Salt to bee made with some Brine,

Salt made there. which happily was preserued, and once hauing made a little quantity, he kept three or foure pots boyling, and two or three men attending nothing else in an house (some little distance from his Bay) set vp on purpose for the same worke.

Likewise in Furbishers building Bay wee had a large Sein, or Tramell Net, which our Gouernour caused to be made of the Deere Toyles, which wee were to carry to Virginia, by drawing the Masts more straight and narrow with Roape Yarne, and which reached from one side of 5000. fishes taken at a hale the Dock to the other: with which (I may boldly say) wee haue taken fiue thousand of small and great fish at one hale. As Pilchards, Breames, Mullets, Rocke-fish, &c. and other kindes for which wee haue no names. Wee haue taken also from vnder the broken Rockes, Creuises oftentimes greater then any of our best English Lobsters; and likewise abundance of Crabbes, Oysters, and Wilkes. True it is, for Fish in euerie Coue and Creake wee found Snaules, and Skulles in that abundance, as (I thinke) no Land in the world may haue greater store or better Fish. For they sucking of the very water, which descendeth from the high

Cause of their wholsomnesse. Hills mingled with iuyce and verdor of the Palmes, Cedars, and other sweet Woods (which likewise make the Herbes, Roots, and Weeds sweet which grow about the Bankes) become thereby both fat and wholsome. As must those Fish needes bee grosse, slimy, and corrupt the bloud, which feed in Fennes, Marishes, Ditches, muddy Pooles, and neere vnto places

No vnscaled fishes. where much filth is daily cast forth. Vnscaled Fishes, such as Iunius calleth Malles Pisces, as Trenches, Eele, or Lampries, and such feculent and dangerous Snakes wee neuer saw any, nor may any Riuer bee inuenomed with them (I pray God) where I come. I forbeare to speake what a sort of Whales wee haue seene hard aboard the shoare, followed sometime by the Whale and Sword-fish. Sword-fish and the Thresher, the sport whereof was not vnpleasant. The Sword-fish, with his sharpe and needle Finne, pricking him into the belly when hee would sinke and fall into the Sea; and when hee startled vpward from his wounds, the Thresher with his large Fins (like Cater-tray beare the bell away. Medio tutissimus ibis. Flayles) beating him aboue water. The examples whereof giues vs (saith Ouiedus) to vnderstand, that in the selfe same perill and danger doe men liue in this mortall life, wherein is no certaine security neither in high estate nor low.

Fowles. Fowle there is great store, small Birds, Sparrowes fat and plumpe like a Bunting, bigger then ours, Robbins of diuers colours greene and yellow, ordinary and familiar in our Cabbins, and other of lesse sort. White and gray Hernshawes, Bitters, Teale, Snites, Crowes, and Hawkes, of which in March wee found diuers Ayres, Goshawkes and Tassells, Oxen-birds, Cormorants, Bald-Cootes, Moore-Hennes, Owles, and Battes in great store. And vpon New-yeeres day in the morning, our Gouernour being walked foorth with another Gentleman Master Iames Swift, each of them with their Peeces killed a wild Swanne, in a great Sea-water Bay Wild Swans. or Pond in our Iland. A kinde of webbe-footed Fowle there is, of the bignesse of an English Web-footed Fowle. They call it of the cry which it maketh a Cohow. greene Plouer, or Sea-Meawe, which all the Summer wee saw not, and in the darkest nights of Nouember and December (for in the night they onely feed) they would come forth, but not flye farre from home, and houering in the ayre, and ouer the Sea, made a strange hollow and harsh howling. Their colour is inclining to Russet, with white bellies, as are likewise the long Feathers of their wings Russet and White) these gather themselues together and breed in those Ilands which are high, and so farre alone into the Sea, that the Wilde Hogges cannot cannot swimme ouer them, and there in the ground they haue their Burrowes, like Conyes in a Warren, and so brought in the loose Mould, though not so deepe: which Birds with a light bough in a darke night (as in our Lowbelling) wee caught. I haue beene at the taking of three hundred in an houre, and wee might haue laden our Boates. Our men found a prettie way to take them, which was by standing on the Rockes or Sands by the Sea side, and hollowing, laughing, and making the strangest out-cry that possibly they could: with the noyse whereof the Birds would come flocking to that place, and settle vpon the very armes and head of him that so cryed, and still creepe neerer and neerer, answering the noyse themselues: by which our men would weigh them with their hand, and which weighed heauiest they tooke for the best and let the others alone, and so our men would take twentie dozen in two houres of the chiefest of them; and they were a good and well relished Fowle, fat and full as a Partridge. In Ianuary wee had great store of their Egges, which are as great as an Hennes Egge, and so fashioned and white shelled, and haue no difference in yolke nor white from an Hennes Egge. There are thousands of these Birds, and two or three Ilands full of their Burrowes, whether at any time (in two houres warning) wee could send our Cock-boat, and bring home as many as would serue the whole Company: which Birds for their blindnesse (for they see weakly in the day) and for their cry and whooting, wee called the Sea Owle: they will bite cruelly with their crooked Bills.

Wild Hogges how first found out and taken.

Wee had knowledge that there were wilde Hogges vpon the Iland, at first by our owne Swine preserued from the wrack and brought to shoare: for they straying into the Woods, an huge wilde Boare followed downe to our quarter, which at night was watched and taken in this sort. One of Sir George Summers men went and lay among the Swine, when the Boare being come and groueled by the Sowes, hee put ouer his hand and rubbed the side gently of the Boare, which then lay still, by which meanes hee fastned a rope with a sliding knot to the hinder legge and so tooke him, and after him in this sort two or three more. But in the end (a little businesse ouer) our people would goe a hunting with our Ship Dogge, and sometimes bring home thirtie, sometimes fiftie Boares, Sowes, and Pigs in a weeke aliue: for the Dog would fasten on them and hold, whilest the Hunti-men made in: and there bee thousands of them in the Ilands, and at that time of the yeere, in August, September, October, and Nouember, they were well fed with Berries that dropped from the Cedars and the Palmes, and in our quarter wee made styes for them, and gathering of these Berries serued them twice aday, by which meanes we kept them in good plight: and when there was any fret of weather (for vpon euery increase of wind the billow would be so great, as it was no putting out with our Gundall or Canow) that we could not fish nor take Tortoyses, then wee killed our Hogs. But in February when the Palme Berries began to be scant or dry, and the Cedar Berries failed two moneths sooner. True it is the Hogs grew poore, and being taken so, wee could not raise them to be better, for besides those Berries, we had nothing wherewith to franke them: but euen then the Tortoyses came in againe, of which wee daily both turned vp great store, finding them on Land, as also sculling after them in our Boate strooke them with an Iron goad, and sod, baked, and roasted them. The Tortoyse is reasonable toothsom (some say) wholsome meate. I am sure our Company liked the meate of them verie well, and one Tortoyse would goe further amongst them, then three Hogs. One Turtle (for so we called them) feasted well a dozen Messes, appointing sixe to euery Messe. It is such a kind of meat, as a man can neither absolutely call Fish nor Flesh, keeping most what in the water, and feeding vpon Sea-grasse like a Heifer, in the bottome of the Coues and Bayes, and laying their Egges (of which wee should finde fiue hundred at a time in the opening of a shee Turtle) in the Sand by the shoare side, and so couering them close leaue them to the hatching of the Sunne, like the Manati at Saint Dominique, which made the Spanish Friars (at their first arriuall) make some scruple to eate them on a Friday, because in colour and taste the flesh is like to morsells of Veale. Concerning the laying of their Egges, and hatching of their young, Peter Martyr writeth thus in his Decades of the Ocean: at such time as the heate of Nature moueth them to generation, they came forth of the Sea, and making a deepe pit in the sand, they lay three or foure hundred Egges therein: when they haue thus emptied their bag of Conception, they put as much of the same againe into the Pit as may satisfie to couer the Egges, and so resort againe vnto the Sea, nothing carefull of their succession. At the day appointed of Nature to the procreation of these creatures, there creepeth out a multitude of Tortoyses, as it were Pismyers out of an Ant-hill, and this only by the heate of the Sunne, without any helpe of their Parents: their Egges are as big as Geese Egges, and themselues growne to perfection, bigger then great round Targets.

Tortoises.

§. II.

Actions and Occurrents whiles they continued in the Ilands: Rauens sent for Virginia; Diuers mutinies; PAINE executed: Two Pinnaces built.

SO soone as wee were a little setled after our landing, with all the conueniencie wee might, and as the place, and our many wants would giue vs leaue, wee made vp our long Boate (as your Ladyship hath heard) in fashion of a Pinnace, fitting her with a little Deck, made of the Hatches of our ruin'd ship, so close that no water could goe in her, gaue her Sayles and Oares, and intreating with our Masters Mate Henry Rauens (who was supposed a sufficient Pilot) wee found him easily wonne to make ouer therewith, as a Barke of Aniso for Virginia, which being in the height of thirtie seuen degrees, fiue degrees from the Iland which we were, might bee some one hundred and fortie leagues from vs, or thereabouts (reckoning to euery degree that lies North-east, and Westerly twentie eight English leagues) who the twentie eight of August being Munday, with sixe Saylers, and our Cape Merchant Thomas Whittingham departed from vs out of Gates his Bay: but to our much wonder returned againe vpon the Wednesday night after, hauing attempted to haue got cleere of the Iland, from the North North-eath to the South-west, but could not as little water as shee drew, which might not bee aboue twentie inches for shoales and breaches, so as he was faine to go out from Summers Creeks, and the same way we came in on the South South-east of the Ilands, and from thence wee made to Sea the Friday after the first of September, promising if hee liued and arriued safe there, to returne vnto vs the next new Moone with the Pinnace belonging to the Colony there: according vnto which instructions were directed vnto the new Leiftenant Gouernour, and Councell from our Gouernour here, for which the Ilands were appointed carefully to be watched, and fiers prepared as Beacons to haue directed and wafted him in, but two Moones were wasted vpon the Promontory before mentioned, and gaue many a long and wished looke round about the Horizon, from the North-east to the South-west, but in vaine, discouering nothing all the while, which way soeuer we turned our eye, but ayre and sea.

H. Rauens voyage from Bermuda to Virginia.

You may please, excellent Lady, to know the reason which moued our Gouernour to dispatch this long Boat, was the care which hee tooke for the estate of the Colony in this his inforced absence: for by a long practised experience, foreseeing and fearing what innouation and tumult might happily arise, amongst the younger and ambitious spirits of the new companies to arriue in Virginia, now comming with him along in this same Fleet, hee framed his letters to the Colony, and by a particular Commission confirmed Captaine Peter Winn his Lieutenant Gouernour, with an Assistance of sixe Counsellours, writing withall to diuers and such Gentlemen of qualitie and knowledge of vertue, and to such louers of goodnesse in this cause whom hee knew, intreating them by giuing examples in themselues of duty and obedience, to assist likewise the said Lieutenant Gouernour, against such as should attempt the innouating of the person (now named by him) or forme of gouernment, which in some Articles hee did likewise prescribe vnto them: and had faire hopes all should goe well, if these his letters might arriue there, vntill such time as either some Ship there (which hee fairely beleeued) might bee moued presently to aduenture for him: or that it should please the right honourable, the Lordes, and the rest of his Maiesties Councell in England, to addresse thither the right honourable the Lord Lawar (one of more eminencie and worthinesse) as the proiect was before his comming forth) whilest by their honourable fauours, a charitable consideration in like manner might bee taken of our estates to redeeme vs from hence. For which purpose likewise our Gouernour directed a particular letter to the Councell in England, and sent it to the foresaid Captaine Peter Winne (his now to bee chosen Lieutenant Gouernour) by him to bee dispatched (which is the first) from thence into England.

Gap. Win. L. Lawarre. Sir George Summers his surueay, and other industrie.

In his absence Sir George Summers coasted the Ilands, and drew the former plat of them, and daily fished, and hunted for our whole company, vntill the seuen and twentieth of Nouember, when then well perceiuing that we were not likely to heare from Virginia, and conceiuing how the Pinnace which Richard Frobbusher was a building would not be of burthen sufficient to transport all our men from thence into Virginia (especially considering the season of the yeare, wherein we were likely to put off) he consulted with our Gouernour, that if hee might haue two Carpenters (for we had foure, such as they were) and twenty men, ouer with him into the maine Iland, he would quickly frame vp another little Barke, to second ours, for the better fitting and conueiance of our people. Our Gouernour, with many thankes (as the cause required) cherishing this so carefull and religious consideration in him (and whose experience likewise was somewhat in these affaires) granted him all things sutable to his desire, and to the furthering of the worke: who therefore had made ready for him all such tooles and instruments, as our owne vse required not: and for him, were drawne forth twenty of the ablest and stoutest of the company, and the best of our men, to hew and square timber, when himselfe then, with daily paines and

He builds a Pinnace.

Digitized by Google

and labour, wrought vpon a small Vessell, which was soone ready as ours: at which wee leaue him a while busied, and returne to our selues. In the meane space did one Frubbusher, borne at Graues end, and at his comming forth now dwelling at Lime House (a painefull and well experienced Shipwright, and skilfull workman) labour the building of a little Pinnace: for the furtherance of which, the Gouernour dispensed with no trauaile of his body, nor forbare any care or study of minde, perswading (as much and more, an ill qualified parcell of people, by his owne performance, then by authority, thereby to hold them at their worke, namely to fell, carry, and sawe Cedar, fit for the Carpenters purpose (for what was so meane, whereto he would not himselfe set his hand, being therefore vp earely and downe late?) yet neuertheless were they hardly drawne to it, as the Tortoise to the inchantment, as the Prouerbe is, but his owne presence and hand being set to euery meane labour, and imployed so readily to euery office, made our people at length more diligent, and willing to be called thereunto, where, they should see him before they came. In which, we may obserue how much example preuailes aboue precepts; and how readier men are to be led by eyes, then eares.

R. Frubusher builds another

Power of example.

And sure it was happy for vs, who had now runne this fortune, and were fallen into the bottome of this misery, that we both had our Gouernour with vs, and one so solicitous and carefull, whose both example (as I said) and authority, could lay shame, and command vpon our people: else, I am perswaded, we had most of vs finished our dayes there, so willing were the maior part of the common sort (especially when they found such a plenty of victuals) to settle a foundation of euer inhabiting there; as well appeared by many practises of theirs (and perhaps of some of the better sort) Loe, what are our affections and passions, if not rightly squared? how irreligious, and irregular they expresse vs? not perhaps so ill as we would be, but yet as wee are; some dangerous and secret discontents nourished amongst vs, had like to haue bin the parents of bloudy issues and mischieses; they began first in the Sea-men, who in time had fastened vnto them (by false baits) many of our land-men likewise, and some of whom (for opinion of their Religion) was carried an extraordinary and good respect. The Angles wherewith chiefely they thus hooked in these disquieted Pooles, were, how that in Virginia, nothing but wretchednesse and labour must be expected, with many wants, and a churlish intreaty, there being neither that Fish, Flesh, nor Fowle, which here (without wasting on the one part, or watching on theirs, or any threatning, and are of authority) at ease, and pleasure might be inioyed: and since both in the one, and the other place, they were (for the time) to loose the fruition both of their friends and Countrey, as good, and better were it for them, to repose and seate them where they should haue the least outward wants the while. This, thus preached, and published each to other; though by such who neuer had bin more onward towards Virginia, then (before this Voyage) a Sculler could happily rowe him (and what hath a more adamantiue power to draw vnto it the consent and attraction of the idle, vntoward, and wretched number of the many, then liberty, and fulnesse of sensuality?) begat such a murmur, and such a discontent, and disunion of hearts and hands from this labour, and forwarding the meanes of redeeming vs from hence, as each one wrought with his Mate how to diuorse him from the same.

Mutinous conceptions.

And first (and it was the first of September) a conspiracy was discouered, of which six were found principals, who had promised each vnto the other, not to set their hands, to any trauaile or endeauour which might expedite or forward this Pinnace: and each of these had seuerally (according to appointment) sought his opportunity to draw the Smith, and one of our Carpenters, Nicholas Bennit, who made much profession of Scripture, a mutinous and dissembling Impostor; the Captaine, and one of the chiefe perswaders of others, who afterwards brake from the society of the Colony, and like outlawes retired into the Woods, to make a settlement and habitation there) on their party, with whom they purposed to leaue our Quarter, and possesse another Iland by themselues: but this happily found out, they were condemned to the same punishment which they would haue chosen (but without Smith or Carpenter) and to an Iland farre by it selfe, they were carried, and there left. Their names were Iohn Want, the chiefe of them, an Essex man of Newport by Saffronwalden, both seditious, and a sectary in points of Religion, in his owne prayers much deuout and frequent, but hardly drawne to the publique, insomuch as being suspected by our Minister for a Brownist, he was often compelled to the common Liturgie and forme of Prayer. The rest of the confederates were Christopher Carter, Francis Pearepoint, William Brian, William Martin, Richard Knowles: but soone they missed comfort (who were farre remoued from our store) besides, the society of their acquaintance had wrought in some of them, if not a loathsomenesse of their offence, yet a sorrow that their complement was not more full, and therefore a wearinesse of their being thus vntimely prescribed; insomuch, as many humble petitions were sent vnto our Gouernor, fraught full of their seeming sorrow and repentance, and earnest vowes to redeeme the former trespasse, with example of dueties in them all, to the common cause, and generall businesse; vpon which our Gouernour (not easie to admit any accusation, and hard to remit an offence, but at all times sorry in the punishment of him, in whom may appeare either shame or contrition) was easily content to reacknowledge them againe.

Conspiracy.

Iohn Want, Carter, and others exiled and pardoned.

Digitized by Google

Another Mutinie.

Yet could not this be any warning to others, who more ſubtilly began to ſhake the foundation of our quiet ſafety, and therein did one Stephen Hopkins commence the firſt act or ouerture: A fellow who had much knowledge in the Scriptures, and could reaſon well therein, whom our Miniſter therefore choſe to be his Clarke, to reade the Pſalmes, and Chapters vpon Sondayes, at the aſſembly of the Congregation vnder him: who in Ianuary the twenty foure, brake with one Samuel Sharpe and Humfrey Reede (who preſently diſcouered it to the Gouernour) and alleaged ſubſtantiall arguments, both ciuill and diuine (the Scripture falſly quoted) that it was no breach of honeſty, conſcience, nor Religion, to decline from the obedience of the Gouernour, or refuſe to goe any further, led by his authority (except it ſo pleaſed themſelues) ſince the authority ceaſed when the wracke was committed, and with it, they were all then freed from the gouernment of any man; and for a matter of Conſcience, it was not vnknowne to the meaneſt, how much we were therein bound each one to prouide for himſelfe, and his owne family: for which were two apparant reaſons to ſtay them euen in this place; firſt, abundance by Gods prouidence of all manner of good foode: next, ſome hope in reaſonable time, when they might grow weary of the place, to build a ſmall Barke, with the skill and helpe of the aforeſaid Nicholas Bennit, whom they inſinuated to them, albeit hee was now abſent from his quarter, and working in the maine Iland with Sir George Summers vpon his Pinnace, to be of the conſpiracy, that ſo might get cleere from hence at their owne pleaſures: when in Virginia, the firſt would be aſſuredly wanting, and they might well feare to be detained in that Countrie by the authority of the Commander thereof, and their whole life to ſerue the turnes of the Aduenturers, with their trauailes and labours. This being thus laid, and by ſuch a one, who had gotten an opinion (as I before remembred) of Religion; when it was declared by thoſe two accuſers, not knowing what further ground it had or complices, it pleaſed the Gouernour to let this his factious offence to haue a publique affront, and conteſtation by theſe two witneſſes before the whole Company, who at the toling of a Bell) aſſemble before a Corps du guard, where the Priſoner was brought forth in manacles, and both accuſed, and ſuffered to make at large, to euery particular, his anſwere; which was onely full of ſorrow and teares, pleading ſimplicity, and deniall. But hee being onely found, at this time, both the Captaine, and the follower of this Mutinie, and generally held worthy to ſatisfie the puniſhment of his offence, with the ſacrifice of his life, our Gouernour paſſed the ſentence of a Martiall Court vpon him, ſuch as belongs to Mutinie and Rebellion. But ſo penitent hee was, and made ſo much moane, alleadging the ruine of his Wife and Children in this his treſpaſſe, as it wrought in the hearts of all the better ſort of the Company, who therefore with humble intreaties, and earneſt ſupplications, went vnto our Gouernor, whom they beſought (as likewiſe did Captaine Newport, and my ſelfe) and neuer left him vntill we had got his pardon.

Conſcience greateſt enemy to conſcience.

Stephen Hopkins condemned and pardoned.

In theſe dangers and diuelliſh diſquiets (whileſt the almighty God wrought for vs, and ſent vs miraculouſly deliuered from the calamities of the Sea, all bleſſings vpon the ſhoare, to content and binde vs to gratefulneſſe) thus inraged amongſt our ſelues, to the deſtruction each of other, into what a miſchiefe and miſery had wee bin giuen vp, had wee not had a Gouernour with his authority, to haue ſuppreſſed the ſame? Yet was there a worſe practiſe, faction, and coniuration a foote, deadly and bloudy, in which the life of our Gouernour, with many others were threatned, and could not but miſcarry in his fall. But ſuch is euer the will of God (who in the execution of his iudgements, breaketh the firebrands vpon the head of him, who firſt kindleth them) there were, who conceiued that our Gouernour indeede neither durſt, nor had authority to put in execution, or paſſe the act of Iuſtice vpon any one, how treacherous or impious ſo euer; their owne opinions ſo much deceiuing them for the vnlawfulneſſe of any act, which they would execute: daring to iuſtifie among themſelues, that if they ſhould be apprehended, before the performance, they ſhould happily ſuffer as Martyrs. They perſeuered therefore not onely to draw vnto them ſuch a number, and aſſociates as they could worke in, to the abandoning of our Gouernour, and to the inhabiting of this Iland. They had now purpoſed to haue made a ſurpriſe of the Store-houſe, and to haue forced from thence, what was therein either of Meale, Cloath, Cables, Armes, Sailes, Oares, or what elſe it pleaſed God that we had recouered from the wracke, and was to ſerue our generall neceſſity and vſe, either for the reliefe of vs, while wee ſtaied here, or for the carrying of vs from this place againe, when our Pinnace ſhould haue bin furniſhed.

Third Mutiny.

Euill, as it hath a deficient cauſe, ſo in and before the effects, defects are found.

But as all giddy and lawleſſe attempts, haue alwayes ſomething of imperfection, and that as well by the porperty of the action, which holdeth of diſobedience and rebellion (both full of feare) as through the ignorance of the deuiſers themſelues; ſo in this (beſides thoſe defects) there were ſome of the aſſociation, who not ſtrong inough fortified in their owne conceits, brake from the plot it ſelfe, and (before the time was ripe for the execution thereof) diſcouered the whole order, and euery Agent, and Actor thereof, who neuertheleſſe were not ſuddenly apprehended, by reaſon the confederates were diuided and ſeperated in place, ſome with vs, and the chiefe with Sir Georg Summers in his Iland (and indeede all his whole company) but good watch paſſed vpon them, euery man from thenceforth commmanded to weare his his weapon, without which before, we freely walked from quarter to quarter; and conuerſed among our ſelues, and euery man aduiſed to ſtand vpon his guard; his owne life not being in ſafety, whileſt his next neighbour was not to be truſted. The Centinels, and nightwarders doubled, the paſſages of both the quarters were carefully obſerued; by which meanes nothing was further attempted; vntill a Gentleman amongſt them, one Henry Paine, the thirteenth of March, full of miſchiefe, and euery houre preparing ſomething or other, ſtealing Swords, Adiſes, Axes, Hatchets, Sawes, Augers, Planes, Mallets, &c. to make good his owne bad end, his watch night comming about, and being called by the Captaine of the ſame; to be vpon the guard, did not onely giue his ſaid Commander euill language, but ſtrucke at him; doubled his blowes, and when hee was not ſuffered to cloſe with him, went off the Guard, ſcoffing at the double diligence and attendance of the Watch, appointed by the Gouernour for much purpoſe, as hee ſaid: vpon which, the Watch telling him, if the Gouernour ſhould vnderſtand of this his inſolency, it might turne him to much blame, and happily be as much as his life were worth. The ſaid Paine replyed with a ſetled and bitter violence, and in ſuch vnreuerent tearmes, as I ſhould offend the modeſt eare too much to expreſſe it in his owne phraſe; but the contents were, how that the Gouernour had no authoritie of that qualitie, to iuſtifie vpon any one (how meane ſoeuer in the Colonie) an action of that nature, and therefore let the Gouernour (ſaid hee) kiſſe, &c. Which words, being with the omitted additions, brought the next day vnto euery common and publique diſcourſe, at length they were deliuered ouer to the Gouernour, who examining well the fact (the tranſgreſſion ſo much the more exemplary and odious, as being in a dangerous time, in a Confederate, and the ſucceſſe of the ſame wiſhtly liſtened after, with a doubtfull conceit, what might be the iſſue of ſo notorious a boldneſſe and impudency) calling the ſaid Paine before him, and the whole Company, where (being ſoone conuinced both by the witneſſe, of the Commander, and many which were vpon the watch with him) our Gouernour, who had now the eyes of the whole Colony fixed vpon him, condemned him to be inſtantly hanged; and the ladder being ready, after he had made many confeſſions, hee earneſtly deſired, being a Gentleman, that hee might be ſhot to death, and towards the euening he had his deſire, the Sunne and his life ſetting together.

H. Paine his Mutinus behauiour.

His execution.

But for the other which were with Sir George, vpon the Sunday following (the Barke beeing now in good forwardneſſe) and readie to lanch in ſhort time, from that place (as we ſuppoſed) to meet ours at a pond of freſh water, where they were both to bee moored, vntill ſuch time as being fully tackled, the wind ſhould ſerue faire, for our putting to Sea together) being the eighteenth of March, hearing of Paynes death, and fearing hee had appeached them, and diſcouered the attempt (who poore Gentleman therein, in ſo bad a cauſe, was too ſecret and conſtant to his owne faith ingaged vnto them, and as little needed, as vrged thereunto, though ſomewhat was voluntarily deliuered by him) by a mutuall conſent forſooke their labour, and Sir George Summers, and like Out-lawes betooke them to the wild Woods: whether meere rage, and greedineſſe after ſome little Pearle (as it was thought) wherewith they conceiued, they ſhould for euer inrich themſelues, and ſaw how to obtaine the ſame eaſily in this place, or whether, the deſire for euer to inhabite heere, or what other ſecret elſe moued them thereunto, true it is, they ſent an audacious and formall Petition to our Gouernour, ſubſcribed with all their names and Seales: not only intreating him, that they might ſtay heere, but (with great art) importuned him, that he would performe other conditions with them, and not waue, nor euade from ſome of his owne promiſes, as namely to furniſh each of them with two Sutes of Apparell, and contribute Meale rateably for one whole yeere, ſo much among them, as they had weekly now, which was one pound and an halfe a weeke (for ſuch had beene our proportion for nine moneths.) Our Gouernour anſwered this their Petition, writing to Sir George Summers to this effect.

Diuers of Sir G. Summers company fled into the woods.

That true it was, at their firſt arriuall vpon this Iland, when it was feared how our meanes would not extend to the making of a Veſſell, capeable and large enough, to tranſport all our Countrimen at once, indeed out of his Chriſtian conſideration (mourning for ſuch his Countrimen, who comming vnder his command, he foreſaw that for a while, he was like enough to leaue here behind, compelled by tyrannie of neceſſitie) his purpoſe was not yet to forſake them ſo, as giuen vp like Sauages: but to leaue them all things fitting to defend them from want and wretchednesſe, as much at least as lay in his power, to ſpare from the preſent vſe (and perhaps neceſſitie of others, whoſe fortunes ſhould be to be tranſported with him) for one whole yeere or more (if ſo long by any caſualtie, the ſhips which he would ſend vnto them might be ſtaied before their arriuall, ſo many hazards accompanying the Sea) but withall intreated Sir George to remember vnto his Company (if by any meanes he could learne where they were) how he had vowed vnto him, that if either his owne meanes, his authoritie in Virginia, or loue with his friends in England, could diſpatch for them ſooner, how farre it was from him, to let them remayne abandoned, and neglected without their redemption ſo long: and then proceeded, requeſting Sir George Summers againe, to ſignifie vnto them, ſince now our owne Pinnaſſe did ariſe to that burthen, and that it would ſufficiently tranſport them all, beſide the neceſſitie of any other Barke: and yet, that ſince his Barke was now readie too, that thoſe conſultations, how ſoeuer charitable and moſt paſſionate in themſelues, might determine, as

Sir T. Gates his letter to Sir G. Summers.

taken

taken away thereby, and therefore, that he ſhould now bee pleaſed to adviſe them well, how vnanſwerable this graunt or conſent of his ſhould be: firſt, to his Maieſtie for ſo many of his ſubiects, next to the Adventurers; and laſtly, what an imputation and infamy it might be, to both their owne proper reputations, and honours, hauing each of them authoritie in their places, to compell the aduerſant and irregular multitude, at any time, to what ſhould bee obedient and honeſt, which if they ſhould not execute, the blame would not lye vpon the people (at all times wauering and inſolent) but vpon themſelues ſo weake and vnworthy in their command. And moreouer intreated him by any ſecret practice to apprehend them, ſince that the obſtinate, and precipitate many, were no more in ſuch a condition and ſtate to bee fauoured, then the murmuring and mutinie of ſuch Rebellious and turbulent Humoriſts, who had not conſcience nor knowledge, to draw in the yoke of goodneſſe, and in the buſineſſe for which they were ſent out of England: for which likewiſe, at the expence and charge of the Adventurers, they were to him committed, and that the meaneſt in the whole Fleet ſtood the Company in no leſſe then twentie pounds, for his owne perſonall Tranſportation, and things neceſſary to accompany him. And therefore louingly coniured Sir George, by the worthineſſe of his (heretofore) well mayntayned reputation, and by the powers of his owne iudgement, and by the vertue of that ancient loue and friendſhip, which had theſe many yeeres beene ſetled betweene them, to doe his beſt, to giue this reuolted Company (if he could ſend vnto them) the conſideration of theſe particulars, and ſo worke with them (if he might) that by faire meanes (the Mutinie reconciled) they would at length ſuruey their owne errours, which hee would bee as readie, vpon their rendring and comming into pardon, as he did now pittie them; aſſuring them in generall and particular, that whatſoeuer they had ſiniſterly committed, or practiſed hitherto againſt the Lawes of dutie and honeſtie, ſhould not in any ſort be imputed againſt them.

Waters and Carter ſtand out and are left behind.

In which good Office Sir George Summers did ſo nobly worke, and heartily labour, as hee brought moſt of them in, and indeed all, but Chriſtopher Carter, and Robert Waters, who (by no meanes) would any more come amongſt Sir Georges men, hearing that Sir George had commanded his men indeed (ſince they would not be intreated by faire meanes) to ſurprize them (if they could) by any deuice or force. From which time they grew ſo cautelous and wary, for their owne ill, as at our comming away, wee were faine to leaue them behind. That Waters was a Sayler, who at his firſt landing vpon the Iland (as after you ſhall heare) killed another fellow Sayler of his, the bodie of the murthered and Murtherer ſo dwelling, as preſcribed now together.

Religious exerciſes perfor-med by Maſter Buckc.

During our time of abode vpon theſe Ilands, wee had daily euery Sunday two Sermons preached by our Miniſter, beſides euery Morning and Euening at the ringing of a Bell, wee repayred all to puplique Prayer, at what time the names of our whole Company were called by Bill, and ſuch as were wanting, were duly puniſhed.

The contents (for the moſt part) of all our Preachers Sermons, were eſpecially of Thankefulneſſe and Vnitie, &c.

The moſt holy; ciuill and moſt naturall poſſeſſion taken of the Bermudas by exerciſe of Sacraments Marriage, Child-birth, &c. Chi'dren named Bermuda and Bermudas.

It pleaſed God alſo to giue vs opportunitie, to performe all the other Offices, and Rites of our Chriſtian Profeſſion in this Iland: as Marriage, for the ſixe and twentieth of Nouember, we had one of Sir George Summers his men, his Cooke, named Thomas Powell, who married a Maid Seruant of one Miſtris Horton, whoſe name was Elizabeth Perſons: and vpon Chriſtmaſſe Eue, as alſo once before, the firſt of October; our Miniſter preached a godly Sermon, which being ended, he celebrated a Communion, at the partaking whereof our Gouernour was, and the greateſt part of our Company: and the eleuenth of February, wee had the childe of one Iohn Roſe chriſtened a Daughter, to which Captaine Newport and my ſelfe were Witneſſes, and the aforeſaid Miſtris Horton and we named it Bermuda, as alſo the fiue and twentieth of March, the wife of one Edward Eaſon, being deliuered the weeke before of a Boy, had him then chriſtened, to which Captaine Newport and my ſelfe, and Maſter Iames Swift were Godfathers, and we named it Bermudas.

Likewiſe, we buried fiue of our company, Ieffery Briars, Richard Lewis, William Hitchman, and my God-daughter Bermuda Rolfe, and one vntimely Edward Samuell a Sayler, being villanouſly killed by the foreſaid Robert Waters, (a Sayler likewiſe) with a ſhouell, who ſtrake him therewith vnder the lift of the Eare, for which he was apprehended, and appointed to be hanged the next day, the fact being done in the twilight) but being bound faſt to a Tree all night, with many Ropes, and a Guard of fiue or ſix to attend him, his fellow Saylers watching the aduantage of the Centinels ſleeping) in deſpight and diſdaine that Iuſtice ſhould bee ſhewed vpon a Sayler, and that one of their crue ſhould be an example to others, not taking into conſideration, the vnmanlineſſe of the murther, nor the horror of the ſinne, they cut his bands, and conueyed him into the Woods, where they fed him nightly, and cloſely, who afterward by the mediation of Sir George Summers, vpon many conditions, had his tryall reſpited by our Gouernour.

Sayler's miſor-der.

Wee had brought our Pinnaſſe ſo forward by this time, as the eight and twentieth of Auguſt we hauing laid her Keele. The ſixe and twentieth of February, we now began to calke: old Cables we had preſerued vnto vs, which affoorded Ocam enough: and one barrell of Pitch, and another of Tarre, we likewiſe ſaued, which ſerued our vſe ſome little way vpon the Brig. wee breamed her otherwiſe with Lime made of Wilke-ſhels, and an hard white ſtone which we burned

Digitized by Google

ned in a Kill, slaked with fresh water, and tempered with Tortoyses Oyle. The thirtieth of March being Friday, we towed her out in the morning Spring-tyde, from the Wharfe where she was built, boying her with foure Caske in her runne only: which opened into the North-west, and into which when the Breeze stood North and by West with any stiffe gale, and vpon the Spring-tydes, the Sea would increase with that violence, especially twice it did so, as at the first time (before our Gouernour had caused a solid Causey of an hundred load of stone to bee brought from the Hils and Neighbour Rockes, and round about her ribs from stemme to stemme; where it made a pointed Baulke, and thereby brake the violence of the Flowe and Billowe) it indangered her ouerthrow and ruine, beeing greene as it were vpon the Stockes. With much difficultie, diligence, and labour, we saued her at the first, all her Bases, Shores, and Piles, which vnder-set her, being almost carried from her, which was the second of Ianuary, when her knees were not set to, nor one ioynt firme: We launched her vntrigged, to carrie her to a little round Iland, lying West North-west, and close aboord to the backe side of our Iland, both neerer the Ponds and Wels of some fresh water, as also from thence to make our way to the Sea the better: the Channell being there sufficient and deepe enough to leade her forth, when her Masts, Sayles, and all her Trimme should bee about her. Shee was fortie foot by the Keele, and nineteene foot broad at the Beame, sixe foote floore, her Rake forward was fourteene foot, her Rake aft from the top of her Post (which was twelue foot long) was three foot, shee was eight foot deepe vnder her Beame, betweene her Deckes she was foure foot and an halfe, with a rising of halfe a foot more vnder her fore Castle, of purpose to scowre the Decke with small shot, if at any time wee should bee borded by the Enemie. Shee had a fall of eighteene inches aft, to make her sterage and her great Cabbin the more large: her sterage was fiue foote long, and sixe foote high, with a close Gallerie right aft, with a window on each side, and two right aft. The most part of her timber was Cedar, which we found to be bad for shipping, for that it is wonderous false inward, and besides it is so spault or brickle, that it will make no good plankes, her Beames were all Oke of our ruine ship, and some plankes in her Bow of Oke, and all the rest as is aforesaid. When shee began to swimme (vpon her launching) our Gouernour called her The Deliuerance, and shee might be some eighty tunnes of burthen.

Cedar ill for shipping.

Before we quitted our old quarter, and dislodged to the fresh water with our Pinnasse, our Gouernour set vp in Sir George Summers Garden a faire Mnemósynon in figure of a Crosse, made of some of the timber of our ruined shippe, which was scrued in with strong and great trunnels to a mightie Cedar, which grew in the middest of the said Garden, and whose top and vpper branches he caused to be lopped, that the violence of the winde and weather might haue the lesse power ouer her.

Crosse set vp for a memorial

In the middest of the Crosse, our Gouernour fastened the Picture of his Maiestie in a piece of Siluer of twelue pence, and on each side of the Crosse, hee set an Inscription grauen in Copper, in the Latine and English to this purpose.

His Maiesties Picture.

In memory of our great Deliuerance, both from a mightie storme and leake: wee haue set vp this to the honour of God. It is the spoyle of an English ship (of three hundred tunne) called the Sea Venture, bound with seuen ships more (from which the storme diuided vs) to Virginia, or Noua Britania, in America. In it were two Knights, Sir Thomas Gates Knight, Gouernour of the English Forces and Colonie there: and Sir George Summers Knight, Admirall of the Seas. Her Captaine was Christopher Newport, Passengers and Mariners shee had beside (which came all safe to Land) one hundred and fiftie. We were forced to runne her ashore (by reason of her leake) vnder a Point that bore South-east from the Northerne Point of the Iland, which wee discouered first the eight and twentieth of July 1609.

About the last of Aprill, Sir George Summers launched his Pinnasse, and brought her from his building Bay, in the Mayne Iland, into the Chanuell where ours did ride, and shee was by the Keele nine and twentie foot: at the Beame fifteene foot and an halfe: at the Loofe fourteene, at the Trausam nine, and she was eight foot deepe, and drew sixe foote water, and hee called her the Patience.

§. III.

Their departure from Bermuda and arriuall in Virginia: miseries there, departure and returne vpon the Lord LA WARRES arriuing. IAMES Towne described.

FRom this time we only awaited a fauourable Westerly wind to carrie vs forth, which longer then vsuall now kept at the East, and South-east; the way which wee were to goe. The tenth of May early, Sir George Summers and Captaine Newport went off with their long Boates, and with two Canoaes boyed the Channell, which wee were to leade it out in, and which was no broader from Shoales on the one side and Rockes Rockeson the other, then about three times the length of our Pinnasse. About ten of the clocke, that day being Thursday, we set sayle an easie gale, the wind at South, and by reason no more winde blew, we were faine to towe her with our long Boate, yet neither with the helpe of that, were we able to fit our Bowyes, but euen when we came iust vpon them, we strucke a Rocke on the starboord side, ouer which the Bowye rid, and had it not beene a soft Rocke, by which meanes she bore it before her, and crushed it to pieces, God knowes we might haue beene like enough, to haue returned anew, and dwelt there, after tenne monethes of carefulnesse and great labour a longer time: but God was more mercifull vnto vs. When shee strucke vpon the Rocke, the Cock-swayne one Walsingham beeing in the Boate with a quicke spirit (when wee were all amazed, and our hearts failed) and so by Gods goodnesse wee led it out at three fadome, and three fadome and an halfe water. The wind serued vs easily all that day and the next, when (God be euer praysed for it) to the no little ioy of vs all, we got cleere of the Ilands. After which holding a Southerly course, for seuen dayes wee had the winde sometimes faire, and sometimes scarce and contrarie: in which time we lost Sir George Summers twice, albeit we still spared him our mayne top-sayle, and sometimes our fore course too.

Signe of Land. The seuenteenth of May we saw change of water, and had much Rubbish swimme by our ship side, whereby wee knew wee were not farre from Land. The eighteenth about midnight wee sounded, with the Dipsing Lead, and found thirtie seuen fadome. The nineteenth in the morning we sounded, and had nineteene and an halfe fadome, stonie, and sandie ground. The twentieth about midnight, we had a maruellous sweet smell from the shoare (as from the Coast of Spaine, short of the Straits) strong and pleasant, which did not a little glad vs. In the morning by day breake (so soone as one might well see from the fore-top) one of the Saylers descryed Land about an houre after, I went vp and might discouer two Hummockes to the Southward, from which (Northward all along) lay the Land, which wee were to Coast to Cape Henrie. About seuen of the clocke we cast forth an Anchor, because the tyde (by reason of the Freshet that set into the Bay) make a strong Ebbe there, and the winde was but easie, so as not beeing able to stemme the Tyde, we purposed to lye at an Anchor vntill the next flood, but the wind comming South-west a loome gale about eleuen, we set sayle againe, and hauing got ouer the Barre, bore in for the Cape.

Cheſapiack Bay. This is the famous Cheſipiacke Bay, which wee haue called (in honour of our young Prince) Cape Henrie ouer against which within the Bay, lyeth another Head-land, which wee called in honour of our Princely Duke of Yorke Cape Charles; and these lye North-east and by East, and South-west and by West, and they may bee distant each from the other in breadth seuen leagues, betweene which the Sea runnes in as broad as betweene Queenebarrough and Lee. Indeed it is a goodly Bay and a fairer, not easily to be found.

The one and twentieth, beeing Munday in the morning, wee came vp within two miles of Points Comfort, when the Captaine of the Fort discharged a warning Peece at vs, whereupon we came to an Anchor, and sent off our long Boat to the Fort, to certifie who we were by reason of the shoales which lye on the South-side, this Fort easily commands the mouth of the Riuer, albeit it is as broad as betweene Greenwich, and the Ile of Dogges.

True it is, such who talked with our men from the shoare, deliuered how safely all our ships the last yeere (excepting only the Admirall, and the little Pinnasse in which one Michael Philes commanded of some twentie tunne, which we towed a sterne till the storme blew) arriued, and how our people (well increased) had therefore builded this Fort; only wee could not learne any thing of our long Boat, sent from the Bermudas, but what wee gathered by the Indians themselues, especially from Powhatan, who would tell our men of such a Boat landed in one of his Riuers, and would describe the people, and make much scoffing sport thereat: by which wee haue gathered, that it is most likely, how it arriued vpon our Coast, and not meeting with our Riuer were taken at some time or other, at some aduantage by the Sauages, and so cut off. When our Skiffe came vp againe, the good newes of our ships, and mens arriuall the last yeere, did not a little glad our Gouernour: who went soone ashoare, and assoone (contrary to all our faire hopes) had new vnexpected, vncomfortable, and heauie newes of a worse condition of our people aboue at Iames Towne.

The long Boat sent by Ratcliffe cast away

Vpon Point Comfort our men did the last yeere (as you haue heard) rayse a little Fortification, which since hath beene better perfected, and is likely to proue a strong Fort, and is now kept by Captaine Iames Davies with forty men, and hath to name Algernoone Fort, so called by Captaine George Percy, whom we found at our arriuall President of the Colony, and at this time likewise in the Fort. When we got into the Point, which was the one and twentieth of May, being Munday about noone; where riding before an Indian Towne called Kecoughton, a mightie storme of Thunder, Lightning, and Raine, gaue vs a shrewd and fearefull welcome.

Algernoone Fort M. George Percy.

From hence in two dayes (only by the helpe of Tydes, no winde stirring) wee plyed it sadly vp the Riuer, and the three and twentieth of May we cast Anchor before Iames Towne, where we landed, and our much grieued Gouernour first visiting the Church caused the Bell to be rung, at which (all such as were able to come forth of their houses) repayred to Church where our Mi-

Miserable shewes of welcome.

ni-ſter

niſter Maſter Bucke made a zealous and ſorrowfull Prayer, finding all things ſo contrary to our expectations, ſo full of miſery and miſgouernment. After Seruice our Gouernour cauſed mee to reade his Commiſſion, and Captaine Percie (then Preſident) deliuered vp vnto him his Commiſſion, the old Patent and the Councell Seale. Viewing the Fort, we found the Palliſadoes torne downe, the Ports open, the Gates from off the hinges, and emptie houſes (which Owners death had taken from them) rent vp and burnt, rather then the dwellers would ſtep into the Woods a ſtones caſt off from them, to fetch other fire-wood: and it is true, the Indian killed as faſt without, if our men ſtirred but beyond the bounds of their Block-houſe, as Famine and Peſtilence did within; with many more particularities of their ſufferances (brought vpon them by their owne diſorders the laſt yeere) then I haue heart to expreſſe. In this deſolation and miſery our Gouernour found the condition and ſtate of the Colonie, and (which added more to his griefe) no hope how to amend it or ſaue his owne Company, and thoſe yet remayning aliue, from falling into the like neceſſities. For we had brought from the Bermudas no greater ſtore of prouiſion (fearing no ſuch accidents poſſible to befall the Colony here) then might well ſerue one hundred and fiftie for a Sea Voyage: and it was not poſſible, at this time of the yeere to amend it, by any helpe from the Indian. For beſides that they (at their beſt) haue little more, then from hand to mouth, it was now likewiſe but their Seed-time, and all their Corne ſcarce put into the ground: nor was there at the Fort, as they whom we found related vnto vs) any meanes to take fiſh, neither ſufficient Seine, nor other conuenient Net, and yet if there had, there was not one eye of Sturgeon yet come into the Riuer. All which conſidered, it pleaſed our Gouernour to make a Speech vnto the Company, giuing them to vnderſtand, that what prouiſion he had, they ſhould equally ſhare with him, and if he ſhould find it not poſſible, and eaſie to ſupply them with ſome thing from the Countrey, by the endeuours of his able men, hee would make readie, and tranſport them all into their Natiue Countrey (accommodating them the beſt that he could) at which there was a generall acclamation, and ſhoute of ioy on both ſides (for euen our owne men began to be diſheartened and faint, when they ſaw this miſery amongſt the others, and no leſſe threatned vnto themſelues. In the meane while, our Gouernour publiſhed certaine Orders and Inſtructions, which hee enioyned them ſtrictly to obſerue, the time that hee ſhould ſtay amongſt them, which being written out faire, were ſet vp vpon a poſt in the Church for euery one to take notice of.

Old Patent yeelded vp.

Their miſeries inuited. Ipſi ſibi cauſa malorum.

Orders eſtabliſhed which continued for their ſhort ſtay: the particulers are here omitted. They contained a Preface and 21. Articles for Pietie, Loyaltie and Politie conuenient to the Colonie.

If I ſhould be examined from whence, and by what occaſion, all theſe diſaſters, and afflictions deſcended vpon our people, I can only referre you (honoured Ladie) to the Booke, which the Aduenturers haue ſent hither intituled, Aduertiſements vnto the Colony in Virginia: wherein the ground and cauſes are fauourably abridged, from whence theſe miſerable effects haue beene produced, not excuſing likewiſe the forme of gouernment of ſome errour, which was not powerfull enough among ſo headie a multitude, eſpecially, as thoſe who arriued here in the ſupply ſent the laſt yeere with vs: with whom the better authoritie and gouernment now changed into an abſolute command, came along, and had beene as happily eſtabliſhed, had it pleaſed God, that we with them had reached our wiſhed Harbour.

Vnto ſuch calamity can ſloath, riot, and vanity, bring the moſt ſetled and plentifull eſtate. Indeede (right noble Lady) no ſtory can remember vnto vs, more woe and anguiſhes, then theſe people, thus gouerned, haue both ſuffered and puld vpon their owne heads. And yet true it is, ſome of them, whoſe voyces and command might not be heard, may eaſily be abſolued from the guilt hereof, as ſtanding vntouched, and vpright in their innocencies; whileſt the priuie factionaries ſhall neuer find time nor darkneſſe, to wipe away or couer their ignoble and irreligious practiſes, who, it may be, lay all the diſcredits, and imputations the while vpon the Countrie. But vnder pardon, let me ſpeake freely to them: let them remember that if riot and ſloth ſhould both meet in any one of their beſt Families, in a Countrey moſt ſtored with abundance and plentie in England, continuall waſting, no Husbandry, the old ſtore ſtill ſpent on, no order for new prouiſions, what better could befall vnto the Inhabitants, Land-lords, and Tenants of that corner, then neceſſarily following cleanneſſe of teeth, famine and death? Is it not the ſentence and doome of the Wiſeman? Yet a little ſleepe, a little ſlumber, and a little folding of the hands to ſleepe: ſo thy powerty commeth, as one that trauelleth by the way, and thy neceſſitie like an armed man. And with this Idleneſſe, when ſome thing was in ſtore, all waſtfull courſes exerciſed to the heigth, and the headleſſe multitude, ſome neither of qualitie nor Religion) not imployed to the end for which they were ſent hither, no not compelled (ſince in themſelues vnwilling) to ſowe Corne for their owne bellies, nor to put a Roote, Herbe, &c. for their owne particular good in their Gardens or elſewhere: I ſay in this neglect and ſenſuall Surfet, all things ſuffered to runne on, to lie ſicke and languiſh; muſt it be expected, that health, plentie, and all the goodneſſe of a well ordered State, of neceſſitie for all this to flow in this Countrey? You haue a right and noble heart (worthy Lady) bee iudge of the truth herein. Then ſuffer it not bee concluded vnto you, nor beleeue, I beſeech you, that the wants and wretchedneſſe which they haue indured, aſcend out of the pouertie and vileneſſe of the Countrey, whether bee reſpected the Land or Riuers: the one, and the other, hauing not only promiſed, but powred enough in their veines, to conuince

Men blamed, but not all: the Country freed

Prou. 6.

The Countrey commended.

uince them in such calumnies, and to quit those common calamities, which (as the shadow accompanies the body) the precedent neglects touched at, if truely followed, and wrought vpon. What England may boast of, hauing the faire hand of husbandry to manure and dresse it, God, and Nature haue fauourably bestowed vpon this Country, and as it hath giuen vnto it, both by situation, height, and soyle, all those (past hopes) assurances which follow our well planted natiue Countrie, and others, lying vnder the same influence: if, as ours, the Countrey and soyle might be improued, and drawne forth: so hath it indowed it, as is most certaine, with many more, which England fetcheth farre vnto her from elsewhere. For first wee haue experience, and euen our eyes witnesse (how yong so euer wee are to the Countrie) that no Countrey yeeldeth goodlier Corne, nor more manifold increase: large Fields wee haue, as prospects of the same, and not farre from our Pallisado. Besides, wee haue thousands of goodly Vines in euery hedge, and Boske running along the ground, which yeelde a plentifull Grape in their kinde. Let mee appeale then to knowledge, if these naturall Vines were planted, dressed, and ordered by skilfull Vinearoones, whether wee might not make a perfect Grape, and fruitefull Vintage in short time? And we haue made triall of our owne English seedes, kitchen Hearbs, and Rootes, and finde them to prosper as speedily as in England.

Remacu tetigit. True cause of misery in Virginia.

Onely let me truely acknowledge, they are not an hundred or two of deboist hands, dropt forth by yeare after yeare, with penury, and leisure, ill prouided for before they come, and worse to be gouerned when they are here, men of such distempered bodies, and infected mindes, whom no examples daily before their eyes, either of goodnesse or punishment, can deterre from their habituall impieties, or terrifie from a shamefull death, that must be the Carpenters, and workemen in this so glorious a building.

Then let no rumour of the pouerty of the Country (as if in the wombe thereof there lay not those elementall seedes, which could produce as many faire births of plenty, and increase, and better hopes, then any land vnder the heauen, to which the Sunne is no neerer a neighbour) I say, let no imposture rumour, nor any fame of some one, or a few more changeable actions, interposing by the way, or at home, waue any mans faire purposes hitherward, or wrest them to a declining and falling off from the businesse.

Times of labour vnder Sir T. Gates.

I will acknowledge, deere Lady, I haue seene much propensnesse already towards the vnity, and generall endeauours: how contentedly doe such as labour with vs, goe forth, when men of ranke and quality, assist, and set on their labours? I haue seene it, and I protest it, I haue heard the inferiour people, with alacrity of spirit professe, that they should neuer refuse to doe their best in the practise of their sciences and knowledges, when such worthy, and Noble Gentlemen goe in and out before them, and not onely so, but as the occasion shall be offered, no lesse helpe them with their hand, then defend them with their Sword. And it is to be vnderstood, that such as labour, are not yet so taxed, but that easily they performe the same, and euer by tenne of the clocke haue done their Mornings worke: at what time, they haue their allowances set out ready for them, and vntill it be three of the clocke againe, they take their owne pleasure, and afterwards with the Sunne set, their dayes labour is finished. In all which courses, if the businesse be continued, I doubt nothing, with Gods fauour towards vs, but to see it in time, a Countrie, an Hauen, and a Staple, fitted for such a trade, as shall aduance assureder increase, both to the Aduenturers, and free Burgers thereof, then any Trade in Christendome, or then that (euen in her earely dayes, when Michael Canacco the Greeke, did first discouer it to our English Factor in Poland) which extends it selfe now from Calpe and Abila, to the bottome of Sidon, and so wide as Alexandria, and all the Ports and Hauens North and South, through the Arches to Cio, Smyrna, Troy, the Hellespont, and vp to Pompeys Pillar, which as a Pharos, or watch Tower, stands vpon the wondrous opening into the Euxine Sea.

Note. The hopes of Virginia.

Sir T. Gates his care.

From the three and twentieth of May, vnto the seuenth of Iune, our Gouernour attempted, and made triall of all the wayes, that both his owne iudgement could prompe him in, and the aduise of Captaine George Percy, and those Gentlemen whom hee found of the Counsell, when hee came in, as of others; whom hee caused to deliuer their knowledges, concerning the State and Condition of the Countrey: but after much debating, it could not appeare, how possibly they might preserue themselues (reseruing that little which wee brought from the Bermudas in our Shippes, and was vpon all occasions to stand good by vs) tenne dayes from staruing. For besides, that the Indians were of themselues poore, they were forbidden likewise (by their subtile King Powhatan) at all to trade with vs; and not onely so, but to indanger and assault any Boate vpon the Riuer, or straggler out of the Fort by Land, by which (not long before our arriuall) our people had a large Boate cut off, and diuers of our men killed, euen within command of our Blocke-house; as likewise, they shot two of our people to death, after we had bin foure and fiue dayes come in: and yet would they dare then to enter our Ports, and trucke with vs (as they counterfeited vnderhand) when indeede, they came but as Spies to discouer our strength, trucking with vs vpon such hard conditions, that our Gouernour might very well see their subtilty, and therefore neither could well indure, nor would Powhatans policy.

Sauage Spies.

would continue it. And I may truely say beside, so had our men abased; and to such a contempt, had they brought the value of our Copper, that a peece which would haue bought a bushell of their Corne in former time, would not now buy a little Cade or Basket of a Pottle. And for this misgouernment, chiefely our Colony is much bound to the Mariners, who neuer yet in any Voyage hither, but haue made a prey of our poore people in want; insomuch, as vnlesse they might aduance foure or fiue for one (how assured soeuer of the payments of their Bils of Exchange) they would not spare them a dust of Corne, nor a pinte of Beere, to giue vnto them the least comfort or reliefe; although that Beere purloyned, and stolne perhaps, either from some particular supply, or from the generall store: so vncharitable a parcell of people they be, and ill conditioned. I my selfe haue heard the Master of a Shippe say (euen vpon the arriuall of this Fleete, with the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, when the said Master was treated with for such Commodities as hee brought to sell) that vnlesse hee might haue an East Indian increase, foure for one, all charges cleered, hee would not part with a Can of Beere. Besides, to doe vs more villany and mischiefe, they would send of their long Boates still by night, and (well guarded) make out to the neighbour Villages, and Townes, and there (contrary to the Articles of the Fort, which now pronounce death for a trespasse of that qualitie) trucke with the Indians, giuing for their trifles Otter skinnes, Beuers, Rokoone Furres; Beares skinnes, &c. so large a quantity, and measure of Copper, as when the Trucke-Master for the Colony, in the day time offered trade, the Indians would laugh and scorne the same, telling what bargains they met withall by night, from our Mangot Quintons (so calling our great Shippes) by which meanes, the Market with them forestalled thus by these dishoneſt men, I may boldly say, they haue bin a consequent cause (this last yeare) to the death and staruing of many a worthy spirit; but I hope to see a true amendment and reformation, as well of those as of diuers other intollerable abuses, thrust vpon the Colony by these shameleſſe people, as also for the transportation of such prouisions and supplies as are sent hither, and come vnder the charge of pursers (a parcell, fragment, and odde ends of fellowes dependancies to the others) a better course thought vpon: of which supplies, neuer yet came into the Store, or to the Parties, vnto whom such supplies were sent, by relation hitherto, a moitie or third part; for the speedy redresse of this, being so soueraigne a point, I vnderstand how the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, hath aduised vnto the Counsell, that there may be no more prouisions at all deliuered vnto Pursers, but hath intreated to haue the prouision thus ordered. He would haue a Commissary Generall of the Victuals to be appointed, who (receiuing the store for the Colony, by Indenture from the Treasurer, and Victuallers in England) may keepe a iust accompt, what the grosse amounteth vnto, and what is transported euery Voyage, in seuerall kindes, as of Bread, Meate, Beere, Wine, &c. which said Commissary shall deliuer ouer the same, to the Master of euery Ship, and take an Indenture from the said Master, of what he hath in charge, and what he is to deliuer to the Treasurer of the store in Virginia: of which, if any be wanting, he the said Master shall make it good, out of his owne intertainment, otherwise the Pursers, Stewards, Coopers, and quarter Masters, will be sure still, not onely to giue themselues and their friends double allowances, but thinke it all well gotten that they can purloine and steale away.

Baseneſſe of our people.

Mischiefes of Mariners.

Purſers fraud.

Remedy.

Besides that the Indian thus euill intreated vs, the Riuer (which were wont before this time of the yeare to be plentifull of Sturgion) had not now a Fish to be seene in it, and albeit we laboured, and hold our Net twenty times day and night, yet we tooke not so much as would content halfe the Fishermen. Our Gouernour therefore sent away his long Boate to coast the Riuer downward, as farre as Point Comfort, and from thence to Cape Henry, and Cape Charles, and all within the Bay: which after a seuen nights triall and trauaile, returned without any fruites of their labours, scarse getting so much Fish as serued their owne Company.

And to take any thing from the Indian by force, we neuer vsed, nor willingly euer will: and though they had well deserued it, yet it was not now time, for they did (as I said before) but then set their Corne, and at their best, they had but from hand to mouth; so as what now remained? such as we found in the Fort, had wee staid but foure dayes, had doubtleſſe bin the most part of them starued, for their best reliefe was onely Mushrums, and some hearbes, which sod together, made but a thin and vnsauory broath, and swelled them much. The pitty hereof moued our Gouernour to draw forth such prouision as he had brought, proportioning a measure equally to euery one a like. But then our Gouernor began to examine how long this his store would hold out, and found it (husbanded to the best aduantage) not possible to serue longer then sixteene dayes: after which, nothing was to be possibly supposed out of the Countrey (as before remembred) nor remained there then any meanes to transport him elsewhere. Whereupon hee then entred into the consultation with Sir George Summers, and Captaine Newport, calling vnto the same the Gentlemen and Counsell of the former Gouernment, intreating both the one and the other to aduise with him what was best to be done. The prouision which they both had aboord himselfe and Sir George Summers, was examined, and deliuered, how it, being rackt to the vttermost, extended not aboue, as I said, sixteene dayes, after two Cakes a day. The Gentlemen of the Town, who knew better of the Country, could not giue him any hope, or wayes, how to improue it from the Indian. It soone then appeared most fit, by a generall approbation, that to preserue and saue all from staruing, there could be no readier course thought on, then to abandon the Country, and accommodating themselues the best that they might, in the present Pinnaces then in the road, namely in the Discouery and the Virginia, and in the two, brought from, and builded at the Bermudas, the Deliuerance, and the Patience, with all speede conuenient to make for the New found Land, where (being the fishing time) they might meete with many English Ships into which happily they might disperse most of the Company.

The Colony when they came within foure dayes of staruing.

Purpose to leaue the Country.

This Consultation taking effect, our Gouernor hauing caused to be carried aboord all the Armes, and all the best things in the store, which might to the Aduenturers make some commodity vpon the sale thereof at home, and burying our Ordnances before the Fort gate, which looked into the Riuer. The seuenth of Iune hauing appointed to euery Pinnace likewise his complement and number, also deliuered thereunto a proportionable rate of prouision, hee commanded euery man at the beating of the Drum to repaire aboord. And because hee would preserue the Towne (albeit now to be quitted) vnburned, which some intemperate and malicious people threatned, his owne Company he caused to be last ashoare, and was himselfe the last of them, when about noone giuing a farewell, with a peale of small shot, wee set saile, and that night, with the tide, fell downe to an Iland in the Riuer, which our people haue called Hogge Iland; and the morning tide brought vs to another Iland, which we haue called Mulberry Iland; where lying at an ancor, in the afternoone stemming the tide, wee discouered a long Boate making towards vs, from Point Comfort: much descant we made thereof, about an houre it came vp; by which, to our no little ioyes, we had intelligence of the honorable my Lord La Warr his arriuall before Algernoone Fort the sixt of Iune, at what time, true it is, his Lordship hauing vnderstood of our Gouernours resolution to depart the Country, with all expedition caused his Skiffe to be manned, and in it dispatched his letters by Captain Edward Bruster (who commandeth his Lordships Company) to our Gouernour, which preuenting vs before the aforesaid Mulberry Iland, the eight of Iune aforesaid) vpon the receipt of his honours letters, our Gouernour bore vp the helme, with the winde comming Easterly, and that night (the winde so fauourable) relanded all his men at the Fort againe: before which (the tenth of Iune, being Sunday) his Lordship had likewise brought his Ships, and in the afternoone, came a shoare with Sir Ferdinando Weinman, and all his Lordships followers.

The highest pitch & lowest depth of the Colonies miseries scarsly escaping the iawes of deuouring desperation.

Hopes morning.

L. La Warr arriuall.

Here (worthy Lady) let mee haue a little your pardon, for hauing now a better heart, then when I first landed, I will briefely describe vnto you, the situation and forme of our Fort. When Captain Newport in his first Voyage, did not like to inhabit vpon so open a roade, as Cape Henry, nor Point Comfort he plied it vp to the Riuer, still looking out for the most apt and securest place, as well for his Company to sit downe in, as which might giue the least cause of offence, or distast in his iudgement, to the Inhabitants. At length, after much and weary search (with their Barge coasting still before, as Virgil writeth Æneas did, arriuing in the region of Italy called Latium, vpon the bankes of the Riuer Tyber) in the Country of a Werowance called Wowinchapuncke (a ditionary to Powhatan) within this faire Riuer of Paspiheigh, which wee haue called the Kings Riuer, a Country least inhabited by the Indian, as they all the way obserued, and threescore miles & better vp the fresh Channell, from Cape Henry they had sight of an extended plaine & spot of earth, which thrust out into the depth, & middest of the channell, making a kinde of Cherſonesus or Peninsula, for it was fastened onely to the Land with a slender necke, no broader then a man may well quaite a tile shard, & no inhabitants by seuen or six miles neere it. The Trumpets sounding, the Admirall strooke saile, and before the same, the rest of the Fleete came to an ancor, and here (as the best yet offered vnto their view, supposed so much the more conuenient, by how much with their small Company, they were like inough the better to assure it) to loose no further time, the Colony disimbarked, and euery man brought his particular store and furniture, together with the generall prouision ashoare: for the safety of which, as likewise for their owne security, ease, and better accommodating, a certaine Canton and quantity, of that little halfe Iland of ground, was measured, which they began to fortifie, and thereon in the name of God, to raise a Fortresse, with the ablest and speedyest meanes they could: which Fort, growing since to more perfection, is now at this present in this manner.

Description of the state and site of Iames Towne.

The Fort, &c. described.

A low leuell of ground about halfe an Acre, or (so much as Queene Dido might buy of King Hyarbas, which she compassed about with the thongs cut out of one Bull hide, and therein built her Castle of Byrza) on the North side of the Riuer, is cast almost into the forme of a Triangle, and so Pallizadoed. The South side next the Riuer (howbeit extended in a line, or Curtaine six score foote more in length, then the other two, by reason the aduantage of the ground doth so require) containes one hundred and forty yards: the West and East sides a hundred onely. At euery Angle, or corner, where the lines meete, a Bulwarke or Watchtower is raised, and in each Bulwarke a peece of Ordnance or two well mounted. To euery side, a proportioned distance from the Pallisado) is a setled streete of houses, that runs along, so as each line of the Angle hath his streete. In the middest is a market place, a Store house, and a Corps du guard, as likewise a pretty Chappell, though (at this time when wee came in, as ruined and vnfrequented: but the

Lord

Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall, hath giuen order for the repairing of it, and at this instant, many hands are about it. It is in length threescore foote, in breadth twenty foure, and shall haue a Chancell in it of Cedar, and a Communion Table of the Blake Walnut, and all the Pewes of Cedar, with faire broad windowes, to shut and open, as the weather shall occasion, of the same wood, a Pulpet of the same, with a Font hewen hollow, like a Canoa, with two Bels at the West end. It is so cast, as it be very light within, and the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall doth cause it to be kept passing sweete, and trimmed vp with diuers flowers, with a Sexton belonging to it, and in it euery Sonday wee haue Sermons twice a day, and euery Thursday a Sermon, hauing true preachers, which take their weekely turnes, and euery morning at the ringing of a Bell, about ten of the clocke, each man addresseth himselfe to prayers, and so at foure of the clocke before Supper. Euery Sunday, when the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall goeth to Church, hee is accompanied with all the Counsailers, Captaines, other Officers, and all the Gentlemen, and with a Guard of Holberdiers, in his Lordships Liuery, faire red cloakes, to the number of fifty both on each side, and behinde him: and being in the Church, his Lordship hath his seate in the Quier, in a greene Veluet Chaire, with a Cloath, with a Veluet Cushion spread on a Table before him, on which he kneeleth, and on each side sit the Counsell, Captaines, and Officers, each in their place, and when he returneth home againe, he is waited on to his house in the same manner.

And thus inclosed, as I said, round with a Pallizado of Planckes and strong Posts, foure foote deepe in the ground, of yong Oakes, Walnuts, &c. The Fort is called in honour of his Maiesties name, Iames Towne; the principall Gate from the Towne, through the Pallizado, opens to the Riuer, as at each Bulwarke there is a Gate likewise to goe forth, and at euery Gate a Demi-Culuerin, and so in the Market Place. The houses first raised, were all burnt, by a casualty of fire, the beginning of the second yeare of their seate, and in the second Voyage of Captain Newport, which since haue bin better rebuilded, though as yet in no great vniformity, either for the fashion, or beauty of the streete. A delicate wrought fine kinde of Mat the Indians make, with which (as they can be trucked for, or snatched vp) our people do dresse their chambers, and inward roomes, which make their houses so much the more handsome. The houses haue wide and large Country Chimnies in the which is to be supposed (in such plenty of wood) what fires are maintained; and they haue found the way to couer their houses: now (as the Indians) with barkes of Trees, as durable, and as good proofe against stormes, and winter weather, as the best Tyle defending likewise the piercing Sunbeames of Summer, and keeping the inner lodgings coole enough, which before in sultry weather would be like Stoues, whilest they were, as at first, pargetted and plaistered with Bitumen or tough Clay: and thus armed for the iniury of changing times, and seasons of the yeare, we hold our selues well apaid, though wanting Arras Hangings, Tapistry, and guilded Venetian Cordouan; or more spruse houshold garniture, and wanton City ornaments, remembring the old Epigraph:

The Houses.

Barke Roofes.

We dwell not here to build vs Bowers,
And Hals for pleasure and good cheere:
But Hals we build for vs and ours,
To dwell in them whilst we liue here.

True it is, I may not excuse this our Fort, or Iames Towne, as yet seated in some what an vnwholesome and sickly ayre, by reason it is in a marish ground, low, flat to the Riuer, and hath no fresh water Springs seruing the Towne, but what wee drew from a Well sixe or seuen fathom deepe, fed by the brackish Riuer owzing into it, from whence I verily beleeue, the chiefe causes haue proceeded of many diseases and sicknesses which haue happened to our people, who are indeede strangely afflicted with Fluxes and Agues; and euery particular season (by the relation of the old inhabitants) hath his particular infirmity too, all which (if it had bin our fortunes, to haue seated vpon some hill, accommodated with fresh Springs and cleere ayre, as doe the Natiues of the Country) we might haue, I beleeue, well escaped: and some experience we haue to perswade our selues that it may be so, for of foure hundred and odde men, which were seated at the Fals, the last yeere when the Fleete came in with fresh and yong able spirits, vnder the gouernment of Captain Francis West, and of one hundred to the Seawards (on the South side of our Riuer) in the Country of the Nansamundes, vnder the charge of Captaine Iohn Martin, there did not so much as one man miscarry, and but very few or none fall sicke, whereas at Iames Towne, the same time, and the same moneths, one hundred sickned, & halfe the number died: howbeit, as we condemne not Kent in England, for a small Towne called Plumsted, continually assaulting the dwellers there (especially new commers) with Agues and Feuers; no more let vs lay scandall, and imputation vpon the Country of Virginia, because the little Quarter wherein we are set dowee (vnaduisedly so chosed) appeares to be vnwholesome, and subiect to many ill ayres, which accompany the like marish places.

Vnhealthfulnesse of Iames Towne.

Ch. IIII.

The Lord LA WARRES beginnings and proceedings in Iames Towne. Sir THOMAS GATES ſent into England; his and the Companies teſtimony of Virginia, and cauſe of the late miſeries.

VPon his Lordſhips landing at the South gate of the Palliſado (which lookes into the Riuer) our Gouernour cauſed his Company in armes to ſtand in order, and make a Guard: It pleaſed him, that I ſhould beare his Colours for that time: his Lordſhip landing, fell vpon his knees, and before vs all, made a long and ſilent Prayer to himſelfe, and after, marched vp into the Towne, where at the Gate, I bowed with the Colours, and let them fall at his Lordſhips feete, who paſſed on into the Chappell, where he heard a Sermon by Maſter Bucke, our Gouernours Preacher; and after that, cauſed a Gentleman, one of his owne followers, Maſter Anthony Scot his Ancient, to reade his Commiſſion, which intituled him Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall during his life, of the Colony and Plantation in Virginia (Sir Thomas Gates our Gouernour hitherto, being now ſtiled therein Lieutenant Generall.)

Commiſſion red.

Lord La Warrs title.

Sir T. Gates Lieutenant Generall.

After the reading of his Lordſhips Commiſſion, Sir Thomas Gates rendred vp vnto his Lordſhip his owne Commiſſion, both Patents, and the Counſell Seale: after which, the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall, deliuered ſome few words vnto the Company, laying many blames vpon them for many vanities, and their Idleneſſe, earneſtly wiſhing, that he might no more finde it ſo, leaſt he ſhould be compelled to draw the ſword of Iuſtice, to cut off ſuch delinquents, which he had much rather, he proteſted, draw in their defence, to protect them from iniuries; hartening them with the knowledge of what ſtore of prouiſions he had brought for them, viz. ſufficient to ſerue foure-hundred men for one whole yeare.

His ſpeech.

Prouiſions brought.

The twelfth of Iune, being Tueſday, the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, did conſtitute, and giue places of Office, and charge to diuers Captaines and Gentlemen, and elected vnto him a Counſell, vnto whom he did adminiſter an Oath, mixed with the oath of Allegiance, and Supremacy to his Maieſtie: which oath likewiſe he cauſed to be adminiſtred the next day after to euery particular member of the Colony, of Faith, Aſſiſtance, and Secrecy. The Counſaile which he elected were. Sir Thomas Gates Kinght, Lieutenant Generall. Sir George Summers Knight, Admirall. Captaine George Percy Eſquire, and in the Fort Captaine of fifty. Sir Ferdinando Weinman Knight, Maſter of the Ordnance. Captaine Chriſtopher Newport, Vice-admirall. William Strachei Eſquire, Secretary, and Recorder.

Counſell choſen & ſworne.

Colony ſworn.

Officers appointed.

As likewiſe the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, nominated Captaine Iohn Martin, Maſter of the Battery workes for Steele and Iron: and Captaine George Webb Sergeant Maior of the Fort: and eſpeciall Captaines ouer Companies, were theſe appointed; Captaine Edward Bruſter, who hath the command of his Honours owne Company. Captaine Thomas Lawſon. Captain Thomas Holecroft. Captaine Samuell Argoll. Captaine George Yardley, who commandeth the Lieutenant Generals Company. Diuers other Officers were likewiſe made, as Maſter Ralph Hamor, and Maſter Browne, Clarkes of the Counſell, and Maſter Daniell Tucker, and Maſter Robert Wilde, Clarkes of the Store, &c.

The firſt buſineſſe which the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall (after the ſetling of theſe Officers) thought vpon, was to aduiſe with his Counſell, for the obtaining of ſuch prouiſions of victuals for ſtore, and quality, as the Countrey afforded. It did not appeare, that any kinde of Fleſh, Deere, or what elſe, of that kinde, could be recouered from the Indian, or to be ſought in the Countrey, by the trauaile or ſearch of his people, and the old dwellers in the Fort (together with the Indians not to friend) who had the laſt winter, deſtroyed and killed vp all the Hogges, inſomuch, as of fiue or ſixe hundred (as it is ſuppoſed) there was not one left aliue; nor an Henne, nor Chicke in the Fort; and our Horſes and Mares, they had eaten with the firſt, and the prouiſion which the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall had brought, concerning any kinde of fleſh, was little or nothing; in reſpect it was not dreampt of by the Aduenturers in England, that the Swine were deſtroyed.

Sir G. Summers vndertaketh to bring prouiſions from Bermudas.

In Counſell therefore the thirteenth of Iune, it pleaſed Sir George Summers Knight, Admirall, to propoſe a Voyage, which for the better reliefe, and good of the Colony, he would performe into the Bermudas, from whence he would fetch ſix moneths prouiſion of Fleſh and Fiſh, and ſome liue Hogges to ſtore our Colony againe: and had a Commiſſion giuen vnto him the fifteenth of Iune, 1610. who in his owne Bermuda Pinnace, the Patience, conſorted with Captaine Samuell Argoll, in the Diſcouery (whom the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall, made of the counſell before his departure) the nineteenth of Iune, fell with the Tyde from before our Towne, and the twenty two left the Bay, or Cape Henry a ſterne.

And likewiſe, becauſe at the Lord Gouernous, and Captaine Generals firſt comming, there was found in our owne Riuer no ſtore of Fiſh; after many trials, the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall, Generall, diſpatched in the Virginia, with inſtructions, the ſeuenteenth of Iune, 1610. Robert Tyndall, Maſter of the De la Warre, to fiſh vnto, all along, and betweene Cape Henry, and Cape Charles, within the Bay; who the laſt of the ſaid moneth returned vnto vs againe, but as ill ſpeeding as the former, whom our Gouernour (now Lieutenant Generall) had addreſſed thither before for the ſame purpoſe. Nor was the Lord Gouernour, and Captaine Generall in the meane while idle at the Fort, but euery day and night hee cauſed the Nets to be hawled, ſometimes a doſen times one after another. But it pleaſed not God ſo to bleſſe our labours, that we did at any time take one quarter ſo much, as would giue vnto our people one pound at a meale a peece, by which we might haue better husbanded our Peaſe and Oatemeale, notwithſtanding the great ſtore we now ſaw daily in our Riuer: but let the blame of this lye where it is, both vpon our Nets, and the vnskilfulneſſe of our men to lay them.

The ſixth of Iuly Sir Thomas Gates Lieutenant Generall, comming downe to Point Comfort, the North wind (blowing rough) he found had forced the long Boate belonging to Algernoone Fort, to the other ſhoare vpon Nanſamund ſide, ſomewhat ſhort of Weroſcoick: which to recouer againe, one of the Lieutenant Generals men Humfrey Blunt, in an old Canow made ouer, but the wind driuing him vpon the Strand, certaine Indians (watching the occaſion) ſeiſed the poore fellow, and led him vp into the Woods, and ſacrificed him. It did not a little trouble the Lieutenant Gouernour, who ſince his firſt landing in the Countrey (how iuſtly ſoeuer prouoked) would not by any meanes be wrought to a violent proceeding againſt them, for all the practiſes of villany, with which they daily indangered our men, thinking it poſſible, * by a more tractable courſe, to winne them to a better condition: but now being ſtartled by this, he well perceiued, how little a faire and noble intreatie, workes vpon a barbarous diſpoſition, and therefore in ſome meaſure purpoſed to be reuenged.

The ninth of Iuly, he prepared his forces, and early in the morning ſet vpon a Towne of theirs, ſome foure miles from Algernoone Fort, called Kecoughtan, and had ſoone taken it, without loſſe or hurt of any of his men. The Gouernour and his women fled (the young King Powhatans Sonne not being there) but left his poore baggage, and treaſure to the ſpoyle of our Souldiers, which was only a few Baskets of old Wheate, and ſome other of Peaſe and Beanes, a little Tobacco, and ſome few womens Girdles of Silke, of the Graſſe-ſilke, not without art, and much neatneſſe finely wrought; of which I haue ſent diuers into England, (beeing at the taking of the Towne) and would haue ſent your Ladiſhip ſome of them, had they beene a Preſent ſo worthy.

We purpoſed to ſet a Frenchman heere a worke to plant Vines, which grew naturally in great plentie. Some few Corne fields it hath, and the Corne in good forwardneſſe, and wee deſpaire not but to bee (able if our men ſtand in health) to make it good againſt the Indian.

The continuall practiſes of the ſubtle King Powhatan, doth not meanely awaken all the powers and workings of vertue and knowledge, in our Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, how to preuent not only his miſchiefes, but to draw him vpon ſome better termes, and acknowledgemen of our forces and ſpirits, both able and daring to quit him in any valiant and martiall courſe whatſoeuer, he ſhall dare to runne with vs, which hee doth yet ſcarſly beleeue. For this therfore, ſince firſt, and that ſo lately, he hath ſet on his people, to attempt vs with priuate Conſpiracies and actuall violence, into the one drawing his Neighbour Confederates and vnder Princes, and by the other working the loſſe and death of diuers of our men, and by ſuch their loſſe ſeiſing their Armes, Swords, Peeces, &c. of which he hath gathered into his ſtore a great quantitie and number by Intelligence aboue two hundred Swords, beſides Axes, and Pollaxes, Chiſſels, Howes, to paire and cleanſe their ground, with an infinite treaſure of Copper) our Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall ſent two Gentlemen with an Ambaſſie vnto him, letting him to vnderſtand of his practiſes and outrage, hitherto vſed toward our people, not only abroad but at our Fort alſo: yet flattering him withall how the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall did not ſuppoſe, that theſe miſchiefes were contriued by him, or with his knowledge, but conceiued them rather to be the acts of his worſt and vnruly people, his Lordſhip therefore now complaying vnto him required, that hee (being ſo great and wiſe a King) would giue an vniuerſall order to his Subiects, that it might bee no more ſo, leſt the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall ſhould be compelled (by defending him and his) to offend him, which he would be loath to do: withall he willed the Meſſengers to demand of him the ſaid Powhatan, that he would either puniſh or ſend vnto his Lordſhip ſuch of his people whom Powhatan knew well not long before, had aſſaulted our men at the Block-houſe, and but newly killed foure of them, as alſo to demaund of Powhatan, willing him to returne vnto the Engliſh Fort, both ſuch men as hee detayned of ours, and ſuch Armes as he had of theirs in his poſſeſſion, and thoſe conditions performed, hee willed them to aſſure vnto Powhatan that then their great Werowance, the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall would hold faire quarter, and enter friendſhip with him, as a friend to King Iames and his Subiects. But refuſing to ſubmit to theſe demands, the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall gaue in charge to the Meſſengers, ſo ſent to ſignifie vnto Powhatan that his Lordſhip would by all meanes publike and priuate, ſeeke to recouer from him ſuch of the Engliſh as he had, being

* Ad Græcas Calendas. Can a Leopard change his ſpots? Can a Sauage remayning a Sauage be ciuill? Were not wee our ſelues made and not borne ciuill in our Progenitors dayes? and were not Cæſars Britaines as brutiſh as Virginians? The Romane ſwords were beſt teachers of ciuilitie to this & other Countries neere vs. Graſſeſilke.

Engliſh Armes treaſured by Powhatan. Meſſage to Powhatan.

Subiects to his King and Master, vnto whom euen Powhatan himselfe had formerly vowed, not only friendship but homage, receiuing from his Maiestie therefore many gifts, and vpon his knees a Crowne and Scepter with other Ornaments, the Symbols of Ciuill State and Christian Soueraignetie, thereby obliging himselfe to Offices of dutie to his Maiestie. Vnto all which Powhatan returned no other answere, but that either we should depart his Country, or confine our selues to Iames Towne only, without searching further vp into his Land, or Riuers, or otherwise, hee would giue in command to his people to kill vs, and doe vnto vs all the mischiefe, which they at their pleasure could and we feared: withall forewarning the said Messengers, not to returne any more vnto him, vnlesse they brought him a Coach and three Horses, for hee had vnderstood by the Indians which were in England, how such was the state of great Werowances, and Lords in England, to ride and visit other great men.

Powhatans homage.

After this diuers times, and daily hee sent sometimes two, sometimes three, vnto our Fort, to vnderstand our strength, and to obserue our Watch & Guard, and how our people stood in health, and what numbers were arriued with this new Werowance: which being soone perceiued our Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall forewarned such his Spies, vpon their owne perill, to resort no more vnto our Fort. Howbeit, they would daily presse into our Block-house, and come vp to our Pallizado gates, supposing the gouernment as well now; as fantasticall and negligent in the former times, the whilest some quarter of a mile short of the Block-house, the greatest number of them would make assault, and lye in ambush about our Glasse-house, whether. Diuers times indeed our men would make out either to gather Strawberries, or to fetch fresh water, any one of which so straggled, if they could with conueniencie, they would assault and charge with their Bowes and Arrowes, in which manner they killed many of our men: two of which being Paspaheans, who were euer our deadliest enemies, and not to be reconciled; at length being apprehended (and one of them a notable villaine, who had attempted vpon many in our Fort) the Lord Gouernour caused them to be manacled, and conuented before him and his Counsell, where it was determined that hee that had done so much mischiefe should haue his right hand strooke off, sending him away withall, with a message to Powhatan, that vnlesse hee would yet returne such Englishmen as he detayned, together with all such their Armes (as before spoken of) that not only the other (now Prisoner) should die, but all such of his Sauages (as the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, could by any meanes surprize) should runne the same course: as likewise the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall would fire all his Neighbour Corne Fields, Townes, and Villages, and that suddenly, if Powhatan sent not to contract with him the sooner

What this will worke with him, wee know not as yet, for this was but the day before our ships were now falling to Point Comfort, and so to set sayle for England: which ships riding before Weroscoick to take in their fraight of Cedar, Clap-boord, Blacke Wal-nut, and Iron Oare, tooke Prisoners likewise the chiefe King of Weroscoick, called Sasenticum, with his Sonne Kainta, and one of his chiefe men. And the fifteenth day of July, in the Blessing Captaine Adams brought them to Point Comfort, where at that time (as well to take his leaue of the Lieutenant Generall Sir Thomas Gates, now bound for England, as to dispatch the ships) the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall had pitched his Tent in Algernoone Fort.

King of Weroscoick taken Prisoner.

Sir T. Gates bound for England.

The Kings Sonne Kainta the Lord Gouernour and Captaine Generall, hath sent now into England, vntill the ships arriue here againe the next Spring, dismissing the old Werowance, and the other with all tearmes of kindnesse, and friendship, promising further designes to bee effected by him, to which hee hath bound himselfe, by diuers Sauage Ceremonies, and admirations.

And thus (right Noble Ladie) once more this famous businesse, as recreated, and dipped a new into life and spirit, hath raysed it (I hope) from infamy, and shall redeeme the staines and losses vnder which she hath suffered, since her first Conception: your Graces still accompany the least appearance of her, and vouchsafe her to bee limmed out, with the beautie which wee will begge, and borrow from the faire lips: nor feare you, that shee will returne blushes to your cheekes for prayising her, since (more then most excellent Ladie) like your selfe (were all tongues dumbe and enuious) shee will prayse her selfe in her most silence: may shee once bee but seene, or but her shadow liuely by a skilfull Workman set out indeed, which heere (hungerly as I am) I haue presumed (though defacing it) in these Papers to present vnto your Ladiship.

After Sir Thomas Gates his arriuall, a Booke called A true Declaration of Virginia, was published by the Company, out of which I haue heere inserted this their publike testimonie of the causes of the former euils, and Sir Thomas Gates his Report vpon Oath of Virginia.

THe ground of all those miseries, was the permissiue Prouidence of God, who, in the fore-mentioned violent storme, seperated the head from the bodie, all the vnall powers of Regiment being exiled with Sir Thomas Gates in those infortunate (yet fortunate) Ilands. The broken remainder of those supplyes made a greater shipwracke in the Continent of Virginia, by the tempest of Dissention: euery man ouer-valuing his owne worth, would be a Commander: euery man vnderprizing anothers value, denied to be commanded.

The

The next Fountaine of woes was secure negligence, and improuidence, when euery man sharked for his present bootie, but was altogether careleſſe of ſucceeding penurie. Now, I demand whether Sicilia, or Sardinia (ſometimes the Barnes of Rome*) could hope for increaſe without manuring? A Colony is therefore denominated, becauſe they ſhould be* Coloni, the Tillers of the Earth, and Stewards of fertilitie: our mutinous Loyterers would not ſow with prouidence, and therefore they reaped the fruits of too deere bought Repentance. An incredible example of their idleneſſe, is the report of Sir Thomas Gates, who affirmeth, that after his firſt comming thither, he hath ſeene ſome of them eat their fiſh raw, rather then they would goe a ſtones caſt to fetch wood and dreſſe it. Dijs laboribus omnia vendunt, God ſels vs all things for our labour, when Adam himſelfe might not liue in Paradice without dreſſing the Garden.

Vnto idleneſſe, you may ioyne Treaſons, wrought by thoſe vnhallowed creatures that forſooke the Colonie, and expoſed their deſolate Brethren to extreame miſerie, Ten ſhall know that eight and twentie or thirtie of the Company, were appointed (in the ſhip called the Swallow*) to tracke for Corne with the* Indians, and hauing obtained a great quantitie by trading, the moſt ſeditious of them, conſpired together, perſwaded ſome, and enforced others, to this barbarous proiect. They ſtole away the ſhip, they made a league amongſt themſelues to be profeſſed Pirats, with dreames of Mountaines of Gold, and happie Robberies: thus at one inſtant, they wronged the hopes, and ſubuerted the cares of the Colonie, who depending vpon their returue, fore-ſlowed to looke out for further prouiſion; they created the Indians our implacable enemies by ſome violence they had offered: they carried away the beſt ſhip (which ſhould haue beene a refuge in extremities:) they weakened our forces, by ſubſtraction of their armes and ſuccours. Theſe are that ſcumme of men that ſayling in their Piracie, that being pinched with famine and penurie, after their wilde rouing vpon the Sea, when all their lawleſſe hopes failed, ſome remayned with other Pirates, they men vpon the Sea, the others reſolued to returne for England, bound themſelues by mutuall Oath, to agree all in one report to diſcredit the Land, to deplore the famine, and to proteſt that this their comming away, proceeded from deſperate neceſſitie: Theſe are they, that roared out the Tragicall Hiſtorie of the man eating of his dead Wife in Virginia; when the Maſter of this ſhip willingly confeſſed before for tie witneſſes, that at their comming away, they left three monethes victuals, and all the Cattell liuing in the Fort: ſometimes they reported that they ſaw this horrible action, ſometimes that Captaine Dauies ſaid ſo, ſometimes that one Beadle the Lieutenant of Captaine Dauies did relate it, varying this report vnto diuerſitie of falſe colours, which bold no likeneſſe and proportion: But to cleere all doubts, Sir Thomas Gates thus relateth the Tragedie.

There was one of the Company who mortally hated his Wife, and therefore ſecretly killed her, then cut her in pieces and hid her in diuers parts of his Houſe: when the woman was miſſing, the man ſuſpected, his Houſe ſearched, and parts of her mangled bodie were diſcouered, to excuſe himſelfe he ſaid that his Wife died, that he hid her to ſatisfie his hunger, and that hee fed daily vpon her. Vpon this, his Houſe was againe ſearched, where they found a good quantitie of Meale, Oat-meale, Beanes and Peaſe. He thereupon was arraigned, confeſſed the Murder, and was burned for his horrible villany.

Now ſhall the ſcandalous reports of a viperous generation, preponderate the teſtimonies of ſo worthy Leaders? Shall their venemous tongues, blaſt the reputation of an ancient and worthy Peere, who vpon the ocular certainty of future bleſſings, hath proteſted in his Letters, that he will ſacrifice himſelfe for his Countrie in this ſeruice, if he may be ſeconded; and if the Company doe giue it ouer, hee will yet lay all his fortunes vpon the proſecution of the Plantation? Lord Lawarre.

Vnto Treaſons, you may ioyne couetouſneſſe in the Mariners, who for their priuate lucre partly imbezeled the prouiſions, partly preuented our Trade with the Indians making the Matches in the night, and foreſtalling our Market in the day: whereby the Virginians were glutted with our Triſles, and inhaunced the prices of their Corne and Victuall. That Copper which before would haue prouided a buſhell, would not now obtaine ſo much as a Pottle.

Ioyne vnto theſe another euill: there is great ſtore of Fiſh in the Riuer, eſpecially of Sturgeon; but our men prouided no more of them then for preſent neceſſitie, not barrelling vp any ſtore againſt that ſeaſon the Sturgeon returned to the Sea. And not to diſſemble their folly, they ſuffered fourteene nets (which was all they had) to rot and ſpoyle, which by orderly drying and mending might haue beene preſerued: but being loſt, all helpe of fiſhing periſhed.

The ſtate of the Colony, by theſe accidents began to finde a ſenſible declining: which Powhatan (as a greedy Vulture) obſerving, and boyling with deſire of reuenge, hee inuited Captaine Ratcliffe, and about thirty others to trade for Corne, and vnder the colour of faireſt friendſhip, hee brought them within the compaſſe of his ambuſh, whereby they were cruelly murthered and maſſacred. For vpon confidence of his fidelitie, they went one and one into ſeuerall houſes, which cauſed their ſeuerall deſtructions, when if but any ſixe had remained together, they would haue beene a Bulwarke for the generall preſeruation. After this, Powhatan in the night cut off ſome of our Boats, he drane away all the Deere into the farther part of the Countrey, hee and his people deſtroyed our Hogs (to the number of about ſixe hundred) hee ſent one of his Indians to trade with vs, but layed ſecret ambuſhes in the Woods, that if one or two dropped out of the Fort alone, they were indangered.

Caſt vp the reckoning together: want of gouernment, ſtore of idleneſſe, their expectations fruſtrated by

by the Traytos, their market spoyled by the Mariners, our Nets broken, the Deere chased, our Boats lost, our Hogs killed, our trade with the Indians forbidden, some of our men fled, some murthered, and most by drinking of the brackish water of Iames Fort weakened and indangered, famine and sickneſſe by all theſe meanes increaſed; here at home the monyes came in ſo ſlowly, that the Lord Laware could not bee diſpatched till the Colony was worne and ſpent with difficulties: Aboue all, hauing neither Ruler, nor Preacher, they neither feared God, nor man, which prouoked the wrath of the Lord of Hoſts, and pulled downe his iudgements vpon them. Diſcite iuſtitiam moniti.

The Councell of Virginia (finding the ſmalneſſe of that returne, which they hoped ſhould haue defrayed the charge of a new ſupply) entred into a deepe conſultation, and propounded amongſt themſelues, whether it were fit to enter into a new contribution, or in time to ſend for home the Lord La-ware, and to abandon the action. They reſolued to ſend for Sir Thomas Gates, who being come, they adiured him to deale plainly with them, and to make a true relation of thoſe things which were preſently to be had, or hereafter to be hoped for in Virginia. Sir Thomas Gates with a ſolemne and ſacred oath replied, that all things before reported were true: that the Countrey yeelded abundance of Wood, as Oake, Wainſcot, Walnut Trees, Bay Trees, Aſhe, Sarſafraſe, liue Oake, greene all the yeere, Cedar and Fir; which are the materialls, of Soape aſhes, and Pot aſhes, of Oyles of Walnuts, and Bayes, of Pitch and Tar, of Clapboards, Pipe-ſtaues, Maſts and excellent boards of fortie, fiftie, and ſixtie length, and three foot breadth, when one Firre tree is able to make the maine Maſt of the greateſt Ship in England. He auouched that there are incredible varietie of ſweet woods, eſpecially of the Balſamum tree, which diſtilleth a precious Gumme; that there are innumerable white Mulberry trees, which in ſo warme a climate may cheriſh and feede millions of Silke-wormes, and returne vs in a very ſhort time, as great a plenty of Silke as is vented into the whole world from all the parts of Italy: that there are diuers ſorts of Minerals, eſpecially of Iron oare lying vpon the ground for ten Miles circuite; of which wee haue made a triall at home, that it maketh as good Iron as any is in Europe:) that a kinde of Hempe or Flaxe, and Silke Graſſe doe grow there naturally, which will affoord ſtuffe for all manner of excellent Cordage: That the Riuer ſwarmeth with all manner of Sturgeon: the Land aboundeth with Vines; the Woods doe harbour exceeding ſtore of Beauers, Foxes, and Squirrels; the Waters doe nouriſh a great encreaſe of Otters, all which are couered with precious Furres: that there are in preſent diſcouered Dyes and Drugges of ſundry qualities; that the Orenges which haue beene planted, did proſper in the winter, which is an infallible argument, that Lemmons, Sugar Canes, Almonds, Rice, Anniſeede, and all other commodities which wee haue from the Straights, may be ſupplied to vs in our owne Countrey, and by our owne induſtry: that the Corne yeeldeth a terrible encreaſe more then ours: and laſtly, that it is one of the goodlieſt Countries vnder the Sunne; entertained with fine maine Riuers, and promiſing as rich entrals as any Kingdome of the earth, to whom the Sunne is no neerer a neighbour.

CHAP. VII.

The Voyage of Captaine SAMVEL ARGAL, from Iames Towne in Virginia, to ſeeke the Ile of Bermuda, and miſſing the ſame, his putting ouer toward Sagadahoc and Cape Cod, and ſo backe againe to Iames Towne, begun the nineteenth of Iune, 1610.

SIr George Summers, being bound for the Ile of Bermuda with two Pinnaces, the one called the Patience, wherein he ſailed himſelfe, ſet ſaile from Iames Towne in Virginia, the ninteenth of Iune, 1610. The two and twentieth at noone we came to an anchor at Cape Henry, to take more balaſt. The weather proued very wet: ſo wee road vnder the Cape till two of the clocke, the three and twentieth in the morning. Then we weighed and ſtood off to Sea, the wind at South-weſt. And till eight of the clocke at night it was all Southerly, and then that ſhifted to South-weſt. The Cape then bearing Weſt, about eight leagues off. Then wee ſtirred away South-eaſt. The foure and twentieth, at noone I obſerued the Sunne, and found my ſelfe to bee in thirtie ſixe degrees, fortie ſeuen minutes, about twentie leagues off from the Land. From the foure and twentieth at noone, to the fiue and twentieth at noone, ſixe leagues Eaſt, the wind Southerly, but for the moſt part it was calme. From the fiue and twentieth at noone, to the ſixe and twentieth about ſixe of the clocke in the morning, the winde was all Southerly, and but little. And then it beganne to blow a freſh gale at Weſt South-weſt. So by noone I had ſailed fourteene leagues Eaſt, South-eaſt pricked. From the ſixe and twentieth at noone, to the ſeuen and twentieth at noone, twentie leagues Eaſt, South-eaſt. The wind ſhifting from the Weſt, South-weſt Southerly, and ſo to the Eaſt, and the weather faire, but cloſe. From the ſeuen and twentieth at noone, to the eight and twentieth at noone, ſixe and twentie leagues Eaſt, South-eaſt, the wind ſhifting backe againe from the Eaſt to the Weſt. Then by mine obſeruation I found the ſhip to be in thirtie fiue degrees fiftie foure minutes. From the eight and twentieth at noone, to the nine and twentieth at noone, thirtie thirtie ſixe leagues East b y South, the wind at West, North-weſt. Then by my obſeruation I found the ſhip to be in thirtie fiue degrees, thirtie minutes pricked. From the nine and twentieth at noone, to the thirtieth at noone, thirtie fiue leagues East, South-east. The winde ſhifting betweene West, North-weſt, and West, South-weſt, blowing a good freſh gale. Then by my obſeruation I found the ſhip to be in thirtie foure degrees, fortie nine minutes pricked. From the thirtieth of Iune at noone, to the firſt of Iuly at noone, thirtie leagues South-east by East, the winde at weſt, then I found the ſhip in thirtie foure degrees pricked.

June 19. 1610.

From the firſt of Iuly at noone, to the ſecond at noon, twentie leagues East, South-east ſoutherly, the wind West, then I found the ſhip to bee in thirtie three degrees, thirtie minutes pricked, the weather very faire. From the ſecond at noone, to the third at foure of the clocke in the afternoone it was calme, then it beganne to blow a reſonable freſh gale at South-east: ſo I made account that the ſhip had driuen about ſixe leagues in that time East. The Sea did ſet all about the West. From that time to the fourth at noone, ſeuenteene leagues East by North, the wind ſhifting betweene South-east and South South-weſt, then I found the ſhip to bee in thirtie three degrees, fortie minutes, the weather continued very faire. From the fourth at noone, to the fifth at noone, ten leagues South-east, the wind and weather as before, then I found the ſhip to be in thirtie three degrees, ſeuenteene minutes pricked. From the fift at noone, to the ſixt at noone, eight leagues South-weſt, then I found the ſhip to be in thirtie two degrees, fiftie ſeuen minutes pricked; the wind and weather continued as before, only we had a ſmall ſhowre of two or three raine. From the ſixt at noone, to the ſeuenth at noone, ſeuenteene leagues East by North, then I found the ſhip to be in thirtie three degrees, the wind and weather as before. From the ſeuenth at noon, to the eight at noone, fourteene leagues North-east, then I found the ſhip to be in thirtie three degrees, thirtie two minutes, the wind and weather continued as before. From the eight at noon to the ninth at noone, fiue leagues South-east, there I found the ſhip to be in thirtie three degrees, twentie one minutes, the wind at South-weſt, the weather very faire. From the ninth at noone, to the tenth at noone, fiue leagues South, the wind weſterly; but for the moſt part it was calme, and the weather very faire. From the tenth at noone, to the eleuenth at noone it was calme, and ſo continued vntill nine of the clocke the ſame night, then it began to blow a reaſonable freſh gale at South-east, and continued all that night betweene South-east and South, and vntill the twelfth day at noone: by which time I had ſailed fifteene leagues West ſoutherly: then I found the ſhip in thirtie three degrees, thirtie minutes. From that time to foure of the clock the twelfth day in the morning twelue leagues West by North, the wind all ſoutherly, and then it ſhifted betweene South and South-weſt, then wee tacked about and ſtood South-east, and South-east by South: ſo by noone I had ſayled fiue leagues South-east by East; then I found the ſhip in thirtie three degrees ten minutes. From the thirteenth at noone, to the fourteenth at noone, twenty leagues South-east by East, the wind ſhifting betweene the South-weſt, and West South-weſt, then I found the ſhip to be in thirtie two degrees, thirtie fiue minutes. From the fourteenth at noone, to the fifteenth at noone, twentie leagues South-east, then I found the ſhip to be in thirty two degrees, the wind as before: then we tacked about, and lay North-weſt by West. From the fifteenth at noone, to the ſixteenth at noone, twelue leagues North by West, the wind ſhifting betweene South-weſt and West, and the weather very ſtormy, with many ſudden guſts of wind and rayne.

33. degrees, 21. minutes.

Calme.

33. degrees, 30. minutes.

32. degrees.

And about ſixe of the clocke in the afternoone, being to windward of our Admirall I bare vp vnder his lee: who when I hayled him, told me that he would tack it vp no longer, becauſe hee was not able to keepe the ſea any longer, for lacke of a road and water: but that hee would preſently ſteere away North North-weſt, to ſee if he could fetch Cape Cod. Which without delay he put in execution. His directions I followed: ſo from the ſixteenth day at noone, to the ſeuenteenth at noone I had ſailed thirtie eight leagues North North-weſt: then I found my ſhip to be in thirtie foure degrees, ten minutes. The ſeuenteenth and eighteenth dayes were very wet and ſtormy, and the winds ſhifting all points of the Compaſſe. The nineteenth day, about foure of the clocke in the morning it began to cleere vp, and then we had a very ſtiffe gale betweene East and North-east. From the ſeuenteenth at noone, to the nineteenth at noone, I had ſayled fiftie fiue leagues North North-weſt, then I found the ſhip to be thirtie ſixe degrees, thirty minutes. From the nineteenth at noone, to the twentieth at noone, thirty fiue leagues North-weſt: then I was in thirty ſeuen degrees, fifty two minutes, the weather now was fairer and the wind all eaſterly. From the twentieth at noone, to the twentie one at noone, we ſayled twenty leagues North by West, the wind betweene East and South-east, and the weather very faire: At the ſunne ſetting I obſerued, and found thirteene degrees; and an halfe of weſterly variation, and vntill midnight we had a reaſonable freſh gale of wind all ſoutherly, and then it fell calme and rained, and ſo continued very little wind vntill the two and twentieth at noone, and ſhifting all the points of the Compaſſe: yet by mine obſeruation that I made then, I found that the ſhip had run twentie fiue leagues North, for I found her to be in forty degrees, one minute, which maketh me thinke that there was ſome tide or current that did ſet Northward. Againe, thoſe that had the ſecond watch did ſay, That in their watch they did ſee a race, and that ſhip did drift apace to the Northward, when ſhe had not a breath of wind.

He ſpeakes with the Admirall.

They ſaile toward Cape Cod

Weſterly variation 13. degrees & a half.

40. degrees, 1. minute.

A current ſetting to the Northward.

From

A great fog.

40.deg. 56.mi.

47. fathoms water.

Water like vnto a greene graſſe

They take fiſh.

A great fog.

Sounding.

Great fog and raine.

100. Cods taken.

The Ship driueth.

They ſtand for the Riuer of Sagadahoc.

Verie foggie weather.

The thick fog continueth.

The fog continueth.

The fog continueth.

From the two and twentieth at noone, vntill ten of the clocke at night, we had a freſh gale of wind, betweene Eaſt and South-eaſt, and then it ſhifted all weſterly, and ſo continued vntill two of the clocke the twenty three in the morning: and then it began to be very foggy and but little wind, yet ſhifting all the points of the Compaſſe, and ſo continued vntill ten of the clocke, and then it began to cleere vp. At twelue of the clocke I obſerued, and then I found the ſhip to be in fortie degrees fiftie minutes: ſo from the twenty two at noone, to the twenty three at noone I had ſayled twenty leagues Northward. From the twenty three at noone, to the twenty foure, at three of the clocke in the morning it was calme, and then we had a reaſonable freſh gale of wind all ſoutherly, and ſo it continued vntill noon ſoutherly, in which time I had ſailed twelue leagues North. And about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, we had forty ſeuen fathoms of water, which water we did find to be changed into a graſſe green in the morning, yet we would not heaue a lead, becauſe our Admirall was ſo farre on head of vs: who about three of the clocke in the afternoone lay by the lee, and fiſhed till I came vp to him: and then I fitted my ſelfe and my boat, and fiſhed vntill ſixe of the clocke. And then the Admirall fitted his ſailes, and ſtirred away North, whom I followed with all the ſpeed I could. But before ſeuen of the clocke there fell ſuch a myſt, that I was faine to ſhoot off a Peece, which he anſwered with a Cornet that he had aboord. So with hallowing and making a noyſe one to another all the night we kept company. About two of the clocke, the twenty fiue day in the morning we tooke in all our ſailes, and lay at Hull vntill fiue of the clocke: and then finding but ſmall ſtore of fiſh, we ſet ſaile and ſtirred away North-weſt, to fetch the mayne land to relieue our ſelues with wood and water, which we ſtood in great need of. About two of the clocke in the afternoone we tooke in all our ſailes and lay at Hull, at which time I heaued the lead three times together, and had three ſundry kindes of ſoundings. The firſt a blacke peppery ſand, full of peble ſtones. The ſecond blacke peppery, and no ſtones: The third, blacke peppery, and two or three ſtones.

From the fourth at noone, to the twentie fiue, at two of the clocke in the afternoone, I ſayled thirteene leagues Weſt North-weſt: and the weather continuing very foggy, thicke, and rainy, about fiue of the clocke it began to ceaſe, and then we began to fiſh, and ſo continued vntill ſeuen of the clocke in betweene thirty and forty fathoms, and then we could fiſh no longer. So hauing gotten betweene twentie and thirty Cods, we left for that night: and at fiue of the clocke, the twenty ſixe in the morning we began to fiſh againe, and ſo continued vntill ten of the clocke, and then it would fiſh no longer: in which time we had taken neere one hundred Cods, and a couple of Hollybuts. All this while wee had betweene thirty and forty fathoms water: before one of the clocke in the afternoone we found the ſhip driuen into one hundred and twenty fathoms, and ſoft blacke Oſe. Then Sir George Somers ſent me word, that he would ſet ſaile, and ſtand in for the Riuer of Sagadahoc; whoſe directions I followed.

Before two of the clocke we ſet ſaile, and ſtirred away North-weſt by North, the wind South South-weſt, and the weather continued very foggy. About eight of the clocke wee tooke in all our ſailes, and lay at Hull at that night. The ſeuen and twentieth, about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning we heaued the lead, and had no ground in one hundred and twentie fathoms. Then I ſhot off a Peece, but could not heare none anſwere from our Admirall: and the weather was ſo thicke, that we could not ſee a Cables length from our ſhip. Betweene nine and ten of the clock we did thinke that we did heare a Peece of Ordnance to windward: which made me ſuppoſe our Admirall had ſet ſaile, and that it was a warning piece from him. So I ſet ſayle and ſtood cloſe by the wind, and kept an hollowing and a noiſe to try whether I could find him againe: the wind was at South-weſt, and I ſtood away Weſt North-weſt. From the ſixe and twentieth, at two of the clocke in the afternoone, to eight of the clocke at night I had ſayled nine leagues North-weſt. The ſeuen and twentieth at noone I heaued the Lead, in one hundred and twenty fathoms, and had no ground. Then I ſtirred away North-weſt, till foure of the clocke at night: then I heaued the Lead againe one hundred and twenty fathoms, and had no ground. Then I tooke all my ſailes and lay at Hull, and I had ſayled ſeuen leagues North-weſt. The eight and twentieth, at ſeuen of the clocke in the morning I did ſound in one hundred and twenty fathoms, and had no ground. Then I ſet ſayle againe, and ſteered away North, and North by Weſt. At noone I heaued in one hundred and twenty fathoms againe, and had no ground. So I ſteered on my courſe ſtill, the wind ſhifted betweene South and South-weſt, and the fog continued. At foure of the clocke in the afternoone, I heaued one hundred twenty fathoms againe, and had no ground: ſo I ſtood on vntill eight of the clocke, by which time I had ſailed twelue leagues: then I heaued the Lead againe, and had blacke Oſe, and one hundred thirty fiue fathoms water. Then I tooke in all my ſayles and lay at hull vntill the nine and twentieth, at fiue of the clocke in the morning. Then I ſet ſaile againe, and ſteered away North, and North by Weſt. At eight of the clocke I heaued the Lead againe, and had blacke Oſe in one hundred and thirty fathoms water. Betweene eleuen and twelue of the clocke it began to thunder, but the fogge continued not ſtill. About two of the clocke in the afternoone, I went out with my Boat my ſelfe and heaued the Lead, and had blacke Oſe in ninety fathoms water: by which time I had ſailed ſix leagues North by Weſt more. Then I tooke in all my ſayles ſauing my Fore-courſe and Bonnet, and ſtood in with thoſe ſailes onely.

About

About sixe of the clocke I sounded againe, and then I had sixty fiue fathoms water. Assoone as I came aboord it cleered vp, and then I saw a small Iland, which bare North about two leagues off; whereupon I stood in vntill eight of the clocke: And then I stood off againe vntill two of the clocke in the morning the thirtieth day. Then I stood in againe, and about eight of the clocke I was faire aboord the Iland. Then I manned my Boat and went on shoare, where I found great store of Seales: And I killed three Seales with my hanger. This Iland is not halfe a mile about, and nothing but a Rocke, which seemed to be very rich Marble stone. And a South South-west Moon maketh a full Sea. About ten of the clocke I came aboord againe, with some Wood that I had found vpon the Iland, for there had beene some folkes that had made fiers there. Then I stood ouer to another Iland that did beare North off me about three leagues; this small rockie Iland lyeth in forty foure degrees. About seuen of the clocke that night I came to an anchor among many Ilands in eight fathoms water: and vpon one of these Ilands I fitted my selfe with Wood and Water, and Balast.

A Rocke of Marble halfe a mile about full of Seales. The final rocky Iland lieth in 44. degrees. Many Ilands in eight fathoms water. August 3.

The third day of August, being fitted to put to Sea againe, I caused the Master of the ship to open the boxe wherein my Commission was, to see what directions I had, and for what place I was bound to shape my course. Then I tried whether there were any fish there or not, and I found reasonable good store there; so I stayed there fishing till the twelfth of August: and then finding that the fishing did faile, I thought good to returne to the Iland where I had killed the Seales, to see whether I could get any store of them or not; for I did find that they were very nourishing meate, and a great reliefe to my men, and that they would be very well saued with salt to keepe a long time. But when I came thither I could not by any meanes catch any. The fourteenth day at noone I obserued the Sun, and found the Iland to lie in forty three degrees, forty minutes. Then I shaped my course for Cape Cod, to see whether I could get any fish there or not: so by the fifteenth that noone, I had sailed thirty two leagues South-west, the wind for the most part was betweene North-west and North. From the fifteenth at noone, to the sixteenth at noone I ran twenty leagues South, the wind shifting betweene West and South-west. And then I sounded and had ground in eighteene fathoms water, full of shels and peble stones of diuers colours, some greene, and some blewish, some like diamants, and some speckled. Then I tooke in all my sayles, and set all my company to fishing, and fished till eight of the clocke that night: and finding but little fish there, I set sayle againe, and by the euenteenth at noone I had sayled ten leagues West by North, the wind shifting betweene South and South-west. From noone, till sixe of the clocke at night, foure leagues North-west, the wind shifting betweene West and South-west. Then it did blow so hard that I tooke in all my sayles, and lay at hull all that night, vntill fiue of the clock the eighteenth day in the morning: and then I set saile againe, and by noone I had sailed foure leagues North-west, the wind betweene West and South-west. From the eighteenth at noone, to the nineteenth at noone ten leagues West by West, the wind shifting betweene South and South-west, and the weather very thick and foggy.

Reasonable store of fish. Seale Rocke, in 43. deg. 40. mi. He returneth home. Thick and foggie weather.

About seuen of the clocke at night the fogge began to breake away, and the wind did shift westerly, and by midnight it was shifted to the North, and there it did blow very hard vntill the twenty at noone: but the weather was very cleere, and then by my obseruation I found the ship to bee in the latitude of forty one degrees, forty foure minutes, and I had sailed twenty leagues South-west by West. From the nineteenth at noone, to the twentieth at noone: about two of the clocke in the afternoone I did see an Hed-land, which did beare off me South-west, about foure leagues: so I steered with it, taking it to bee Cape Cod; and by foure of the clocke I was fallen among so many shoales, that it was fiue of the clocke the next day in the morning before I could get cleere of them, it is a very dangerous place to fall withall: for the shoales lie at the least ten leagues off from the Land; and I had vpon one of them but one fathom and an halfe water, and my Barke did draw seuen foot. This Land lyeth South-west, and North-east, and the shoales lie off from it South and South by West, and so along toward the North. At the North-west by West Guards I obserued the North-starre, and found the ship to be in the latitude of fortie one degrees, fiftie minutes, being then in the middle of the Sholdes: and I did finde thirteene degrees of westerly variation then likewise. Thus finding the place not to be for my turne, assoon as I was cleere of these dangers, I thought it fit to returne to Iames Towne in Virginia, to the Lord De-lawarre, my Lord Gouernour, and there to attend his command: so I shaped my course for that place. And the one and twentieth day by noone I had brought my selfe South South-west thirtie three leagues from this Cape: and I had the wind shifting all this while betweene North and North-west, and the weather very faire and cleere. From the one and twentieth at noone, to the two and twentieth at noone, I ran thirtie leagues South-West by West, and then by mine obseruation I found the ship to be in thirtie nine degrees, thirtie sixe minutes; and I had twelue degrees westerly variation, and the wind shifting betweene North and North-east, and the weather very faire and cleere. From the two and twentieth at noone, to the three and twentieth at noone, nine leagues South-west by West; and then by obseruation I did find the ship in thirtie nine degrees, twentie foure minutes, and I had eleuen degrees of westerly variation: and there did blow but very little wind, and shifting betweene West and North, and the weather

4t. deg. 44. mi. Cape Cod. The sholdes of Cape Cod. The middle of the sholdes in 41. deg. 50. mi. 15. degrees of westerly Variation. 12. degrees of westerly Variation. 11. degrees of westerly Variation.

weather very faire and cleere. From the three and twentieth at noone to the foure and twentieth at noone eighteene leagues South-west, and then I found the shippe to be in thirtie eight degrees fortie two minutes: and I had twelue degrees of Westerly Variation, and the wind shifting betweene North and West, and the weather very faire.

12 degrees of Westerly variation.

From the foure and twentieth at noone, to the fiue and twentieth, at noone two and twentie leagues West by South, the wind shifting betweene North and East. And then I found the ship to bee in thirtie eight degrees fiue and twentie minutes, and the same Variation that I had before, and the weather very faire.

From the fiue and twentieth at noone, to the six and twentieth at noone, fiue and twentie leagues Westerly, the wind all shifting betweene South and South-west. And I had thirteene degrees fiue and twentie minutes of Westerly Variation. About sixe of the clocke at night the water was changed, and then I sounded and had red sandie ground in twelue fathomes water about twelue leagues from the shore.

13. deg. 25. mi. of Westerly variation.

The seuen and twentieth by day in the morning, I was faire aboord the shore, and by nine of the clocke I came to an Anchor in nine fathomes in a very great Bay, where I found great store of people which were very kind, and promised me that the next day in the morning they would bring me great store of Corne. But about nine of the clocke that night the winde shifted from South-west to East North-east. So I weighed presently, and shaped my course to Cape Charles. This Bay lyeth in Westerly thirtie leagues. And the Souther Cape of it lyeth South South-east and North North-west, and in thirtie eight degrees twentie minutes of Northerly Latitude.

The eight and twentieth day, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone I fell among a great many of shoales, about twelue leagues to the Southward of Cape La Warre. So there I came to an Anchor in three fathomes water, the winde beeing then all Easterly, and rode there all that Night.

Many shoales 12. leagues to the South of Cape La Warre

The nine and twentieth in the morning I weighed againe, the wind being all Southerly, and turned vntill night, and then I came to an Anchor in seuen fathomes water in the offing to Sea.

How the tyde did set there, or whether that there did run any current or not, I cannot say; but I could find neither current nor tyde.

The thirtieth in the morning I weighed againe, the wind still Southerly, and turned all that day, but got very little, so at Euening I stood off to Sea vntill midnight, and then stood in againe.

The one and thirtieth, about seuen of the clocke at night I came to an Anchor vnder Cape Charles in foure fathomes, and one third part water, and rode there all that night.

Cape Charles.

CHAP. VIII.

A short Relation made by the Lord De-La-Warre, to the Lords and others of the Counsell of Virginia, touching his vnexpected returne home, and afterwards deliuered to the generall Assembly of the said Company, at a Court holden the twentie fiue of Iune, 1611. Published by authoritie of the said Counsell.

MY LORDS, &c.

BEeing now by accident returned from my Charge at Virginia, contrary either to my owne desire or other mens expectations, who spare not to censure mee, in point of dutie, and to discourse and question the reason, though they apprehend not the true cause of my returne, I am forced (out of a willingnesse to satisfie euery man) to deliuer vnto your Lordships, and the rest of this Assembly, briefly (but truly) in what state I haue liued, euer since my arriuall to the Colonies; what hath beene the iust occasion of my sudden departure thence; and in what termes I haue left the same: The rather because I perceiue, that since my comming into England, such a coldnesse and irresolution is bred, in many of the Aduenturers, that some of them seeke to withdraw those payments, which they haue subscribed towards the Charge of the Plantation, and by which that Action must be supported and mayntained, making this my returne, the colour of their needlesse backwardnesse and vniust protraction. Which, that you may the better vnderstand, I must informe your Lordships, that presently after my arriuall in Iames Towne, I was welcommed by a hot and violent Ague, which held me a time, till by the aduice of my Physition, Doctour Lawrence Bohun (by bloud letting) I was recouered as in my first Letters by Sir Thomas Gates, I haue informed you. That Disease had not long left me, till (within three weekes after I had gotten a little strength) I began to be distempered with other grieuous sicknesses, which successiuely and seuerally assailed mee: for besides a relapse into the former Disease, which with much more violence held me more then a moneth, and brought me to great weakenesse, the Flux surprized mee, and and kept me many dayes; then the Crampe assaulted my weake bodie, with strong paines; and afterwards the Gout (with which I had heeretofore beene sometime troubled) afflicted me in such sort, that making my bodie through weaknesse vnable to stirre, or to vse any manner of exercise, drew vpon me the Disease called the Scurvy; which though in others it be a sicknesse of slothfulnesse, yet was in me an effect of weaknesse, which neuer left mee, till I was vpon the point to leaue the World.

Lord La Warre many sicknesses.

These seuerall Maladies and Calamities, I am the more desirous to particularise vnto your Lordshippes (although they were too notorious to the whole Colonie) lest any man should mildeeme that vnder the generall name and common excuse of sickenesse, I went about to cloke either sloth, or feare, or any other base apprehension, vnworthy the high and Honorable Charge, which you had entrusted to my Fidelitie.

In these extremities I resolued to consult my friends, Who finding Nature spent in mee, and my body almost consumed, my paines likewise daily encreasing) gaue me aduise to prefer a hopefull recouery, before an assured ruine, which must necessarily haue ensued, had I liued, but twentie dayes longer in Virginia: wanting at that instant, both food and Physicke, fit to remedy such extraordinary Diseases, and restore that strength so desperately decayed.

Whereupon, after a long consultation held, I resolued by generall consent and perswasion, to ship my selfe for Mevis, an Iland in the West Indies, famous for wholesome Bathes, there to try what helpe the Heauenly Prouidence would afford mee, by the benefit of the hot Bath: But God, who guideth all things, according to his good will and pleasure, so prouided, that after we had sayled an hundred Leagues, we met with Southerly windes which forced mee to change my purpose (my bodie being altogether vnable to endure the tediousnesse of a long Voyage) and so steere my course for the Westerne Ilands, which I no sooner recouered, then I found helpe for my health, and my sicknesse asswaged, by meanes of fresh Diet, and especially of Orenges and Lemons, an vndoubted remedy and medicine for that Disease, which lastly, and so long, had afflicted me: which ease as soone as I found, I resolued (although my body remayned still feeble and weake, to returne backe to my charge in Virginia againe, but I was aduised not to hazard my selfe before I had perfectly recouered my strength, which by counsell I was perswaded to seeke in the naturall Ayre of my Countrey, and so I came for England. In which Accident, I doubt not but men of reason, and of iudgement will imagine, there would more danger and preiudice haue happened by my death there, then I hope can doe by my returne.

Orenges and Lemons good remedie for the Scurvie.

In the next place, I am to giue account in what estate I left the Colonie for gouernment in my absence. It may please your Lordships therefore to vnderstand, that vpon my departure thence, I made choice of Captaine George Percie (a Gentleman of honour and resolution, and of no small experience in that place, to remayne Deputie Gouernour, vntill the comming of the Marshall Sir Thomas Dale, whose Commission was likewise to be determined, vpon the arriuall of Sir Thomas Gates, according to the intent and order of your Lordships, and the Councell here.

Master George Percie Deputie till the comming of Sir T. Dale Marshall.

The number of men I left there, were vpward of two hundred, the most in health, and prouided of at least ten moneths victuals, in their Store-house (which is daily issued vnto them) besides other helps in the Countrey, lately found out by Captaine Argall by trading with pettie Kings in those parts, who for a small returne of a piece of Iron, Copper, &c. haue consented to trucke great quantities of Corne, and willingly imbrace the intercourse of Traffique, shewing vnto our people certaine signes of amitie and affection.

200. left there.

Trade by Cap. Argoll.

And for the better strengthening and securing of the Colonie, in the time of my weaknesse there, I tooke order for the building of three seuerall Forts, two of which are seated neere Point Comfort, to which adioyneth a large circuit of ground, open, and fit for Corne: the third Fort is at the Falls, vpon an Iland inuironed also with Corne ground. These are not all manned, for I wanted the commoditie of Boats, hauing but two, and one Barge, in all the Countrey, which hath beene cause that our fishing hath beene (in some sort) hindered for want of those prouisions, which easily will be remedied when we can gaine sufficient men to bee imployed about those businesses, which in Virginia I found not: but since meeting with Sir Thomas Gates at the Cowes neere Portsmouth, (to whom I gaue a particular account of all my proceedings, and of the present estate of the Colonie as I left it) I vnderstood those wants are supplyed in his Fleet.

Three Forts.

Sir T. Gates his second voyage

The Country is wonderfull fertile and very rich, and makes good whatsoeuer heretofore hath beene reported of it, the Cattell alreadie there, are much encreased, and thriue exceedingly with the pasture of that Countrie: The Kine all this last Winter, though the ground was couered most with Snow, and the Season sharpe, liued without other feeding then the grasse they found, with which they prospered well, and many of them readie to fall with Calue: Milke beeing a great nourishment and refreshing to our people, seruing also (in occasion) as well for Physicke as for food, so that it is no way to be doubted, but when it shall please God that Sir Thomas Dale, and Sir Thomas Gates, shall arriue in Virginia, with their extraordinary supply of one hundred Kine, and two hundred Swine, besides store of all manner of other prouisions for the sustenance and maintenance of the Colonie, there will appeare that successe in the Action as shall giue no man cause of distrust that hath alreadie aduentured, but encourage euery good minde to further so 100. Kine and 200. Swine sent.

Digitized by Google

worthy a worke, as will redound both to the glory of God, to the credit of our Nation, and to the comfort of all those that haue beene Instruments in the furthering of it.

The last Discouery, during my continuall sickneſſe, was by Captaine Argoll, who hath found a Trade with Patanzack (a King as great as Powhatan, who ſtill remaynes our Enemie, though not able to doe vs hurt.) This is in a goodly Riuer called Patowack, vpon the borders whereof there are growne the goodlieſt Trees for Maſts, that may bee found elſe-where in the World: Hempe better then Engliſh: growing wild in abundance: Mynes of Antimonie and Lead.

K. and R. Patanzack.

There is alſo found without our Bay to the Northward an excellent fiſhing Banke for Cod and Ling, as good as can be eaten, and of a kind that will keepe a whole yeere in ſhips hold, with little care; a triall whereof I now haue brought ouer with me. Other Ilands there are vpon our Coaſts, that doe promiſe rich Merchandize, and will further exceedingly the eſtabliſhing of the Plantation, by ſupply of many helpes, and will ſpeedily affoord a returne of many worthy commodities.

I haue left much ground in part manured to receiue Corne, hauing cauſed it the laſt Winter to be ſowed for Roots, with which our people were greatly releeued. There are many Vines planted in diuers places, and doe proſper well, there is no want of any thing, if the action can be vpheld with conſtancie and reſolution.

Laſtly, concerning my ſelfe and my courſe, though the World may imagine that this Countrie and Climate, will (by that which I haue ſuffered beyond any other of that Plantation) ill agree with the ſtate of my bodie, yet I am ſo farre from ſhrinking or giuing ouer this honourable Enterprize, as that I am willing and readie to lay all that I am worth vpon the aduenture of the Action, rather then ſo Honourable a Worke ſhould faile, and to returne with all the conuenient expedition I may, beſeeching your Lordſhips and the reſt, not onely to excuſe my former wants, happened by the Almightie Hand: but to ſecond my Reſolutions with your friendly indeuours: that both the State may receiue Honour, your ſelues Profit, and I future Comfort, by beeing imployed (though but as a weake Inſtrument) in ſo great an Action.

And thus hauing plainly, truly, and briefly deliuered the cauſe of my returne, with the ſtate of our affaires, as we now ſtand, I hope euery worthy and indifferent hearer, will by comparing my preſent reſolution of returne, with the neceſſitie of my comming home, reſt ſatisfied with this true and ſhort Declaration.

CHAP. IX.

A Letter of Sir Samuell Argoll touching his Voyage to Virginia, and Actions there: Written to Maſter Nicholas Hawes. Iune 1613.

MAſter Hawes, within ſeuen weekes after my departure from the Coaſt of England, being the three and twentieth of Iuly, 1612. I fell with the Coaſt of Virginia, in the Latitude of fortie degrees. The twelfth of September, with all my men in good health, the number being ſixtie two, and all my victuals very well conditioned: my courſe being fiftie leagues to the Northward of the Azores. The ſeuenteenth, I arriued at Point Comfort, where by the diſcreet and prouident gouernment of Sir Thomas Gates, and great paines and hazard of Sir Thomas Dale, I found both the Countrey and people in farre better eſtate there, then the report was by ſuch as came home in Sir Robert Mansfields ſhip. From my arriuall vntill the firſt of Nouember, I ſpent my time in helping to repaire ſuch ſhips and Boats, as I found heere decayed for lacke of Pitch and Tarre: and in purſuing the Indians with Sir Thomas Dale, for their Corne, of which we got ſome quantitie, which we were like to haue bought very deerely: for by the Prouidence of God, Sir Thomas Dale eſcaped killing very narrowly. Then about the beginning of Nouember, by the aduice of Sir Thomas Gates, I carried Sir Thomas Dale to Sir Thomas Smiths Iland, to haue his opinion of the inhabiting of it: who, after three dayes march in diſcouering it, approued very well of the place: and ſo much the better, becauſe we found abundance of fiſh there, and very great Cod, which we caught in fiue fathome water, of which we are in hope to get a great quantitie this Summer, for the reliefe of our men, as alſo to find ſafe paſſage for Boats and Barges thither, by a cut out of the bottome of our Bay, into the De la Warre Bay. For which fiſhing and better Diſcouery, I haue my ſhip readie, with my Company in as good health, as at my arriuall, and as they haue continued euer ſince: for which, God be glorified, to whom we giue daily thankes, for the continuance of his mercy.

Sir T. Gates.
Sir T. Dale.
The Deliuerance.
This was in the Riuer of Nanſamund.
His Voyage to Sir T. Smiths Iland.
De la War Bay.

After my returne from Sir Thomas Smiths Iland, I fitted my ſhip to fetch Corne from Patowomeck, by trading with the Indians, and ſo ſet ſayle from Point Comfort the firſt of December: and being entred into Penbrooke Riuer, I met with the King of Paſtancie a hunting, who went preſently aboord with me, ſeeming to be very glad of my comming, and told me that all the Indians there were my very great friends, and that they had good ſtore of Corne for mee, which they had prouided the yeere before, which we found to be true. Then I carried my ſhip preſently before his Towne, and there built me a ſtout ſhal-

His firſt Voyage to Patowomec and Penbrooke Riuer.
Appaſus the Werowance of Paſtancie.

Digitized by Google

shallop, to get the Corne aboord withall, which being done, and having concluded a peace with diuers other Indian Lords, and likewise giuen and taken * Hostages: I hasted to Iames Towne, beeing the first of * Cap. Web, Ensigne Swift & Reb. Sparkes, & two Boyes.

Ianuary, and arriued at Point Comfort the first of February.

In this Voyage I got 1100. bushels of Corne, which I deliuered into the seuerall Store-houses, according vnto the direction of Sir T. Gates: besides the quantitie of 300. bushels, reserued for mine Company. As soone I had vnladen this Corne, I set my men to the felling of Timber, for the building of a Frigat, which I left halfe finished in the hands of the Carpenters at Point Comfort, the 19. of March: and returned my selfe with the ship into Pembrook Riuer, and so discouered to the head of it, which is about 65. leagues into the Land, and nauigable for any ship. And then marching into the Countrie, I found great store of Cattle as big as Kine, of which, the Indians that were my guides, killed a couple which wee found to be very good and wholsome meate, and are very easie to be killed, in regard they are heauy, slow, and not so wild as other beasts of the Wildernesse. In this iourney I likewise found a Myne, of which I haue sent a triall into England: and likewise a strange kind of Earth, the vertue whereof I know not; but the Indians eate it for Physicke, alleaging that it cureth the sickenesse and paine of the belly. I likewise found a kind of water issuing out of the Earth, which hath a tart taste much like vnto Allum-water, it is good and wholsome: for my men did drinke much of it, and neuer found it otherwise. I also found an earth like a Gumme, white and cleere; another sort red, like Terra sigillata; another very white, and of so light a substance, that being cast into the water, it swimmeth.

1100. bushels of Corne.
The second voyage to Pembroke Riuer.
Note.
Great store of Oxen in Pembroke Riuer.
A Myne.
A medicinable Earth.
A water that hath the taste of Allum.
An Earth like Gumme.
A red Earth like Terra sigillata.

Whilst I was in this businesse, I was told by certaine Indians, my friends, that the Great Powhatans Daughter Pokahuntis was with the great King Patowomeck, whether I presently repaired, resoluing to possesse my selfe of her by any stratagem that I could vse, for the ransoming of so many Englishmen as were prisoners with Powhatan: as also to get such armes and tooles, as hee, and other Indians had got by murther and stealing from others of our Nation, with some quantitie of Corne, for the Colonies reliefe. So soone as I came to an anchor before the Towne, I manned my Boate and sent on shoare, for the King of Pastancy and Ensigne Swift (whom I had left as a pledge of our loue and truce, the Voyage before) who presently came and brought my pledge with him: whom after I had receiued, I brake the matter to this King, and told him, that if he did not betray Pokohuntis into my hands; wee would be no longer brothers nor friends. Hee alleaged, that if hee should vndertake this businesse, then Powhatan would make warres vpon him and his people; but vpon my promise, that I would ioyne with him against him, hee repaired presently to his brother, the great King of Patowomeck, who being made acquainted with the matter, called his Counsell together: and after some few houres deliberation, concluded rather to deliuer her into my hands, then lose my friendship: so presently, he betrayed her into my Boat, wherein I carried her aboord my ship. This done, an Indian was dispatched to Powhatan, to let him know, that I had taken his Daughter: and if he would send home the Englishmen (whom he deteined in slauerie, with such armes and tooles, as the Indians had gotten, and stolne) and also a great quantitie of Corne, that then, he should haue his daughter restored, otherwise not. This newes much grieued this great King, yet, without delay, he returned the messenger with this answer. That he desired me to vse his Daughter well, and bring my ship into his Riuer, and there he would giue mee my demands; which being performed, I should deliuer him his Daughter, and we should be friends.

The great King Patowomeck.
Ensigne Swift.
Pocahuntis taken.

Hauing receiued this answere, I presently departed from Patowomeck, being the 13. of Aprill, and repayred with all speed to Sir T. Gates, to know of him vpon what condition he would conclude this peace, and what he would demand: to whom I also deliuered my prisoner, towards whose ransome within few dayes, this King sent home seuen of our men, who seemed to be very ioyfull for that they were freed from the slauery and feare of cruell murther, which they daily before liued in. They brought also three pieces, one broad Axe, and a long Whip-saw, and one Canow of Corne. I beeing quit of my prisoner, went forward with the Frigat which I had left at Point Comfort, and finished her.

7. men freed.

Thus hauing put my ship in hand to be fitted for an intended fishing Voyage, I left that businesse to be followed by my Master with a ginge of men, and my Lieutenant fortified on shoare with another ginge to fell timber, and cleane plankes to build a fishing Boat; my Ensigne with another ginge was imployed in the Frigat, for getting of fish at Cape Charles, and transporting it to Henries Towne for the reliefe of such men as were there: and my selfe with a fourth ginge departed out of the Riuer in my shallop, the first of May, for to discouer the East side of our Bay, which I found to haue many small Riuers in it, and very good harbours for Boats and Barges, but not for ships of any great burthen: and also great store of Inhabitants, who seemed very desirous of our loue, and so much the rather, because they had receiued good reports from the Indians of Pembrock Riuer, of our courteous vsage of them, whom I found trading with me for Corne, whereof they had great store. We also discouered a multitude of Ilands bearing good Medow ground, and as I thinke, Salt might easily be made there, if there were any ponds digged, for that I found Salt kerned where the water had ouer-flowne in certaine places. Here is also great store of fish, both shel-fish and other. So hauing discouered along the shore some fortie leagues Northward, I returned againe to my ship, the twelfth of May, and hasted forward my businesse left in hand at my departure: and fitted vp my ship, and built my fishing Boate, and made readie to take the first opportunitie of the wind for my fishing Voyage, of which I beseech God of his mercy to blesse vs.

His third Discouery.
Kerned Salt found.
May 12. 1613.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. X.

Notes of Virginian Affaires in the gouernment of Sir THOMAS DALE and of Sir THOMAS GATES till Anno 1614. Taken out of Maſter RALPH HAMOR (Secretary to the Colonie) his Booke.

WE found the Colonie at our arriuall there, from the Bermudas, not liuing aboue threeſcore perſons therein, and thoſe ſcarce able to go e alone, of wel-nigh ſix hundred, not full ten monethes before. The reaſon hereof is at hand, for formerly, when our people were fed out of the common ſtore, and laboured ioyntly in the manuring of the ground, and planting Corne, glad was that man that could ſlip from his labour; nay, the moſt honeſt of them in a generall buſineſſe, would not take ſo much faithfull and true paines, in a weeke, as now hee will doe in a day, neither cared they for the increaſe, preſuming that howſoeuer their harueſt proſpered, the generall ſtore muſt maintayne them. By which meanes we reaped not ſo much Corne from the labours of thirtie men, as three men haue done for themſelues. To preuent which miſchiefe hereafter Sir Thomas Dale hath taken a new courſe, throughout the whole Colonie, by which meanes, the generall ſtore (apparell onely excepted) ſhall not bee charged with any thing: and this it is, hee hath allotted to euery man in the Colonie, three Engliſh Acres of cleere Corne ground, which euery man is to mature and tend, being in the nature of Farmers (the Bermuda vndertakers onely excepted) and they are not called vnto any ſeruice or labour belonging to the Colonie, more then one moneth in the yeere, which ſhall neither be in Seed time, or in Harueſt, for which, doing no other dutie to the Colonie, they are yeerely to pay into the ſtore two barrels and a halfe of Corne: there to bee reſerued to keepe new men, which ſhall bee ſent ouer, the firſt yeere after their arriuall: and euen by this meanes I dare ſay, our ſtore will bee bountifully furniſhed, to maintayne three or foure hundred men, whenſoeuer they ſhall be ſent thither to vs.

Euery mans care is no mans. Proprietie is a proper paineſtaker.

Sir Thom. Dales good gouernment.

Bermuda Citie.

Concerning the vndertaking of the Bermuda Citie, a buſineſſe of greateſt hope, euer begunne in our Territories there, their Patent, doth apparantly demonſtrate, vpon what termes and conditions they voluntarily haue vndertaken that imployment. The Land is ſtored with plentie and varietie of wild Beaſts, Lions, Beares, Deere of all ſorts, onely differing from ours in their increaſe, hauing vſuall, three or foure Fawnes at a time, none that I haue ſeene or heard off vnder two: the reaſon whereof ſome of our people aſcribe to the vertue of ſome graſſe or herbe which they eate, becauſe our Goates oftentimes bring forth three, and moſt of them two: for my part I rather impute their fecundire to the Prouidence of God, who for euery mouth prouideth meate, and if this increaſe were not, the Naturals would aſſuredly ſtarue: for of the Deere (they kill as doe we Beefes in England) all the yeere long, neither ſparing young nor olde, no not the Does readie to fawne, nor the young Fawnes, if but two dayes olde) Beauers, Otters, Foxes, Racounes, almoſt as bigge as a Foxe, as good meate as a Lambe, Hares, wild Cats, Muske Rats, Squirrels flying, and other of three or foue ſorts, Apoſſumes of the bigneſſe and likeneſſe of a Pigge of a moneth old, a beaſt of as ſtrange incredible nature, ſhe hath commonly ſeuen young ones, ſometimes more and ſometimes leſſe, which at her pleaſure till they be a moneth old or more ſhee tateth vp into her belly, and putteth forth againe without hurt to her ſelfe or them. Of each of theſe beaſts, the Lion excepted, my ſelfe haue many times eaten, and can teſtifie that they are not onely taſtefull, but alſo wholſome and nouriſhing food.

Deere haue 3. or 4. Fawnes at a time.

Apoſſumes.

There are fowle of diuers ſorts, Eagles wild Turkeyes much bigger then our Engliſh Cranes, Herons white and ruſſet Hawkes, wilde Pidgeons (in Winter beyond number or imagination, my ſelfe haue ſeene three or foure houres together flockes in the Aire, ſo thicke that euen they haue ſhadowed the Skie from vs) Turkeyes, Buzzards, Partridge, Snipes, Owles, Swannes, Geeſe, Brants, Ducke and Mallard, Droeis, Shel-drakes, Cormorants, Teale, Widgeon, Curlewes, Puits, beſides other ſmall birds, as Black-birds, Hedge-Sparrowes, Oxe-eyes, Wood-peckers, and in Winter about Chriſtmaſſe many flockes of Parakertoths.

Strange ſtore of fowle, as before in Ouiedo.

For fiſh, the Riuers are plentifully ſtored, with Sturgeon, Porpaſſe, Baſe, Rockfiſh, Carpe, Shad, Herring, Ele, Catfiſh, Perch, Flat-fiſh, Trout, Sheepes-head, Drummers, Iarfiſh, Creuiſes, Crabbes, Oyſters and diuers other kindes, of all which my ſelfe hath ſeene great quantitie taken, eſpecially the laſt Summer at Smiths Iland, at one hale a Frigots lading of Sturgion, Baſe and other great fiſh in Captaine Argals Saine: and euen at the very place which is not aboue fifteene miles from Point-Comfort, if we had beene furniſhed with ſalt, to haue ſaued it, wee might haue taken as much fiſh as would haue ſerued vs that whole yeere.

A Frigats lading taken at one draught.

To goe yet a little further, I my ſelfe know no one Countrey yeelding without Art or induſtry ſo many fruits; Grapes, Strawberries, Mulberries, Maricocks, of faſhion of a Lemmon, whoſe bloſſome may admit compariſon with our moſt delightſome and beautifull Flowers, and the fruit exceed exceeding pleasant and tastfull: Chesnut-trees towardes the Falls as many as Oakes, and as fertill, many goodly Groues of Chincomen-trees, with a huske like vnto a Chesnut, raw or boiled, luscious and heartie meat: Walnuts of three or foure sorts, whereof there might bee yeerely made great quantitie of Oyles, as vsefull and good as that of Oliues: Some Filberds haue I seene, Crabs great store, lesse, but not so sower as ours, which grafted with the Siens of English Apple-trees, without question would beare very good fruit. Crabs.

Faire flowres.

In May, 1611. Sir Thomas Dale, with a prosperous passage, not full eight weekes arriued there with him about three hundred people, such as for the present speed and dispatch could then bee prouided, of worse condition then those formerly there, who I sorrow to speake it, were not so prouident, though once before bitten with hunger and penury; as to put Corne into the ground for their Winters bread, but trusted to the store, then furnished but with eight months prouision. His first care therefore was to imploy all hands about setting of Corne at the two Forts, seated vpon Kecoughtan, Henry and Charles, whereby the season then not fully past, though about the end of May, we had there an indifferent Crop of good Corne. Sir Tho. Dales going to Virginia, A. 1611. in eight weekes. Retchlesse wretches. His care and imploiment.

This businesse taken order for, and the care and trust of it committed to his vnder Officers; to Iames Towne hee hastened, where the most company were, and their daily and vsuall workes, bowling in the streets, these he imployed about necessary workes, as felling of Timber, repairing their houses ready to fall vpon their heads, and prouiding Pales, Posts and Raile, to impaile his purposed new Towne, which by reason of his ignorance in those parts, but newly arriued there, he had not resolued where to seat. For his better knowledge therefore of those parts, himselfe with an hundreth men spent some time in the discouery, first of Nansamund Riuer, which in despight of the Indians, then our enemies, hee discouered to the Head, after that, our owne Riuer to the Falls, where vpon a high Land, inuironed with the maine Riuer, some sixteene or twentie miles from the Head or the Falls, neere to an Indian Towne called Arsahattocke, hee resolued to plant his new Towne, and so did, whereof in his due place I shall make a briefe relation. R. Nansamund. Wise securitie remedie to slothfull securitie.

It was no meane trouble to him, to reduce his people so timely to good order, being of so ill a condition as may well witnesse his seuere and strict imprinted booke of Articles, then needfull with all seueritie and extremitie to bee executed, now much mitigated; for more deserued death in those dayes, then doe now the least punishment, so as if the law should not haue restrained by execution, I see not how the vtter subuersion and ruine of the Colony should haue beene preuented, witnesse Webbes and Prises designe in the first yeere, since that Abbots, and others more dangerous then the former, and euen in this Summer, Coles and Kitchins Plot, with three more, bending their course towards the Southward, to a Spanish plantation reported to be there, who had trauelled (it being now a time of peace) some fiue daies iourney to Ocanahoen, there cut off by certaine Indians, hired by vs to hunt them home to receiue their deserts.

Thus much obiously I proceed in his indeuours, vntill Sir Thomas Gates his happy arriuall, which was onely in preparing Timber, Pales, Posts, and Raile for the present impailing this new Towne to secure himselfe, and men from the malice and treacherie of the Indians, in the midst and heart of whom he was resolued to set downe. But before he could make himselfe readie for that businesse, Sir Thomas Gates happily arriued about the second of August, with sixe good Ships, men, prouisions and cattle. Arriuall of Sir Tho. Gates, with sixe ships.

The worthies being met, after salutation and welcome giuen and receiued, Sir Thomas Dale acquainted Sir Thomas Gates, both with such businesses as he had affected since his arriuall, and also of his resolution to build a new Towne at the Fales: which designe and purpose of his, Sir Thomas Gates, then principall Gouernour in Virginia, well approuing, furnished him with three hundred ond fiftie men, such as himselfe made choice of, and in the beginning of September, 1611, hee set from Iames Towne, and in a day and a halfe landed at a place where hee purposed to seat and build, where hee had beene ten daies before hee had verie strongly impaled seuen English Acres of ground for a Towne, which in honour of the Noble Prince Henry (of euer happy and blessed memory, whose Royall heart was strongly affected to that action) hee called by the name of Henrico. In foure moneths space, he had made Henrico much better, and of more worth then all the worke euer since the Colony began, therein done. I should bee too tedious if I should giue vp the account of euery daies labour, which therefore I purposely omit, and will onely describe the Towne, in the very state and perfection which I left it, and first for the situation, it stands vpon a necke of a very high Land, three parts thereof inuironed with the maine Riuer, and cut out between two Riuers with a strong Pale, which maketh the neck of Land an Iland. There are in this Town three streets of well framed houses, a handsome Church, & the foundation of a more stately one laid of Brick, in length an hundred foot, and fiftie foot wide, besides Store-houses, Watch-houses, and such like: there are also, as ornaments belonging to this Towne, vpon the Verge of this Riuer, fiue faire Block-houses, or Commanders, wherein liue the honester sort of people, as in Farmes in England, and there keepe continuall centinell for the Townes securitie, and about two miles from the Towne into the Main, a Pale of two miles in length cut ouer from Riuer to Riuer, guarded likewise with seuerall Commanders, with great quantitie of Corne ground impaled, sufficient if there were no more in the Colony secured, to maintaine with but easie manuring, Henrico built by Sir T. Dale.

and husbandry, more men, then I ſuppoſe will be addreſſed thither (the more is the pittie) theſe three yeeres.

For the further enlargement yet of this Towne, on the other ſide of the Riuer, by impaling likewiſe: for we make no other fence, is ſecured to our vſe, eſpecially for our hogges to feed in, about twelue Engliſh miles of ground, by name, Hope in Faith, Coxen-Dale, ſecured by fiue Forts, called Charity Fort, Mount Malado, a Retreat or Gueſt-houſe for ſicke people, a high ſeate, and wholſome ayre, Elizabeth Fort, and Fort Patience: and here hath Maſter Whitacres choſen his Parſonage, or Church-land, ſome hundred Acres impaled, and a faire framed Parſonage houſe built thereupon, called Rocke Hall. Of this Towne, and all the Forts thereunto belonging, hath Captaine Iames Davis the principall Command and Gouernment.

Bermuda a city.

I proceed to our next and moſt hopefull habitation, whether wee reſpect commoditie or ſecuritie (which we principally ayme at) againſt forraine deſignes and inuaſion, I meane the Bermuda Citie, begun about Chriſtmaſſe laſt, which becauſe it is the neereſt adioyning to Henrico, though the laſt vndertaken, I hold it pertinent to handle in the next place. This Towne, or Plantation is ſeated by Land, ſome fiue miles from Henrico, by water fourteene, being the yeere before the habitation of the Appamatucks, to reuenge the treacherous iniurie of thoſe people done vnto vs, taken from them, beſides all their Corne, the former before without the loſſe of any, ſaue onely ſome few of thoſe Indians (pretending our hurt) at what time Sir Thomas Dale, being himſelfe vpon that ſeruice, and duely conſidering how commodious a habitation and ſeate it might be for vs, tooke reſolution to poſſeſſe and plant it, and at that very inſtant, gaue it the name of the new Bermudas, whereunto he hath laid out, and annexed to bee belonging to the Freedome, and Corporation for euer, many miles of Champion, and Wood-land, in ſeuerall Hundreds, as the vpper and nether Hundreds, Rock-dale Hundred, Weſts Sherly Hundred, and Digges his Hundred.

Hundreds ſet out and diſtinguiſhed.

French diſplanted.

Long diſcourſes followed in the Author; but Virginia is brought to ſuch an abridgement, that I haue no heart to follow him or others in that kind.

Captaine Argalls Northward diſcoueries towardes Sacaddoc, and beyond to Port Royall, Sancta Crux, and thereabout may not bee concealed: In which his aduentures, if he had brought home no commoditie to the Colony (which yet he did very much, both of apparell, victualls, and many other neceſſaries) the honour which he hath done vnto our Nation, by diſplanting the French, there beginning to ſeat and fortifie within our limits, and taking of their Ship & Pinnace, which he brought to Iames Towne, would haue been reward enough for his paines, and will euer ſpeake loud his honour, and approued valour.

CHAP. XI.

A Letter of Sir THOMAS DALE, and another of Maſter WHITAKERS, from Iames Towne in Virginia, Iune 18. 1614. And a piece of a Tractate, written by the ſaid Maſter WHITAKERS from Virginia the yeere before.

To the R. and my moſt eſteemed friend, M. D. M. at his houſe at F. Ch. in London.

RIght Reuerend Sir, by Sir Thomas Gates I wrote vnto you, of ſuch occaſions as then preſented themſelues, and now againe by this worthy Gentleman Captaine Argall I ſalute you: for ſuch is the reuerend regard I haue of you, as I cannot omit any occaſion to expreſſe the ſincere affection I beare you. You haue euer giuen mee encouragements to perſeuere in this Religious Warfare, vntill your laſt Letters; not for that you are now leſſe well affected thereunto: but becauſe you ſee the Action to be in danger of their non-performances who vndertooke the buſineſſe. I haue vndertaken, and haue as faithfully, and with all my might indeauoured the proſecution with all alacritie, as God that knoweth the heart can beare me record, what recompence, or what rewards, by whom, or when I know not where to expect; but from him in whoſe Vineward I labour, whoſe Church with greedy appetite I deſire to erect. My glorious Maſter is gone, that would haue enamelled with his fauours the labours I vndertake, for Gods cauſe, and his immortall honour. Hee was the Great Captaine of our Iſrael, the hope to haue builded vp this heauenly new Ieruſalem be interred (I thinke) the whole frame of this buſineſſe, fell into his graue: for moſt mens forward (at leaſt ſeeming ſo) deſires are quenched, and Virginia ſtands in deſperate hazard. You there doe your duties, I will no way omit mine, the time I promiſed to labour, is expired: it is not a yoke of Oxen hath drawne mee from this feaſt: it is not the marriage of a wife makes me haſt home, though that ſallat gaue mee an appetite to cauſe me returne. But I haue more care of the Stock, then to ſet vpon a Dye, and rather put my ſelfe to the curteſie of noble and worthy cenſures, then ruine this Worke; and haue a Iury (nay a million) of foule mouthed detracters, ſcan vpon my endeauours, the ends whereof they cannot diue into. You ſhall briefly vnderſtand what hath betide ſince my laſt, and how we now ſtand, and are likely likely to grow to perfection, if wee be not altogether neglected, my stay grounded vpon such reason, as had I now returned, it would haue hazarded the ruine of all.

Prince Henry.

Sir Thomas Gates hauing imbarked himselfe for England, I put my selfe into Captaine Argalls ship, with a hundred and fiftie men in my frigot, and other boats went vnto Pamaunkie Riuer, where Powhatan hath his residence, and can in two or three dayes, draw a thousand men together; with me I carried his daughter, who had beene long prisoner with vs, it was a day or two before wee heard of them: At length they demanded why wee came; I gaue for answere, that I came to bring him his daughter, conditionally he would (as hath beene agreed vpon for her ransome) render all the Armes, Tooles, Swords, and men that had run away, and to giue me a ship full of Corne, for the wrong hee had done vnto vs: if they would doe this, wee would be friends, if not burne all. They demanded time to send to their King; I assented, I taking, they receiuing two pledges, to carry my message to Powhatan. All night my two men lay not farre from the water side, about noone the next day they told them the great King was three daies iourney off, that Opochankano was hard by, to whom they would haue had them deliuer their message, saying, That what hee agreed vpon and did, the great King would confirme. This Opocankano is brother to Powhatan, and is his and their chiefe Captaine: and one that can as soone (if not sooner) as Powhatan command the men. But my men refused to doe my message vnto any saue Powhatan, so they were brought backe, and I sent theirs to them; they told me that they would fetch Simons to me, who had thrice plaid the runnagate, whose lyes and villany much hindred our trade for Corne: But they delayed vs, so as we went ashore they shot at vs, we were not behinde hand with them, killed some, hurt others, marched into the Land, burnt their houses, tooke their Corne, and quartered all night ashoare.

Sir T. Dales iourny to Powhatans Country. This is more at large deliuered, with the particular circumstances (which I for breuitie haue omitted) by M. Hamor.

The next day we went further vp the Riuer, they dogged vs and called to know whither we went; wee answered, To burne all, if they would not doe as we demanded, and had beene agreed vpon. They would they said, bring all the next day so we forbare all hostilitie, went ashoare, their men in good numbers comming amongst vs, but we were very cautious, and stood to our Armes. The Kings daughter went ashoare, but would not talke to any of them, scarce to them of the best sort, and to them onely, that if her father had loued her, he would not value her lesse then old Swords, Peeces, or Axes: wherefore shee would still dwell with the English men, who loued her. At last came one from Powhatan, who told vs, that Simons was run away, to Nonsowhaicond, which was a truth, as afterwards appeared, but that the other English man was dead, that proued a lie (for since M. Hamor, whom I employed to Powhatan brought him to mee) our Peeces, Swords, and Tooles within fifteene dayes, should be sent to Iames Towne, with some Corne, and that his daughter should be my child, and euer dwell with mee, desiring to be euer friends, and named such of his people, and neighbour Kings, as hee desired to be included, and haue the benefit of the peace, promising if any of our men came to him, without leaue from mee, he would send them backe: and that if any of his men stale from vs, or killed our cattell, hee would send them to vs to bee punished as wee thought fit. With these conditions wee returned, and within the time limitted, part of our Armes were sent, and twentie men with Corne, and promised more, which he hath also sent. Opachankano desired I would call him friend, and that he might call me so, saying, Hee was a great Captaine, and did alwayes fight: that I was also a great Captaine, and therefore he loued mee; and that my friends should bee his friends. So the bargaine was made, and euery eight or ten dayes, I haue messages and presents from him, with many appearances that he much desireth to continue friendship.

Pocahuntas behauiour and report.

Opachankano now their king, & worker of the massacre

Now may you iudge Sir, if the God of Battailes had not a helping hand in this, that hauing our Swords drawne, killing their men, burning their houses, and taking their corne: yet they tendred vs peace, and striue with all alacritie to keepe vs in good opinion of them; by which many benefits arise vnto vs. First, part of our Armes, disgracefully lost long agoe (kept by the Sauages as Monuments and Trophies of our shames) redelinered, some repaire to our Honor. Our ease to increase, without danger of destroying, our men at libertie to hunt freely for Venison, to fish, to doe any thing else, or goe any whither without danger; to follow the husbanding of our corne securely, whereof wee haue aboue fiue hundred Acres set, and God be praised, in more forwardnesse then any of the Indians, that I haue seene or heard of this yeeres, Roots and Hearbs we haue abundance; all doubt of want is by Gods blessing quite vanished, and much plentie expected. And which is not the least materiall, wee may by this peace come to discouer the Countrey better, both by our owne trauells, and by the relation of the Sauages, as we grow in familiaritie with them.

Powhatans daughter I caused to be carefully instructed in Christian Religion, who after she had made some good progresse therein, renounced publikely her Countrey Idolatry, openly confessed her Christian Faith, was, as shee desired, baptised, and is since married to an English Gentleman of good vnderstanding (as by his Letter vnto me, containing the reasons of his marriage of her you may perceiue) another knot to binde this peace the stronger. Her Father and friends gaue approbation to it, and her Vncle gaue her to him in the Church: shee liues ciuilly and louingly with him, and I trust will increase in goodnesse, as the knowledge of God increaseth in her. Shee will goe into England with mee, and were it but the gaining of this one soule, I will thinke my time, toile, and present stay well spent.

Pocahuntas baptised: & of Rebecca (so I haue heard she was properly named) at first called Rebecca.

Since this accident, the Gouernours and people of Checkahomanies, who are fiue hundred Bow-men, and better, a stout and warlike Nation, haue made meanes to haue vs come vnto them, and conclude a peace, where all the Gouernours would meet me. They hauing thus three or foure times importuned me, I resolued to goe; so hauing Captaine Argall, with fiftie men in my Frigot and Barge I went thither: Captaine tasne Argall with forty men landed, I kept aboord for some reasons. Vpon the meeting they told Captaine Argall they had longed to be friends, that they had no King, but eight great men, who gouerned them. He told them that we came to be friends, asked them if they would haue King Iames to be their King, and whether they would be his men? They after some conference betweene themselues, seemed willing of both, demanding if we would fight against their enemies; he told them that if any did them iniury, they should send me word, and I would agree them, or if their aduersaries would not, then I would let them haue as many men as they would to helpe them: they liked well of that, and told him that all their men should helpe vs. All this being agreed vpon, Captaine Argall gaue euery Counsellour a Tamahawk, and a peece of Copper, which was kindely taken: they requested further, that if their Boates should happen to meete with our Boates, and that they said they were the Chikahominy Englishmen, and King Iames his men, wee would let them passe: we agreed vnto it, so that they pronounced themselues Englishmen, and King Iames his men, promising within fifteene dayes to come vnto Iames Towne to see me, and conclude these conditions; euery Bowman being to giue me as a Tribute to King Iames two measures of Corne euery harueſt, the two measures containing two bushels and a halfe, and I to giue euery Bowman a small Tamahawke, and to euery Counseller a suit of red cloath, which did much please them. This people neuer acknowledged any King before, no nor euer would acknowledge Powhatan for their King; a stout people they be, and a delicate seate they haue.

Digitized by Google

They called the English Tossantessus, and so would themselues be called. The particulars and articles of agreement are in M. Hamors Booke; here omitted.

Now Sir you see our conditions, you, and all worthy men may iudge, whether it would not be a griefe to see these faire hopes frostbitten, and these fresh budding plants to wither? which had I returned, had assuredly followed: for here is no one that the people would haue gouerne them, but my selfe: for I had now come away, had I not found a generall desire in the best sort to returne for England: Letter vpon Letter, request vpon request from their friends to returne, so as I knew not vpon whom to conferre the care of this businesse in my absence: whom I thought fit was generally distasted, so as seeing the eminent ensuing danger, should I haue left this multitude, not yet fully refined, I am resolued to stay till harueſt be got in, and then settle things according to my poore vnderstanding, and returne: if in the interim there come no authorised Gouernour from England.

Sir T. Dales report of Virginia. In another letter to the Committees he writeth that foure of the best Kingdoms of Christendome put all together, may no way compare with this country, either for commodities, or goodnesse of soile.

Consider I pray you, since things be brought to this passe, as you see, and that I should haue come away, if then through their factions, humors, mutinies, or indiscretion of the Chiefes I had left behinde, this should fall to ruine: I then should receiue the imputation, and incurre the blame, for quitting the Plantation, although I might doe it, both with my honour, my promised stay of time being expired, and hauing warrant from my Soueraigne, the Kings Maiesty; but the precedent reasons moued mee and that this action of such price, such excellency and assured profit to mine owne knowledge should not dye to the scorne of our Nation, and to giue cause of laughter to the Papists, that desire our ruine. I can assure you, no Country of the world affords more assured hopes of infinite riches, which both by mine owne peoples discouery, and the relation of such Sauages, whose fidelity we haue often found, assureth me. Oh why should so many Princes and Noblemen ingage themselues, and thereby intermedling herein, haue caused a number of soules transport themselues, and be transported hither? Why should they (I say) relinquish this so glorious an Action: for if their ends be to build God a Church, they ought so perseuere: if otherwise, yet their honour ingageth them to be constant. Howsoeuer they stand affected, here is enough to content them, let their ends be either for God, or Mammon.

These things hauing animated me to stay for a little season, to leaue those, I am tied in conscience to returne vnto, to leaue the assured benefits of my other fortunes, the sweete society of my friends and acquaintance, with all mundall delights, and reside here with much turmoile, which I will constantly doe, rather then see Gods glory diminished, my King and Country dishonored, and these poore people, I haue the charge of, ruined. And so I beseech you to answer for me, if you heare me taxed for my staying, as some may iustly doe, and that these are my chiefe motiues God I take to witnesse. Remember me, and the cause I haue in hand, in your daily meditations, and reckon me in the number of those that doe sincerely loue you and yours, and will euer rest in all offices of a friend, to doe you seruice.

Master Alexander Whitaker was son to that worthy of Polemicall Diuine Doctor Whitaker Master of S. Iohns Col. in Cambridge.

To my very deere and louing Cosen M. G. Minister of the B. F. in London.

What shadowes of men are the most in this age, that the best deseruing should neede apologies instead of panegyrikes? They which for doing ill, cry whore first, and by decrying iustice seek to be iust.

Sir, the Colony here is much better. Sir Thomas Dale. our Religious and valiant Gouernour, hath now brought that to passe, which neuer before could be effected. For by warre vpon our enemies, and kinde vsage of our friends, he hath brought them to seeke for peace of vs, which is made, and they dare not breake. But that which is best, one Pocahuntas or Matoa the daughter of Powhatan, is married to an honest and discreete English Gentleman Master Rolfe, and that after she had openly renounced her Country Idolatry, professed the faith of Iesus Christ, and was baptised; which thing Sir Thomas Dale had laboured a long time to ground in her.

Yet notwithstanding, are the vertuous deedes of this worthy Knight, much debased, by the Letters which some wicked men haue written from hence, and especially by one C. L. If you heare any condemne this noble Knight, or doe feare to come hither, for those slanderous Letters, you may vpon my word boldly reprooue them. You know that no malefactors can abide the face of the Iudge, but themselues scorning to be reproued, doe proſecute with all hatred, all thoſe that labour their amendment. I maruaile much that any men of honeſt life, ſhould feare the Sword of the Magiſtrate, which is vnſheathed onely in their defence.

Digitized by Google

But I much more muſe, that ſo few of our Engliſh Miniſters that were ſo hot againſt the Surplis and ſubſcription: come hither where neither ſpoken of. Doe they not either wilfully hide their Tallents, or keepe themſelues at home for feare of looſing a few pleaſures? Be there not any amongſt them of Moſes his minde, and of the Apoſtles, that forſooke all to follow Chriſt? But I referre them to the Iudge of all hearts, and to the King that ſhall reward euery one according to the gaine of his Talent. But you my coſen, hold faſt that which you haue, and I, though my promiſe of three yeeres ſeruice to my Countrey be expired, will abide in my vocation here vntill I be lawfully called from hence. And ſo betaking vs all vnto the mercies of God in Chriſt Ieſus, I reſt for euer.

Part of a Tractate written at Henrico in Virginia, by Maſter ALEX. WHITAKER, Miniſter to the Colony there, which then gouerned by Sir T. DALE, 1613.

THey acknowledge that there is a great good God, but know him not, hauing the eyes of their vnderſtanding as yet blinded: wherefore they ſerue the Diuell for feare, after a moſt baſe manner, ſacrificing ſometimes (as I haue here heard) their owne Children to him. I haue ſent one Image of their god to the Counſell in England, which is painted vpon one ſide of a toad-ſtoole, much like vnto a deformed monſter. Their Prieſts (whom they call Quiokoſoughs) are no other but ſuch as our Engliſh Witches are. They liue naked in body, as if their ſhame of their ſinne deſerued no couering: Their names are as naked as their body: they eſteeme it a vertue to lye, deceiue, and ſteale, as their Maſter the Diuell teacheth them. Much more might be ſaid of their miſerable condition, but I referre the particular narration of theſe things to ſome other ſeaſon. Their Prieſts and maaner of liuing.

Theſe men are not ſo ſimple as ſome haue ſuppoſed them: for they are of body luſty, ſtrong, and very nimble: they are a very vnderſtanding generation, quicke of apprehenſion, ſuddaine in their diſpatches, ſubtile in their dealings, exquiſite in their inuentions, and induſtrious in their labour. I ſuppoſe the world hath no better marke-men with their Bowes and Arrowes then they be; they will kill Birds flying, Fiſhes ſwimming, and Beaſts running: they ſhoote alſo with meruailous ſtrength, they ſhot one of our men being vnarmed quite through the body, and nailed both his armes to his body with one Arrow: one of their Children alſo, about the age of twelue or thirteene yeeres, killed a Bird with his Arrow in my ſight. The ſeruice of their God is anſwerable to their life, being performed with a great feare and attention, and many ſtrange dumbe ſhewes vſed in the ſame, ſtretching forth their limbes, and ſtraining their body, much like to the counterfeit women in England, who faine themſelues bewitched, or poſſeſſed of ſome euill ſpirit.

They ſtand in great awe of the Quiokoſoughs or Prieſts, which are a generation of Vipers, euen of Sathans owne brood. The manner of their life is much like to the Popiſh Hermits of our age; for they liue alone in the woods, in houſes ſequeſtred from the common courſe of men, neither may any man be ſuffered to come into their houſe or to ſpeake with them, but when this Prieſt doth call him. He taketh no care for his victuals, for all ſuch kinde of things both Bread and Water, &c. are brought vnto a place neere vnto his cottage, and there are left, which hee fetcheth for his proper neede. If they would haue raine, or haue loſt any thing, they haue their recourſe to him, who coniureth for them, and many times preuaileth. If they be ſicke, he is their Phyſician; if they be wounded, he ſucketh them. At his command they make warre and peace, neither doe they any thing of moment without him. I will not be tedious in theſe ſtrange Narrations, when I haue more perfectly entered into their ſecrets, you ſhall know all. Finally, there is a ciuill gouernment amongſt them which they ſtrictly obſerue, and ſhew thereby that the law of Nature dwelleth in them: for they haue a rude kinde of Common-wealth, and rough gouernment wherein they both honour and obey their Kings, Parents, and Gouernours, both greater and leſſe, they obſerue the limits of their owne poſſeſſions. Murther is ſcarſly heard of: Adultery and other offences ſeuerely puniſhed. Yet Namontack in his returne was killed in Bermuda by another Sauage his fellow.

The whole Continent of Virginia ſituate within the degrees of 34. and 47. is a place beautified by God, with all the ornaments of nature, and enriched with his earthly treaſures: that part of it, which we already poſſeſſe, beginning at the Bay of Chaſapeac, and ſtretching it ſelfe in Northerly latitude to the degrees of 39. and 40. is interlined with ſeuen moſt goodly Riuers, the leaſt whereof is equall to our Riuer of Thames: and all theſe Riuers are ſo neerely ioyned, as that there is not very much diſtance of dry ground betweene either of them, and thoſe ſeuerall maine lands are euery where watered with many veines or creekes of water, which ſundry waies doe ouerthwart the land, and make it almoſt nauigable from one Riuer to the other. The commodity As 14. or 16. miles.

whereof

whereof to those that shall inhabite this land is infinite, in respect of the speedy and easie transportance of goods from one Riuer to the other, I cannot better manifest it vnto you, but in aduising you to consider whether the water or land hath beene more beneficiall to the Low-Countries. To the Riuer which we inhabit (commonly called Powhatans Riuer) ebbeth and floweth one hundred and forty miles into the maine; at the mouth whereof are the two Forts of Henrico and Charles: two and forty miles vpward is the first and Mother-Christian Towne seated, called Iames-Towne; and seuenty miles beyond that vpward, is the new Towne of Henrico built, and so named in the memory of Noble Prince Henry of lasting and blessed memory: tenne miles beyond this is a place called the Fals, because the Riuer hath there a great descent falling downe between many minerall Rockes which be there: twelue miles farther beyond this place is there a Christall Rocke wherewith the Indians doe head many of their Arrowes: three dayes iourney from thence is there a Rock or stony hill found, which is in the top couered all ouer with a perfect and most rich Siluer oare. Our men that went to discouer those parts had but two Iron Pickaxes with them, and those so ill tempered, that the points of them turned againe, and bowed at euery stroake, so that we could not search the entrailes of the place, yet some triall was made of that oare with good successe, and argument of much hope. Six dayes iourney beyond this Mine a great ridge of high hils doe runne along the maine land, not farre from whom the Indians report a great Sea doth runne, which we commonly call a South Sea, but in respect of our habitation is a West Sea, for there the Sun setteth from vs. The higher ground is much like vnto the molde of France, clay and sand being proportionably mixed together at the top; but if we digge any depth (as we haue done for out Bricks) we finde it to be red clay, full of glistering spangles. There be many rockie places in all quarters; & more then probable likelihoods of rich Mines of all sorts: though I knew all, yet it were not conuenient at this time that I should vtter all, neither haue wee had meanes to search for any thing as we ought, thorough present want of men, and former wants of prouision for the belly. As for Iron, Steele, Antimonium, and Terra figillata, they haue rather offered themselues to our eyes and hands, then bin sought for of vs. The Ayre of the Countrey (especially about Henrico and vpward) is very temperate and agreeth well with our bodies. The extremity of Summer is not so hot as Spaine, nor the cold of Winter so sharpe as the frosts of England. The Spring and Harueſt are the two longest seasons and most pleasant, the Summer and Winter are both but short. The Winter is for the most part dry and faire, but the Summer watered often with many great and sodaine showers of raine; whereby the cold of Winter is warmed, and the heate of Summer cooled. Many haue died with vs heretofore thorough their owne filthinesse and want of bodily comforts for sicke men; but now very few are sicke among vs: not aboue three persons amongst all the inhabitants of Henrico; I would to God our soules were no sicker then our bodies.

Christall Rock

Ayre and Seasons.

The naturall people of the Land are generally such as you heard of before. A people to be feared of those that come vpon them without defensiue Armor, but otherwise faint-hearted (if they see their Arrowes cannot pierce) and easie to be subdued. Shirts of Male, or quilted cotten coates are the best defence against them. There is but one or two of their petty Kings, that for feare of vs haue desired our friendship; and those keepe good quarter with vs, being very pleasant amongst vs, and (if occasion be) seruiceable vnto vs. Our eldest friends be Pipisco and Choapoke, who are our ouerthwart neighbours at Iames-Towne, and haue beene friendly to vs in our great want. The other is the Werowance of Chescheak, who but lately traded with vs peaceably. If we were once the masters of their Country, and they stood in feare of vs (which might with few hands imployed about nothing else, be in short time brought to passe) it were an easie matter to make them willingly to forsake the Diuell, to embrace the faith of Iesus Christ, and to be baptized. Besides, you cannot easily iudge how much they would be auaileable to vs in our Discoueries of the Countrey, in our Buildings and Plantings, and quiet prouision for our selues, when we may peaceably passe from place to place without neede of Armes or Guard.

Note well.

Feare is the beginning of piety & ciuility

What vse may be made of the Natiues.

The meanes for our people to liue and subsist here of themselues are many and most certaine both for Beasts, Birds, and Hearbes. The Beasts of the Countrey are for the most part wilde: as Lyons, Beares, Wolues and Deere: Foxes blacke and red, Rakowns, Beuers, Possowns, Squerrels, Wilde-Cats, whose skins are of great price, and Muske-Rats which yeelde Muske as the Muske-Cats doe. There be two kindes of Beasts amongst these most strange; one of them is the female Possowne, which will let forth her yong out of her belly, and take them vp into her belly againe at her pleasure without hurt to her selfe; neither thinke this to be a Trauellers tale, but the very truth; for nature hath framed her fit for that seruice, my eyes haue beene witnesse vnto it, and we haue sent of them and their yong ones into England. The other strange conditioned creature is the flying Squirrell, which thorough the helpe of certaine broad flaps of skin growing on each side of her forelegs, will flye from tree to tree twenty or thirty paces at one flight and more, if she haue the benefit of a small breath of winde. Besides these, since our comming hither, we haue brought both Kine, Goates, and Hogges, which prosper well, and would multiply exceedingly, if they might be prouided for. This Countrey besides is repleniſhed with Birds of all sorts, which haue bin the best sustenance of flesh, which our men haue had since they came Possown a strange beast.

Flying Squirrels.

also

also Eagels and Haukes of all sorts, amongst whom are Auspreys, fishing Hauke, and the Cormorant. The woods be euery where full of wilde Turkies, which abound, and will runne as swift as a Greyhound. In winter our fields be full of Cranes, Herons, Pigeons, Partridges and Blackbirds: the Riuers and creekes be ouer-spread euery where with water foule of the greatest and least sort, as Swans, flockes of Geese and Brants, Ducke and Mallard, Sheldrakes, Dyuers, &c. besides many other kindes of rare and delectable Birds, whose names and natures I cannot yet recite, but we want the meanes to take them. The Riuers abound with Fish both small and great; the Sea-fish come into our Riuers in March, & continue vntill the end of September: great sculls of Herings come in first: Shads of a great bigneſſe, and Rock-fish follow them. Trouts, Base, Flounders, and other dainty fish come in before the other be gone: then come multitudes of great Sturgeons, whereof we catch many, and should do more, but that we want good Nets answerable to the breadth and deapth of our Riuers: besides, our channels are so foule in the bottome with great logges and trees, that we often breake our Nets vpon them: I cannot reckon nor giue proper names to the diuers kindes of fresh fish in our Riuers; I haue caught with mine Angle, Pike, Karpe, Eele, Perches of six seuerall kindes, Crea-fish, and the Torope or little Turtle, besides many smaller kindes, &c.

Fowle.

Fish.

Nets.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Lottery: Sir THOMAS DALES returne: the Spaniards in Virginia. Of POCAHVNTAS and TOMOCOMO: Captaine YERDLEY and Captaine ARGOLL (both since Knighted) their Gouernment; the Lord LA-WARRS death, and other occurrents till Anno 1619.

HItherto you haue heard the Authors themselues speak of their owne affaires: Now we must for continuation and consummation of our Story, borrow a few Collections from others, where the Authors themselues haue not comne to our hands. Wherein that industrious Gentleman Captaine Iohn Smith still breathing Virginia, and diligent enquiry and writing, as sometime by discouery and doing to shew his zeale to this action (for seeing he cannot there be employed to performe Virginian exploits worthy the writing, here he employeth himselfe to write Virginian affaires worthy the reading) hauing compiled a long History of that and the Summer Iland plantation, and of New England in six Bookes, hath gently communicated the same to mine, that is to thine, as intended to the Worlds vse. Out of his rich fields I haue gleaned these handfuls, adding thereto the crop also of mine owne industry.

Sir Thomas Gates returned from Virginia in March, and Captaine Argall in Iune following 1614. and so animated by their hopefull reports the Aduenturers, that the great standing Lottery was drawne Anno 1615. in the West end of Pauls Churchyard (where before, as in many other places after, a running Lottery of smaller aduentures had beene vsed) in which the Prizes were proportioned from two crownes (which was the least) to diuers thousands, arising in ordinary assents and degrees, casually accruing as the lot fell, and paid in money or in Plate there set forth to view, prouided that if any chose money rather then Plate or goods for paiment, in summes aboue ten crownes, he was to abate the tenth part. The orders of this Lottery were published, and courses taken to preuent frauds.*

The Lottery.

*To 100. 200. 300. & 1000. 2000. and the highest 4500. crownes.

Whiles Sir Thomas Dale was in Virginia, it chanced that a Spanish Ship beate vp and downe before Point Comfort, and sent ashoare for a Pilot. Captaine Iames Dauies sent them one, with whom they presently sailed away, leauing three of their company behinde. These, vpon examination, confessed that hauing lost their Admirall, accident had forced them into those parts; two of them said they were Captaines of chiefe command in the Fleete. They receiued good vsage there, till one of them was found to be an Englishman, which in the great Fleete 1588. had bin a Pilot to the Spaniards, and now exercised his wonted trechery, hauing induced some malecontents to runne away with a small Barke. This darknesse being brought to light, some of them were executed, and he expecting no better, confessed that two or three Spanish Ships were at Sea, on purpose to discouer the state of the Colony: but their Commission was not to be opened till they arriued in the Bay, so that he knew no further. One of the Spaniards died, the other was sent for England, and this fellow was now reprieued, but (as became such a Pilot) was hanged at Sea as Sir Thomas Dales returne. The English Pilot which they had carried away to Spaine, after long imprisonment by much suite recouered his liberty and Country.

Spanish Ships at Virginia.

English Pilate or Iudas rather, suspended and exalted together according to his merit.

Sir Thomas Dale hauing thus established things as you haue heard, returned thence, appointing Captaine George Yardly his deputy Gouernour in his absence, and arriued at Plimmouth in May or Iune 4. 1616. to aduance the good of the Plantation, Master Rolfe also with Rebecca his new conuert and consort, and Vttamatamakin (commonly called Temocomo) one of Pohatans

Capt. Yardly Deputy Gouernour.

Coun-

Hitherto from Capt. Smith.

Counsellours came ouer at the same time. With this Sauage I haue often conuersed at my good friends Master Doctor Goldstone, where he was a frequent guest; and where I haue both seen him sing and dance his diabolicall measures, and heard him discourse of his Countrey and Religion, Sir Tho. Dales man being the Interpretour, as I haue elsewhere shewed. Master Ralfe lent mee a discourse which he had written of the estate of Virginia at that time, out of which I collected those things which I haue in my Pilgrimage deliuered. And his wife did not onely accustome her selfe to ciuilitie, but still carried her selfe as the Daughter of a King, and was accordingly respected, not onely by the Company, which allowed prouision for her selfe and her sonne, but of diuers particular persons of Honor, in their hopefull zeale by her to aduance Christianitie. I was present, when my Honorable & Reuerend Patron, the L. Bishop of London, Doctor King entertained her with festiuall state and pompe, beyond what I haue seene in his great hospitalitie afforded to other Ladies. At her returne towards Virginia she came at Graues-end to her end and graue, hauing giuen great demonstration of her Christian sinceritie, as the first fruits of Virginian conuersion, leauing here a godly memory, and the hopes of her resurrection, her soule aspiring to see and enioy presently in heauen, what here shee had ioyed to heare and beleeue of her beloued Sauiour. Not such was Tomocomo, but a blasphemer of what he knew not, and preferring his God to ours, because he taught them (by his owne so appearing) to weare their Deuill-lock at the left eare; hee acquainted mee with the manner of that his appearance, and beleeued that this Okee or Deuil had taught them their husbandry, &c. Powhatan was at this time of their comming gone Southwards, for feare (as some thought) least Opachancanough his brother should ioyne with the English against him. His age was not so great as some haue reported, they reckoning euery Spring and Autumne for distinct yeeres. Tomocomo was as wise in computation of his sailing, reckoning each night (when hee expected they should haue anchored by the shoare) as another day. Hee is said also to haue set vp with notches on a stick the numbers of men, being sent to see and signifie the truth of the multitudes reported to his Master. But his arithmetike soone failed, and wonder did no lesse amaze him at the sight of so much Corne and Trees in his comming from Plimmouth to London, the Virginians imagining that defect thereof here had brought vs thither.

See my Pil. l. 8. c. 5.

See my Pilg. vbi sup.

Powhatans remoue.

Virginian yeers which perhaps occasioned the conceits of their longevity

But let vs returne to Captaine Smiths Relations. The new Gouernour applied himselfe to the readiest way of gaine in planting Tobacco; and though Sir Tho. Dale had caused much Corne to be planted, yet the new supplies easing them of that superfluitie, hee sent to the Chickahaminies for the tribute Corne which Sir Thomas Dale and Captaine Argall had conditioned with them, but receiued a bad answere. Whereupon hee gathered a hundred men, and twelue of them were slaine, twelue others captiued, and returned to Iames Towne with three Boats laden with corne, of which one hasting to bring the newes was ouerset, and eleuen men, together with the goods drowned. Captaine Spelman by his language did them good seruice. This, together with the league which they had with Opachankanough enemy to the former, put them so in feare, that ours followed their labours quietly, and other Nations also brought them prouisions and would hunt for them. Captaine Yeardly is taxed for suffering two of his Sauages to vse the Peece in their game and therein to grow expert; a thing reported to haue beene practised by some others. Yet whiles hee staied in the gouernment they liued quietly with the Sauages, but grudges grew amongst themselues.

A. 1617. Captaine Yeardly returned for England, after the arriuall of Captaine Argall, sent thither to be deputie Gouernour.

A. 1617. Cap. Argalls gouernment.

Captaine Argall was sent in the George, and with Capt. Hamor his Vice-Admirall, in May, 1617. arriued at Iames Towne, where hee found things in much disorder, which hee sought to redresse. Their cattell were now well encreased, and both of their owne growing, and from the Sauages they had store of 1618. Great drought

Corne, A. 1618. happened a great drought, and such a cruell storme of haile, that it did much hurt to their Corne and Tobacco. The Magazine that came in the George, being fiue moneths in her passage proued badly conditioned.

L. De-la-Wars last voyages and death.

To supply them, the Company furnished and set forth in Aprill a Ship of two hundred and fiftie tunnes, with two hundred people. The Lord De-la-war went therein, and at the Iland of Saint Michael was honourably feasted. Departing from thence, they were long troubled with contrary windes, in which time many fell sicke, thirtie died, one of which was that honourable Lord of noble memory. The rest refreshed themselues on that Coast of New England, with Fish, Fowle, Wood, and Water, and after sixteene weekes spent at Sea, arriued in Virginia.

Plowing and Corne in Virginia.

The Ship called the Treasurer not long after came thither with fortie Passengers, before the other Ship was gone. They now had vsed the Plow, and reaped good Corne, and they writ for more Plow-harnesse to be sent them.

Richard Killingbeck with foure others, going to trade secretly with the people of Chickahaminias, either for reuenge of some before slaine in Captaine Yerdlyes expedition, or for couetousnesse of their goods were assaulted by the Sauages, one of which had a Peece furnished and therewith shot Killingbeck dead; the rest also were all slaine, stripped, and spoyled. Other murthers also were done by other Sauages, which Opachankanough excused by ignorance, and for the former, hee sent a basket of earth, in token of the gift and possession of that Towne where they dwelt, to Captaine Argal, desiring him not to reuenge the faule

Killingbeck slain

of

of a few, which for feare of reuenge were fled to the Woods, on their innocent neighbours. Sam. Arg. Io. Rolfe.

Maſter Rolfe writ, Iune 15. 1618. that Powhatan died in Aprill before, Itopatan his ſecond brother ſucceeded, who with Opachanckanough had confirmed the league with the Colony. May 11. happened at Iames Towne in the night, a terrible ſtorme which laſted about halfe an houre, and powred downe haileſtones eight or nine inches about. Powhatans death.

A. 1619. Sir Edwin Sands being choſen Treaſurer, Captaine Yerdley was knighted and ſent Gouernour into Virginia. A little Pinnace had arriued ſome twelue dayes before him, in which Captaine Argall returned, leauing in his place Captaine Nathaniel Powel. As for their diguſts giuen the Company (in their apprehenſion) by Captaine Argall, I am not fully informed, or luſt to bee the Informer. Sir Edwin Sands Treaſurer.

Sir George Yerdly arriuing Aprill 18. filled the Colony with ioyfull hopes of better ſucceſſe at his arriuall, and I freely acknowledge the Treaſurers great ſtudy and care was worthy (had God ſo pleaſed) of better euents, then by vnexpected accidents haue ſince happened. Sir George Yerdley Gouernour.

Captaine Weſt, Captaine Powel, Maſter Pory, Maſter Rolfe, Maſter Wickam, Maſter Macock, were added to the Councell. A Pinnace of Captaine Bargraue, another of Captaine Lawnes, and a third of Maſter Euans, and the Marget of Briſtol arriued. Some ſcandalous Letters, which laid a falſe imputation on the Countrey, cauſed enquiry to bee made, where by men of beſt experience was found, that an induſtrious man not otherwiſe imployed, may well husband foure Acres of Corne, and one thouſand Plants of Tobacco, of which many to haue much, neglect the goodneſſe (in ſuffering too many leaues to grow on one ſtalke) and many Tobaccomongers in England are ſaid to ſell the beſt of it in other names, calling all their traſh Virginian, and ſo at once rob both England and Virginia. Iune 25. the Triall came in with Corne and Cattell. The Gouernour and Counſell cauſed Burgeſſes to be choſen in all places, and a generall aſſembly was held for conſultation about the Colonies good. The ancient Planters being ſet free choſe places to their content, and ſweetneſſe of proprietie made them emulous to exceed each other in building and planting. Many good inſtructions were ſent from the Company, to amend the Virginian abuſes and competencie of proviſion was appointed for Officers. Profit to be made in Virginia.

But leaue we awhile our Captaines Notes, and let vs liſten to that which the Company publiſhed, A. 1620.

CHAP. XIII.

The eſtate of the Colony, A. 1620. and Maſter Dermers Letter to mee from Virginia, touching his Voyage for the South Sea.

NOw touching the preſent eſtate of our Colony in that Countrey, We haue thought it not vnfit thus much briefly to declare. There haue beene ſent thither this laſt yeere, and are now preſently in going, twelue hundred perſons and vpward, as particularly appeareth in the note aboue ſpecified: and there are neere one thouſand more remaining of thoſe that were gone before. The men lately ſent, haue beene moſt of them choice men, borne and bred vp to labour and induſtry. Out of Deuonſhire, about an hundred men, brought vp to Husbandry. Out of Warwickſhire and Staffordſhire, about one hundred and ten; and out of Suſſex, about fortie; all framed to Iron-woskes: the reſt diſperſedly out of diuers Shires of the Realme. There haue beene alſo ſundry perſons of good qualitie, much commended for ſufficiency, induſtry and honeſtie, prouided and ſent to take charge and gouernment of thoſe people. The care likewiſe that hath beene taken by directions, inſtructions, Charters and Commiſſions to reduce the people and affaires in Virginia into a regular courſe, hath been ſuch and ſo great, that the Colony beginneth now to haue the face and faſhion of an orderly State, and ſuch as is likely to grow and proſper. The people are all diuided into ſeuerall Burroughes; each man hauing the ſhares of Land due to him ſet out, to hold and enioy to him and his Heires. The publike Lands for the Company here, for the Gouernour there, for the Colledge, and for each particular Burrough, for the Miniſters alſo, and for diuers other neceſſary Officers, are likewiſe laid out by order and bounded. The particular Plantations for diuers priuate Societies, are ſetled in their Seates, being allotted to their content, and each in conuenient diſtance. The rigour of Martiall Law, wherewith before they were gouerned, is reduced within the limits preſcribed by his Maieſty; and the laudable forme of Iuſtice and gouernment vſed in this Realme, eſtabliſhed, and followed as neere as may be. The Gouernour is ſo reſtrained to a Counſell ioyned with him, that he can doe wrong to no man, who may not haue ſpeedy remedy. Each Burrough, and each particular Plantation, partly hath, partly is bound to haue in ſhort time a ſufficient Miniſter: for whom maintenance is ordained, to each of two hundred pounds a yeere value. Which orderly proceeding there, by direction from hence, hath cauſed the Colony now at length to ſettle themſelues in a firme reſolution to perpetuate the Plantation. Seuerall Burroughs.

Digitized by Google

on. They fall to building of Houſes, each for his owne priuate; and the Generality to the rearing of publike Gueſt-houſes, for entertaining of new men vpon their firſt arriuall. They fall to ſet vp their Ploughes, to the planting of Vineyards; to the purſuing of the Staple Commodities furniſhed and commended from hence. In ſumme, they are now ſo full of alacrity and cheerefulneſſe, that in a late generall Aſſembly, they haue in the name of the Colony preſented their greateſt poſſible thankes to the Company, for the care that hath beene taken for the ſetling of the Plantation. Neither is it to be omitted, the care which hath beene had here lately at home, for the reducing of all the proceedings and affaires of the Company, to an orderly courſe of good gouernment and Iuſtice. Wherein to begin with the Fountaine thereof, his Maieſties authoritie and pleaſure, there hath beene a collection made of all the branches of the ſame, diſperſed in his Letters Patents, now three times renewed: as alſo out of other inſtructions proceeding from his Maieſtie. Out of both which, together with ſuch other Orders as (authorized by his Maieſtie) the Companie themſelues haue thought neceſſary to make, hath beene compiled a booke of ſtanding Orders and Conſtitutions, approued by the generall conſent of all the Companie: whereby both the Company here, and the Colony in Virginia, haue their buſineſſe carried regularly, induſtrioully, and iuſtly, euery man knowing both his right and dutie, to their generall great content, and the great aduancement of the Action. And whereas the Colony likewiſe haue beene often Sutors in effect, to reduce into a compendious and orderly forme of writing, the Lawes of England proper for the vſe of that Plantation, with addition of ſuch other, as the nature of the place, the nouelty of the Colony, and other important circumſtances ſhould neceſſarily require: A courſe is likewiſe taken for the effecting of this worke; yet ſo as to ſubmit it firſt to his Maieſties view and approbation; it being not fit that his Maieſties Subiects ſhould bee gouerned by any other Lawes, then ſuch as receiue the influence of their life from him.

Patent three times renewed

And now to come to that which concerneth the Aduenturors in particular, by whoſe charges, care, and labour (next vnto his Maieſties eſpeciall grace) this famous Plantation hath not onely beene vndertaken, but through ſo many difficulties vpheld and continued: wee ſhould bee very greatly iniurious to them, if we ſhould not acquaint them with this ſeaſonable time, for the reaping of that benefit and reward which is due vnto them. Wee therefore let them know, that in this laſt yeere now ended, there haue beene granted by the Company vnder their legall Seale, eleuen ſeuerall Patents for particular Plantations; and more are in hand to bee paſſed this next Quarter-Court. It is not vnprobable that vpon each of theſe Patents, diuers hundreds of perſons will ſoone Plant in Virginia: there haue beene already tranſported vpon the firſt, aboue three hundred men. Theſe and other like Planters, hauing priority of time, will haue priority alſo in choice of the Seat of their Plantations. Seeing therefore the onely matter of retribution to the Aduenturors, is by a faire proportion of Land to them and their heires, namely, of one hundred Acres for euery ſhare of twelue pounds and ten ſhillings, vpon a firſt diuiſion; and as much more vpon a ſecond, the firſt being peopled; with fiftie Acres for euery perſon (to bee doubled in like manner) which at their own charges they ſhall tranſport to inhabite in Virginia before the foure and twentieth of Iune, 1625. if hee continue there three yeeres, either at one or ſeuerall times, or die after he is ſhipped for that voyage: It ſtandeth them vpon, who are not willing to be the leaſt in the benefit to be partaked, not to be the laſt in ſetting forth to the choice and peopling of their Land. Wherein what fauour or aſſiſtance may by vs bee giuen them, they ſhall bee well aſſured of it, in equall proportion with our ſelues, as their charges and long expectance haue well deſerued. And to the end that not onely the Aduenturors now liuing, but the Heires alſo of the deceaſed, may take certaine notice of the ſeuerall proportion of Land, which ratably to their Aduentures in money are due and belonging to them.

A Note of the Shipping, Men, and Proviſions ſent to Virginia, by the Treaſurer and Company, in the yeere 1619.

Ships.

THe Bona Nona of two hundred Tun, ſent in Auguſt 1619. with one hundred and twenty perſons. The Duty, of ſeuenty Tun, ſent in Ianuary 1619. with fiftie one perſons. The Ionathan of three hundred and fiftie Tun, ſent in February 1619. with two hundred perſons. The Triall, of two hundred Tun, ſent in February 1619. with fortie perſons, and ſixtie Kine. The Faulcon, of one hundred and fiftie Tun, ſent in February 1619. with thirtie ſixe perſons, fiftie two Kine, and foure Mares. The London Merchant, of three hundred Tun, ſent in March 1619. with two hun- perſons. The Swan of Barnſtable, of one hundred Tunne, ſent in March, 1619. with ſeuentie one perſons. The Bonauenture of two hundred and fortie Tun, ſent in April, 1620. with one hundred and fiftie three perſons. Beſides theſe, ſet out by the Treaſurer and Company, there hath beene ſet out by particular Aduenturers for priuate Plantations. The Garland of two hundred and fiftie Tun, ſent in Iune, 1619. for M. Iohn Ferrars Plantation, with fortie fiue perſons. Who are yet detained in the Summer Ilands. A Ship of Briſtoll, of eightie Tun, ſent in September, 1619. for M. Barkleys

Digitized by Google

Barkleys Plantation, with fortie fiue persons. There are also two Ships in prouiding to be shortly gone, for about three hundred persons more, to bee sent by priuate Aduenturers to Virginia. The summe of the persons one thousand two hundred sixtie one. Whereof in the eight Ships set out by the Treasurer and Company, eight hundred seuentie one.

Of these persons there are sent for publike and other pious vses, these ensuing: Tenants for the Gouernours Land, besides fiftie sent the former Spring, eightie. Tenants for the Companies Land, one hundred and thirtie. Tenants for the Colledges Land, one hundred. Tenants for the Ministers glebe-Lands, fiftie. Young Maids to make Wiues for so many of the former Tenants, ninetie. Boyes to make Apprentices for those Tenants, one hundred. Seruants for the publike, fiftie. Men sent by their labours, to beare vp the charge of bringing vp thirtie of the Infidels children in true Religion and Ciuilitie. The sum of persons for publike vse, &c. six hundred and fiftie. The six hundred and eleuen remaining, are sent for priuate Plantations. People.

The Commodities which these people are directed principally to apply (next to their own necessary maintenance) are these ensuing: Iron, for which are sent one hundred and fiftie persons, to set vp three Iron-workes; proofe hauing beene made of the extraordinary goodnesse of that Iron. Commodities.

Cordage: for which (besides Hempe) direction is giuen for the planting of Silke-grasse (naturally growing in those parts) in great abundance: which is approued to make the best Cordage and Linnen in the world. Of this, euery housholder is bound to set one hundred Plants: and the Gouernour himselfe hath set fiue thousand.

Pot-ashes and Sope-ashes, Pitch and Tarre: for the making whereof the Polacres are returned to their workes.

Timber of all sorts, with Masts, Planks and Boords for prouision of Shipping, &c. there being not so good Timber for all vses, in any one knowne Countrey whatsoeuer. And for the ease and encrease of diuers of these workes, prouision is sent of men and materialls, for the setting vp of sundry Sawing Mills.

Silke: for which that Countrey is exceeding proper, hauing innumerable store of Mulbery Trees of the best, and some-Silk-wormes naturally found vpon them, producing excellent Silke: some whereof is to be seene. For the setting vp of which Commoditie, his Maiesty hath beene graciously pleased now the second time (the former hauing miscarried) to bestow vpon the Company plenty of Silke-wormes-seed of his owne store, being the best.

Vines: whereof the Countrey yeeldeth naturally great store, and of sundry sorts: which by culture will be brought to excellent perfection. For the effecting whereof, diuers skilfull Vignerons are sent, with store also from hence of Vine-plants of the best sort.

Salt: which workes hauing beene lately suffered to decay, are now ordered to bee set vp in so great plentie, as not onely to serue the Colony for the present; but as is hoped in short time also the great Fishings on those Coasts.

For the following, working, and perfecting of these Commodities, all prouisions necessary for the present are sent in good abundance. As likewise the people that goe are plentifully furnished with apparell, bedding, victuall for sixe moneths: Implements both for the House and Labour, Armour, Weapons, Tooles, and sundry other necessaries. And a supply of Armour, Powder, and many necessary prouisions is made for those of the Colony which were there before; yet without any preiudice to the former Magazin.

There haue beene giuen to the Colony this yeere by deuout persons, these Gifts ensuing: Two persons vnknowne, haue giuen faire Plate, and other rich Ornaments for two Communion Tables; whereof one for the Colledge, and the other for the Church of Mistresse Mary Robinsons founding: who in the former yeere by her Will, gaue two hundred pounds towards the founding of a Church in Virginia. Gifts.

Another vnknowne person (together with a godly Letter) hath lately sent to the Treasurer, fiue hundred and fiftie pounds in gold, for the bringing vp of children of the Infidels: first in the Knowledge of God and true Religion; and next, in fit Trades whereby honestly to liue.

Master Nicolas Ferrar deceased, hath by his Will giuen three hundred pounds to the Colledge in Virginia, to bee paid, when there shall be ten of the Infidels children placed in it. And in the meane time foure and twentie pounds by yeere, to bee distributed vnto three discreet and godly men in the Colony, which shall honestly bring vp three of the Infidels children in Christian Religion, and some good course to liue by.

An vnnamed person lent to the Treasurer the summe of ten pounds, for aduancing of the Plantation.

There haue beene Patents granted this yeere for particular Plantations, as here ensueth: To the Societie of Southamton Hundred. To Master Heath, Recorder of London. To Master Wincop. To Master Tracie. To Doctor Bohun. To Master Pierce. To Master Delbridge. To Master Pointz. To Master Barkley. To Captaine Bargraue. To Captaine Ward. Who haue vndertaken to transport to Virginia great multitudes of people, with store of cattell. Patents.

It is to be knowne, that touching the Colledge for the Infidels children, it hath beene thought more expedient to begin first with the planting and peopling of the Lands (which hath beene done this yeere) and afterwards to proceed to the erecting of the Fabricke, which is to be performed out of the reuenues of the Lands.

Digitized by Google

To his Worshipfull Friend M. SAMVEL PVRCHAS, Preacher of the Word, at the Church a little within Ludgate, London.

SIR,

IT was the nineteenth of May, before I was fitted for my discouery, when from Monahiggan I set sayle in an open Pinnace of fiue tun, for the Iland I told you of. I passed alongst the Coast where I found some antient Plantations, not long since populous now vtterly void; in other places a remnant remaines, but not free of sickneſſe. Their diſeaſe the Plague, for wee might perceiue the ſores of ſome that had eſcaped, who deſcribed the ſpots of ſuch as vſually die. When I arriued at my Sauages native Country (finding all dead) I trauelled alongst adaies iourney Westward, to a place called Nummaſtaquyt, where finding Inhabitants, I diſpatched a Meſſenger a dayes iourney further Weſt, to Poconaokit which bordereth on the Sea; whence came to ſee me two Kings, attended with a guard of fiftie armed men, who being well ſatisfied with that my Sauage and I diſcourſed vnto them (being deſirous of noueltie) gaue mee content in whaſoeuer I demanded, where I found that former relations were true. Here I redeemed a Frenchman, and afterwards another at Maſtachuſit, who three yeeres ſince eſcaped ſhipwracke at the North-eaſt of Cape Cod. I muſt (amongſt many things worthy obſeruation) for want of leiſure, therefore hence I paſſe (not mentioning any place where we touched in the way) to the Iland, which wee diſcouered the twelfth of Iune. Here we had good quarter with the Sauages, who likewiſe confirmed former reports. I found ſeuen ſeuerall places digged, ſent home of the earth, with ſamples of other commodities elſewhere found, ſounded the Coaſt, and the time being farre ſpent bare vp for Monahiggan, arriuing the three and tieth of Iune, where wee found our Ship ready to depart. To this Ile are two other neere adioyning, all which I called by the name of King Iames his Iles, becauſe from thence I had the firſt motiues to ſearch. For that (now probable paſſage) which may hereafter be both honourable and profitable to his Maieſtie. When I had diſpatched with the ſhips ready to depart, I thus concluded for the accompliſhing my buſineſſe. In regard of the fewneſſe of my men, not being able to leaue behind mee a competent number for defence, and yet ſufficiently furniſh my ſelfe, I put moſt of my prouiſions aboord the Sampſon of Cape Ward ready bound for Virginia, from whence hee came, taking no more into the Pinnace then I thought might ſerue our turnes, determining with Gods helpe to ſearch the Coaſt along, and at Virginia to ſupply our ſelues for a ſecond diſcouery, if the firſt failed. But as the beſt actions are commonly hardeſt in effecting, and are ſeldome without their croſſes, ſo in this we had our ſhare, and met with many difficulties: for wee had not ſayled aboue forty leagues, but wee were taken with a Southerly ſterme, which draue vs to this ſtrait; eyther we muſt weather a rockie point of Land, or run into a broad Bay no leſſe dangerous; Incidit in Syllam, &c. the Rockes wee could not weather, though wee loſed till we receiued much water, but at laſt were forced to beare vp for the Bay, and run on ground a furlong off the ſhoare, where we had beene beaten to pieces, had wee not inſtantly throwne ouerboord our proviſions to haue our lines; by which meanes we eſcaped and brought off our Pinnace the next high water without hurt, hauing our Planke broken, and a ſmall leake or two which we eaſily mended. Being left in this miſery, hauing loſt much bread, all our Beefe and Sider, ſome Meale and Apparell, with other prouiſions and neceſſaries; hauing now little left beſides hope to encourage vs to perſiſt: Yet after a little deliberation we reſolued to proceed and departed with the next faire winde. We had not now that faire quarter amongſt the Sauages as before, which I take it was by reaſon of our Sauages abſence, who deſired (in regard of our long iourney) to ſtay with ſome of our Sauage friends at Sawahquatooke) for now almoſt euery where, where they were of any ſtrength they ſought to betray vs. At Manamock (the Southerne part of Cape Cod, now called Sutcliffe Inlets) I was vnawares taken priſoner, when they ſought to kill my men, which I left to man the Pinnace; but miſſing of their purpoſe, they demanded a ranſome, which had, I was as farre from libertie as before: yet it pleaſed God at laſt, after a ſtrange manner to deliuer me, with three of them into my hands, and a little after the chiefe Sacheum himſelfe; who ſeeing me weigh ancker, would haue leaped ouerboord, but intercepted, craued pardon, and ſent for the Hatchets giuen for ranſome, excuſing himſelfe by laying the fault on his neighbours; and to be friends ſent for a Canoas lading of Corne, which receiued we ſet him free. I am loth to omit the ſtory, wherein you would finde cauſe to admire the great mercy of God euen in our greateſt miſery, in giuing vs both freedome and reliefe at one time. Departing hence, the next place we arriued at was Capaock, an Iland formerly diſcouered by the Engliſh, where I met with Epinew a Sauage that had liued in England, and ſpeakes indifferent good Engliſh, who foure yeeres ſince being carried home, was reported to haue beene ſlaine, with diuers of his Countreymen, by Saylers, which was falſe. With him I had much conference, who gaue mee very good ſatisfaction in euery thing almoſt I could demand. Time not permitting mee to ſearch here, which I ſhould haue done for ſundry things of ſpeciall moment: the wind faire, I ſtood away ſhaping my courſe as the Coaſt led mee, till I came to the moſt Weſterly part where the Coaſt began to fall away Southerly. In my way I diſcouered Land about thirtie leagues in length, heretofore taken for Mayne, where I feared I had beene imbayed, but by the helpe of an Indian I got to the Sea againe, through many crooked and ſtreight paſſages. I let paſſe many accidents in this this iourney occasioned by treacherie, where wee were compelled twice to goe together by the eares, once the Sauages had great aduantage of vs in a streight, not aboue a Bowe shot, and where a multitude of Indians let flye at vs from the banke, but it pleased God to make vs victours: neere vnto this wee found a most dangerous Catwract amongst small rockie Ilands, occasioned by two vnequall tydes, the one ebbing and flowing two houres before the other: here wee lost an Anchor by the strength of the current, but found it deepe enough: from hence were wee carried to a short space by the tydes swiftnesse into a great Bay (to vs so appearing) but indeede is broken land, which gaue vs light of the Sea: here, as I said, the Land treadeth Southerly. In this place I talked with many Saluages, who told me of two sundry passages to the great Sea on the West, offered me Pilots, and one of them drew mee a Plot with Chalke vpon a Chest, whereby I found it a great Iland, parted the two Seas; they report the one scarce passable for shoalds, perillous currents, the other no question to be made of. Hauing receiued these directions, I hasten to the place of greatest hope, where I purposed to make triall of Gods goodnesse towards vs, and vse my best endeuour to bring the truth to light, but wee were but onely shewed the entrance, where in seeking to passe wee were forced backe with contrary and ouerblowing windes, hardly escaping both our liues. Being thus ouercharged with weather, I stood alongst the coast to seeke harbours, to attend a fauourable gale to recouer the streight, but being a harbourlesse Coast for ought we could then perceiue, wee found no succour till wee arriued betwixt Cape Charles and the Maine on the East side the Bay Ghestapeak, where in a wilde Roade wee anchored; and the next day (the eight of September) crossed the Bay to Kecoughtan, where the first newes stroke cold to our hearts, the generall sickenesse ouer the Land. Here I resolued with all possible speede to returne in pursuite of this businesse; so that after a little refreshing, wee recouered vp the Riuer to Iames Citie, and from thence to Cape Warde his Plantacon, where immediately wee fell to hewing of Boords for a close Decke, hauing found it a most desired course to attempt as before. As wee were thus laboring to effect our purposes, it pleased almighty God (who onely disposeth of the times and seasons, wherein all workes shall be accomplished) to visite vs with his heauie hand, so that at one time there were but two of vs able to helpe the rest, my selfe so sore shaken with a burning feauer, that I was brought euen vnto deaths doore, but at length by Gods assistance escaped, and haue now with the rest almost recouered my former strength. The Winter hauing ouertaken vs (a time on these Coasts especially) subiect to gusts and fearefull stormes, I haue now resolued to choose a more temperate season, both for the generall good and our owne safeties. And thus I haue sent you a broken discourse, though indeede very vnwilling to haue giuen any notice at all, till it had pleased God to haue blessed mee with a thorow search, that our eyes might haue witnessed the truth. I haue drawne a Plot of the Coast, which I dare not yet part with for feare of danger, let this therefore serue for confirmation of your hopes, till I can better performe my promise and your desire; for what I haue spoken I can produce at least mille testes; farre separate, of the Sea behinde them, and of Ships, which come many dayes iourney from the West, and of the great extent of this Sea to the North and South, not knowing any bounds thereof Westward. I cease to trouble you till a better opportunity offer it selfe, remembring my best loue, &c. I rest

From Captaine MARTYN his Plantation. 27. Decemb. 1619.

Yours to command,

THO. DEANER.

To Sir Edwin Sands in the Treasurership succeeded the right Honorable Henry Earle of Southampton, whose industry together with that of those two brethren Iohn and Nicolas Farrars the successiue Deputies, haue giuen much content to many, but to diuers others matter of complaint; wherein I am an vnfit Iudge; onely as a reasonable man and Christian Minister (that I say not Historian) I am much grieued that Virginias prosperity cannot answer mens hopes; nor can any man meruaile if diuisions (minde-massacres) here, with the massacring Sauages and diseases there, haue hindred there the expected effects of honorable and carefull indeuours. Master Stockam, a Minister, writ thence, May the eight and twentieth, that which deserueth iust consideration, that he found no probability by faire meanes alone to draw the Sauages to goodnesse, and if Mars and Minerua went hand in hand, they would effect more good in one houre, then these verball Mercurians in their liues: and till their Priests and Ancients haue their throats cut, there is no hope to bring them to conuersion.

Cap. 1. Smith.

Sir Edw. Sands was Treasurer from Ap. 1619 till Iun. 1620.

Master Stockams Letter to Master Whitaker before.

Digitized by Google

CHAP. XIIII.

A true Relation of a Sea Fight betweene two great and well appointed Spanish Ships, or Men of Warre; and an English Ship, called the Margaret and Iohn, or the Blacke Hodge, going for Virginia.

1620. HAuing taken our iourney toward Virginia in the beginning of February last past, in a Ship called the Blacke Hodge, her burthen one hundred and sixtie tunne, manned onely with eight Iron Peeces, and a poore Faulcon, we soone ouer-passed both the tedious endurances and fearefull dangers of such a Voyage, and came at last by the foureteenth of March vnder 19. and halfe Latitude, within twenty leagues of Hispaniola.

Falling with Mona by the twentieth of March, and compassing the furthest point to stand in the handsommer with the shore, wee perceiued two tall Ships at anchor right ouer against the watring place with their top sayles loose, and their Boates going ashoare for their men. At first we supposed them Hollanders, in respect of their building, and the Hollanders colours borne by their Admirall in the maine top, the vice Admirall hauing his fore top mast downe, and no colors displayed, which encreased our former opinion, adding withall that it must needes be prise, or some other Ship subiect to the misfortune of a fight.

Hollanders colours.

But driuing by necessity of water, and willing to refresh our selues a shoare, wee trimmed our Ship, and came to anchor fairely by them, sending our Boate in friendly manner to hale them both vnprouided and vnarmed, which returned with certificate, that they were Spaniards, wherein not fully satisfied, by reason of our former apprehension that it was otherwise; the better to be resolued, we sent out our Boate againe, as well to be assured what to trust vnto, as to gaine sometime to prepare our Shippe, and trim her more commodiously; being pestered with goods and fardels betweene the decckes, and altogether vnprouided for any fight, either offensiue or defensiue.

The Boate approached the hindmost Ship, which I call the vice-Admirall, and haled her, demanding who they were, but instead of resoluing vs, she commanded them to come aboord, and would else were no otherwise; whereupon the Boate rowed from them, as resoluing all was not well, and so made haste vnto vs againe; yet could not preuent a volley of small shot powred very dangerously amongst them, insomuch that they had their cloathes shot through, their Oares shiuered, and the sides battered with Bullets, yet thankes be to God, neither was a man hurt, nor any thing lost; which, as if they had had notice of the same escape, vexed their rage so much the more. For by that time the Boate was out of reach of their small shot, they followed it to the Ship with great Ordnance; and when they perceiued they were safely come aboord, they tooke it so ill, that they thundred against our Ship with the soarer rage, and most violent vollies, which we could not answer, hauing no Peece in our gunner roome, nor indeede any other well mounted for such a Sea fight.

The Spaniards shot at the boat

They shot at the Ship.

English vnprepared for fight.

Spanish aduantages.

By this time their vice Admirall heaued vp her anchor to her warpe, and laid her selfe to wind-ward, if either we should passe forward, or anchor short againe, so that we perceiued they meant to assault vs on all hands: for she let flye a whole broad-side vpon vs, and came furiously vp to our lee quarter without damage or resistance of our parts.

But when we were thus terrified and threatned by them, and thus encombred and disanimated amongst our selues, knowing withall (by reason of our ill prepared Ordnance) the disaduantage and hazard to be boorded at anchor by two good Ships well prepared for spoyle and ruine; we hoysed vp our sailes, and determined to set forward, had not the vice-Admirall come on our star-boord side, and beate vpon vs so hardly, that we fell to our businesse, and answered their vnkindenesse accordingly with many faire shot, which proued most effectuall, especially from a demy-culuering, which at last shot her betweene winde and water, so that shee was compelled from vs, and bare off to Sea, leauing her Admirall onely single with vs, who at last came fairely in our quarter to winde-ward, taking in her Holland flagge, and aduanced her Spanish colours, and so haled vs.

Spanish colors.

Their confesence.

We quietly and quickly answered, both what we were, and whither wee were bound, discouering the effect of our Commission, and relating the cause of our tarying there for water, neither purposing to annoy any subiect of the King of Spaine, nor by way of affront to braue either Merchant or man of Warre. Then she charged vs to strike our sailes for the King of Spaine, and vaile the bonnet according to the prerogatiue they had in those Seas: we replyed with enlarging the particulars of the league betweene the King our Master and their King, adding with all, that as we intended no ill, we would take no wrong; Whereupon the Master left the poope, and sequestred himselfe from such open conference, had they not called for the Captaine againe, who at last presented himselfe, till they commanded him to come aboord with his Commission, which which he refused; yet wished them to send their Boat aboord, and then they should see it most willingly.

But instead either of answering vs further with kinde words, or accepting of our reply in good part, they made two great shot at vs, and poured among vs such a volley of small shot, before we could get off the poope, that we thanked God they did no more harme, yet we were much amazed they did so much: not thus content they waued vs with their bright swords, and reuiled vs with opprobrious tearmes, miscalling vs dogs, and inuenting more odious names against vs, then we could imagine that Christians durst vse one another withall: at last they laid vs aboord; which enforced vs to raise vp our maine sayle, and to giue the word to our small shot; which all this while lay close, well resolued and prepared: but sodainely breaking forth, wee plyed them in such sort that wee made them giue backe and shrinke from their former forwardnesse. Insolence of the Spaniards. The English fight.

The fight continued some halfe houre in our quarter, and according to the fortune of such encounters, wee were compast as it were in fire and smoake, vntill they discouered the waste of our Ship naked, and were encouraged with the hope of reciprocall damage, whereupon they bravely ranne vpon our side, and laid vs aboord loose vpon loose, hastning with Pikes and Swords to enter, to which was added such fury, that if they had not beene preuented, we should haue shrunke vnder the rage of a barbarous slaughter: but it pleased God so to direct our Master with aduice, and encourage our men with valour, that our Pikes being formerly placed vnder our halfe decke, and certaine shot lying close for that purpose vnder the portels of the Shippe, encountred them so bravely, that their fury was not onely rebated, but their hastinesse intercepted, and the whole Company beaten backe, especially vpon the wind-ward side, where the charge was hottest, and the fight bloodiest; for there the throng was great, and men had worke enough to make proofe of their courages and fortunes. Diuers of our men were hurt, and many fell on their side. Spaniards seeke to enter. Their repulse.

In the end they were violently repulsed by vs, enforced to retreat, vntill they were reinforced backe againe by their Commanders, who standing vpon tearmes of honor, as being men of Warre, and designed for that purpose, thought it an indignity to be so affronted and countermanded; which caused a second charge, and that was answered with a second bearing backe, till the Captaine himselfe grew enraged, as not brooking to be so much ouermated, and constrained them to come on a fresh, which they did so effectually, that questionlesse it had wrought an alteration, if the God that setteth Monarchies, and teareth the Mountaines in his fury, had not taught vs to tosse our Pikes with prosperous euent, and poured out a sodaine volley of small shot vpon them, whereby that worthy Commander was slaine at the foote of a Pike, and many of his Souldiers dropped downe on the top of the hatches. Presently our Master tooke aduantage of their discomfiture (though with some commiseration for their valiant Captaine so slaine) that hee not onely plyed them a fresh with great Ordnance, but had more false shot vnder the Pikes, which were bestowed to good purpose, and amased our enemies with the sodainnesse. Second charge. Third charge. Their Captain slaine.

Amongst the rest one Lucas our Carpenters mate must not be forgotten, who perceiued a way how to annoy them, as they were thus pusled and in a confusion, drue out a minion which hee nobly set a worke vnder the halfe decke, till at the last hee brought it to the doxe of the halfe decke, and there bent it vpon them, but in such a manner, that when it was fiered the cases full of stones and peeces of Iron fell vpon them like haile, and cleared their decke in such a sort that it slue many, and in short time we saw few assailants, but onely such as crept from place to place very couertly, and seemed willing to obscure themselues from the fury of our shot, which now was thicker then theirs: For although (as farre as we may commend our enemies) they had done some things worthy of admiration: yet either wanting men, or ouertaken with the vnlooked for valour of our company, they now began to shrinke, and gaue vs leaue to be wanton with our aduantage. Lucas his braue act. The case altered. Omnium rerum vicissitudo.

Yet were our great Ordnance onely foure, that we could vse in this fight, but it should seeme they serued the turne as well as foure times foure: for they shot her diuers times betweene winde and water, and so preuailed, that at last we saw many signes of their willingnesse to leaue vs, but by reason she was fast in a flach of our cable, which in haste of weighing our anchor hung loose, she could not be diuided nor make that way shee purposed, vntill one of our men cut it with an Axe without direction, and was slaine for his labour. But when she perceiued she was loose, after she had beene a boord two houres and a halfe, good Lord what haste she made, and how quickly were we diuided, both great and small shot playing on both sides, which lasted vntill the remoteneſse was aboue a Caliuer shot, and we discouered the vice-Admirall comming to her assistance, who began a farre off to ply vs with great shot, and put vs in minde we had another worke in hand. The English could vse but foure Ordnance. Spaniards fall off.

Whereupon wee manned our Ship a new, separating the dead and hurt bodies by themselues from vs, and were so encouraged, that we waued her, and in a manner made toward her to fight a fresh: For when we perceiued, that the Admirall made not a shot more at vs, we verily imagined, that either she was preparing her selfe with a new supply, or wanted men to make her seruiceable Brauado turned English.

or

or resolued to goe away from vs, considering shee had lost her Captaine; yet loth to bee secure, and imagining the Vice-admirall might come and boord vs finding vs play, till the Admirall did make her selfe better readie, we prepared our selues, wondring yet that shee came no neerer vs then Falcon shot, wherewith she plyed vs still on the Lee side, vntill at last she receiued another payment from our Demie-culuering, which shot her through, and made her beare with the shore into smooth water, where shee remayned till two of the clocke after midnight, and so wee had time to reforme our disorders, and make our selues better readie for the next dayes varietie.

Next dayes fight.

By breake of day she came vp againe with the Admirall with her; as if they determined indeed to deuoure vs at once; but as it seemed it was but a Brauado, though for the time they forsooke not our quarter within Musket shot: for all that night and morning they were quiet Neighbours, and kept vs company without any great annoyance with their Top-sayles downe, not knowing, as it should seeme, what to doe with vs, or else suspecting their owne hurts and Leakes, they durst not trust themselues too farre from Land, nor to the furie of another encounter. All that night we had time and leisure to ouer-looke our losses, and prepare for them, the Admirall made shew of an encounter, and we after Prayers were ended prouided to fight with them, but suddenly wee perceiued the Vice-Admirall hang a sterne, cutting her mayne sayle to come vp, and stirring very ill.

The Vice-Admirall seeketh to recouer the Iland and the quiltie, Sana.

At length the Admirall shooke in the wind, and by apparant signes gaue vs notice of slacking her course, whereby we might runne a head and follow the Seas at her pleasure, so wee perceiued the Vice-Admirall with all her Sayles to make towardes an Iland called Sana, which the Admirall either tooke notice of, as knowing the danger she was in, or gaue directions accordingly, considering there was no good to bee done with vs: for presently she tacked about and lost vs, bearing toward that Iland also.

Doctor Bohune and seuen others slaine out-right.

Wee lost Doctor Bohune, and seuen other were slaine out-right: two died shortly after of their wounds, and sixteene were shot through in some part or other of the bodie, whose wounds Gods be thanked were recured and without mayme or further impeachment of health are now recouered and settled in Virginia, according to our first entended purpose and Commission: I reckon not such as are hurt with Pikes and other offensiue Weapons, because there was no danger in their cures, and the skilfull Surgeon shewed his art and good speed with facilitie. How many they lost wee cannot tell, nor what men of name were entertayned amongst them, onely I am sure we saw many lie slaine on the Decke, and more cast ouer-boord in the fight, besides the Scuppers ran with bloud, and the very Sea in their quarter was coloured with a Scarlet hue, and looked fearfully vpon vs all.

Spanish losse.

Spanish ships described.

The burthen of their Admirall was three hundred tunnes, hauing two and twentie Peeces of Brasse, and all prouision of a man of Warre indeed: their Vice-Admirall three hundred tuns, and sixteene cast Peeces, nor much inferiour to her for trimming and correspondent Equipage, and both to outward shew ouer-masterfull and daring for one poore Merchant and Passenger, being but a hundred and sixtie tunnes, hauing eight Iron Peeces and one Falcon, ouer-loaden with Stuffe and Wares, encombred with Passengers, toyled with a storme, tyred with a long Voyage, affrighted with wants, and euery way insufficient to answere any such enemie: but as it in the Scripture, it is all one to thee, O God, whether there be few or many, and Gedeons three hundred shall slay many thousands of the Midianites; as for deliuerances, the people of Israell shall passe through the Red Sea dry foot: Ionas shall bee cast safe on shoare out of the Whales belly: and Paul shall escape shipwracke, sauing his life with all his Passengers in the Iland of Malta.

For to conclude with the purpose in hand, there is one thing most remarkable as an inducement to this our deliuerance, that Captaine Chester embraced Doctor Bohune beeing mortally wounded, and thus recomforted him, saying, O Doctor Bohune what a disaster is this; the Noble Doctor no whit exanimated, replyed; Fight it out braue man, the cause is good, and Lord receiue my soule.

A Sea Fight.

Slaine out right. Doctor Bohune. Thomas Demeter Gentleman. Th. Read. William Garret. Th. Vernam. Gabriel Peres. Dauid Bathering. Raph. &c. Died after. Francis Annis Gentleman. Ed. Nerobery Sayler. Wounded yet cured. William Bird Gentleman. Alexander Bementine. William Bannington Gentleman. William Ioyce Quarter Master. Iohn Wakings. Iohn Wilson Sayler. George Tayler Sayler. William Lucas Sayler. Iohn Robbins Steward. Phillip Durwine. Three Frenchmen. Robert Letter. Anthony Browne Gentleman.

CHAP. XV.

Virginian affaires since the yeere 1620. till this present 1624.

§. I.

A note of the shipping, men, and prouisions sent and prouided for Virginia, by the Right Honourable HENRY Earle of South-hampton, and the Company, and other priuate Aduenturers, in the yeere 1621. &c. with other Occurrents then published by the Company.

SHIPS AND PEOPLE.

1 THe Elianor 30. tun: in May 1621. with 10. persons.
2 The George 180. tun: in Iuly 120.
3 The Charles 120. tunne: in Iuly 80.
4 The Marmaduke 100. tun: in Iuly 80.
5 The Temperance 80. tun: in Iuly 50.
6 The Warwicke 160. tun: in August 100.
7 The Tigre 40. tun: in August 40.
8 The Sea-flowre 140. tun: in August 120.
9 The Flying Hart 200. tun: in August 60. Men, and 40. Cattell.
10 The Discouerie 60. tun: in Nouember 20.
11 The Bona Nona 200. tun: in Noumber 50.
12 The Hope-well 60. tun: in Nouember 20.
13 The God-speed 150. tun: in Aprill 1622. 100.
14 The Gift of God 140. tun: in Aprill 100.
15 The Prime-Rose 80. tun: in Aprill 60.
16 The Charitie 80. tun: in Aprill 30.
17 The Bonauenture 50. tun: in Aprill 10.
18 The White Lion 180. tun: in May 40 Men, 40. Cattell.
19 The Furtherance 180. tun: in May 80. men.
20 The Margaret and Iohn 160. tun: in May 80.
21 The Iames 120. tun: in May 80.

Summe of the persons, 1300. Cattell 80.

Sent also to the Summer Ilands by that Company.

22 The Ioseph 150. tun: in May 1621. 100. persons.
23 The Iames 120. tun: in Iuly 80.
24 The Concord 180. tun: in August 70.

Persons 250.

So there is foure and twentie Sayle of ships, with fiue hundred Mariners in them imployed to these Plantations in this yeere.

Besides, there are now prouiding seuerall ships in diuers parts of this Kingdome to transport to the Plantations aboue fiue hundred persons.

And for the benefit of the Plantations these things following haue beene here done this yeere.

Sixteene persons and others haue beene prouided and sent for the making of Beads for trade in the Countrie with the Natiues, and for making Glasse of all sorts. Beads.

Seuen and fiftie young Maides haue beene sent to make wiues for the Planters, diuers of which were well married before the comming away of the Ships. Maids.

A Magazine hath beene sent of all necessaries for the Colonie, to the value of two thousand pound, besides all priuate mens sending goods, which was very ample, Trade being set open for all his Maiesties Subiects. Magazine.

A ship called the Discouerie, hath beene set out for the rich Trade of Furres, which both the French and Hollanders haue yeerely within our Precincts, and within fiftie leagues of vs. Furre-trade.

Fiue and twentie persons for the building of Boats, Pinnasses and Ships, for the necessarie vse of the Colonie for fishing, Trade, and Discouerie, &c. Boat-builders.

Seuen persons sent for planting the thousand Acres of Land giuen to the East Indie Schoole. East Indie Schoole.

Other Occurents of Note.

The Gouernours arriuall in Virginia, at the end of the last Summer, with nine ships, and neere seuen hundred people, all safely, and in good health. The admirable deliuerance of diuers ships; and namely, of the Tiger, which beeing driuen strangely neere two hundred leagues out of her course, fell into the Turkes hands, and yet came saue to Virginia.

Master

Iron. Master Berkleyes Letters assure vs, that there is not a more fit place for Iron-workes then in Virginia, both for Wood, Water, Mynes, and Stone: and that by Whitsontide next, wee may relie vpon Iron made by him.

Cotton. The Plants of Cotton-wooll trees that came out of the West Indies, prosper exceeding well, and the Cotton-wooll-seeds from the Mogols Countrie come vp, and grow: Samples of it they haue sent; and this Commoditie they hope this yeere to bring to a good perfection and quantitie.

Indico. The Indico Seed thriues well, but they yet want knowledge how to cure it.

Vines. Our Frenchmen assure vs that no Countrie in the World is more proper for Vines, Silke, Oliues, Rice, &c. then Virginia, and that it excelleth their owne Countrey. The Vines beeing in abundance naturally ouer all the Countrey: a taste of which Wine they haue alreadie sent vs, with hope the next yeere to send vs a good quantitie.

Silke and Mulberies. There bee Mulberie trees in wonderfull abundance, and much excelling both in goodnesse and greatnesse those of their Countrey of Languedocke. To the full perfecting of both which rich Commodities of Wine and Silke, there wanteth nothing but hands. And of the Mulberies may bee made also good wholesome Wine for the people there.

Plum-drinke. And of a certaine Plumme in the Countrey, they haue made good drinke.

Salt-workes. Salt-workes are erecting (the proper place being now found, as the Rochseller doth certifie vs) whereby many ships will transport people at easier rates hereafter, finding Salt there to furnish them for the great and profitable fishings vpon that Coast, whither twentie sayle of ships went this last yeere out of the Westerne parts of England, besides the ships formerly mentioned.

New Discouerties by M. Pory. Master John Porie hath of late made a Discouerie into the great Bay Northward (yet at the bottome of it he was not, reserving it to a second Voyage) where are now setled neere one hundred English very happily, with hope of a good Trade of Furres there to bee had. And Terra Lemnia was sent vs from thence, which is found as good as that of Turkey, and is in great abundance to be had.

In February last he likewise discouered to the South Riuer, some sixtie miles ouer Land from vs, a very fruitfull and pleasant Countrey, full of Riuers, wherein are two Haruests in one yeere (the great King giuing him friendly entertainment, and desirous to make a league with vs) hee found also there in great quantitie of the same Silke-grasse (as appeareth by the samples sent vs) whereof Master Heriot in his Booke 1587. makes relation, who then brought home some of it, with which a piece of Grogeran was made, and giuen to Queene Elizabeth, and some heere who haue liued in the East Indies affirme, that they make all their Cambaya Stuffes of this, and Cotton-wooll. Also in his passage by Land, Master Pory discouered a Countrey full of Pine-trees, aboue twentie miles long, whereby a great abundance of Pitch and Tarre may bee made: and other sorts of woods there were, fit for Pot-ashes and Sope-ashes.

Copper Mine. The Indians haue made relation of a Copper Myne, that is not farre from thence, how they gather it, and the strange making of it: a piece whereof was sent home, being found (after trial) very excellent metall. Some of the English haue made relation of a China Boxe seene at one of the Kings Houses, who declared, that it was sent him from the West, by a King that dwels ouer the great Hils, whose Countrey is neere the Sea, he hauing that Boxe from a people as hee said, that come thither in ships, and weare clothes, and dwell in Houses, and are called Acanack-china. And he offered our people that he would send his Brother along with them to that King: which the Gouernour purposeth not to refuse, hoping thereby to discouer the South Sea, so long talked of.

Summer Iland Plants. A small ship comming in December last from the Summer-Ilands, to Virginia, brought thither from thence these Plants, viz. Vines of all sorts, Orange and Leman trees, Sugar Canes, Cassado Roots (that make bread) Pines, Plantans, Potatoes, and sundry other Indian fruits and plants, not formerly seene in Virginia, which begin to prosper very well.

Gifts.

The Gentlemen and Mariners that came in the Royall Iames, from the East Indies (beeing at Cape Bona Speranza homeward bound) gaue towards the building of a Free Schoole in Virginia, to be called the East Indie Schoole, the summe of seuentie pound eight shillings six pence.

Towards the furtherance of the said East India Schoole, an vnknowne person hath added the summe of thirtie pound.

A person refusing to be made knowne, hath giuen the summe of fortie shillings a yeere for euer, for a Sermon, before the Virginia Company thirtie pounds.

At a Quarter Court held the thirtieth of Ianuary 1621. by a person not willing as yet to bee knowne, was sent in Gold to helpe forward the East Indie Schoole, fiue and twentie pounds.

At the same Quarter Court, a small Bible, with a couer richly wrought; a great Church Bible; Bookes of Common Prayer; and other Books were presented to be sent to Virginia, in the name of a person who had the yeere before sent, for the vse of the Colledge at Henrico, diuers Bookes, and an exact Map of America; the Giuer is not knowne, but the Bookes are valued at tenne pound.

Giuen

Giuen by Master Thomas Bargraue, Preacher in Virginia deceassed, for the vse of the Colledge, a Library valued at a hundred Markes.

And there is a contribution made by the Inhabitants in Virginia, for the building of an house of entertainment for new commers at Iames Citie, amounting to the value of fifteene hundred pounds.

Patents granted this yeere.

1 To the Ladie Dale.
2 To Sir Dudly Digges.
3 To Sir Iohn Bourchier.
4 To Captaine Ralph Hamer.
5 To Master Arthur Swayne, &c.
6 To Master Rowland Truelone, &c.
7 To Master Iohn Crowe.
8 To Master Edward Rider.
9 To Captaine Simon Leeke.
10 To Master Daniell Gookin.
11 To Master Edward Bennet.
12 To Master Ioseph Leming.
13 To Sir Charles North.
14 To Sir George Yeardly.
15 To Master Thomas Leueson.
16 To Captaine William Wilden.
17 To Master Henry Southey.
18 To Martins Hundred.
19 To Master Robert Mosson.
20 To Master Edmund Wynne.
21 To Captaine Henry Pelham, &c.
22 To Captaine Daniell Tucker.
23 To Sir Bowyer Worsly.
24 To Master Thomas Buckley.
25 To Master Francis Harwell.
26 To Sir Iohn Brooke.

Who together with their Associates, haue vndertaken to transport great multitudes of people and cattle to Virginia.

§. II.

Newes from Virginia in Letters sent thence 1621. partly published by the Company, partly transcribed from the Originals, with Letters of his Maiestie, and of the Company touching Silke-workes.

IN the three last yeeres of 1619. 1620. and 1621. there hath beene prouided and sent for Virginia two and fortie Saile of ships, three thousand fiue hundred and seuentie men and women for Plantation, with requisite prouisions, besides store of Cattle, and in those ships haue beene aboue twelue hundred Mariners imployed: There hath also beene sent in those yeeres nine ships to the Summer Ilands with about nine hundred people to inhabit there, in which ships two hundred and fortie Mariners were imployed. In which space haue beene granted fifty Patents to particular persons, for Plantation in Virginia, who with their Associates haue vndertaken therein to transport great multitudes of people and cattell thither, which for the most part is since performed, and the residue now in preparing, as by the seuerall Declarations of each yeere in their particulars, (manifested and approoued in our generall and publike Quarter-Courts) and for the fuller satisfaction of all desireus to vnderstand the particularities of such proceedings, hath beene by printing commended to the vnderstanding of all.

3570. people sent to Virginia in the three last yeeres 42. Saile of ships, 1200. Mariners imployed. 1500. To the Summer Ilands. Nine ships, & 240. Mariners imployed.

Sir Francis Wiat was sent Gouernour into Virginia, who arriued there in Nouember 1621. with Master George Sandys Treasurer, Master Danison Secretarie, &c. In the nine ships sent in that Fleet died but one Passenger of seuen hundred, in whose roome there was another also borne at Sea. Their prouisions were not found so well conditioned as was expected. The Sailers are still blamed for imbezelling the goods sent to priuate persons, for killing of Swine, inordinate trucking &c. It was ordained that for euery head they should plant but a thousand plants of Tobacco (and for the better strength not to suffer aboue nine leaues to grow on each plant) which will make about a hundred weight.

Master Gookin arriued also out of Ireland with fiftie men of his owne, and thirtie Passengers well furnished. The present gaine by Tobacco, had made the planting of Corne to be neglected: and some thinke that if Corne might there be valued (not at two shillings sixe pence the bushell) as deere as that which is brought from hence, there would be lesse feare of famine, or dependance on Tobacco.

The Letters written from the Gouernour and Treasurer in Virginia in the beginning of March last, (which came hither in Aprill) gaue assurance of ouercomming and bringing to perfection in this yeere, the Iron-workes, Glasse-workes, Salt-workes, the plentifull sowing of all sorts of English graine with the Plough, hauing now cleered good quantitie of ground; setting of store of Indian Corne or Maiz, sufficient for our selues, and for trucke with the Natiues; restraint of the quantitie of Tobacco, and amendment of it in the qualitie, learned by time and experience; The planting of Vines and Mulberie trees neere to their Houses, Figge-trees, Pomegranates, Potatoes, and Cotton-wooll Seeds, Pocoon, Indico, Sugar Canes, Madder, Woade, Hempe, Flaxe, and and Silke-graſſe; and for the erecting of a faire Inne in Iames Citie for the better entertainment of new commers, whereto and to other publike workes, euery old Planter there offered freely and liberally to contribute. I write the words of their Letters. And how in a late Diſcouerie made, a few moneths before by ſome of them to the Southward, they had paſt thorow great Forreſts of Pines, fifteene or ſixteene miles broad, and aboue threeſcore miles long, very fit for Maſts for ſhipping, and for Pitch and Tarre, and of other ſorts of woods fit for Pot-aſhes and Sope-aſhes, and came vnto a moſt fruitfull Countrey, bleſſed with abundance of Corne, reaped twice a yeere (within the limits of Virginia) where alſo they vnderſtand of a Copper Myne, an eſſay whereof was ſent, and vpon triall here found to be very rich; and met with a great deale of Silke-graſſe there growing, which monethly may be cut, of which kinds, and Cotton-wooll, all the Cambaya and Bengala Stuffes are made in the Eaſt Indies: and of which kindes of Silke-graſſe was heretofore made a piece of Grogeram giuen to Queene Elizabeth. And how that in December laſt they had planted and cultiuated in Virginia Vines of all (as well thoſe naturally growing, as thoſe other Plants ſent them from theſe parts of Europe) Orenge and Lemon-trees, Fig-trees, Sugar Canes, Cotton-wooll, Caſſaui Roots (that make very good bread) Plantanes, Potatoes, and ſundry other Indian fruits and Plants not formerly ſeene in Virginia, which at the time of their ſaid Letters began to proſper very well: as alſo their Indico Seed, for the true cure whereof there is lately cauſed a Treatiſe to be written.

Digitized by Google

Forreſt of Pines.

M. Hariot in his Booke of Virginia, A. 1585.

Vines planted.

Furthermore, they write that in a Voyage made by Lieutenant Marmaduke Parkinſon, and other Engliſh Gentlemen, vp the Riuer of Patomacke they ſaw a China Boxe at one of the Kings Houſes where they were. This Boxe or Casket was made of braided Palmito, painted without, and lined in the inſide with blue Taffata after the China or Eaſt India faſhion. They enquiring whence it came, the King of Patomecke ſaid, it was preſented him by a certaine people of the Mountaines toward the South-weſt, who got it from another Nation beyond them ſome thirtie dayes iournie from Patomacke, called Acana Echinac, beeing of ſmall ſtature, who had Houſes, Apparell, and Houſhold ſtuffe like vs, and liuing within foure dayes iourney of the Sea, had ſhips come into their Riuer: and he his Brother along with them to that King, which offer the Gouernour purpoſed not to refuſe; and the rather, by reaſon of the continuall conſtant relations of all thoſe Sauages in Virginia, of a Sea, and the way to it Weſt, they affirming that the heads of all thoſe ſeuen goodly Riuers (the leaſt whereof is greater then the Riuer of Thames, and Nauigable aboue an hundred and fiftie miles, and not aboue ſixe or eight miles one from another) which fall all into one great Bay, haue their riſing out of a ridge of Hils, that runnes all along South and North: whereby they doubt not but to find a ſafe, eaſie, and good paſſage to the South Sea, part by water, and part by Land, eſteeming it not aboue an hundred and fiftie miles from the head of the Falls, where we are now planted; the Diſcouerie whereof will bring forth a moſt rich Trade to Cathay, China, Iapan, and thoſe other of the Eaſt Indies, to the ineſtimable benefit of this Kingdome.

Note. A China Boxe ſeene with the Sauages.

Moreouer, the Letters of Maſter Iohn Berkley, ſometimes of Beuerſtone Caſtle in the Countie of Gloceſter, (a Gentleman of an Honourable Family) likewiſe certifie, that a more fit place for Iron-workes (whereof he was made Maſter and Ouer-ſeer) then in Virginia, both for Wood, Water, Mynes, and Stone, was not to be found: And that by Whitſontide the Company might relye vpon good quantities of Iron made by him: which alſo by Letters from Maſter George Sandys the third of March laſt, was confirmed, with this farther deſcription of the place (called The falling Creeke) to be ſo fitting for that purpoſe, as if Nature had applyed her ſelfe to the wiſh and direction of the Workman: where alſo were great ſtones hardly ſeene elſe-where in Virginia, laying on the place, as though they had beene brought thither to aduance the erection of thoſe Workes.

M. Berkley.

M. G. Sandys.

The Letters of the French Vignerons or Vine-men, procured out of France, and ſent ouer into Virginia, did likewiſe aſſertaine, that no Countrey in the World was more proper for Vines, Silke, Rice, Oliues, and other fruits, then Virginia is: and that it far excelled their owne Countrie of Languedocke; the Vines of diuers ſorts being in abundance naturally ouer all the Countrey. They ſcarſly beleeued thoſe fruits to be Grapes till they had opened them and ſeene their kernels; ſuch was their bigneſſe. They are in loue with the Countrey, and hauing planted ſome cuttings of Vines at Michaelmas laſt, in their Letters affirme that theſe bare Grapes alreadie this Spring to their great wonder, as being a thing they ſuppoſe not heard off in any other Countrie. A taſte of Wine made of the wilde Grape, they laſt yeere ſent, with hope to ſend a good quantitie this next Vintage; and that the Mulbery trees, where they abode were in wonderfull abundance, and much excelling both in goodneſſe and greatneſſe thoſe of their owne Countrey of Languedocke: and that thoſe Silke-wormes they haue, proſper exceeding well, and ſome Silke they hope to ſend this yeere, there wanting nothing to ſet vp that rich Commoditie but ſtore of hands wherewith England doth abound. Of the fruit of which Mulbery trees (as of a Plumme there plentifully growing) they would make wholſome Drinkes for the Colonie and people there.

French Vignerons.

Mulberies.

Opechankanough doted on a houſe which the Engliſh had built for him of our faſhion: hee dweldwelled therein, shewed it to his owne people and strangers with pride, keeping his Keyes charily, and busying himselfe with locking and vnlocking the doores, sometimes a hundred times in a day, admiring the strangenesse of that Engine, a Locke and Key. Hee gaue the English leaue to seate themselues any where on his Riuers where the Natiues are not actually seated, and entred into further couenants of amity, for reciprocall defence, mutuall transportation, discouery of mines, &c. They report also of Copper Peeces presented to Opechank: which Copper is gathered at the foote of the Mountaines, where they digge a hole in the ground, in which they put the oare, and make thereon a great fire; which causeth it to runne into a masse, and become malleable: neither haue they any tooles, but smooth stones for that purpose. This seemed strange to ours which heard the English Copper passeth eleuen fires.

His Maiesties gracious Letter to the Earle of South-hampton, Treasurer, and to the Counsell and Company of Virginia here: commanding the present setting vp of Silke workes, and planting of Vines in Virginia.

Right trusty and welbeloued, We greete you well: whereas We vnderstand, that the Soyle in Virginia naturally yeeldeth store of excellent Mulberry trees, We haue taken into Our Princely consideration, the great benefit that may grow to the Aduenturers and Planters, by the breede of Silkewormes, and setting vp of Silkeworkes in those parts. And therefore of Our gracious Inclination to a designe of so much honour and aduantage to the publike, We haue thought good, as at sundry other times, so now more particularly to recommend it to your speciall care, hereby charging and requiring you to take speedy order, that our people there, vse all possible diligence in breeding Silkewormes, and erecting Silkeworkes, and that they rather bestow their trauell in compassing this rich and solid Commodity, then in that of Tobacco; which besides much vnnecessary expence, brings with it many disorders and inconueniences. And for as much as Our seruant, John Bonoell hath taken paines in setting downe the true vse of the Silkeworme, together with the Art of Silkemaking, and of planting Vines, and that his experience and abilities may much conduce to the aduancement of this businesse; We doe hereby likewise require you to cause his directions, both for the said Silkeworkes and Vineyards, to be carefully put in practice thorowout our Plantations there, that so the worke may goe on cheerefully, and receiue no more interruptions nor delayes.

Giuen vnder Our Signet, at our Pallace of Westminster, the ninth day of Iuly, in the twentieth yeare of our Raigne of England, France and Ireland, and of Scotland the fiue and fiftieth.

To Our right trusty and right welbeloued Cousin and Councellour, HENRY, Earle of Southhampton, Treasurer of our Plantation in Virginia, and to Our trusty and welbeloued, the Deputy, and others of Our said Plantation.
Virginia.

WINDEBANK.

The Treasurour, Counsell and Company of Virginia, to the Gouernour and Counsell of State in Virginia residing.

After our very harty commendations: His Sacred Maiesty, out of his high wisedome and care of the noble Plantation of Virginia, hath beene graciously pleased to direct his Letters to vs here in England, thereby commanding vs to aduance the setting vp of Silkworkes, and planting of Vineyards; as by the Copy herewith sent, you may perceiue.

The intimation of his Maiesties pleasure, we conceiue to be a motiue sufficient, to induce you to imploy all your indeuors to the setting forward these two Staple Commodities of Silke and Wine; which brought to their perfection, will infinitely redound to the honour, benefit, and comfort of the Colony, and of this whole Kingdome: yet we, in discharge of our duties, doe againe renew our often and iterated Instructions, and inuite you cheerefully, to fall vpon these two so rich, and necessary Commodities. And if you shall finde any person, either through negligence or wilfulnesse, to omit the planting of Vines, and Mulberry trees, in orderly and husbandly manner, as by the Booke is prescribed, or the prouiding of conuenient roomes for the breeding of Wormes; we desire they may by seuere censures and punishment, be compelled thereunto. And on the contrary, that all fauour and possible assistance be giuen to such as yeelde willing obedience to his Highnesse Commands therein. The breach or performance whereof, as we are bound to giue a strict account, so will it also be required of you the Gouernour and Counsell especially. Herein there can be no Plea, either of difficulty or impossibilty; but all the contrary appeares, by the naturall a- bundance

abundance of those two excellent Plants afore-named euery where in Virginia: neither will such excuses be admitted, nor any other pretences serue, whereby the businesse be at all delayed: and as wee formerly sent at our great charge the French Vignerons to you, to teach you their Art; so for the same purpose we now commend this Booke vnto you, to serue as an Instructour to euery one, and send you store of them to be dispersed euer the whole Colony, to euery Master of a Family one; Silke-seede you shall receiue also by this Ship, sufficient to store euery man: so that there wants nothing, but industry in the Planter, suddenly to bring the making of Silke to its perfection: which either for their owne benefit (we hope) they will willingly indeuour, or by a wholesome and necessary seuerity they must be inforced.

The Booke is printed, containing many good rules both for Silkworks, Vines & other husbandry; but too long here to be inserted.

This particular aduice we thought necessary to giue you; lest that if it should haue come to you mingled with others, you would haue interpreted it as a common Instruction, or a businesse that was not taken so to heart, as this by vs, and we hope will be by you in humble obedience to his Sacred Maiesties Royall Instructions. The paines and industry of the Authour, for the benefit of the Plantations (being a member of our Company) are sufficient arguments of his good affection to the Action, and they both deserue your best acceptance and ours, that others may thereby be inuited to impart their knowledge in businesse of this and the like nature; whereby the Colony may not onely be supported for the present, but brought to that perfection, that may redound to the glory of God, the honour of his Maiestie, and the inestimable benefit of his noble Kingdomes; which as they are the true aime and end the Aduenturers and Planters haue proposed vnto themselues, so ought they to be still the honorable seedes to put others also forward in this action: we commend this businesse againe to your speciall care. And so we commit you all, and your waighty affaires, to the protection of the Almighty.

HENRY Southampton.

§. III.

The barbarous Massacre committed by the Sauages on the English-Planters, March the two and twentieth, 1621. after the English accompt.

THe last May there came Letters from Sir Francis Wiat Gouernour in Virginia, which did aduertise that when in Nouember last he arriued in Virginia, and entred vpon his Gouernment, he found the Country setled in a peace (as all men there thought) sure and vnuiolable, not onely because it was solemnly ratified and sworne, and at the request of the Natiue King stamped in Brasse, and fixed to one of his Oakes of note, but as being aduantagious to both parts; to the Sauages as the weaker, vnder which they were safely sheltred and defended; to vs, as being the easiest way then thought to pursue and aduance our proiects, or buildings, plantings, and effecting their conuersion by peaceable and faire meanes. And such was the conceit of firme peace and amity, as that there was seldome or neuer a Sword worne, and a Peece seldomer, except for a Deere or Fowle. By which assurance of security, the Plantations of particular Aduenturers and Planters were placed scatteringly and straglingly as a choyce veine of rich ground inuited them, and the further from neighbours held the better. The houses generally set open to the Sauages, who were alwayes friendly entertained at the table of the English, and commonly lodged in their Bed-chambers. The old Planters (as they thought now come to reape the benefit of their long trauels) placed with wonderfull content vpon their priuate diuidends, and the planting of particular Hundreds and Colonies pursued with an hopefull alacrity, all our proiects (saith he) in a faire way, and their familiarity with the Natiues, seeming to open a faire gate for their conuersion to Christianity.

Hasty security.

Opachankanoes dissimulation occasioned by English security

The Country being in this estate, an occasion was ministred of sending to Opachankano the King of these Sauages, about the middle of March last, what time the Messenger returned backe with these words from him, That he held the peace concluded so firme, as the Skie should sooner fall then it dissolued: yea, such was the treacherous dissimulation of that people, who then had contriued our destruction, that euen two dayes before the massacre, some of our men were guided thorow the woods by them in safety: and one Browne, who then to learne the language liued among the Warrascoyacks (a Prouince of that King) was in friendly manner sent backe by them to Captaine Hamor his Master, and many the like passages, rather increasing our former confidence, then any wise in the world ministring the least suspition of the breach of the peace, or of what instantly ensued; yea, they borrowed our owne Boats to conuey themselues crosse the Riuer (on the bankes of both sides whereof all our Plantations were) to consult of the diuelliſh murder that ensued, and of our vtter extirpation, which God of his mercy (by the meanes of some of themselues conuerted to Christianity) preuented: and as well on the Friday morning (the fatall day) the two and twentieth of March, as also in the euening, as in other dayes before, they came vnarmed into our houses, without Bowes or Arrowes, or other weapons, with Deere, Turkies, Fish, Furres, and and other prouiſions, to ſell and trucke with vs for Glaſſe Beades, and other trifles: yea, in ſome places, ſat downe at Breakfaſt with our people at their tables, whom immediately with their owne tooles and weapons, either laid downe, or ſtanding in their houſes, they baſely and barbarouſly murthered, not ſparing either age or ſexe, man, woman or childe; ſo ſodaine in their cruell execution, that few or none diſcerned the weapon or blow that brought them to deſtruction. In which manner they alſo ſlew many of our people then at their ſeuerall workes and husbandries in the fields, and without their houſes, ſome in planting Corne and Tobacco, ſome in gardening, ſome in making Bricke, building, ſawing, and other kindes of husbandry, they well knowing in what places and quarters each of our men were, in regard of their daily familiarity, and resort to vs for trading and other negotiations, which the more willingly was by vs continued and cheriſhed for the deſire we had of effecting that great maſter-peece of workes, their conuerſion. And by this meanes that fatall Friday morning, there fell vnder the bloudy and barbarous hands of that perfidious and inhumane people, contrary to all lawes of God and Men, of Nature and Nations, three hundred and forty ſeuen men, women, and children, moſt by their owne weapons; and not being content with taking away life alone, they fell after againe vpon the dead, making as well as they could a freſh murder, defacing, dragging, and mangling the dead carkaſſes into many peeces, and carrying ſome parts away in deriſion, with baſe and bruitiſh triumph. Neither yet did theſe Beaſts ſpare thoſe amongſt the reſt well knowne vnto them, from whom they had daily receiued many benefits and fauours, but ſpitefully alſo maſſacred them.

347. ſlaine and baſely murthered, ſome think more.

One inſtance of it, amongſt too many ſhall ſerue for all.

That worthy religious Gentleman, Maſter George Thorpe Eſquire, Deputie of the Colledge lands, ſometimes one of his Maieſties Penſioners, and in one of the principall places of command in Virginia, did ſo truely and earneſtly affect their conuerſion, and was ſo tender ouer them, that whoſoeuer vnder his authority had giuen them but the leaſt diſpleaſure or diſcontent, hee puniſhed them ſeuerely. He thought nothing too deare for them, and as being deſirous to binde them vnto him by his many courteſies, he neuer denied them any thing that they asked him, inſomuch that when theſe Sauages complained vnto him of the fierceneſſe of our Maſtiues, moſt implacable and terrible vnto them (knowing them by inſtinct it ſeemes, to be but treacherous and falſe-hearted friends to vs, better then our ſelues) he to gratifie them in all things, for the winning of them by degrees, cauſed ſome of them to be killed in their preſence, to the great diſpleaſure of the owners, and would haue all the reſt guelt (had he not beene hindered) to make them the gentler and the milder to them. Hee was not onely too kinde and beneficiall to the common ſort, but alſo to their King, to whom he oft reſorted, and gaue many preſents which he knew to be highly pleaſing to him. And whereas this King before dwelt onely in a Cottage, or rather a denne or Hog-ſtye, made with a few poles and ſtickes, and couered with Mats after their wilde manner: to ciuilize him, he firſt built him a faire Houſe, according to the Engliſh faſhion, in which (as before is ſaid) he tooke ſuch ioy, eſpecially in his Locke and Key, which hee ſo admired, as locking and vnlocking his doore an hundred times a day, he thought no deuice in all the world was comparable to it.

He had written letters the yeare before, May 17 teſtifying the plentiful comming vp of the Cotten ſeede, &c. attributing the ill ſucceſſe of things, to the not ſeeking of Gods glory in conuerting the Natiues, which he ſaid were peaceable, & wanted but meanes (indeed to murther them, which this conceit procured) Sure binde, ſure find

Thus inſinuating himſelfe to this King for his Religious purpoſes, he conferred after with him oft, and intimated to him matters of our Religion; and thus farre the Pagan confeſſed, moued by naturall Principles, that our God was a good God, and better much then theirs, in that hee had with ſo many good things aboue them endowed vs. He told him, if he would ſerue our God, he ſhould be partaker of all thoſe good things we had, and of farre greater then ſence or reaſon euer could imagine. He won vpon him, as he thought in many things, ſo as hee gaue him faire hearing and good anſwer, and ſeemed to be much pleaſed with his diſcourſe, and in his companie. And both he and his people for the daily courteſies this good Gentleman did to one or other of them, did profeſſe ſuch outward loue and reſpect vnto him, as nothing could ſeeme more: but all was little regarded after by this Viperous brood, as the ſequell ſhewed: for they not onely wilfully murdered him, but cruelly and felly, out of a diuelliſh malice, did ſo many barbarous deſpights and foule ſcornes after to his dead corps, as are vnbefitting to be heard by any ciuill eare. One thing I cannot omit, that when this good Gentleman, vpon his fatall houre, was warned by his man (who perceiued ſome treachery intended to them by theſe hell-hounds) to looke to himſelfe, and withall ran away for feare of the miſchiefe he ſtrongly apprehended, and ſo ſaued his owne life; yet his Maſter, out of the conſcience of his owne good meaning, and faire deſerts euer towards them, was ſo voide of all ſuſpition, and ſo full of confidence, that they had ſooner killed him, then he could or would beleeue they meant any ill againſt him.

Pitty ſuch an Abel ſhould be ſo *Kain*deceiued.

At the time of this Maſſacre there were three or foure of our Ships in Iames Riuer, and one in the next Riuer, and daily more to come in, as three did within foureteene daies after; one of which they endeuoured to haue ſurpriſed, but in vaine, as had alſo beene their whole attempt, had any the leaſt fore-knowledge beene in thoſe places where the Maſſacre was committed: yet were the hearts of the Engliſh euer ſtupid, and auerted from beleeuing any thing that might weaken their hopes of ſpeedy winning the Sauages to Ciuilitie and Religion, by kinde vſage and faire conuerſing amongſt them. Hee, and the whole Counſell writ further, That Almighty God

Digitized by Google

(they doubt not) hath his great worke to doe in this Tragedy, and will thereout draw honour and glory to his great Name; ſafety, and a more flouriſhing eſtate to themſelues, and the whole Plantation there; and the more ſpeedy conuerſion of the Children of thoſe Sauages to himſelfe, ſince he ſo miraculouſly preſerued ſo many of the Engliſh, whoſe deſire to draw thoſe people to Religion, by the careleſſe neglect of their owne ſafeties, ſeemes to haue beene the greateſt cauſe of their owne enſuing deſtruction. Yet it pleaſed God to vſe ſome of them as inſtruments to ſaue many of their liues, whoſe ſoules they had formerly ſaued, as at Iames Citie, and other places, and the Pinnace trading in Pamounkey Riuer; all whoſe liues were ſaued by a conuerted Indian, diſcloſing the plot in the inſtant.

Conuerted Indian.

Manner of the Sauages life.

Theſe wilde naked Natiues liue not in great numbers together, but diſperſed, and in ſmall companies; and where moſt together, not aboue two hundred, and that very rare, in other places fifty or forty, or thereabouts, and many miles diſtant from one another, in ſuch places among the Woods where they either found, or might eaſelieſt make ſome cleared plots of ground, which they imploy wholly in ſetting of Corne, whereby to ſuſtaine their liues. Theſe ſmall and ſcattered Companies (as I haue ſaid) had warning giuen from one another in all their habitations to meete at the day and houre appointed for our deſtruction, at all our ſeuerall Townes and places ſeated vpon the Riuer; ſome were directed to goe to one place, ſome to another, all to be done at the ſame day and time, which they did accordingly: ſome entring their Houſes vnder colour of trucking, and ſo taking aduantage, others drawing our men abroad vpon faire pretences, and the reſt ſuddenly falling vpon thoſe that were at their labours.

By Letters and thoſe that returned it is certified, that beſides Maſter George Thorpe, before mentioned, Maſter Iohn Berkeley, Captaine Nathaniel Pomel, and his wife (daughter of Maſter William Tracy, and great with childe) and Captaine Maycocke, all Gentlemen of birth, vertue, and induſtry, and of the Councell there, ſuffered vnder this their cruelty and treaſon. That the ſlaughter had beene vniuerſall, if God had not put it into the heart of an Indian belonging to one Perry, to diſcloſe it, who liuing in the houſe of one Pace, was vrged by another Indian his brother (who came the night before and lay with him) to kill Pace (ſo commanded by their King, as he declared) as he would kill Perry: telling further, that by ſuch an houre in the morning, a number would come from diuers places to finiſh the Execution; who failed not at the time: Perries Indian role out of his bed and reueales it to Pace, that vſed him as a Sonne: And thus the reſt of the Colony that had warning giuen them, by this meanes was ſaued. Such was (God be thanked for it) the good fruit of an Infidell conuerted to Chriſtianity; for though three hundred and more of ours died by many of theſe Pagan Infidels, yet thouſands of ours were ſaued by the meanes of one of them alone which was made a Chriſtian: Bleſſed be God for euer, whoſe mercy endureth for euer; Bleſſed be God whoſe mercy is aboue his iuſtice, and farre aboue all his works; who wrought this deliuerance whereby their ſoules eſcaped euen as a Bird out of the ſnare of the Fowler.

Pace vpon this diſcouery, ſecuring his houſe, before day rowed ouer the Riuer to Iames City (in that place neere three miles in bredth) and gaue notice thereof to the Gouernour, by which meanes they were preuented there, and at ſuch other Plantations as was poſſible for a timely intelligence to be giuen; for where they ſaw vs ſtanding vpon our Guard, at the ſight of a Peece they all ranne away. In other places that could haue no notice, ſome Peeces with munition (the vſe whereof they know not) were there carried away, and ſome few Cattell alſo were deſtroyed by them. And as Fame diuulgeth (not without probable grounds) their King hath ſince cauſed the moſt part of the Gunpowder by him ſurprized, to be ſowne, to draw there-from the like increaſe, as of his Maiz or Corne, in Harueſt next. And that it is ſince diſcouered, that the laſt Summer Opachankano practiſed with a King of the Eaſterne ſhoare (no well-willer of his) to furniſh him with ſtore of poiſon (naturally growing in his Countrey) for our deſtruction, which hee abſolutely refuſed, though he ſent him great ſtore of Beades, and other Preſents to winne him thereunto: which he, with fiue or ſix of his great men, offered to be ready to iuſtifie againſt him. That the true cauſe of this ſurprize was moſt by the inſtigation of the Diuell (enemy to their ſaluation) and the daily feare that poſſeſt them, that in time wee by our growing continually vpon them, would diſpoſſeſſe them of this Country, as they had beene formerly of the Weſt Indies by the Spaniard; produced this bloudy act. That neuer griefe and ſhame poſſeſſed any people more then themſelues, to be thus butchered by ſo naked and cowardly a people, who dare not ſtand the preſentment of a ſtaffe in manner of a Peece, nor an vncharged Peece in the hands of a Woman, from which they flye as ſo many Hares; much faſter then from their tormenting Diuell, whom they worſhip for feare, though they acknowledge they loue him not.

Gunpowder ſowne, practiſed before in Captain Smiths time.

§. IIII.

A Note of prouisions necessarie for euery Planter or personall Aduenturer to Virginia: and accidents since the Massacre.

THe Inconuniences that haue happened to some persons which haue transported themselues from England to Virginia, without prouisions necessary to sustaine themselues, hath greatly hindered the Progresse of that Noble Plantation: For preuention of the like disorders hereafter, that no man suffer either through ignorance or misinformation; it is thought requisite to publish this short Declaration: wherein is contayned a particular of such necessaries, as either priuate Families or single persons shall haue cause to furnish themselues with, for their better support at their first landing in Virginia; whereby also greater numbers may receiue in part, directions how to prouide themselues.

Apparell for one man and so after the rate for more.

One Monmouth Cap	1.s.10.d.
Three falling bands	1.s.3.d.
Three shirts	7.s.6.d.
One Waste-coate	2.s.2.d.
One sute of Cannase	7.s.6.d.
One sute of Frize	10.s.
One sute of Cloth	15.s.
Three paire of Irish stockins	4.s.
Foure paire of shooes	8.s.8.
One paire of garters	10.
One dozen of points	3.d.
One paire of Cannase sheets	8.s.
Seuen Ells of Cannase, to make a bed and boulster, to be filled in Virginia	8.s.
One Rug for a bed 8.s. which with the bed serning for two men, halfe is	8.s.
Fiue Ells coorse Cannase, to make a bed at Sea for two men, to be filled with straw 4.s.	5.s.
One coorse Rug at Sea for two men, will cost 6.s. is for one.	4.li.

Victuall for a whole yeere for one man and so for more after the rate.

Eight bushels of Meale	2.li.
Two bushels of Pease at 3.s.	6.s.
Two bushels of Oatmeale 4.s.6.d.	9.s.
One gallon of Aquauitæ	2.s.6.
One gallon of Oyle	3.s.6.d.
Two gallons of Vineger 1.s.	2.s.
	3.li.3.s.

Armes for one man, but if halfe of your men haue Armour it is sufficient, so that all haue Peeces and Swords.

One Armour compleat, light	17.s.
One long Piece, fiue foot or fiue and a halfe, neere Musket bore	1.li.2.s.
One Sword	5.s.
One Belt	1.s.
One Bandaleere	1.s.6.d.
Twentie pound of Powder	18.s.
Sixtie pound of shot or lead, Pistoll and Goose shot	5.s.
	3.li.9.s.6.d.

Tooles for a Family of sixe persons, and so after the rate for more.

Fiue broad howes at 2.s. a piece	10.s.
Fiue narrow howes at 16.d. a piece	6.s.8.d.
Two broad Axes at 3.s.8.d. a piece	7.s.4.d.
Fiue felling Axes at 18.d. a piece	7.s.6.d.
Two Steele Hand-sawes at 16.d. a piece	2.s.8.d.
Two two-hand-sawes at 5.s. a piece	10.s.
One whip-saw, set and filed with boxe, file and wrest	10.s.
Two Hammers 12.d. a piece	2.s.
Three shouels 18.d. a piece	4.s.6.d.
Two Spades at 18.d. a piece	3.s.
Two Augers 6.d. a piece	1.s.
Six Chissels 6.d. a piece	3.s.
Two percers stocked 4.d. a piece	8.d.
Three gimblets 2.d. a piece	6.d.
Two hatchets 21.d. a piece	3.s.6.d.
Two frowes to cleaue pale 18.d.	3.s.
Two hand bils 20. a piece	3.s.4.d.
One Grindlestone 4.s.	4.s.
Nailes of all sorts to the value of	2.li.
Two Pickaxes	3.s.
	6.li.2.s.8.d.

Houshold Implements for a Family of six persons, and so for more or lesse after the rate.

One Iron Pot	7.s.
One Kettle	6.s.
One large frying-pan	2.s.6.d.
One Griddiron	1.s.6.d.
Two Skillets	5.s.
One Spit	2.s.
Platters, dishes, Spoones of wood	4.s.
	1.li.8.s.

For Sugar, Spice, and fruit and at Sea for six men 12.s.6.d.

So the full charge of apparell victuall, armes, tooles, & houshold-stuffe and after this rate for each person, will amount vnto about the sum of 12.l.10.s.

The passage of each man is 6.li.

The fraight of these prouisions for a man, will be about halfe a Tun, which is 1.li.10.s.

So the whole charge wil amount to about 20.l.

Nets, Hookes, Lines, and a Tent must be added if the number of people be greater, as also some Kine.

And this is the vsuall proportion that the Virginia Company doe bestow vpon their Tenants which they send.

Whosoeuer transports himselfe or any other at his owne charge vnto Virginia, shall for each person so transported before Midsummer 1625. haue to him and his heires for euer fiftie Acres of Land vpon a first, and fiftie Acres vpon a second diuision.

Cap. Iob Smith. M. Porie. Naked breast concealed beast.

Sir George Yeardly intending to visit Smiths Ile, fell sicke and thereupon sent Master Porey with Estinion Moll a Frenchman to finde a conuenient place to make Salt, in Namenicus King of Pawtuxunt came and shewed them his naked breast, protesting the inside to be as free ill meaning, as that from deformitie, and promising welcome if they would come into his Countrey, which they promised. After this they hauing conferred with Kiptopeke King of Aquohanok, they passed Russels Ile and Onancoke, and arriued at Pawtuxunt, at Attoughcomoco the habitation of Namenacus, and Wamanato his brother, who came aboord them with a brasse Kettle bright without, within full of Oysters. Hee was shewed their hunting conducted forth by the younger and home by the elder: presented also with Beauers skinnes, which hee requited with such things as Wamanato said he would keepe them while hee liued, and burie them with him being dead: Namenacus his breast proued vlcerous within and treacherous, but without harme to them by reason of their circumspection: an ambush being prouided in a Wood at a point where they would haue had them land. Kiptokepe is the elder brother, and yeelded the moytie of his Countrie to the younger, bearing still the greater burthen in gouernment but lesse honour, whereas on the Westerne shore, the younger beares the charge, the elder the dignitie. These are the most thriftie Sauages, keeping Corne for all the yeere and hauing to spare, whereas others want for one halfe. They are also more ciuill, iust reckoners, vse no Black-boy-ceremonies, and in Affinitie and Consanguinitie obserue a larger distance in their Marriages.

Prouident Sauages.

Anno 1622. the Abigail was sent, and therein Captaine Barwick with fiue and twentie men to build ships and Boats, and others to build the East Indie Schoole. That fatall Massacre, some thinke to haue beene occasioned by Nemattanow, a Sauage called vsually Iacke of the Feather, in best esteeme amongst them for courage and policie; who perswading one Morgan to go with him to Pamaunke to trucke, by the way slue him two or three dayes after hee returned to Morgans house, and answered his Seruants asking for their Master that hee was dead, whereupon they would haue had him to Master Thorpe, but hee so moued their patience that they shot him. Hee (whom the Sauages esteemed free from hurt by the English and shot free) desired before his death that they would bury him with the English, and not make it knowne that hee was slaine with a bullet. Opechancanough was moued with his losse so as he threatned reuenge, which he could not effect but by treacherous pretence of greatest peace, after fourteene dayes by so many deaths, giuing life to the following Tragedie: which you heard deliuered by publike Authoritie.

Iack of the Feather. Cause of the Massacre.

This terrible blow so affrighted all that it was concluded, that all the pettie Plantations should be left, to make good a few places (some say fiue or six) whither for want of Boats their goods and cattell could not be so suddenly conueyed, but that much was exposed to the Sauages cruell gleanings. Master Gookins at Nuports newes, hauing thirtie fiue of all sorts with him refused that order, and made good his part against the Sauages. Master Iordan at Beggars Bush gathered a few about him, and fortified himselfe in despight of the enemie. Mistris Proctor would haue aduentured the like, and did it for three weekes till the Officers (as some report) would no longer permit her. Captaine Nuse and Captaine Crawshaw are much for prouidence and valour commended. Waters and his wife were kept prisoners by the Nansamunds (this Edward Waters is one of those three which first stayed in Bermuda, and found the great piece of Ambergreece) whence by chance vpon occasion of a Boat lost by ill weather (whose company were saued) and comming on their shoare, they being busied in their Triumphs and Dances for ioy, they found opportunitie to get into a Canoa, and escaped to Kecoughtan. Captaine Nuce called his Neighbours together when he heard of the Massacre, entrenched himselfe, and mounted three Peeces of Ordnance, so that in foure dayes hee was strong enough to defend himselfe against all the Barbarian forces. Captaine Crashaw with fiue others fortified himselfe in despight of all the Sauages, with the helpe of other Sauages, and made offer to the Colonie, if they would send him a shallop with Armes, men and prouision for Trade, that the next Harueſt he would prouide them Corne sufficient, which then (in the latter end of Iune) was little to bee had in the Countrie. Captaine Maddeson is reported to haue giuen ouer-hastie credit to an exiled King, which comming to Patowomeke for succour and not obtayning it, in reuenge deuised and slandered the Patowomekes with intent of betraying and killing the English: which credulitie produced effects of crueltie and the conceits of bloudie treacherie conceiued (if others conceiue not falsly) treacherie and bloud.

M. Gookins. M. Iordan. Mistris Proctor.

The last Summer 1623. they set forth a company which destroyed the Sauages Corne and houses, and surprized Pamaunke chiefe Seat of Opechancanough. And the last report is that the Colonie is now in health, and that the Sauages haue returned seuen of the English which they held prisoners, out of selfe guiltinesse and feare of reuenge seeing ships still come thither, and wearie of their watchings and manifold losses and dangers. Opechankanough the authour of the Massacre is said to haue come to his end by meanes more sutable to his deserts, then perhaps agreeing with Christian simplicitie. A sickneſſe after the Massacre fell amongst the English, by reason that from neere eightie Plantations, they were brought to fewer then eight, these distracted with a sudden remoone and distressed wants. It is thought that 1800. suruiued both.

His

His Maieſtie not a little moued with the loſſe of ſo many his good Subiects, and ſome complaints alſo being made of the Gouernment, many of the Virginian Company here holding no ſuch vniforme agreement as was meete: both ſhewed his gracious bountie in the gift of diuers Armes out of the Towre, with further promiſes of his aſſiſtance; and appointed Commiſſioners to examine the Cauſes of Virginias not anſwering to the care and coſt in ſo long time beſtowed on her. I am no fit Relater of things inſuing; and farre vnfitter Vmpire in ſuch differences. I will now ſpeake to God rather than men: Quid enim niſi vota ſuperſunt. My Prayers ſhall be to the Almightie for Virginias proſperitie; whoſe Dwarfiſh growth after ſo many yeeres, conuulſions by diſſentions there and heere, lamentaions in the complaints of both ſides (a Pluriſie Stitch in her ſides, continuing after ſo much blood taken from her) weakneſſe. Sinne armes after ſuch ſucceſſions of armes and forces; Tantalean ſtaruings amidſt both Magazines and fertilitie; ſubuerſions here, and ſelfe-ouerſions there (peruerſneſſe I mention not) rather then conuerſions of Sauages after ſo many learned and holy Diuines ſent thither; powertie, ſickneſſe, deaths, in ſo rich a Soyle, and healthfull a Climate; what ſhould I ſay? I can deplore, I doe not much admire, that we haue had ſo much in Virginia, and haue ſo little; the promiſes as probable as large, and yet the promiſſes yeelding in the concluſion this Virginian ſteriliſie, and meagreneſſe rather then the multiplied iſſue and thrift of a worthy Matron and Mother of a Family, anſwerable to her great Inheritance there, and Ioynter from hence. But what doe I in plaints, where ſome perhaps will complaine of my complayning? I will expect better from God and his Maieſtie, and while my ſelfe meane-while in the better thriuing of the Engliſh Colonie in Bermudas or Summer Ilands.

CHAP. XVI.

Engliſh Voyges to the Summer Ilands; HENRY MAYS ſhipwracke there 1593. The firſt Colonie ſent 1612.

IT is now time to leaue the Continent and viſit Bermudas, of Sir George Summers called Summer Ilands. The occaſion you had before related by Maſter Strachie, and that ſome of their Company tooke vp their abode there. This was not the firſt time that Engliſh eyes had ſeene thoſe Ilands. For in the yeere 1593. Henry May had beene there; one of Captaine Lancaſters Company, which had beene in the Eaſt Indies, and in returning had put ouer to Trinidad, and thence to Puerto Rico and Hiſpaniola for refreſhing, where Captaine Lancaſter deſired a Frenchman Monſieur de Barbotiere, to giue this Henry May paſſage home with him. They departed from Lagund the laſt of Nouember, and December the ſeuenteenth were wracked on the North-weſt part of Bermuda about midnight. The Pilots making themſelues at noone to be twelue leagues to the Southwards of the Iland, certified the Captaine that they were from all danger: and demanded their wine of height, which they had thought they had beene caſt away by the ſhore, but were ſeuen leagues off; by the helpe of their Boat, and a Raft, ſixe and twentie of aboue fiftie were ſaued. I (ſaith May) durſt not preſſe in, but ſtayed in the ſhip almoſt full of water, till the Captaine being entred the Boat, called me to him, and I entred leauing the better halfe of our company to the mercie of the Sea. We rowed all day till an houre or two before night, yet we could come on Land towing the Raft with the Boat. Hauing beene all day without drinke, wee ſought long, and at laſt one digging among weeds, found freſh water being only raine water, which was all we found. It pleaſed God that we had ſaued our Carpenters tooles, and going roundly to worke, we built a Barke of ſome eighteene tun, for the moſt part with trunnels and a few nailes. For tacklings we made a Voyage to our ſhip and cut downe her ſhrouds; in ſtead of Pitch wee made Lime and mixed it with the Oyle of Tortoiſes; aſſoone as the Carpenters had calked, ſpreading it on with a ſticke, which was ſoone dried by the heat, being in Aprill wee haſted away for feare of water failing vs. We made two great chiſts and calked them, and ſtowed them on each ſide our maine Maſt, and ſo put in our prouiſions of raine water, and thirteene liuing Tortoyſes for our food. The Hogs were leane, and there was ſtore of Fowle, Fiſh and Tortoyſes. There is alſo good fiſhing for Pearles.

Sup. cap. 6.

The eleuenth of May we were cleere of the Land for our Voyage to New-found-land, and on the twentieth fell with the Land neere to Cape Briton, and thence to the Banke of New-found-land, where a Barke of Falmouth tooke vs in, wherein I had paſſage home, and arriued at Falmouth in Auguſt 1594. Thus much for May.

Let vs now heare the Relation ſent from an Engliſh Colonie planted there vnder the gouernment of Maſter Richard Moore. This following Diſcourſe hath beene printed, and was added to a Tractate of Maſter Siluеſter Iordan touching the wracke of Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers on the Bermudas, which beeing deliuered more fully by Maſter Strachie ſup. cap. 6. I haue here omitted, and proceed to the Engliſh proceedings in thoſe Ilands.

Being bound for the Sommer Ilands, in the Ship called the Plough, wee imbarked the eight and twentwentieth of Aprill, 1612. So passing downe to Graueſend, wee anchored at Tilbery-hope, vntill the fifth of May. The wind comming faire, wee put forth and came to the Downes the ſixth of May, where we ſtaied till the ninth. And then ſetting forward wee had a faire and comfortable paſſage, and by Gods bleſſing found ſo direct a courſe, that on the eleuenth of Iuly in the morning, betwixt nine and ten of the clocke wee deſcried our hoped and deſired Ilands, and in the afternoone of the ſame day, about three a clocke, wee arriued in a verie ſafe harbour neere S. Georges Iland, there wee landed all our men and women, and had beene at anchor aboue an houre, before wee could heare of our three men which had beene left there. As ſoone as wee had landed all our company, we went all to praier, and gaue thankes vnto the Lord for our ſafe arriuall; and whileſt wee were at praier, wee ſaw our three men come rowing downe to vs, the ſight of whom did much reioyce vs: ſo they welcomming vs, and wee the like to them againe, we ſung a Pſalme, and praiſed the Lord for our ſafe meeting, and went to ſupper.

Saint Georges Iland.

Three men had ſtaied behind, and went not to Virginia, Harter, Water, and Chard.

The next day, being the Sabbath day, which wee dedicated to God in the beſt manner wee could, wee abode ſtill in the foreſaid Iland, with all the reſt of our company till Munday morning, being the thirteenth of Iuly: Then we went vp with our Ship and company higher into the harbour, to the place where theſe three men had planted themſelues. They had planted Corne, great ſtore of Wheat, Beanes, Tobacco and Mellons, with many other good things for the vſe of man: Beſides they had wrought vpon Timber, in ſquaring and ſawing of Cedar Trees, for they intended to build a ſmall Pinnace to carrie them into Virginia, being almoſt out of hope and comfort of our comming; becauſe Cap. Danies time was to haue beene with them long before we came.

Commodites of the Countrie.

Fiſhes.

Wee were no ſooner come within a league of the Land, but a company of Fiſh, as it were, met vs, and neuer left vs till wee were come to an ankor within the harbour; and as ſoone as we had paſſed ouer our buſineſſe, and all things ſafe and in order, with a Hooke and Line wee tooke more then our whole company was able to eate, ſo that there was enough to feed many more. The next day after the Sabbath, wee went with our Net and Boat, and if we would haue loaded two Boats wee might; and ſo may you do day by day, Fiſhes doe ſo abound, and there be of theſe ſorts, Mullets, Breames, Hog-fiſh, Rock-fiſh and Lobſtars, with more ſorts of other Fiſh which I cannot name.

Tortoiſes great, and of great vſe.

Turkles there be of a mightie bigneſſe; one Turkle will ſerue or ſuffice three or foure ſcore at a meale, eſpecially if it be a ſhee Turkle, for ſhee will haue as many Egges as will ſuffice fiftie or threeſcore at a meale: This I can aſſure you, they are verie good and wholſome meat, none of it bad, no not ſo much as the verie Guts and Maw of it, for they are exceeding fat, and make as good Tripes as your beaſts bellies in England. And for Fowle we went the third day of our arriuall vnto the Bird Ilands (as wee call them) and vſing neither Stick, nor Stone-bow, nor Gun, we tooke them vp with our hands ſo many as wee would, that euerie one of the company were to haue ſome three, ſome foure a piece; three for a child, boy or girle, for a man foure; then reckon what thoſe that ſerued ſome foureſcore people did amount vnto. But this is for certaine, if wee would haue brought awaie twice ſo many, more we might.

Fowle.

Hogs by reaſon of their food there, and our mens ſtomackes, extraordinarily ſweet.

Some ſixe daies after our comming, wee ſent out for Hogges, ſo the company which went out brought home ſome: for the meate of them, I hold your Mutton of England not of ſo ſweet and pleaſant a taſte.

The weather.

For the inclination of the weather, conſidering in what climate it lies, wee haue had for the ſpace of ſome fortie daies no raine, but verie coole and freſh gales of wind, yet in the day time verie hot: but wee agree with it verie well, and not a man that had lien ſicke or diſeaſed, but all likes well, and followes and imploies themſelues to one buſineſſe or other.

Fruits.

Peares not hurtfull.

For the fruites which the Land yeelds, they bee the Mulberrie, great ſtore, and Peares which haue in them a red liquor, as the Pomgranat hath, or ſomewhat redder, but verie wholſome: if you eate an hundred at one time, you ſhall neuer ſurfet of them, if you eate ſome proportion of them they will bind, but if you exceed in eating of them, then are they of the contrarie operation: yet neuer any that hurt themſelues by them, eate they neuer ſo many. It is certaine, that one man eate aboue a peck of them in ſome ten houres, and was neuer the worſe.

Cedar Berries. Palmitos.

We haue a kind of Berrie vpon the Cedar Tree verie pleaſant to eate; and for the Palmito Tree, the top of it is a great deale ſweeter and wholſomer then any Cabedge.

Pepper.

In ſome of our Ilands there growes Pepper, but not ſo good as our Indian Pepper: diuers ſorts of other good things there is, which the ſeuerall times of the yeere bring forth one after another: but the top of the Palmito Tree is in ſeaſon and good all the yeere. Take a Hatchet and cut him or an Augar and bore him, and it yeelds a very pleaſant liquor, much like vnto your ſweet Wines; it beares likewiſe a Berrie in bigneſſe of a Prune, and in taſte much like.

Palme-liquor.

Alſo wee haue Oliues grow with vs, but no great ſtore: many other good excellent things wee haue grow with vs, which this ſhort time will not permit mee to write of ſo largely as I might; but this is of truth, that Hogs, Turkles, Fiſh, and Fowle doe abound as duſt of the earth: for Amber-greece and Pearle wee haue not had leaſure, in ſo few daies ſince our arriuall to goe looke out for the one, or to fiſh for the other; but the three men which were left there, haue found of them both. Alſo they haue made a great deale of Tobacco, and if ſome would come that haue Ambergreece and Pearle.

Tobacco.

skill

skill in making it, it would be verie commodious, both to the Merchant, and to the maker of it. And for the Silk-worme, if any were brought ouer, and some of skill to vse them, there would bee very much good done with them, for the verie Spider in these our Ilands doth weaue perfect fine Silke, both Yellow and White.

Silk spider, Timber Trees. * I haue omitted the rest of this discourse, as being better knowne to later Writers.

The Timber of the Countrey consisteth of three sorts, the one is the Cedar, verie fine Timber to worke vpon, of colour red, and verie sweet: the other sorts we haue no name for, for there is none in the company hath seene the like in other Countries before we came, &c.

A Copie of the Articles which Master R. MORE, Gouernour Deputie of the Sommer Ilands, propounded to the Company that were there with him to be subscribed vnto, which both he and they subscribed the second of August, in his house, Anno 1612. which about the same time he sent into England, to the Worshipfull Company of the Aduenturers.

WEe, who haue here vnder subscribed our names, being by the great goodnesse of God safely arriued at the Sommer Ilands, with purpose here to inhabite, doe hereby promise and bind our selues to the performance of the seuerall Articles hereafter following, and that in the presence of the most glorious God, who hath in mercy brought vs hither.

First, We doe faithfully promise, and by these presents solemnly binde our selues euer-more to worship that aforesaid only true and euerliuing God, who hath made the Heauens, and the Earth, the Sea, and all that therein is, and that according to those rules that are prescribed in his most holy Word, and euer to continue in that faith into the which wee were baptised in the Church of England, and to stand in defence of the same against all Atheists, Papists, Anabaptists, Brownists, and all other Heretikes and Sectaries whatsoeuer, dissenting from the said Word and Faith.

Secondly, because the keeping of the Sabboth day holy, is, that wherein a principall part of Gods worship doth consist, and is as it were the Key of all the other parts thereof, wee do therefore in the presence aforesaid promise, That wee will set apart all our owne labours and imployments on that day, vnlesse it be those that be of meere necessitie, much more vaine and vnfruitfull practises, and apply our selues to the hearing of Gods Word, Prayer, and all other exercises of Religion in his Word required, to the vttermost of our power.

Thirdly, Seeing the true worship of God and holy life cannot be seuered, we doe therefore promise in the presence aforesaid, That to the vttermost of our power we will liue together in doing that which is iust, both towards God and Man, and in particular we will forbeare to take the most holy name of God in vaine, in ordinary swearing by it, or any other thing, or by scoffing, or vaine abusing of his most holy Word, or to vse cursing, or filthy speeches, or any other thing forbidden in Gods most holy Word, as also to liue together without stealing one from another, or quarrelling one with another, or slandering one of another: And to auoide all things that stand not with the good estate of a Christian Church and well gouerned Common-wealth, as also to embrace the contrary, as Iustice, and Peace, Loue, and all other things that stand with the good and comfort of Societie.

Fourthly, Whereas we are here together farre remote from our natiue soile of England, and yet are indeed the naturall Subiects of our most Royall and gracious King IAMES of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Wee doe therefore in the presence aforesaid, solemnly promise euermore to continue the loyall Subiects of our said Soueraigne King, his Heires and Successors, and neuer to reuolt from him, or them, vnto any other whatsoeuer, but euermore to acknowledge his Supreme Gouernment.

Fiftly, Whereas wee were sent hither by diuers Aduenturers of the Citie of London, and other parts of the Realme of England, wee doe here in the presence aforesaid promise to vse all diligence for the good of the Plantation, and not to purloyne or imbesell any of the prohibited commodities out of the generall estate, but to vse all faithfulnesse, as it becommeth Christians to doe, as also to bee obedient to all such Gouernour or Gouernours, or their Deputie or Deputies, as are, or shall be by them sent to gouerne vs; As also to yeeld all reuerence towardes the Ministery or Ministers of the Gospel, sent, or to be sent.

Sixtly and lastly, Wee doe here in presence aforesaid promise, the Lord assisting vs, that if at any time hereafter any forrain power shall attempt to put vs out of this our lawful possession, not cowardly to yeeld vp the same, but manfully to fight as true English men, for the defence of the Common-wealth we liue in, and Gospel wee professe, and that whiles we haue breath wee will not yeeld to any, that shall inuade vs vpon any conditions whatsoeuer.

I had thought hitherto to haue added a Letter of M. Hughes, written from thence, Dec: 21. 1614. and printed. But our latter intelligence, being more ample, hath caused mee to omit him and others; Yea all things in some, and some things in all. M. Norwood hath beene a diligent

Surueyor

Digitized by Google

Surueyor of the place and accidents, and hath giuen a Map of the one (common to be sold) and a briefe relation of the other. But because his History of the Creatures is briefe, I haue borrowed out of Captaine Smith, what he had borrowed of Capt. Butler, and others to giue the Reader more full satisfaction in that kind.

CHAP. XVII.

Relations of Summer Ilands, taken out of M. RICHARD NORWOOD, his Map and Notes added thereto, printed 1622. The History of the Creatures growing or liuing therein, being inlarged out of Capt. SMITHS written Relations.

SIr Thomas Gates, and Sir George Sommers, hauing staied in Bermuda nine moneths, with helpe of such things as they saued with the Sea-venture, and of such as they found in the Countrey, had built of Cedar, and rigged fit for the Sea, two Vessels, a Ship and a Pinnace, and vpon the tenth of May, 1610. departed toward Virginia, leauing onely two men behind them, and carrying them store of prouision for the releife of the people there. Vpon the foure and twentieth of May, they arriued safely there, and shortly after some of them returned to the Sommer Ilands againe for a further supply, in the same Ship which they had formerly built there; where Sir George Sommers dying, his men did not according to his last charge giuen vnto them, returne to Virginia; but framed their course for England, leauing behind them three men, that staied voluntarily, who shortly after found in Sommerset Iland, which is a part of Sandys Tribe, a verie great treasure in Ambergreece, to the valew of nine or ten thousand pound sterling: there hath also been found since diuers times of the best sort.

Ambergreece.

This new discouery of the Sommer Ilands, being thus made knowne in England, to the Virginian Company, by these men which returned, they sold it to some hundred and twentie persons of the same Company, who obtained a Charter from his Maiestie, and so hold it. And toward the latter end of Aprill, 1612. sent thither a Ship, called the Plough, with some sixtie persons to inhabite, appointing Gouernour one Master Richard Moore, a man ingenuous and carefull, who since dyed in Sir Walter Rawlyes last voyage to Guiana, (a place as appeareth by our Moderne Geographers, very rich and spatious.) But, as I say, he arriued there about the beginning of July, and found the foresaid three men that staied voluntarily, very well. Master Moore spent the three yeeres of his gouernment, for the most part in fortifying the Countrey, and trayning the people in Martiall exercises, which custome hath beene continued by his successours: hee built some nine or tenne Forts, placing Ordnance and Munition in them. In his time, the Lord sent vpon the Countrey, a very grieuous scourge and punishment, threatning the vtter ruine and desolation of it: That it came from God I need not striue to proue, especially considering it was generally so acknowledged by vs at that time: The causes and occasions of it, I need not name, being very well knowne to vs all that then liued there, which were about sixe hundred persons, thought shortly after much diminished. I will onely shew the thing it selfe, which was a wonderfull annoyance, by silly Rats: These Rats comming at the first out of a Ship, few in number, increased in the space of two yeeres, or lesse, so exceedingly, that they filled not onely those places where they were first landed: But swimming from place to place, spread themselues into all parts of the Countrey. Insomuch, that there was no Iland, though seuered by the Sea from all other Lands, and many miles distant from the Iles where the Rats had their originall, but was pestered with them. They had their Nests almost in euery Tree, and in all places their Burrowes in the ground (like Conies) to harbour in. They spared not the fruits of Plants and Trees, neither the Plants themselues, but eate them vp. When wee had set our Corne, they would commonly come by troupes the night following, or so soone as it began to grow, and digge it vp againe. If by diligent watching any of it were preserued till it came to earing, it should then very hardly scape them. Yea, it was a difficult matter after wee had it in our houses, to saue it from them, for they became noysome euen to the persons of men. Wee vsed all diligence for the destroying of them, nourishing many Cats, wilde and tame, for that purpose; wee vsed Rats-bane, and many times set fire on the Woods, so as the fire might run halfe a mile or more before it were extinct: Euery man in the Countrey was enioyned to set twelue Traps, and some of their owne accord set neere a hundred, which they visited twice or thrice in a night. Wee trayned vp our Dogs to hunt them, wherein they grew so expert, that a good Dog in two or three houres space, would kill fortie of fiftie Rats, and other meanes we vsed to destroy them, but could not preuaile, finding them still to increase against vs.

Rat-plague.

How vaine a thing is man, whose best wits and industry are triumphed ouer by silly Rats? Great God, giue vs grace to feare thee, that we may feare nothing else: else shall we feare with Pharao Frogs, Lice, Flies, Grashoppers or with others, Fleas, Sparrowes, &c. Yea a few Rats, in despite of Cats Dogs, Traps, poisons, shall starue vs.

And this was the principall cause of that great distresse, whereunto wee were driuen in the first planting of the Countrey, for these, deuouring the fruits of the earth, kept vs destitute of bread

a yeere

a yeere or two, so that, when wee had it afterwardes againe, wee were so weaned from it, that wee should easily neglect and forget to eate it with our meat. We were also destitute at that time of Boats, and other prouision for fishing. And moreouer, Master Moore had receiued warning from England, that hee should expect the Spaniard that yeere, yet they came not, but with two ships, attempting to come in, and hauing their Boat before them to sound the way, were shot at by the said Master Moore from Kings Castle, and as we supposed one of them stricken through, whereupon they presently departed. But (as I say) this expectation of them caused vs (though in great necessitie) to hasten the fortifications of the Countrey. All these ioyntly (but principally the Rats) were the causes of our distresse: for being destitute of food, many dyed, and wee all became very feeble and weake, whereof some being so, would not; others could not stir abroad to seeke reliefe, but dyed in their houses: such as went abroad were subiect, through weakenesse, to bee suddenly surprized with a disease we called the Feages, which was neither paine nor sickenesse, but as it were the highest degree of weakenesse, depriuing vs of power and abilitie for the execution of any bodily exercise, whether it were working, walking, or what else. Being thus taken, if there were any in company that could minister any reliefe, they would straightwayes recouer, otherwise they dyed there: Yet many after a little rest would be able to walke again, and then if they found any succour were saued. The Feags.

About this time, or immediately before, came thither a company of Rauens, which continued with vs all the time of this mortalitie, and then departed. There were not before that time, nor since (so far as I heare) any more of them seene there. And this, with some other reasons of more moment, moued many to thinke that there was some other Ilands neere the Sommer Ilands, betweene Virginia, and it; and M. Moore (in his time, with some other of vs) went forth in a Boat so far as then wee could conueniently, of purpose to discouer it: Since then, it hath beene endeauoured by other, and is yet (as I heare) to be further attempted. And howsoeuer I am perswaded (for certaine causes which I cannot here relate) there is no such thing; Yet would I not disanimate any from this enterprise, for if they find any, their labours will be well recompenced; and though they find none, yet might they discouer those parts so well, that the passage to and from Virginia would be more safe and easie.

But to returne from whence wee haue digressed: The extremitie of our distresse began to abate a little before M. Moores time of gouernment was expired, partly by supplies out of England, of victuall and prouision for fishing, and partly by that rest and libertie we then obtained, the Countrey being fortified. Yet the Rats encreased and continued almost to the end of Captaine Tuckers time, although hee was prouident and industrious to destroy them, but toward the end of his time it pleased God (by what meanes it is not wel known) to take them away, insomuch that the wilde Cats and many Dogs which liued on them were famished, and many of them leauing the Woods, came downe to the houses, and to such places where they vse to garbish their Fish, and became tame. Some haue attributed this destruction of them to the encrease of wild Cats, but that's not likely they should be so suddenly encreased rather at that time, then in the foure yeeres before. And the chiefe occasion of this supposition was, because they saw such companies of them leaue the Woods, and shew themselues for want of food. Others haue supposed it to come to passe by the coolnesse of the weather, which notwithstanding is neuer so great there, as with vs in March, nor scarce as it is in April, except it be in the wind; besides the Rats wanted not feathers of young Birds and Chickens which they daily killed, and of Palmeto Mosse (as wee call it) to build themselues warme nests out of the wind, as vsually they did. Neither doth it appeare that the cold was so mortall to them, seeing they would ordinarily swim from place to place, and be very fat euen in the midst of Winter. It remaineth then, that as we know God doth sometimes effect his will without subordinate and secondary causes, and sometimes against them: So wee need not doubt, but that in the speedy encrease and spreading of these Vermine; as also, in the preseruation of so many of vs by such weake meanes as we then enioyed, and especially in the sudden remouall of this great annoyance, there was ioyned with, and besides, the ordinary and manifest meanes, a more immediate and secret worke of God.

Now to proceed. M. Moores time of gouernment being expired, Capt. Tucker succeeded, arriuing there about mid-May, 1616. who likewise gouerned (according to the custome) three yeeres; which time hee spent, for the most part, in husbandring the Countrey, planting and nourishing all such things as were found fit either for trade, or for the sustentation and vse of the Inhabitants, wherein hee trauelled with much diligence and good successe, sending to some parts of the Indies for Plants and Fruits: hee also added to the Fortifications, and made some Inclosures. In his time, viz. in the yeere 1617. was sent a Ship and prouision, with men of skill, for the killing of Whales; but they arriued there too late, to wit, about the midst of April, so that before they could make ready their Shallops, and fit themselues, the principall season for Whale-fishing was past: For the Whale come thither in Ianuary, and depart againe toward the latter end of May: Yet they strook some, but found them so liuely, swift, & fierce after they were stricken, that they could take none. They yeeld great store of Oyle, as appeared by one that drane to shoare on Sommerset Iland, in Sandys Tribe: and by another that we found not far from thence dead vpon a Rocke. Cap. Tucker. Whales.

I also Shares.

I also receiued by Captaine Tucker, directions from the Aduenturers to diuide the Countrey, and to assigne to each Aduenturer his shares or portion of Land: and withall, a description, with notes touching the manner how they would haue it done, as they had formerly determined by Lot. Which thing I did with all faithfulnesse and diligence, the manner of it doth aboue appeare, and is more largely manifested in a Booke of the Survey of the Country, exhibited to the Right Honorable his Maiesties Counsell, and the Court of Aduenturers for these parts. And then began this, which was before as it were an vnsetled and confused Chaos, (I meane as touching a Plantation, for considered onely as a Regiment it was otherwise) to receiue a conuenient disposition, forme, and order, and to become indeed a Plantation; for though the Countrey was small, yet they could not haue beene conueniently disposed and well settled, without a true description and survey made of it; and againe every man being settled where hee might constantly abide, they knew their businesse, and fitted their houshold accordingly. They built for themselues and their Families, not Tents or Cabins, but more substantiall houses: they cleered their grounds, and planted not onely such things as would yeeld them their fruits in a yeere, or halfe a yeere: but all such too, as would affoord them profit after certaine yeeres, &c. So that in short time after, euen before expiration of Captaine Tuckers gouernment, the Country began to aspire and neerely to approch vnto that happinesse and prosperity wherein now it flourisheth. For may it not iustly be accounted happinesse and prosperitie, for men to liue where they enioy the meanes of true Religion and Saluation, to wit, the sincere Ministerie of the Word and Sacraments? where the gouernment is good without rigour and oppression, the place healthfull and temperate? where they are freed from all extreme care and toyle? where they haue food in abundance, and very good, with other things needfull to the body? and where they haue Commodities meete for Trade, by which they better aduance their estates? all which and more is largely verified in the present estate of that Colonie, whatsoeuer some maliciously minded, or to euill ends suborned, may say to the contrary, so that there may seeme to bee a restauration of that Golden Age so much spoken of.

The Gouernour now there resident, is one Captaine Butler, for Captaine Tucker departing thence in December 1618. left in his place Captaine Kendall (who also was one that supplied the same place in the interim, betweene Master Moores time and Captaine Tuckers, and hath spent some nine or ten yeeres in the Countrey. But in the yeere 1619. about Midsummer, the Aduenturers sent thither as Gouernour for three yeeres (according to the custome) the said Captaine Butler, and foure ships, with some fiue hundred persons, there beeing at that time in the Countrey onely fiue hundred more: for by the space of foure yeeres, to wit, during the latter part of Master Moores gouernment, and all the time of Captaine Tuckers, they had sent few thither, being almost hopelesse of the place, by reason of the Rats: But since there haue beene sent many companies more then haue come to my knowledge. Insomuch that I vnderstand the Countrey is now almost fully planted and inhabited.

Thus haue I briefly related (so farre forth as hath come to my knowledge and remembrance) euery thing of most note and importance that hath befallen in the first Discouerie and planting of these Ilands, till this present. I haue laboured to contract my selfe, yet haue exceeded my entended limits. Now I must speake something of the Countrey it selfe: Which consisteth of a company of small Ilands, situate and formed as aboue appeareth. It lyeth in the Westerne Ocean, in that part of the World lately discouered, and called America, or the New World, vulgarly, the West Indies: It hath Latitude, or Elevation (as is aboue said) 32. degrees 25. minutes, which is almost the same with the Madeares, or rather more Southward.

The Countrey is round about enuironed with Rockes; which to the Northward, Westward, and Southward, extend farther then hath beene yet discouered: By reason of these Rockes the Countrey is very strong: For there is onely two places (and scarce two, except to such as know them well) where shipping may safely come in: and those places are very well fortified: but within is roome to entertaine a Royall Fleet. The Rockes in most places appeare at a low water: neither are they much couered at a high water; For it ebbes and flowes there, not aboue fiue foot. The shoare it selfe (for the most part) is a Rocke: so hardned by the Sunne, Wind, and Sea, that it is not apt to be worne by the Waues; whose violence is also broken by the Rocks, before they come at the shoare. The Mould is of diuers colours; neither Clay, nor Sand, but a meane betweene. The Red, which resembleth Clay is worst; the whitish, resembling Sand, and the blackish, Clay, is good: the Browne, betweene them both (which they call white, because there is mingled with it, as it were a white Marle) is best. Vnder the Mould two or three foote deepe, and sometimes lesse, is a kind of white, hard substance, which they call the Rocke: the Trees vsually fasten their Roots in it: and draw their nourishment from it: Neither is it indeed Rocke or Stone, nor so hard, though for the most part harder then Chalke; not so white, but Pumice-like and Spongie, easily receiuing and containing much water: I haue seene, in some places, Clay found vnder it. It seemes to be engendred of the Raine water, drayning through the earth, and drawing with it of his substance, vnto a certaine depth where it congeales. The hardest kind of it (which is commonly vnder the red ground) is not so Spongie, nor retaynes much water; but lyeth in the ground in Quarries, as it were thicke Slates one vpon another: and there is some chinkes or creuises betwixt one lare and another, through which the water hath passage: so that in such places there is scarce found any fresh water. For all, or the most part of their fresh water (whereof they haue good store) commeth out of the Sea; drayning through the Sand, or through the foresaid substance, which they call the Rocke, and leauing his Salt behind it becomes fresh: Sometimes we digged Welles of fresh water, within foure or fiue paces of the Sea-side; sometimes further off. The most part of them would ebbe and flow, as the Sea did, and be leuell or little higher then the Superficies of the Sea. Wels.

lyeth

The Aire is most commonly cleere, very temperate, moist, with a moderate heate, very healthfull, and apt for the Generation and nourishing of all things; so that there is scarce any thing transported from hence thither, but it yeelds a farre greater encrease; and if it be any liuing thing, becomes fatter and better liking, then here. By this meanes the Countrey was so replenished with Hennes and Turkeyes, within the space of three or foure yeeres, that beeing neglected, many of them forsooke the Houses, and became wilde, and so liued in great abundance. The like encrease there is of Hogges and other Cattle, according to their kinds. There seemes to be a continuall Spring, which is the cause that some few things come not to that maturitie and perfection, as were requisite. And though the Trees doe shed their leaues, yet are they alwayes full of greene. The Aire.

Their Corne is the same which they vse almost in all parts of the West Indies, to wit, Maiz: which, to such as are vsed to it, is more heartie and nourishing then our English Wheate, and yeelds a farre greater increase, as a pound, sometimes, of one or two graines. Of this Corne, and diuers other things, without either plowing or digging the ground, they haue two Haruests euery yeere: for they set about March, which they gather in Iuly; and againe in August, which is ripe in December: And little slips of Figge Trees, and Vines, doe vsually beare fruit within lesse then a yeere after they are planted, sometimes in halfe a yeere. The like fertilitie it hath in other things.

There is scarce at any time to be perceiued either Frost or Snow, nor any extreme heate; for there is almost alwayes some wind stirring, which cleereth and cooleth the Aire. Their Summers and Winters obserue the same times with ours, but their longest dayes and nights are shorter then ours in England, by two houres and almost a halfe: as also their shortest dayes and nights are as much longer then ours: for their longest dayes and nights are about fourteene houres, and their shortest ten. When it is Noone with vs, it is Morning with them; and when it is about fiue of the clocke in the Euening with vs, it is high-noone with them: so that whilest the Sun declines with vs, it riseth with them, as also it doth in Virginia. It is apt to Thunder and Lightning all the yeere, oft-times more terrible then in England; but no man, or other liuing creature haue I knowne hurt by it. There is no venemous creature in the Countrey: the yellow Spider which is there, making her Webbe as it were of Silke, and bringing forth her young (as the Alchimists their stone) of Egges like little Balles of Quick-siluer, is not perceiued to bee any whit venemous. Yet there is a Plant (that climbeth Trees like Iuie, the leafe also of the same colour, but in shape like the Vine) that is somewhat venomous, but of no great force. Téperature of the Countrey. Spiders.

There is great store and varietie of Fish, and so good as these parts of the World affoords not the like; which being for the most part vnknowne to vs, each man gaue them names as they best liked: as one kind they called Rocke-fish, another Groopers, others Porgie-fish, Hog-fish, Angle-fish, Cauallies, Yellow-tayles, Spanish Makerell, Mullets, Breame, Connie-fish, Morrayes, Sting-rayes, Flying-fish, &c. The like they did by the Fowle, as Cohoones, Sand-birds, Herons, Ducke and Teale, Pemblicoes, Castle-boobies, Hawkes, &c.

The Countrey when we first beganne the Plantation, was all ouer-growne with Woods and Plants of seuerall kinds: and to such kinds as were vnknowne to vs (which were the most part) we also gaue names; such as were knowne retayning their olde names: as Cedars, Palmetoes, Black-wood, White-wood, Yellow-wood, Mulberie-trees, Stopper-trees, Lawrell and Oliue-trees, Mangrowes, Pepper-trees, Yellow-bery-weed, Red-weed: These, and many others, wee found naturally growing in the Countrey. But since it hath beene inhabited, there hath beene brought thither, as well from the Indies as from other parts of the World, sundry other Plants, as Vines of seuerall kinds, Sugar-canes, Figge-trees, Apple-trees, Oranges, Lemmons, Pomegranets, Plantanes, Pines, Parsnips, Raddishes, Artichokes, Potatoes, Cassaui, Indico, and many other: Insomuch that it is now become as it were some spacious Garden or Nourcerie of many pleasant and profitable things.

Now if I should proceed to a more speciall Narration, and speake of all these Plants, Birds, Fishes, and other remarkable things particularly: I could not but bee much larger then were any wayes expedient in this place. Besides, I haue long since vnderstood, that Captaine Butler (the Gouernour there resident) hath vndertaken to write of these and the like things, a peculiar Treatise. This therefore that is spoken touching the nature of the Countrey in generall, shall suffice. Onely to make choice of two particulars, wherof I will speake, not so largely as the things require; but so farre forth as will be meet and conuenient in this place.

Digitized by Google

The first shall bee the Tortoyse, which they call a Turtle: which having some affinitie and resemblance with Fishes, Beasts, and Fowles, shall serue instead of a Historie of them all. The other shall be that which they call the prickled Peare-tree: which participating in nature, and resembling in some things, herbs and in other Trees; shall likewise serue instead of the Naturall Historie of them both.

And first of the Turckle, not regarding (for breuities sake) the large Discourses of others; I will onely write what I haue seene and knowne my selfe. They are in the shape of their bodie like a Crab-fish; and haue foure finnes: they are as great as three or foure men can carrie: the vpper part of them is couered with a great shell, which wee call a Galley-patch, weighing (as I take it) halfe a hundred weight: the flesh that cleaueth to the in-side of this being rosted against the fire, is excellent meate: almost like the Marrow of Beefe: but the shell it selfe harder then Horne: shee hath also a shell on her belly, not so hard, but being boyled it becommeth soft, like the sinewes or gristle of Beefe; and good meate. These liue in the Sea, spending the Spring time, and part of the Summer about these Ilands: but the residue of the yeere, we know not where. They are like to Fowle in respect of the smalnesse and fashion of their heads and neckes: which are wrinkled like a Turkeyes, but white, and not so sharpe billed. They also breed their young of Egges which they lay. They resemble Beasts, in that their flesh is like Veale, but more hard and solid; and they feed alwayes vpon grasse growing at the bottome of the water; neither can they abide any longer vnder water, then they hold their breath; which the old ones will doe long: but the young ones being chased to and fro, cannot continue two minutes without comming vp to breathe. Shortly after their comming in, the Male and Female couple, which wee call cooting; this they continue some three dayes together, during which time, they will scarce separate though a Boat come to them, nor hardly when they are smitten. Not long after, the Shee-Turckle comes vp by night vpon some Sandie Bay; and further vp then the water vseth to flow, shee digges a hole with her finne in the Sand, some two foote deepe; and there comming vp seuerall nights, layes her Egges, some halfe a bushell (which are about the bignesse of a Hennes Egge, and round as a Ball) and each time couers them with Sand very curiously; so that a man shall hardly finde the place. These Egges (as it seemes) are afterwards hatched by heate of the Sunne, and then by the Prouidence of God (the meanes are yet vnknowne to vs) are brought out of the earth, for wee could neuer perceiue that shee returnes any more to them, and yet in likelihood they remaine not long in the Earth after they are hatched, because (as I haue before said) they cannot liue without breathing. We sometimes see of the young ones no bigger then a mans hand, which some fish will deuoure. They grow slowly, and seeme to haue a very long life, they will sleepe on the top of the water, and were wont to sleepe often on the Land, till the Countrie was peopled; they will also liue out of the water some three weekes, and that without meate, but mourne and pine away; they are very wittie. Being on the Land turned vpon their backes, they can no more without some helpe or aduantage recouer themselues; by which meanes when they come on shoare to lay their Egges, they are easily taken, as also they are when they are cooting. But otherwise wee take them for the most part by night, making a great light in a Boate, to which they will sometimes swimme, and seldome shunne; so that a man standing readie with a staffe in his hand, which hath at one end a socket, wherein is an Iron lesse then a mans finger, foure-square and sharpe, with a line fastned to it, hee striking this Iron into the vpper shell of the Turckle, it sticks so fast, that after shee hath a little tired her selfe by swimming too and fro, shee is taken by it. They will liue, the head being cut off, foure and twentie houres; so that if you cut the flesh with a Knife, or touch it, it will tremble and shrinke away. There is no meate will keepe longer either fresh or salt.

But leauing these, we will now come to speake of the Prickled Peares, which are a fruit growing in these Ilands, in such places as are scarce fit for any thing else, namely, vpon Rockes and Cliffes, and commonly by the Sea side, as if the salt-water did somewhat helpe to the generation and nourishing of them. The tree seemes to grow certaine yeeres before it beares fruit, and then to continue bearing, very many yeeres, hauing almost all the yeere long fruit vpon it. And although we call this a Tree, yet hath it scarce any bodie or branches, but consisteth in a manner wholly of leaues and fruit, soft and brittle.

But we will giue you a larger Historie of the Creatures from Captaine Smith, in the next Chapter.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

Extracts out of Captaine IOHN SMITHS Historie of Bermudas, or Summer Ilands; touching the Englisth Acts and Occurrents there from the beginning of the Plantation.

SOme one hundred and twentie of the Virginian Company bought that Title which the Company might seeme to haue to Bermuda, and obtayned Letters Patents of his Maiestie. Sir Thomas Smith was elected Treasurer, and Master Richard Moore sent thither with the first Colonie, which found the three men well, Carter, Chard, and Waters, which had found store of Ambergrice, which was the occasion of great stirres betwixt Moore and Kendall, (who was imprisoned) Chard (who was condemned and on the Ladder to be hanged, but repriued, and all Moores time detayned prisoner) and Captaine Danies, who had almost kindled a mutinie till better thoughts did better him. Sic vos non vobis, was the conclusion of that Treasure to the finders, howsoeuer Danies and Kendall are laid to haue licked their fingers well. For the naturall Historie thereof I haue added thus much out of him to that which before hath beene deliuered by others. Inueniuntur ê pes irritamenta malorum.

The most troublesome to these Ilands are the Winds and Wormes, specially in the Spring and Autumne, rather to awaken industrie then to cause despaire.

The Musketas or Flies are very busie, with a certaine Indian bugge called by the Spaniards, a Cacaroatch, which creeping into Chists by their ill sented dung defile all, besides their eating. Little Ants are in Summer so troublesome that they are forced to dry their figs on high frames, anointing the feete with Tarre which stay their passage that else would spoile all. Wormes in the earth are noisome to their Corne and Tobacco, causing them great labour euery morning to destroy them; which else would destroy all. Large Lizards haue been there, now destroyed by the Cats. Spiders are large but beautifully coloured, as if they were adorned with Siluer, Gold, and Pearle: their Webs in Summer wouen from Tree to Tree a perfect raw Silke in substance and colour, so strong that Birds like Snites bigger then Black-birds, are snared in their Nets. Flies. Ants. Wormes. Lizards. Spiders.

There are grey and white Hearne, grey and greene Plouer, wild Ducks, and Mallards, Coots, Red-shankes, Sea-wigeons, grey Bitternes, Cormorants, numbers of small Birds, like Sparrowes and Robbins, which haue lately beene destroyed by the Wild Cats, very many Wood-peckers, Crowes, which since the Plantation are killed, and seldome seene except in places least inhabited, where they are obserued to take their flight about Sun-set, directing their course toward the North-west, which causeth the coniecture of other Ilands. (Yea, the Spaniards say this is not true Bermuda, &c.) sometimes also are seene Falcons, Iarfalcons, Osprayes, a Bird like a Hobby, holden but a passenger. Fowles.

The Cohow is so termed of his voice; a night Bird all day hid in the Rockes. The Egge-bird on the first day of May constantly obserued to come, they begin to lay Egs as big almost as Hens Egges; so continuing till Mid-summer, so tame you must thrust them off: then permitted to breed (growing weake) and their young are excellent meate. The Egges of those are white; of the Cohowes speckled, as bigge as Hennes: strict inhibition was made for their sparing beeing almost destroyed.

The Tropiks Bird hath his name of the places where he is most seene. Another Bird of her Cry is called Pemblico, seldome seene by day, an vnwelcome Prophet of Tempests by her clamerous crying. Owles are now gone, Pigeons prosper not. Tame Duckes and Geese are there.

Now for Plants there growing, the most remarkeable are, the Poyson-weed, which is much in shape like our Englisth Iuie, with the touch thereof causing redneese, itching and blisters, all which after a while passe away of themselues without further hurt.

The Red-reed is a tall Plant, whose stalke is couered with a red rind; the Roote steeped, or a small quantitie of the iuyce drunke alone procureth a forceable Vomit, generally vsed and effectuall against distempers of the stomacke.

A kind of Wood-bind is common neere the Sea running on Trees like a Vine, the fruit somewhat like a Beane but flatter, which eaten any way causeth to purge vehemently, yet without further harme.

Another small Tree causeth costiueneese. There is also a Plant like a Bramble, bearing a long yellow fruit with a hard shell, and within a hard Berrie which stamped and taken inwardly, purgeth gently.

Red-Pepper is a fruit like our Barberies, which beaten, or bruized with the Teeth, sets all the mouth on a heat, for the time terrible; but swallowed whole haue the same operation that blacke Pepper.

The Sea-feather is a Plant growing on the Rocks in the bottome of the Sea in forme of a Vine-leafe, but farre more spread with veines of a palish red, strangely interlaced and weaued into each other: the vertue vnknowne.

There are beſides fruits thither carried which thriue and multiply, White, Red, Yellow Potatoes, Sugar-canes, Indicoes, Parſnips, exceeding large Radiſhes, Caſſaui (the American root for bread) the Indian Pompeon, the water Melon, the Muske Melon, the moſt delicate Pine-apple, Plantans, and Papawes; the Engliſh Artichoke, Peaſe, &c.

Moores Forts. Maſter Moore applied himſelfe to fortifying and to traine his men: hee laid the foundation of eight or nine Forts, called the Kings Caſtle, Charles Fort, Pembrokes Fort, Smiths Fort, Gates Fort, Warwickes Caſtle, Saint Katherines Fort, &c. mounting therein all ſuch Ordnance as he had. Being buſied in theſe and other neceſſaries, which held the men hard at worke, Maſter Keath the Miniſter, a Scot, taxed him in the Pulpit for grinding the faces of the poore, oppreſſing his Chriſtian brethren with Pharoos taxes; for which being conuented, and by the generality contraried, he fell on his knees and asked pardon, which was eaſily with good admonition granted. Two other malecontents were condemned to be hanged, one of which for feare fell into a dead palſie, the other was freed, and after proued a good labourer. He got two peeces of Ordnance out of the Sea-Venture (Sir George Summers wracke) framed a Church of Timber, which was blowne downe and reedified, and another built in a cloſer place with Palmito leaues. Before the yeare expired, an Aduiſo with thirtie paſſengers were ſent, to prepare for Spaniards; which made them fall ſo hard to worke, that many fell ſicke. The Martha followed with ſixtie paſſengers, and in it Maſter George Barklie, who tooke good notice of thoſe Ilands. The Elizabeth was ſent the ſecond time with fortie paſſengers. Theſe carried the firſt Potatos, which being all loſt but two caſtaway rootes haue yeelded increaſe there to admiration, and are great reliefe to the Inhabitants.

Maſter Keath.

Church built.

Supplies ſent An. 1613. M. Barklie.

Increaſe of Potatos.

Two Spaniſh Ships were ſeene ſoone after this Ship was gone, to ſound with their Boate, attempting to come in; but from the Kings Caſtle Maſter Moore made two ſhot, which cauſed them to depart, to the ioy of the Plantation, which then had but three quarters of a barrell of Powder, and but one ſhot more: the Powder alſo by careleſneſſe tumbled vnder the Muſſels of the two Peeces which were diſcharged, and yet not touched with fire. The like mercifull prouidence appeared in certaine cartrages of Paper filled with Powder; a negligent fellow leauing his Match burning vpon one of them all the while they were at Prayer, ſo that the cole touched the Paper and fired it not.

Spaniſh Ships.

Eſcapes from dangers.

A worſe thing happened by a caruell of Meale, which Daniel Elfred brought thither, ſo ſtored with Rats, that had neere ruined all the Plantation. Two yeeres after came in the Bleſſing with one hundred paſſengers, and the Starre with one hundred and eightie, and ſoone after the Margaret, and two Frigats with one hundred and ſixtie. Maſter Barkley alſo came to diuide the Countrie into Tribes, and the Tribes into ſhares; but Moore ſeeing his ſhare and the Colonies to be none, gaue him ſo cold entertainment, that he returned as he came.

Rats. M. Barklies ſecond coming.

This bred Moore more diſlike in England, and his minding fortification ſo much, with neglect of Corne bred a famin; that attended with diſeaſes, ſpecially one called the Feagues, which without ſenſe of paine, ſwallowed vp all their ſtrength at once, whereof without ſuccour they died; ſome by foode and reſt recouered. The Rauens continued this mortality and then departed. William Millinton was drawne into the Sea by a Fiſh, and neuer ſeene more. The Famine gaue a ſuperſedeas to the workes, and Moore ſent them to ſeeke reliefe. At Coopers Ile with a contrary extremity of the abundance of Cahows and Fiſh, many ſurfeited and died. Some killed the Cattell, and one ſtole away to the Woods and there franked himſelfe, feeding on land Crabbes and Wilkes. For fiſhing, the Smith was faine to make Hookes of Swords, and Lines of old Ropes, till a Frigat being ſent with aduice into England, the Welcome was ſent with prouiſion. Maſter Moore returned in this Ship, and left the Gouernment to a Councell of ſixe, which ſhould ſucceede each other monethly; viz. Captaine Miles Kendall, Captaine Iohn Mansfield, Thomas Knight, Charles Caldicot, Edward Waters, and Chriſtopher Carter, with twelue Aſſiſtants. Moore arriuing here, after much quarrell, obtained eight ſhares of Land. Hee died after in Sir Walter Raleighs Guiana voyage. He was a man very pragmaticall, and had before vndertaken much in Fouleneſſe for Rapes ſeede, &c. A man fitter for ſuch a Plantation as this in the beginning was, then ſome ſilken Citizen, or ſtalking Gentleman, or talking Traueller, or ſowre Humoriſt, or grim Martialiſt might haply haue proued.

1614. Famine and ſickneſſe. Rauens.

Contrary extreme.

Gouernment by a Counſell.

Caldicots lot. Caldicots Lot was firſt, whoſe moneth being ended, with Knight and Waters in a ſmall Frigot he went to Virginia, Mansfield ſucceeded in the new triumuirate, and a plot not to ſurrender the Gouernment to ſuch as from England ſhould be appointed, was diſappointed: Maſter Hughes was impriſoned, and ſoone ſet at liberty, but Maſter Keath his Symmyſtes fell to ſtrange diſputes, and Hughes was againe conuented, and by the Iury acquitted. Mansfields moneth being paſſed in braules, the two next were quiet; yet thoſe contentings after reuiued. The Edwin arriued with good ſupplies. Diuers Boates were loſt at Sea about this time.

M. Keath and M. Hughes.

Strange accident. But one memorable accident was this: In March, a ſeaſon moſt tempeſtuous, on a faire Friday morning, ſeuen men went in a Boate of two or three tuns to fiſh, ſome of them faſting, neither had they any prouiſion in the Boat with them but a few Palmeto berries; ſome foure leagues from ſhoare a tempeſt tooke them, and carried them quite out of ſight of land; their ſtrength being ing

ing ſpent, the ſtrength alſo of the tempeſt abated on ſunday, and a calme followed. Too weake for Oares they lay adrift that night: the next morning Andrew Hillyard (the reſt not able to helpe themſelues) ſpred the ſaile: On tueſday one died, on wedneſday three, which were caſt ouerboord; on thurſday night the ſixth, whom he was not able to turne ouer, but ſtripped him, ripped his belly with his Knife, threw his bowels into Sea, ſpred his body abroad, tilted open with a ſticke, and ſo let it lye as a Ceſterne to receiue ſome luckie raine water, which God ſent preſently after, ſo that in a ſmall ſhower he recouered about foure ſpoonefuls of raine to his vnſpeakable refreſhment. He alſo preſerued neere halfe a pint of blood in a ſhooe; which hee did ſparingly drinke to moiſten his mouth. Two dayes he fed on his fleſh to the quantity of a pound: the eleuenth day after his loſſe of Land, two flying Fiſhes fell into his Boate, whoſe warme iucie bloud he ſucked, to his great comfort, and within an houre after; with greater comfort eſpied land; which within foure houres he attained on a Rocke neere Port Royall, where his Boate was ſplit preſently in peeces, and he made ſhift to climbe ſo ſteepe a Rocke by night, as would haue troubled the ſtrongeſt man in the Ile to haue done by day. He diſcerned in the morning where he was, and without other refreſhing then water (which he tooke temperately, or might elſe haue drunk his laſt) he got in halfe a day to a friends houſe. He was liuing Anno 1622. Andrew Hilliards aduentures.

Some treaſure in Dollers, to the value of twentie pounds was found, the remainder of ſome Wrack. The Company ſent M. Daniel Tucker, to be Gouernour; hee ſet ſaile in the George, accompanied with the Edwin: ſome preparation was made to reſiſt, but he at laſt was receiued and acknowledged in May, 1616. Somewhat hee had to doe to bring them to their workes, which yet he effected; their day worke till nine in the morning, and then ſtaying till three in the afternoone, they began againe continuing till ſun-ſet. Beſides meat, drinke, and clothes, they had for a time a certaine kind of braſſe Money, with a Hog on the one ſide, in memory of the Hogs there found at firſt landing. Hee by Maſter Richard Norwoods helpe, laid out the eight Tribes in the Mayne, which were to conſiſt of fiftie ſhares to a Tribe, each ſhare twentie fiue Acres. He began to plant ſome of the Colony on ſpeciall ſhares, and appointed Bailiffes to each Tribe. Hee held a generall Aſſiſe in his ſecond moneth at Saint Georges, where for ſedition Iohn Wood a Frenchman was hanged. He ſent the Edwin to Trade with the Natiues of the Weſt Indies for Cattel, Corne, Plants, which had it been continued, might happily haue bin more beneficiall to the Plantation then the Magazines from hence. She returned with Figs, Pines, Sugar-canes, Plantans, Papawes, and diuers other plants, which were preſently replanted, and ſince haue increaſed by the Gouernours commendable husbandry. Seuerity, by the conceit thereof produced an admirable fact: Fiue men which could by no meanes get paſſage for England, reſolued to aduenture an eſcape, viz. Richard Sander Mariner chiefe plotter, William Goodwin a Ship Carpenter, Tho. Hariſon a Ioyner, Iames Baker Gentleman, and Henry Puet. Theſe inſinuated to the Gouernour, that they would build him a Boat of two or three Tuns with a cloſe Deck, fit to fiſh in all weathers. Hee glad to ſee them ſo obſequious, furniſhed them with neceſſaries whatſoeuer they could deſire. Shee was fitted and gone the euening before hee ſent for her, to ſee, as was reported, how ſhee could ſaile. This was moſt true, and Botelias his aduenture from Goa in the Eaſt Indies to Lisbon was not ſo admirable a triall. Barker had borrowed a Compaſſe Diall of M. Hughes, leauing a Letter to him to haue patience for that loſſe, whereby their aduenture was intimated. The Gouernours threats were not in that remoteneſſe ſo terrible as the two preſent ſwelling Elements, whom yet they found more gentle then a French Pickaroone, who in ſtead of ſuccour, which they deſired, tooke from them what they liked, leauing them not ſo much as a Croſſe-ſtaffe to obſerue with, and ſo caſt them off. They continued their courſe till their victuall began to faile, and the knees of their Boat were halfe hewed away for fire wood. They at laſt arriued in Ireland, where the Earle of Tomund entertained them, and cauſed the Boat to be hanged vp for a Monument, hauing ſayled 3300. miles thorow the Ocean by a right line without ſight of any Land. This fortunate Sanders in the rifling of a Ship taken in the Eaſt Indies, bought a Cheſt for three or foure ſhillings, but would for want of a Key haue ſold it againe for leſſe. But one day hauing little to doe, hee broke it open and found therein 1000. pounds ſterling, or ſo much gold as bought him in England a good eſtate, which leauing with his wife he returned againe to the Eaſt Indies. M. Tucker. 1616. Tribes laid out Aſſiſes. The Gouernours. Admirable voyage. His courſe was neerer ſhoare, with all prouiſions fitting. Small Boat from Bermudas commeth to Ireland. Sanders his fortunes.

The Company ſent Captaine Powell in the Hopewell, after he had landed his paſſengers in Summer Iles, to trade in the Indies, who by the way fell foule on a Braſillman, and afterwards a Frenchman on him: but hee got ſafe to the Ilands and told what he had done. The Gouernour kept his ſecond Aſſize, and made a proclamation againſt the killing of coheires. Powell is againe ſent to the Weſt Indies from thence, with thirteene or fourteene men. Hee made triall but in vaine, for the Whale-fiſhing, for which and to which purpoſe the Company ſoone after ſent the Neptune. In the beginning of his ſecond yeere he called the third aziſe, in which one was hanged, two others condemned, but reprieued. The Rat Tragedy was now terrible: ſome Fiſhes haue been taken with Rats in their bellies, catched as they ſwam from Ile to Ile. One Henry Long, with ſixe others being on fiſhing, a ſudden ſtorm aroſe with terrible thunder, and the Boat was toſſed ouer the Rocks, the fiſh toſſed ouer-boord, and Long with two others eſcaped (the reſt drowned) one of the three being demanded what he thought in the preſent perill, anſwered, hee ſaid nothing, but Gallowes Cap. Powell. 1617. Hurt by Rats filling all the Iland.

Gallowesclappers fate.

clame thy right, which within halfe a yeere fell out accordingly. Powell returned with three Frigats, laden with Meale, Hides, and Munition. The Master and Gouernour contending, both were dispossessed by a stronger power. Waters, with twelue men were sent to Virginia, and would no more returne to Summers Iles.

1618.

Magazines not so profitable as intended.

A. 1618. arriued there the Diana, with men and prouision, and the first Magazine (a course I heare not much applauded by the Planters here, or in Virginia, the companies honest care) seeming by some others dishonestie frustrate. This Ship fraught with 30000. weight of Tobacco, gaue by the good sayle thereof encouragement to the Aduenturers. The Gouernour building a house of Cedar in the best Land, appropriated it to himselfe to the griefe of others there, of whom Master Hughes could not by threats nor imprisonment be so pacified, but that here to the Company hee approued his cause. Two men and a Gentlewomen, thinking to make their escape in a Boat to Virginia, were neuer heard of after. Sixe others attempted the like, but were apprehended, araigned, condemned, and one of them hanged. The Gouernours hard dealings so much complained of, caused him in the Blessing to returne to excuse himselfe, and to get that house assured him, leauing Captaine Kendall to supply his place. The Gilli-flower and the Treasurer were sent. By the Sea-flower which went to Virginia, a Preacher was sent to the Ilands, and newes of a new Gouernour. Captaine Kerby came in with a small Barke from the West Indies. A Dutch Frigot was cast away on the Westerne shoare, the people saued by the English.

Escapers not escaping.

Two ships sent

Cap. Butler Gouernour.

1619.

Captaine Butler, the new Gouernour arriued in the Warwicke, the twentieth of October, 1619. The Redoubt, a platforme of the Kings Castle, at the same time whiles the New Gouernour and old Planters were feasting aboord, accidentally was consumed with fire. The next month came in the Garland, which had come from England sixe or seuen weekes before him, and spent seuenteen weekes on the voyage, which proued so tedious, that many both Saylers and Passengers died. In the end of Nouember, arose such a storme that many great Trees were blown vp by the roots, the Warwicke cast away, the Garland forced to cut her Masts ouerboord. Not long after happened another as fierce; in which the Mount, built by M. Moore for a Watch-tower, was blowne vp by the roots; and their winter crop of Corne blasted.

Great stormes

He began the new yeere with refortifying the Kings Castle, and finding the Treasurer rotten, tooke nine Peeces of Ordnance out of her. Hee sent the Garland for England. Hee finished the Church begun by Captain Kendall, with great toile got three Peeces out of the wracked Warwick, imployed a Dutch Carpenter of the former Dutch wrack to build Boates. A luckie fellow in February, found a piece of Ambergreece of eight Ounces, as hee had done twice afore, and according to order of Court (to preuent concealements) had therfore thirtie pound an Ounce. Two Dutch Frigots arriued, conducted by Captaine Powell, and much refreshed the Colony with Oyle and Bacon at cheape rates. The Gouernour made a new platforme in place of the burned Redoubt, and mounted seuen great Peeces on Cariages of Cedar. The Ministers not being conformable to the Church of England, nor vniforme with themselues in administration of the Sacrament, and Matrimony. Hee translated the Liturgie Booke of Garnsie and Iarsie, void of the pretended scruples which was generally embraced, and in his time practised, and the Sabbaths obseruation proclaimed. They rebuilded the Mount, and diuers Boats was indangered with a Hericano, one lost. Finding a little Crosse erected where Sir George Summers his heart and entrailes were buried: he caused a Marble stone brought out of England, to bee handsomely wrought, and an Epitaph engrauen, in memory of that worthy Souldier, and laid thereon, inuironed with a square wall of hewed stone.

Ambergreece.

New platforme

Ministers scruples.

Sir George Summers memorial

On the second of Iune, began their Assizes, in which their Lawes and Gouernment were reduced to the English forme. The first of August, was a generall Assembly in manner of a Parliament, at Saint Georges, diuers Articles concluded, and being sent hither, by the Company confirmed, which for breuitie I omit. The Magazine Ship soone after came in weake case thither, hauing cast ouerboord twentie or thirtie of her people, and had they staied at Sea a weeke longer, were likely to haue all perished. That aire soon mends or ends men in that case, and those which died not soone after the landing recouered, not without infection of others there. 70000. weight of Tobacco was prefixed for her freight. Commandement came now to entertaine no Ships, but such as were sent from the Company, to the Colonies great griefe, which now were forced to a Magizane-Monopoly, and debarred of occasionall reliefe. Cap. Powell soone after came thither, imployed by the States, desiring admittance for wood and water, which was denied with exceeding murmuring and exclaiming of the Colony. The Magazine Ship arriued, her Master dead, and many passengers, the rest sicke.

Their first Parliament.

Spanish Wrack.

Then happened also in September a Spanish Wrack, which comming from Carthagena with the Spanish Fleet lost their Ship on those Rockes, and seuentie persons were saued, some of which had beene rifled, but their money to the value of one hundred and fortie pound restored them by the Gouernours meanes: into whose hands they committed it for disbursment of their charges. Some were sent away, others forced to stay till their labours had procured meanes for their passage. Hee made meanes to get out of the Wrack two Sakers, and three Murtherers, which were the same which Cap. Kendall had sold to Cap. Kerby, who was taken by two men of War of Carthagena,

These made false reports in England, the Spanish Embasadour also vrging the same, till the contrarie was manifested.

thagena, moſt of his men ſlaine or hanged, hee wounded died in the Woods, as theſe Spaniards related. Three Bulwarkes were raiſed at Southampton Fort, with two Curtens and two Iauelens. Armes were diſtributed to all ſuch as were able to vſe them.

The Weauells (which had at this time much hurt their Corne) found a ſtrange remedy. For a proclamation being made that all Corne ſhould be gathered by a day, becauſe many had loſt ſome for want of gathering, ſtill haunting the Ships for Aqua-vitæ and Beere; ſome bad husbands haſtily gathered it, and threw it on heapes in their houſes vnhusked, ſo letting it lye foure or fiue moneths. Now the good husbands husked theirs, and hanged it vp with much labour, where the Flies did blow it, which the others idleneſſe, as the euent ſhewed, preuented, that being thus found to be the beſt way to ſaue the corne and labour, to let it lye in the huske. Diuers places of freſh-water were now alſo luckily found out. Another triall of whale-fiſhing was vainely attempted by a Ship which came from Virginia, who returned thither fraught with Lime-ſtone, 20000. pound weight of Potatos, &c. Weauells cure.

Aprill and May were ſpent in building a Priſon, and perfecting ſome Fortifications, and foure Sakers were gotten from the Spaniſh Wrack, and mounted at the Forts. One was hanged for buggering a Sow, whoſe Cock in the time of his impriſonment vſed alſo to tread a Pig, as if it had beene a Hen, till the Pig languiſhed and died, and then the Cock haunted the ſame Sow. About the ſame time two Chickens were hatched, one of which had two heads, the other is ſaid to haue crowed loud and luſtily within twelue houres after it was out of the ſhell. Other Peeces were got out of the Spaniſh Wrack, and a Saker alſo out of that of Sir George Summers.

By a Barke going to Virginia, Captaine Butler, his time expiring, conueied himſelfe thither, leauing the gouernment to C. Felgate C. Stokes, &c. In the Kings Caſtle were mounted, or ſufficient platformes, ſixteen Peeces of Ordnance. In Charles Fort two, in Southampton Fort fiue, betwixt which & the Caſtle paſſeth the channel into the Harbor, ſecured by twenty three Peeces of good Ordnance. In Coops Ile is Pembrookes Fort, with two Peeces. Saint Georges channell is guarded by Smiths Fort and Payets Fort, in which are eleuen Peeces. Saint Georges Towneis commanded by Warwicks Fort, with three great Peeces, on the Wharfe before the Gouernours houſe are eight more, beſides the warning Peece by the Mount, and three in Saint Katherines; in all tenne Fortreſſes, and fiftie two Peeces of Ordnance ſufficient and ſeruiceable. Hee left one thouſand fiue hundred perſons, and neere one hundred Boates, the Ile repleniſhed with prouiſions, fruites, poultry, &c. Forts & Ordnance in Bermudas.

Maſter Iohn Bernard, was ſent by the Honourable Company to ſupply his place, who arriued within eight dayes of Captaine Butlers departure, with two Ships, and one hundred and fortie Paſſengers, with Armes and all ſorts of Munition and other prouiſions. During his life (which continued but ſixe weekes) hee gaue good proofe of his ſufficiency in reforming things defectiue. He and his wife were both buried in one day, and one graue: and Maſter Iohn Harriſon choſen Gouernour till further order came from London. M. Bernard Gouernour. 1622. M. Harriſon Gouernour. 1623.

The Wormes before mentioned are ſtill troubleſome, and make them morning workes to kill them. Caterpillers are pernicious to their fruits, and Land Crabs are as thicke in ſome places, as Conies in a Warren, and doe much harme. A Ship in which had beene much ſwearing and blaſpheming vſed all the voyage, periſhed; the companies negligence iouially frolicking in their cups and Tobacco (hauing landed certaine goods) by accident the Powder fired, and blew vp the great Cabbin; ſome were taken vp in the Sea, liuing in miſerable torments, eighteene were loſt with this fatall blaſt, the Ship alſo ſunke, with ſixtie Barrells of Meale ſent for Virginia, and her other prouiſions loſt. The Company haue ſent Captaine Woodhouſe in a Ship called the Tigre for that gouernment, a man much commended and hopefull. I haue beene told that there are three thouſand perſons of all ſorts liuing there, halfe of which number is able to beare Armes, and exerciſed to that ſeruice. Wormes noyſome.

CHAP. XIX.

Brieſe intelligence from Virginia by Letters, a ſupplement of French-Virginian Occurrants, and their ſupplantation by Sir SAMVEL ARGAL, in right of the Engliſh Plantation.

THe late alteration of Virginia Gouernment is vnknowne to none; and moſt know of the frequent complaints, both by priuate Letters, and by Petitions to his Maieſty. Now leaſt any ſhould hereupon thinke Virginia to be vnworthy of ſuch our care and coſt; I haue out of one of the Planters priuate Letters tranſcribed a few words of grieuances, and yet a magnifying of the Country, that the Engliſh may be more blamed for want of Prouidence, then the Region for defect of Natures beſt gifts. Other things I could alleadge from others, but my meaning is to amend things not to quarrell quarrell them, and to awaken the care of good men, rather then to recite the faults of the bad. In one Letter, dated Dec. 22. last past, he hath these words:

Digitized by Google

He mentions in other letters 3.s. a pound of Butter, 6.d. ready monie for a pinte of Milke, 10 s. or 12.s. a day for a workman (Carpenter) besides meate and lodging.

The intollerable rates we pay here for commodities, as ten pound sterling a hogshead of Meale, sixteen shillings a gallon of Alligant, three pound sterling a Henne and eight Chickens, &c. and so according to these rates for euery thing else: lastly, the heauy taxations that are laid vpon vs free men, for building of Castles, paying of publique debts, for the not gathering of Sasafras, &c. so that it will come to my share, with that that is paid, and that that is to pay in Corne and Tobacco, to at least twenty or fiue and twenty pound sterling, this yeere; so that when I haue paid this, and paid my faithlesse seruants their wages, I shal scarse haue good Tobacco enough left to buy my selfe for the next yeer a pint of Aquauita, &c. Thus you see (I neither warrant, nor except against the truth, but present the worst quarelled paralelled with the best) complaints of great prizes of things, not arising from plenty of money, as you reade before in the conquest of Peru, but from I know not what ill habit and indisposition of that Colony. And least any man should withdraw his heart, hand, or purse therefore from that worthy work, I haue out of the same mans Letters deliuered a commendation of the Countrey. The Letters were written, and dated 22. March 1624. and containe for substance none other then what before you haue read in others; yet are more sutable to this time and purpose, as later newes and fitter directories to the Phisitians of that Estate; that at last the English honour may be vindicated against so base perils from Sauages, and baser quarrels from and amongst our owne. God prosper his Maiesties care, and make those which are therein emploied not to seeke their owne good by hasty returnes, much lesse other their fellow aduenturers euill by calumnies and vnderminings, but Virginias prosperity; of which, Natures prosperity is thus related by one querulous of his owne losses and crosses. His words are these:

Now concerning the state of the Country, so much as I haue obserued, I will relate vnto you: First, the Countrie it selfe, I must confesse is a very pleasant Land, rich in Commodities, and fertile in soyle to produce all manner of Plants, Hearbes, and Frutes. I haue seene here my selfe both Carrets, Turneps, Cabages, Onyons, Leekes, Garlicke, Tyme, Parseley, Pompions, Muskmilion, and Watermilions, rare fruits and exceeding wholesome, here are also Strawberries; I haue lien downe in one place in my Corne field, and in the compasse of my reach haue filled my belly in the place: and for Mulberries, I can when I list goe and gather a bushell at a time: here is also a coole Fruite growing wildely on the ground, much resembling a great Walnut with the greene rinde on it, which reserues in it three admirable good tastes, namely of Strawberries, Rosewater, and Sugar, they were an exceeding great comfort to me in my last yeeres sicknesse, and are admirable good against the bloudy fluxe.

English Wheate and Barley will grow here exceeding well; I haue seene here growing as good English Wheate as euer I saw in England in all my life. For Timber we haue the Oake, Ashe, Poplar, blacke Walnut, white Walnut, Pines, Gumme trees; the Pines here afford admirable good Pitch and Tarre, and serue, split out in small peeces, in many places of this Land instead of Candles; but it will smeare one worse then a Linke: here are also Peare trees which yearely bring forth Peares. But there is a tree that passeth all Fruite trees, which we call by the names of a Prissymon tree, which beareth a Plum much about the bignesse of a Peare plum. I doe thinke it is one of the rarest Fruites in the world; when they are ripe they eate naturally of themselues from the tree better then any preserued Plummes I euer tasted in England. The Beasts that this Land is plentifully stored withall are Deere, Beares in some parts, Beauers, Otters, Foxes, Hares, Squirrels, Rocconnes, Possucins, names strange to you, yet are they singular good meate; the Rocconns tasting as well as Pigges flesh. Indian Dogges here are as good meate with vs as your English Lambe. English Cattell here increase and thriue very well, as Kine, Hogges, Goates, and Poultry. Fowle here are abundance, as Swans, Brants, Geese, Turkies, Herons, Cranes, Eagles, fishing Hawkes, Bussards, Ducke and Mallard, Sheldrake, Dapchicke, Partriches, Pidgeons, Crowes, Blacke-birds, and all manner of small Birds in abundance. Our Riuers here are likewise rich by the abundance of Fish, as Herings, Shads, Perch, Eele, Pike, Carpe, Cat-fish, Rock-fish, Gor-fish, and Sturgeon. If here were any that would make fishing for Sturgeon an occupation, they might take inough to furnish this Land, and also plentifully supply England. I my selfe haue seene aboue twenty Sturgeon leape aboue water in lesse then two houres. As for our Graine, I thinke it produceth the plentifullest encrease of any Corne in the World; for I haue seene one graine of Corne, that by the assistance of growth and time, hath yeelded a pint of Corne: we haue here also Beanes and Pease.

I confesse here are plentie of all those things I haue set before you, but all the craft is in catching them; for he that will get any game, must be a wary and a well eyed sher, and to prop his profession, he must adde great care and vigilance, both in defending himselfe and winning his game. It hath beene often seene in this Land, that whilest an Englishman hath beene winning his game, an Indian hath doyd him, attending his opportunitie by the others discharge to fill him full of Arrowes. Since the Massacre they haue killed vs in our owne doores, fields, and houses: thus are we not safe neither at home nor abroad; and (which grieues me to write) our safetie is lessened by our malice one to another, for the most part altogether neglecting the common enemie. I my selfe and my wife are by some secret enemies much wronged, for I am shauen so bare, that I haue scarse either Garter, Girdle, Stocking, or Shirt left; all my wearing Cloathes likewise are torne and tattered, I can accuse no man, and they that likewise doe it, doe it priuately, and which grieues me most of all, they shrine by base and insinuating meanes to clip the wings, as well of my

my prosperitie as of my reputation; yet I hope God will giue me patience to beare, and in his good time giue me a ioyfull deliuerance in the middest of all these miseries. Whilest I was a writing these lines, newes was brought me of the killing of one, and the carrying away prisoner of another of my neighbours, by the Indians; one was an old Virginian, and one who for a long time was Sir Thomas Dale his Ouerseer in this Land, his name was Master Henry Watkins: and but two daies agoe there was another that had his braines beaten out by the Indians, in the next Plantation to vs. Wherefore with a sad and sorrowfull heart I take my leaue of you deere Father, Mother, Sisters, Brethren, and all the rest of my kinde and louing friends; for the case stands so with vs here, that if wee goe out in the morning, wee know not whether wee shall euer returne; working with our Hoe in one hand, and our Peece or Sword in the other, &c.

And now from lateſt intelligence you haue notice of the good and euill, as becommeth a faithfull Hiſtorian, nequid non veri audeat, nequid veri non audeat; It is good to know the worſt, to preuent it: forewarned, forearmed. Eaſily you may ſee that the good things of Virginia are naturall and her owne, the bad accidentall and our owne; and conſequently if wee amend our ſelues, Virginia will ſoone be amended. The body there is ſound; to cut the haire, auoide the excrements, paire the nailes, waſh away ſweate and duſt, and to cure other like accidents of negligence, or impenitent and vnprofitable diligence, is a worke feaſible and facile alſo to induſtrious and vnanimous workemen. One thing touching the French (whoſe Plantations are before recited) remaineth, that we take away all ſcruple from feare of ſuſpected neighbours. I ſhall therefore adde a little more touching them, the concluſion of their Virginian Plantation in a double ſenſe. As for the Engliſh right to theſe parts, the next Chapter will ſhew, and conſequently the Iuſtice of Sir Samuell Argals act. The Patents to Sir Humfry Gilbert, and to Sir Walter Raleigh, and their actuall poſſeſſion before theſe latter Plantations may be alleadged likewiſe againſt the French. Theſe things I haue collected out of Sir William Alexanders Encouragement to Colonies; Leſcarbot hath alſo related them.

The Marqueſſe de la Roche, by a Commiſſion from Henry the fourth, intending a Voyage for Canada, happened by the way vpon the Ile of Sablon (which is now comprehended within the Patent of new Scotland) and there (truſting to the ſtrength of the place, where there are no Sauages at all) landed ſome of his men, till he ſhould haue found a conuenient place within the maine Land fit for a habitation, promiſing then to returne for them. But it was his fortune, by reaſon of contrary winde, neuer to finde the Maine Land, but he was blowne backe to France without ſeeing of them, where he was in the time of the ciuill warres (ſuch is the vncertainty of worldly things) taken priſoner by the Duke of Mercœur, and ſhortly after died; ſo that his people whom he had left at Sablon, furniſhed but for a ſhort time, had quickly ſpent their prouiſions, hauing for their maintenance onely ſuch things as the place it ſelfe did without labour freely afford; which hath a race of Cowes, as is thought, firſt tranſported thither by the Portugals, that haue long continued there: they had likewiſe there growing wilde, of this which wee call Turkey Wheate, and ſundry Rootes fit to be eaten, and euery where abundance of Fiſhes, with Veniſon, and (hauing no meanes to liue but by ſport) as for their Apparell, they cloathed themſelues with the Skins of ſuch creatures as they could kill by Land or Sea: ſo that hauing liued there for the ſpace of 12. years; when they were preſented to King Henry, who had hired a Fiſherman to bring them home, as I haue heard from them that did ſee them at firſt before the King, they were in very good health, and looked as well as if they had liued all that time in France: hauing bin abuſed by the Fiſherman, who cunningly conceiling that he had bin directed by the King, did bargaine with them to haue all their Skins for tranſporting them home, which were of great value, ſome of them being of blacke Foxes, which haue bin ſould at fiftie pound ſterling a peece and aboue: for the recouery thereof they intended a Proceſſe againſt him before the Court of Parliament at Paris, wherein they preuailed, gaining by that meanes a ſtocke wherewith to traffique in theſe parts againe.

Corteregdlis made a voiage to thoſe parts An. 1500. and another 1501. After that his brother, but both loſt. Gomes another Portugal ſought ſtraits there An. 1525. The land was called Terra Corteregalis from 60. deg. to S. Laurence.

Monſieur de Montes betaking himſelfe to trade for Furs, Monſieur Pourtrincourt reſoluing to proſecute the Plantation at that place ſent his ſonne Biencourt to France, to bargaine with ſome that would ſend them a ſupply, ſuch as was requiſite for eſtabliſhing of that Colonie.

The firſt that embraced his propoſitions were the Ieſuites, who as they haue ordinarily good wits which made them the rather capable of ſo aduantagious a proiect, ſo they were the more animated thereunto by vpbraiding the lazineſſe of our Clergie, to ſhew with what feruency they trauelled to propagate the Goſpell, in doing whereof (whether it be ambition or deuotion that prouokes them) ſparing no paines, they haue trauelled both to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, and to the admired Kingdome of China. Their ſociety in France, preuailing with all that had any inclination either to zeale or to vertue, did eaſily gather a voluntary contribution for the furthering of ſo commendable a purpoſe. Thereafter they ſent away two Fathers of their Company, with a new ſupply of all things neceſſary to the Plantation at Port Royall, but ſhortly after their arriuall (their predominant diſpoſition hardly yeelding to any ſuperiour, ſpecially if it be a ſecular power) they began to contradict Pourtrincourt in the execution of thoſe decrees which had bin Ieſuites.

Digitized by Google

bin giuen forth by him, as ciuill Magiſtrate of that place: whereupon the Gentleman extreamely diſcontented, and weary of conteſting with him; hauing ſaid that it was his part to rule them vpon earth, and theirs onely to guide him the way to heauen, he returned backe to France, leauing his Sonne Biencourt in his place. Who being a youth at that time of more courage then circumſpectneſſe, diſdaining to be controuled by them whom he had enuited thither, and ſcorning their inſupportable preſumption, vſing ſpirituall armes for temporall ends, and an imperious kinde of carriage, who onely for ſpleene had excommunicated and branded him with a ſpirituall cenſure; he threatned them by his temporall power with a more palpable puniſhment. So that after much controuerſie, reſoluing to ſeparate themſelues, the two Ieſuites taking a part of the Company with them, went from thence to a place in new England, called by them Mount Deſart, where they ſeated themſelues; and hauing a ſupply from the Queene Mother did plant ſundry Fruit trees of the moſt delicate kindes in France, ſuch as Apricockes and Peaches, neuer intending to remoue from thence.

* I haue heard that Sir T. Dale was the Gouernor of Virginia and ſent him.

At this time Sir Samuel Argall being then Gouernor * of Virginia, coaſted alongſt new England to traffique and diſcouer, or to acquire things neceſſary for the Southerne Colony in theſe parts, where the lands are reputed to be more fertil, and the Seas more frequented, & did conceiue by a deſcription made vnto him by the Sauages, that there were ſome come from this part of the World to inhabit there; and being iealous of any thing that might derogate from the honour, or proue preiudiciall to the benefit of his Nation, where their intereſt in this was eaſie to be apprehended; he went whereas he was informed that they were, and his vnexpected arriuall, as it would ſeeme, not onely amazed the mindes of the French, but likewiſe preuenting their preparation and reſolution; he approached ſo neere to a Ship that lay before their Fort, that hee beate them all that were therein with Musket ſhot from making any vſe of their Ordnance, ſaue one of the two Ieſuites, who was killed in giuing fire to a Peece. Hauing taken the Ship, they landed and went before the Fort, ſummoning them that were therein to yeelde themſelues, who at the firſt made ſome difficulty, asking a time to aduiſe; but that being refuſed, they priuately abandoned the Fort, ſtealing out by ſome backe way into the Woods, where they ſtaied one night, and the next day comming backe, rendered themſelues to Sir Samuel Argall, who had lodged all that night within the Fort, giuing vp the Patent they had from the French King to be cancelled. He vſed them very curteouſly, as their owne Writers doe make mention, ſuffring ſuch as had a minde to goe for France, to ſeeke out Fiſhers Ships wherein they might be tranſported; the reſt that were willing to goe for Virginia went thither alongſt with him; no man hauing loſt his life but onely that one Ieſuite, who was killed whilſt they made reſiſtance, during the time of the conflict. Thereafter Father Biard, the other of the Ieſuites, comming backe from Virginia with Sir Samuell Argall, out of the indigeſtable malice that he had conceiued againſt Biencourt, did informe him where he had planted himſelfe, offering (as he did) to conduct him thither. As ſoone as they were entered within the Fort, neere the vppermoſt of the Ilands, Sir Samuel directed the Ship to ride at a reaſonable diſtance to attend occaſions before the Fort did land himſelfe with forty of the beſt of his men vpon a Meddow, where immediately they heard a peece of Ordnance from the Fort, and he conceiuing ſince it was ſhot whilſt it could doe no harme, that it was done either but to giue terrour to them, or to warne ſome that might happen to be abroad, did make the greater haſte towards the Fort, where he preſently entered, finding it abandoned without any men at all left for the defence thereof. He went vp the Riuer ſide fiue or ſix miles, where he ſaw their Barnes, and the ground where a great quantity of Wheate had grown, which he carried with him to proue for Seede in Virginia: he ſaw alſo their corne Milne very conueniently placed, which together with the Barnes he left ſtanding vntouched. As for the Fruit it ſelfe he deſtroied it downe to the ground, racing the French armes, and leauing no Monument that might remaine to witneſſe their being here.

Ieſuite killed.

After this, Biencourt, who had been ſomewhere abroad trauelling through the Countrey comming home, deſired to conferre with Sir Samuel Argall, who did meete with him a part from the company vpon a meadow: and after they had expoſtulated a ſpace for what had paſt controuerting concerning the French and Engliſh, little to theſe bounds, at laſt Biencourt offered, if hee might haue a protection from him, to depend vpon our King, and to draw the whole Furres of that Countrey to one Port, where he would diuide them with him; as likewiſe hee would ſhow him good mettalls, whereof he gaue him pieces, the other refuſed to ioyne in any ſocietie with him, proteſting that his Commiſſion was onely to diſplant him, and that if hee found him there thereafter hee would vſe him as an enemy. Biencourt labouring earneſtly to haue had the Ieſuite, as he confeſſed, with a purpoſe to hang him. Whileſt they were diſcourſing together, one of the Sauages ruſhing ſuddenly forth from the Woods, and licentiated to come neere, did after his manner, with ſuch broken French as he had earneſtly mediate a peace, wondring why they that ſeemed to be of one Country, ſhould vſe others with ſuch hoſtilitie, and that with ſuch a forme of habit and geſture as made them both to laugh.

After Biencourt remouing from thence to ſome other, Monſieur Champlein, who had liued long here, did carry a company with him from France of ſome fortie perſons or thereabouts, vp

the

the Riuer of Canada whom hee planted on the North side thereof, with a purpose to sue for a Factory, drawing all the trade of that farre running Riuer, within the hands of a few whom he doth command, which a Plantation would haue dispersed in many parts, otherwise, if his desires had beene bended that way, hee might haue planted many people there ere now; the place is called Kebeck, where the French doe prosper well, hauing Corne by their owne labour, which may furnish themselues for foode, and likewise for a Stocke to traffique with the Sauages, with sundry other Fruites, Rootes, Vine grapes and Turkey Wheate. Champlein hath discouered the Riuer of Canada from the Gulfe vpwards aboue 1200. miles, finding in it sometimes such fals as he must carry his Boate a little way by land, and then put it in againe. He did many times come to great Lakes, at the end whereof he did alwaies finde a Riuer againe: and the last Lake where he came was a very huge one, iudged to be three hundred miles in length, by the report of some Sauages, who did affirme vnto him, that at the further end thereof they did finde Salt water, and that they had seene great Vessels; which made Champlein beleeue that a passage might be there to the Bay of California, or to some part of the South Sea, which would proue an inestimable benefit for the Inhabitants of these parts, opening a neere way to China, which hath bin so many sundry wayes with so great charges to long sought for. Howsoeuer, in regard of the season, and for want of necessary prouisions, Champleine did returne backe at that time, with a purpose to goe againe another yeare: which if hee hath done is not yet knowne, but this is most certaine, that the Riuer of Canada hath a long course, and through many goodly Countries: some of these great Lakes, by sending forth, or by receiuing great Riuers, doe afford meanes of commerce as farre as to some parts of Terra Florida, as may be gathered by Champleines discouery, &c.

The South Sea suspected (as before in Dermers letter) by Sauages relations.

THus haue I giuen thee Others trauells to Virginia and the Summer Ilands. I will conclude with mine owne trauells for them. I see many likely to bee disheartened by the slender growth of the Virginian Plantation, which for the time might haue beene not onely a safe, but a rich and blessed Mother of a numerous thriuing generation, branching farre into other Colonies; and yet is! But why doe I intercept your eyes and diuert your thoughts (suspend them at last) from that which for my Countries good, and zeale to Virginia, without partiall respect to the right hand or to the left, with a candid right hand I here present, and forbid all sinister hands to meddle with? Tros Tyriusue mihi---- I side no where, but, embrace Virginia with a right heart, my pen directed, my hands erected for her good, which can doe mee no other good, but in reference to the publike, whose I am and whom vnder God and his Maiestie I serue and obserue with all that I haue, am, and can. I had written it as a tractate by it selfe, at the request of some worthy friends, but here haue abridged it in some such things as the other parts of these Volumes containe.

CHAP. XX.

Virginias Verger: Or a Discourse shewing the benefits which may grow to this Kingdome from American English Plantations, and specially those of Virginia and Summer Ilands.

GOd is the beginning and end, the Alpha and Omega, that first and last, of whom and for whom are all things. The first and last thing therefore in this Virginian argument considerable, is God; that is, whether we haue Commission from him to plant, and whether the Plantation may bring glory to him: This in regard of vs and our scope; That in regard of it, and the lawfulnesse thereof. To begin with this; In the beginning God created heauen and earth (all things therefore are his by a higher name then right, this rule and the things ruled, being his creatures) of both which Man onely amongst Visible creatures was created capable, which Moses deliuereth in these words, that God created him after his owne Image: which is spoken not onely of the spirituall, immortall substance of his soule, whose vnity shineth with that created Trinity of Vnderstanding, Will, Memory, in it selfe; and that of Vegetation, Sense, Reason, exercised in and by bodily motion; but more especially in regard of the Creator, a conformity to him in righteousnesse & holinesse of truth (the whole Man shining with a borrowed light, as the Moone is the image and reflexion of the Sunne) and in regard of the Creature, a iust dominion ouer the same, as the holy words manifest; repleniſh the Earth and subdue it, and haue dominion ouer the Fish of the Sea, and ouer the Fowle of the ayre, and ouer euery liuing thing that moueth vpon the earth. Although Mans rebellion had forfeited this Naturall Charter, yet was the same in the repeopling of the World renewed to Noah and his Sons, which euer since haue beene in actuall possession; and as Adam gaue names (as humaine earemarks) to the liuing creatures; so Noahs heires haue since giuen names to Seas and Lands, and other creatures quite thorow the knowne World. Neither did the Fall of Man so cracke this earthen vessell, that

'Ex Διὸς ἀρχώμεσθα καὶ τῷ Διὶ λήγωμεν. Arat. Of God, and the image of God in Man.

Gen. 1. 1.

Eph. 4. 24.

Gen 1. 28.

Gen. 9. 2.

Gen. 2.

that all his created excellence ran out: for neither were the substance or faculties of the soule extinct, nor his prerogatiue ouer the visible creatures (the spirituall creature naturally excelling the Bodily, and the reasonable and liuing, the sentitiue, vegetatiue and torpid:) these receiued a wound, the other (his spirituall and religious conformitie in these to God) as a purer water of the purest life, ran forth irrecouerably; and as our naturall parts were weakned and wounded, so of those supernaturall wee were vtterly robbed; till that good Samaritan vndertooke the restitution of that in redemption, whereunto in creation he had giuen first institution, God hath laid vpon him Esay 53. the iniquitie of vs all, and in his stripes wee are healed; our Charter is renued and now made so compleat, that whereas the deuills thought to rob man of Earth and Paradise, Hee which taketh the 1. Cor. 3. wise in his craftinesse hath restored him: nay (that is little) hath added Heauen Himselfe: that as the Israelites entred vpon the houses, Cities and possessions of the cursed Canaanites, so Christians into those Thrones and celestiall Dominions, which those spirituall Thrones and Dominions lost, and there haue God himselfe and the Lambe to be their Temple and All in all vnto them Apoc. 21. 1. Cor. 15. for euer, Amen.

Of the right of Christians and that of Heathens to the world. See these things more fully handled in Tr. 1. l. 1. c. 1. §. 3, 4, 5. Iob. 8. 35, 36. Πίστις ἀποστόλου, 1. Tim. 1. 6. Christians may not spoile Heathens. Gal. 3. 17. Tit. 1.

Hence is it that Christians (such as haue the Grace of the Spirit of Christ, and not the profession of his merit alone) haue and hold the world and the things thereof in another tenure, whereof Hypocrites and Heathens are not capable. These haue onely a Naturall right, by the reliques of the Law of Nature left in Man, by the Creators goodnesse, for the conseruation of the face of a world in the world; the same further improued with a warrantization, Contra omnes gentes (our euidences dialect) by the Law of Nations vnto Nations, and Lawes Politicke and Ciuill in each Nation, allotting to the members thereof the publike and priuate ciuill rights and tenures, which either publike or priuate, persons or corporations, held therein.

This tenure comparatiuely that Christian, is by our Lord himselfe called a tenure in villenage, that of sonnes: the seruant hath his time and abides not in the house for euer: but the sonne is heire in fee simple (fide simplici) for euer. Neither yet is it lawfull for Christians, to vsurpe the goods and lands of Heathens; for they are villains not to vs; but to our and their Lord; nor hath the sonne in nonage power to dispossesse villaines: nor are wee sonnes by nature, but by adoption, and a later Euangelicall Charter which doth not disannull the former (the Truth, or Word of the Gospel receiued by Faith, makes vs free) free Tenants to our Lord, not Lordly subuerters of others tenures; which may with a good conscience vse our owne (all things to the pure are pure, which others cannot, whose conscience being pitchy, all things it toucheth, are defiled) and not, as some haue turned libertie into licentiousnesse, with a bad conscience take away that which is anothers. Christ came not to destroy the Law, of which one Commandement is, Thou shalt not steale: My Kingdome, saith hee, is not of this world, and therefore properly medleth not with proprietie and ciuill interests. The weapons of our warfare, saith Saint Paul, are not carnall but spirituall, and the Keyes so much boasted on by Peters pretended Successors, are called Keyes of the Kingdome of Heauen; lawfull keyes, not thieuish picklocks; of Heauen, not of Earth. And it is remarkable that neither Pope nor Anabaptist (the troubles of Israel with worse then Heathenish conceits in this kind) euer inuerted or interuerted Scepters, till they had denied the very Christian name which they receiued in Baptisme; nor disposed gouernment till they were twice dead, nor promised this libertie to others, till themselues were the seruants of corruption. Euen a Malefactor, a Traytor, a very Faux, or Ranuliac, is permitted to breath, yea is in prison, the Kings house (whereof no priuate hand may dispossesse him) maintained at the Kings charge, till iudgement haue passed on him, which to the world is not till the end of the world, when Christ shall come to iudge the quick and dead; who once so respected the iurisdiction of Ethnickes, that himselfe was there by adiudged to the worst of sufferings, yea acknowledged that power giuen to Pilat from aboue. His Birth acknowledged Augustus his Edict, his Infancy fled Herods tyranny, his Manhood payd Tiberius tribute, and his Death was Roman both in kind and sentence. Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers, yeelded those noble armies of Martyrs in the Primitiue Church; the contrary whereof hath yeelded Mastiues and Monsters in these last and worst dayes.

Matth. 5. Iohn 19. 36. 2. Cor. 10. 4. Matth. 16. Iud. 8. 2. Pet. 2. 19. Iohn 19. 11. Rom. 13. 1.

Therefore was Babels building in the East (and shall not Babel bable building in the West be) confounded that men might bee dispersed thorow the world, to take possession of their inheritance: and God which said, Replenish the earth, hath made of one blood all Nations of men, to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times and bounds of their habitation. Hee gaue Ar to the children of Lot, and the Land of the Horims to Esaus posteritie, though not with like circumstances as Canaan to Israel: and it was by speciall indulgence, that Israel both spoiled the Egyptians and disherited the Canaanites. Let it bee enough, that Christ hath giuen vs our selues in the Lords seruice to bee a perfect freeman, the Vniuersein an vniuersall tenure, and Heauen in reuersion; that hath giuen his Sonne, doth giue his Spirit, will giue himselfe; that all things are ours, and wee Christs, and Christ Gods: without thoughts of inuasion and vsurpation, knowing that Christian Charity seeketh not her owne things (much lesse obtrudes on others) and Christian libertie maketh liberall Saints of naturall men, not vnnaturall deuills of professed Saints. Our Light should so shine before others, that they may see our good workes, that they which know not the world, may bee won without the Word, in admiring our Christian conuersation.

Gen. 11. Acts 17. 27. Deut. 2. 9, 19. 1. Cor. 3. 1. Cor. 13. Matth. 5. 1. Pet. 3.

This

Digitized by Google

This should be, and in the most Aduenturers I hope is the scope of the Virginian Plantation, not to make Sauages and wild degenerate men of Christians, but Christians of those Sauage, wild, degenerate men; to whom preaching must needs bee vaine, if it begins with publike Latrocinie. And this is sufficient to preuent scruple of the Popes Bul, which (if Basan Buls roaring were euidence) maketh aswel against England, this being no lesse questionable then Virginia, Paul, Pius, Gregory Sixtus breathing as much fire against this, as Alexander for that. But what right can England then challenge to Virginia? I answere, that we would be loth to begin our right at wrong, either to Ethnick or Christian: nor need we, hauing so manifold and iust interests. First, as men, we haue a naturall right to replenish the whole earth: so that if any Countrey be not possessed by other men, which is the case of Summer Ilands, and hath beene of all Countries in their first habitations) euery man by Law of Nature and Humanitie hath right of Plantation, and may not by other after-commers be dispossessed, without wrong to human nature. And if a country be inhabited in some parts therof, other parts remaining vnpeopled, the same reason giueth liberty to other men which want conuenient habitation to seat themselues, where (without wrong to others) they may prouide for themselues. For these haue the same right vnto these latter parts, which the former had to the former; especially where the people is wild, and holdeth no settled possession in any parts. Thus the holy Patriarks remoued their habitations and pasturages, when those parts of the world were not yet replenished: and thus the whole world hath been planted and peopled with former and later Colonies: and thus Virginia hath roome enough for her own (were their numbers an hundred times as many) and for others also which wanting at home, seeke habitations there in vacant places, with perhaps better right then the first, which (being like Cain, both Murtherers and Vagabonds in their whatsoeuer and howsoeuer owne) I can scarsly call Inhabitants. To question this right, were to accuse almost all Nations which were rocked (for the most part) in no other cradle: and to disappoint also that Diuine Ordinance of replenishing the Earth, whose habitations otherwise would be like scattered Ilands in the Seas, or as the present Spanish Plantations in the Indies, so dispersed and disioyned that one cannot in any distresse succour another, and therefore are made an easier prey to euery Inuader. Another right is that of Merchandise: Non omnia possumus omnes, Nec vero terra ferre omnes omnia possunt; God in manifold wisedome hath diuersified euery Countries commodities, so that all are rich, and all poore; not that one should be hungry and another drunken, but that the whole world might be as one body of mankind, each member communicating with other for publike good. He hath made this immutable decree in the mutabilitie of the Winds, commodities & commodiousnesse of Seas, and Harbors, varietie of Baies and Riuers, multiplicity of all Mens both Necessities and Superfluities, and their vniuersall desires of Nouelties. Thus Salomon and Hiram had right to sayle ouer the Ocean, and to negotiate with the Ophirians for Gemmes, Gold, Ivory, and other commodities seruiceable for his peoples necessities, for pompous Magnificence, and for the Temples Holies. And if hee did not plant Colonies there, you must remember that the Iewish Pale was then standing, which prohibited voluntarie remote dwellings, where each man was thrice a yeere to appeare before the Lord in Ierusalem. Besides, it is a question whether the Countrey peopled so long before, had roome for such Neighbours:

It is therefore vngodly, and inhumane also to deny the world to men, or like Manger-dogges (neither to eat hay themselues, nor to suffer the hungry Oxe) to prohibite that for others habitation, whereof themselues can make no vse; or for merchandise, whereby much benefit accreweth to both parts. They which doe this, Tollunt è vita vitæ societatem, to vse Tullies phrase, & hominem ex homine tollunt, to borrow Saint Ieroms in another matter. The Barbarians themselues by light of nature saw this, and gaue Ours kind entertainment in mutuall cohabitation and commerce: and they hauing not the Law were a Law to themselues, practically acknowledging this Law of Nature written by him, which is Natura naturans, in their hearts: from which if they since haue declined, they haue lost their owne Naturall, and giuen vs another Nationall right; their transgression of the Law of Nature, which tieth Men to Men in the rights of Natures commons, exposing them (as a forfeited bond) to the chastisement of that common Law of mankind; and also on our parts to the seueritie of the Law of Nations, which tyeth Nation to Nation. And if they bee not worthy of the name of a Nation, being wilde and Sauage: yet as Slaues, bordering rebells, excommunicates and out-lawes are lyable to the punishments of Law, and not to the priuiledges; So is it with these Barbarians, Borderers and Outlawes of Humanity. Arma tenenti, Omnia dat qui iusta negat, If the Armes bee iust, as in this case of vindicating vnnaturall, inhumane wrongs to a louing and profitable Nation, entertained voluntarily, in time of greatest pretended amity. On this quarrell Dauid conquered all the Kingdome of the Ammonites and left it to his successours in many generations, notwithstanding Moses had otherwise left a speciall caution for their security, testifying that God had giuen it the sonnes of Lot, and prohibiting inuasion to Israel. That naturall right of cohabitation and commerce we had with others, this of iust inuasion and conquest, and many others præuious to this, we haue aboue others; so that England may both by Law of Nature and Nations challenge Virginia for her owne peculiar propriety, and that by all right and rites vsuall amongst men, not those mentioned Mans naturall right in places, either wholly or in great part not inhabited.

Abraham, Lot, Iacob, &c.

I haue heard by one which I thinke hath more searched the Countrie then any other Cap. Smith, that in neere so much as all England, they haue not aboue 5000. men able to bear armes, which manured and ciuilly planted might well nourish 1500000. and many many more; as appeareth by this our countrie, not hauing so rich a naturall Inheritance.

Right of Merchandise. 1. Cor. 11. 21.

Securitie of Ports. Gen. 10.

Rom. 2. 14.

Right Nationall: Ius gentium.

Lucan.

Right by right conquest. 2. Sam. 10.

Deut. 2. 19.

Englands manifold rights to Virginia.

alone but by others also, first discouery, first actuall possession, prescription, gift, cession, and liuery of seisin, sale for price, that I mention not the naturall Inheritance of the English their naturally borne, and the vnnaturall outcries of so many vnnaturally murthered, for iust vengeance of rooting out the authors and actors of so prodigious iniustice.

First discouery

And first for discouery, the English, Spaniard, and Portugall seeme the Triumuiri of the Worlds first discoueries, the Spaniard and Portugall first opening the Eastern, Western, and Southern parts, the English the Northern America, and all known parts thence to the North & Northeast. I could bring authority for King Arthurs conquests, aboue 1000. yeers since in Island, Gronland, Estotiland: but I feare this would seeme too weake a foundation, and (which lyers get by lying) discredit our other authorities lesse suspicious; howsoeuer Authors of best note in Geography alledge those, which reuerence of the truth makes me let passe. And so I doe King Malgo soone after him, and Saint Brandon, and the Friar of Oxford (which A. 1360. is said to discouer to the Pole) and Owen Gwined Prince of North Wales his sonne Madock, A. 1170. which conueyed a Colony, as learned men thinke into the West Indies. In all Antiquities, as Varro obserued, there are somethings fabulous (so I deeme the former) something vncertaine, as this last; and somethings Historicall, as that which we shall deliuer. Robert Thorne in a Booke to Doctor Leigh writeth, that his father with another Merchant of Bristol, Hugh Eliot, were the first discouerers of the New-found-lands; and if the Mariners would haue beene ruled by their Pilot, the Lands of the West Indies from whence the Gold commeth had beene ours. What yeere this happened he expresseth not; but the words import that it was before Columbus his discouery. And before Columbus his discouery of the continent, Sir Sebastian Cabot, at the charges of K. Henry the seuenth, with two Caruels, in the yeere 1496. (so himselfe, in Ramusio; the Map with his picture in the Priuy Gallery hath 1497.) sailed to the New-found-land, which he called Prima Vista, and the Iland S. Iohns, because it was discouered on the Feast of S. Iohn Baptist; from whence he sailed Northerly to 67. deg. and a halfe, hoping by that way to passe to Cathay, but his mutinous company (terrified haply with Ice and cold) forced his returne, which hee made along the Coast toward the Equinoctiall, to the part of the firme land now called Florida, and then his victualls failing, he returned into England, where by occasion of warres with Scotland, the imploiment was laid aside. Afterwards the same Sir Sebastian Cabot was sent, A. 1516. by King Henry the eight, together with Sir Thomas Pert Viceadmirall of England, which after coasting this Continent the second time, as I haue read, discouered the Coast of Brasil, and returned from thence to S. Domingo and Puerto Rico. Now Columbus his first discouery of the Ilands, was in 1492. of the Continent in his third voyage in August, 1497. or as others, 1498. so that counting most fauourably for Columbus, Cabot had discouered the Continent in Iune next before; by one reckoning aboue a yeere, by another aboue two yeeres before. And indeed that New World might more fitly haue borne his name, then America of Americus Vesputius, or of Columbus, Cabot hauing discouered farre more of that Continent then they both, or any man else in those Seas: to wit, from 67. degrees and an halfe to the Line, and from thence Southerly to the Riuer of Plate.

Mercator. D. Dee. Ortel. &c.

M. Thorne.

Sir Seb. Cabota. his picture in the priuie gallerie at White Hall hath these words. Effigies Seb. Cabote Angli filii Ioannis Cabote Venetij, militis aurati, &c. he was born at Venice, and seruing H. 7. H. 8. Ed. 6. was accounted English, &c. Galpano saith he was borne at Bristol.

Sir Seb. Cab. Grand Pilot of England.

Hee also was the principall mouer in the setting forth of Sir Hugh Willoughby, in King Edwards time (vnder whom he was constituted Grand Pilot of England, with the annuall stipend of one hundred sixtie six pound thirteene shillings foure pence) in which voyage Greeneland was discouered (neither is there any other Willoughbys Land to be found, but in erroneous Maps) and the Russian Empire by the North Cape, and the Bay of Saint Nicolas. But for Virginia, as it was then discouered by Sir Seb. Cabot, so it receiued that name from our Virgin-Mother, Great Elizabeth: in whose time formal & actual possession was taken for her Maiesty, the thirteenth of Iuly, 1584. by Captain Philip Amadas, and Captain Barlow, whom Sir Walter Raleigh had sent thither with two Barkes furnished; who also the next yeere, 1585. sent Sir Richard Greenevile with seuen sayle, which there left an English Colony vnder the gouernment of M. Ralph Lane. A. 1586. hee sent another Ship of one hundred Tuns thither for their relieue: but the Colony being returned in Sir Francis Drakes Fleet, shee returned also. Sir Richard Greenevile also about a fortnight after their departure arriued with three Ships, and not finding the Colonie, left fifteene men to keepe possession, furnished with prouision for two yeeres.

Possession, continuation, prescription.

The names of aboue 100. are extant in M. Hack. 3. Tome.

A. 1587. Sir Walter Raleigh sent a new Colony of one hundred & fifty persons, with three saile, a Ship of one hundred and twenty Tuns, a Fly-boat and a Pinnace. Hee appointed twelue Assistants to the Gouernour, and incorporated them by the name of Gouernour and Assistants of the Citie of Raleigh in Virginia. To these, Sir Walter Raleigh sent succour fiue seuerall times, the last by Samuel Mace, 1602. An. 1603. the Bristow men sent thither, by leaue of Sir Walter Raleigh, in which Expedition was Master Robert Salterne, who the yeere before had beene with Cap. Bart. Gosnold. And thus are wee come to the beginning of his Maiesties gracious raigne, when the North and South Plantations were by new Patents eagerly pursued, the one from hence, the other from the West parts of England. Mawooshen and other parts, were many yeeres visited by our men, and An. 1607. a Plantation setled at Sagadahoc, by two Ships sent by that wise and seuere Iustice Sir Iohn Popham and others: the successe whereof hath been such, that from the North Plantation it hath beene dignified with the Title of New England. And for the Southerne parts,

A. 1606.

Digitized by Google

A. 1606. a Colony went from hence, set forth by the Virginia Company, which haue euer since maintained their Plantation in differing fortunes. As for the former Plantations of Sir Walter Raleigh, some children were borne to them there: and whether they liue, they continued the possession; or if the Sauages dealt perfidiously with them (as Powhatan confessed to Cap. Smith, that hee had beene at their slaughter, and had diuers vtensills of theirs to shew) their carkasses, the dispersed bones of their and their Countrey mens since murthered carkasses, haue taken a mortall immortall possession, and being dead, speake, proclaime and cry, This our earth is truly English, and therefore this Land is iustly yours O English. Two former Colonies wholly, &c.

Thus haue we discouered the English right by Discouery, Possession, Præscription; to which we may adde, that none other Nation hath once aduentured to settle in those parts, nor scarce to view them: yea the French and Spanish Plantations in Florida, Virginias Southerne neighbour, soone ended in bloudy massacres, the Spanish cruelly * murthering the French, vnder the conduct of Pedro Melendes, which An. 1567. was repaid them by Dominique de Gorgues, the acquittance written with his sword in Spanish bloud: Florida euer since expecting ciuilizing from her first discouerers the English: which is further ratified by the former Spanish disasters in the Expeditions of Pamphilo de Nuarez, 1527. and of Soto, 1537. into Florida: which two iourneyes consumed neere one thousand men therein imployed: besides other Expeditions of Ponce de Leon and others mentioned by Vega and the Spanish Authors.

Virginians acknowledge subiection and seruice to the English.

Now for voluntary subiection of the Natiues, giuing themselues and their lands to the Crown of England, M. Ralph Lane hath testified for the first Colonie, that Menatonon their King by his Messenger, & with him twentie foure principal men sent from Okisko King of Weopomiok his Vassall, formally acknowledged Her Maiesty as seruants and homagers to her, and vnder her to Sir W. R. For the last Plantation by the present Patent of His Maiesty, Paspehay, one of their Kings sold vs land for Copper, and Powhatan the chiefe Lord of all the Sauages, with thirty nine Werowances, haue yeelded to more then formes and circumstances of homage; besides contribution, hauing also actually sold for Copper by him receiued of Cap. Iohn Smith, and made voluntary cession of as much as the English desired, going away with his people to leaue it to the English onely. This purchase was much increased by Sir Thomas Dale, and for what soeuer else which he held, hee accepted a Copper Crowne as Vassall to His Maiesty: which also hee really performed for a time, howsoeuer since they haue beene perfidious. And this perfidiousnesse of theirs hath further warranted the English Title. Temperance and Iustice had before kissed each other, and seemed to blesse the cohabitations of English and Indians in Virginia. But when Virginia was violently rauished by her owne ruder Natiues, yea her Virgin cheekes dyed with the bloud of three Colonies (that of Sir R. Greenevile, that of Sir W. R. both confessed by themselues, and this last butchery intended to all, extended to so many hundreths, with so immaine, inhumane, deuilish treachery) that I speake not of thousands otherwise mis-caring here and mis-carrying there, taking possession of Virginia by their facts, and fates, by so manifold losses adding to the price of Virginias purchase: Temperance could not temper her selfe, yea the stupid Earth seemes distempered with such bloudy potions and cries that shee is ready to spue out her Inhabitants: Iustice cryeth to GOD foe vengeance, and in his name adiureth Prudence and Fortitude to the execution.

Right by buying & selling: and by cession.

Right by Forfeiture.

Fatall possession.

The Holy Patriarks had a promise of Canaan, yet held no possession but with their dead bodies; Ioseph by faith gaue charge concerning his bones: Virginia by so many rights naturalized English, by first discouery, actuall possession, chargeable continuation, long prescription, voluntary subiection, deliuery of seisin, naturall inheritance of English there borne, reall sale, legall cession, regall vassallage; disloyall treason hath now confiscated whatsoeuer remainders of right the vnnaturall Naturalls had, and made both them and their Countrey wholly English, prouoking vs, if wee bee our owne, not base, degenerate, vnworthy the name of English; so that wee shall not haue any thing left (like Dauids Embassadors, which thus abused, brought their Master a iust title to Ammon, purchased by their disgraces) to couer our nakednesse, till Virginia couer, reward, inrich vs with a totall subiection at lest, if not a fatall reuenge. And thus much for our right which God hath giuen vs: whose Virginian tribute is his glory, that hee may indeed be Alpha and Omega (as hath beene said) of the Virginian Plantation: which if it hath not satisfied the expectation hitherto, no doubt that defect hath in great part proceeded from this. Heb. 11.

The Glorie of God in his Word and Workes aduanced by this Plantation.

The end of a thing is the beginning, being first in intention though last in execution: the end which Christians ought to ayme at is God, Doing all things in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, to the glory of God the Father, by the gracious guide and assistance of the Holy Ghost. Glory is, * Frequens de aliquo fama cum laude, And heereby is our Father glorified, sayeth Christ, if yee bring forth much fruite, and so shall yee be my Disciples. Loe here the scope of Christians Plantations, to plant Christianity, to produce and multiply Christians, by our words and works to further the knowledge of God in his Word and Workes. The workes of God glorifie their Creator: The Heauens, saith Dauid, declare the glory of God, &c. I will triumph in the workes of thy hands. O Lord, how great are thy workes? and thy thoughts are very deepe. A brutish man knoweth not, neither doth a foole vnderstand this. All creatures are inuited to praise the name of the Lord

* Cicero.

Io. 15.

Psal. 19. 2.

Psal. 92. 4.

Digitized by Google

Pſ. 148. 5. Pſ. 16. & ac. 2. Eo. 2

Lord, for hee hath commanded and they were created: How much more ſhould the tongue of man be the Pen of a readie writer, and as it is called, The glory of the man, ſo imploy it ſelfe in ſetting forth the glory of God, in his Workes of Creation, Prouidence, Redemption?

The workes of God, and varietie there ſeen ſet forth his glorie.

God is a Glorious Circle, whoſe Center is euery where, his circumference no where: himſelfe to himſelfe is Circle and Circumference, the Ocean of Entitie, that very vbique, from whom, to whom (the Centre of vnitie) all diuerſified lines of varietie iſſue and returne. And although we euery where feele his preſent Deitie, yet the difference of heauenly climate and influence, cauſing ſuch diſcording concord of dayes, nights, ſeaſons; ſuch varietie of meteors, elements, aliments; ſuch noueltie in Beaſts, Fiſhes, Fowles; ſuch luxuriant plentie and admirable raritie of Trees, Shrubs, Hearbs: ſuch fertilitie of ſoyle, inſinuation of Seas, multiplicitie of Riuers, ſafetie of Ports, healthfulneſſe of ayre, opportunities of habitation, materialls for action, obiects for contemplation, haps in preſent, hopes of future, worlds of varietie in that diuerſified world; doe quicken our mindes to apprehend, whet our tongues to declare, and fill both with arguments of diuine praiſe. On the other ſide conſidering ſo good a Countrey, ſo bad people, hauing little of Humanitie but ſhape, ignorant of Ciuilitie, of Arts, of Religion; more brutiſh then the beaſts they hunt, more wild and vnmanly then that vnmanned wild Countrey, which they range rather then inhabite; captiuated alſo to Satans tyranny in fooliſh pieties, mad impieties, wicked idleneſſe, buſie and bloudy wickedneſſe: hence haue wee fit obiects of zeale and pitie, to deliuer from the power of darkneſſe, that where it was ſaid, Yee are not my people, they may bee called the children of the liuing God: that Iuſtice may ſo proceed in rooting out thoſe murtherers, that yet in iudgement (imitating Gods dealing with vs) wee may remember Mercy to ſuch as their owne innocence ſhall protect, and Hope ſhall in Charitie iudge capable of Chriſtian Faith. And let men know that hee which conuerteth a ſinner from the errour of his way, ſhall ſaue a ſoule from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſinnes. And Sauiours ſhall thus come on Mount Zion to iudge the Mount of Eſau, and the Kingdome (of Virginia) ſhall be Lord. Thus ſhall wee at once ouercome both Men and Deuills, and eſpouſe Virginia to one husband, preſenting her as a chaſt Virgin to Chriſt. If the eye of Aduenturers were thus ſingle, how ſoone and all the body ſhould be light? But the louing our ſelues more then God, hath detained ſo great bleſſings from vs to Virginia, and from Virginia to vs. Godlineſſe hath the promiſes of this life, and that which is to come. And if wee be carefull to doe Gods will, he will be ready to doe ours.

Propagation of the Goſpell: & rewards therof

Oſe 2.

Iam. 5. 20.

Obad. vlt.

2. Cor. 11. 2.

Matth. 6. 22.

1. Tim. 4. 8.

